Art. 75. Sentence being pronounced, it shall be notified to the accused, and to his defender, who may appeal against it in six hours. In this case the judge shall, without delay, pass on the papers to the superior court, if there be one in the place, if not, by the next post.

Art. 76. If within six hours there be no appeal from the accused, nor from his defender, the case shall be passed on for consultation to the respective court.

Art. 79. When the Attorney General, within 24 hours, shall appeal from the consulted sentence, a copy shall be given to the accused, who shall plead the same within the same period, and the fiscal shall proceed to examine and resolve the cause within two days.

Art. 87. No day shall be exempt from carrying out the proceedings indicated in the preceding articles.

Art. 108. Parties shall be heard by the judge with benignity.

Art. 111. The judge, or notary, who shall refuse to either party certified copies of the resolutions (sentences and decrees), shall suffer a fine of from two to six dollars in favour of the party prejudiced, and the judge of the Court of First Instance shall carry this rule into effect without prejudice to the preparation of the certified copies.

"The two high contracting parties hereby agree that any favour, privilege, or immunity whatever which either contracting party has actually granted, or may hereafter grant, to the subjects or citizens of any other State, shall be extended to the subjects or citizens of the other contracting party."

Art. 7, Para. 3. "The subjects and citizens of either of the contracting parties, in the territories of the other, shall enjoy full and perfect protection for their persons and property, and shall have free and open access to the courts of justice for the prosecution and defence of their just rights, and they shall be at liberty to employ, in all cases, the advocates, attorneys, or agents of whatever description, whom they may think proper."

TREATY of Amity, Commerce, and Navigation, celebrated in Lima, between the Emperor of the French and the Republic of Peru, 10 December 1861. (See Treaty between Great Britain and Peru, Article 3, before-mentioned, 10 April 1850.)

Art. 3. "The subjects and citizens of each of the two contracting parties shall enjoy, in both countries, the most ample and constant protection in their persons and properties. They shall, in consequence, have free and easy access to the tribunals of justice for their demands and defence of their rights, at all times and in all cases.

"They shall have perfect liberty to employ such advocates, attorneys, agents, or interpreters as they may deem expedient.

"They shall not be detained nor expelled from the country, nor even removed from one to another part of the territory, unless sufficient legal documents have been, for such proceeding, submitted to the diplomatic agents of their respective nations.

"In all cases, sufficient time and opportunity shall be allowed to the accused for their defence and justification, and for taking, with said diplomatic agents, the necessary measures for securing their property."

It will be unnecessary to point out here to the arbitrator the scandalous manner in which every one of the foregoing extracts from the Peruvian Codes, and the extracts from Treaties between Peru and Great Britain, as well as the extracts from the Treaties between Peru and France, and between Peru and the United States, have been violated in the case of claimant.

This the arbitrator will himself be enabled to readily and fully perceive.

Claimant here quotes the French and American Treaties with Peru, because, by Treaty between Great Britain and Peru, Her Britannic Majesty's subjects are guaranteed all such privileges and rights as may at any time be conceded to the subjects of the most favoured nation.

For the further information of the arbitrator, touching the very painful and amentable destruction of claimant's sight and health, which the Peruvian Government, by their horrid tortures of him, have caused, it is deemed expedient here to set forth the certificates of claimant's oculist and physicians. These certificates are as follows:—

"THIS is to certify that we were called, on the 27th of June last, to attend Captain Melville White, whom we found in a very weak and prostrated state, suffering from intermittent fever. Since the above-mentioned period, he has been constantly under our care, and although his general health is considerably improved, he is still very far from being well: and it is our opinion that it will be a long time indeed, if ever, before he becomes completely restored.

"W. S. Johnson, Surgeon, &c.
"Frederick Blackman, Surgeon.

"30, Montague-place, Russell-square, London,
"15 October 1862.

"I HAVE to-day carefully examined the eyes of Captain Melville White, and find that the sight is very greatly diminished. I am of opinion that the above-mentioned condition of sight may, under proper treatment, become somewhat improved; but I believe that the vision will never be perfectly restored.

"I entertain no doubt that the sufferings which Captain Melville White has undergone in the dungeons of Peru have caused this declension of sight, under which he now labours.

"Edwin Canton, F.R.C.S., Oculist,
"Surgeon to the Charing Cross Hospital,
"Consulting Surgeon to the Kent Ophthalmic Hospital."

"Lorrimore-square, Walworth, London,
"20 February 1863.

"I HEREBY certify that I was summoned in great haste to see Captain Melville White (in consequence of his usual medical attendant being at a greater distance), on the 27th December 1862, and found him suffering under severe head symptoms, a tendency to jaundice with constant shivering, and circulation much oppressed, for which I attended him till the 30th December 1862.

"Alex. C. Air, F.K.Q.C.P., Ireland, M.R.C.S.E., &c., &c."

The arbitrator will have perceived from the foregoing certificates what has lately been the condition of claimant's sight and health. The following certificate will enable the arbitrator to understand their present state:—

"Since my certificate in October last, Captain Melville White, with the exception of a week or two he passed in the country, has been almost constantly under my care; the fears expressed at that time have been fully realised; he is still in a very feeble state, the slightest exertion or mental effort producing a return of the fever, and I can only repeat that it must be a very long time indeed before his health will be sufficiently restored for him to undertake active service, or any other occupation by which he may be enabled to obtain a livelihood.

"Frederick Blackman, M.R.C.S., L.A.C."

To the Honourable the Senate of Hamburg.

Honourable Sirs,

THE decision of Her Britannic Majesty's and the Peruvian Governments, selecting Your Honourable Senate as arbitrator in my painful case, and Your Honourable Senate's acceptance of this onerous duty, afford me much gratification.

My case is stated concisely and clearly, and I hope Your Honourable Senate will, without much difficulty or expenditure of time, be enabled to adjudicate it.

Don Ramon Castilla, late President of Peru, the principal of my late torturers, has performed an important part in the inhuman proceedings to which I have been subjected; and as I deem it both expedient and just that Your Honourable Senate should know somewhat of his antecedents, I shall here, in a few words, revert to them.

This Grand Marshal, Don Ramon Castilla, is in blood almost wholly Indian. He was born among the deserts of Tarapaca, Peru, and commenced his career in life as a mule-driver. He afterwards enlisted in, and deserted from the Spanish Army, becoming subsequently a pastrycook. After a life of 50 or 60 years of intrigue and deceit, this man managed to raise himself, illiterate and ignorant though he was and is, to the Presidency of the Peruvian Republic.

These facts are in accordance with the man Castilla's biography, published by his own countrymen, in his own country.

Your Honourable Senate are now about to arbitrate between the very wealthy Government of Peru (at the head of whom was, a short time since, this man Castilla), and their innocent, ruined victim; and I feel assured that Your Honourable Senate's verdict will be such as to merit the approval of civilized mankind.

Your Honourable Senate cannot, it is, alas! true, restore to me my lost sight and ruined constitution, nor my brilliant career, blasted by the Peruvian Government; undo the shocking slanders heaped on me, nor return to me my blood, shed in the streets of Callao by black soldiers of the Government of Peru; heal my broken heart, nor relieve my shattered intellect. No; to do this is beyond man's power; but your Honourable Senate can exact for me, as I trust and believe you will, all possible atonement for my wrongs.

With this hope and trust, I now cheerfully place, at your Honourable Senate's discretion, the arbitration of this my case.

I have, &c.

Post Captain.

PUBLISHED DECLARATIONS of Mr. Henry Carvell, a British subject, now resident in London.

This is the writing marked "A," referred to by Thomas Melville White.

Wm. A. Rose,

A.

"Thomas Melville White, a British subject, was seized in Callao, there brutally handled, taken thence to Lima, and thrown into the ancient prison of the Inquisition, where he remained incommunicado for several days. By some stratagem he contrived, however, to communicate his position to some one outside; and, although things of this kind were of such frequent occurrence that people had learned to regard them with apathetic indifference, the knowledge that a British subject was confined in that loathsome den created some indignation among his countrymen residing in Lima. On learning the rumours afloat, I resolved to ascertain particulars. I went with a friend to the prison, but was refused admittance, the only reply to our inquiries being, that they must be addressed to Judge Ponce. We left our cards, desiring they should be given to the Englishman confined within the walls. After innumerable difficulties, we finally obtained, through the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, an order to see our countrymen. When Judge Ponce found he could no longer keep the prisoner incommunicado, i.e. in solitary confinement, he permitted his removal to a cell, less filthy than the one in which he had first been placed; but even this was the most horrible it has ever been my lot to behold. Human life must be counted by hours in such a place. In that cell, another Englishman, James Edwards, was murdered. Yet, in the face of the well-known fact, that Melville White had been lodged for days in this loathsome den, the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, in a despatch to the British Minister, rebutting the charge of ill-treatment of Melville White, boldly asserted that, when first imprisoned, he was placed in 'a large airy apartment, and supplied with everything necessary to his comfort.' I can describe the cell and the prisoner's occupation on my being admitted to him:—

"A dungeon, seven feet by nine, damp stone walls, a wet stone floor. Not an article of furniture of any kind, save a rusty iron pan, alongside of which was Melville White on his knees, eating with his fingers the dirty-looking rice it contained. This pan was absolutely the only article in the cell. Melville White was haggard, wan, and labouring under an excitement, from which he was relieved at last by a passionate flood of tears.

"The cell in which he had first been confined baffles description.

"We at once went to purchase a bedstead, bedding, chairs, a table, lamp, and such other articles as could render his situation more endurable.

"Notwithstanding these facts, of which there is ample proof, the Peruvian Minister made the assertion above-mentioned.

"Some four or five weeks after the arrest of Melville White, a Peruvian official came to me one evening privately, and stated that information had that day been received from Tacná, that Melville White was there on the day he was charged with firing at General Casilla; that the Government was annoyed and fearful of getting into trouble in consequence of the infamous manner in which an innocent man had been treated. On my remarking that he would of course be at once released and adequately compensated for the sufferings he had endured, my informant replied that the Government, on the receipt of the intelligence proving the innocence of the accused, had resolved to convict him, coute que coute, as the safest way of getting out of the difficulty. Will it be credited in civilised England, that this man was actually kept in prison nine months longer! All their efforts to convict him having proved futile, he was, notwithstanding the recognition of his innocence, condemned by a decree of the Peruvian Government, to perpetual banishment from the Peruvian territory. In Lima, no one ever questioned Melville White's innocence.

"The other victim I have mentioned, James Edwards, succumbed in 72 hours to the horrors of the cell in which Melville White was first confined.

"Her Majesty's Government, being informed of the extraordinary proceedings of Judge Ponce, in a despatch to Lima, pronounced his conduct 'scandalous,' and expressed a hope that it would lead to his disgrace. So far from Judge Ponce being disgraced, he became a greater favourite than ever with the Peruvian Executive, and the medium through which they vented their spleen on any of my unfortunate countrymen who had incurred their displeasure. He succeeded in murdering James Edwards in 72 hours, and also in nearly murdering Captain Melville White, whose naturally strong constitution enabled him to bear up against cruelty and suffering until rescued from impending death by Monsieur de Lesseps.

"Henry Carvell."

I, The O'Gorman Mahon, having the honour to hold the commissions of Colonel, Justice of the Peace, and Deputy Lord Lieutenant, and late representative in Parliament, alternately for the county of Clare, Ireland, and for Ennis, capital of said county, do solemnly declare as follows:—

1. That after a cruise in the Northern Pacific Ocean with my esteemed friend, Admiral Bonard, then commanding the French Pacific squadron, now Commander-in-Chief of the squadron of his Majesty the Emperor of the French, in Japan, I became desirous to visit in detail the several states of Central and South America, and for that purpose I embarked on board Her Britannic Majesty's war steamer "Vixen," commanded by Captain Lionel Lambert, and finally reached Callao (the seaport of Lima), where the French admiral had given me rendezvous.

2. That while we were in the city of Lima, I made the acquaintance of Captain Melville White, then a traveller in South America; that I recognised in him a countryman and brother soldier, who had already rendered important service to Her Majesty, and I knew him to be the friend and associate of some of the most distinguished and honoured men of South America.

3. That my personal intercourse with him induced a conviction that he was, in every sense of the terms, a gallant officer and upright gentleman.

4. That after I had left Lima, and made various cruises to different remote quarters, I again returned to Peru, and was in Lima in the month of March 1861, engaged in what proved to be an abortive effort to persuade the authorities to bring to justice the miscreants who, in open day, had robbed and murdered my friend, Captain Lambert, of the Royal Navy.

5. That on the 23d day of the said month (as I subsequently learned), Captain Melville White

White was, on landing at Callao, suddenly seized on the Mole, and brutally treated by Peruvian officials, on the pretext (as it was afterwards stated) that he had shot at and wounded President Castilla, in the Plaza of Lima.

6. That on the rumour reaching me that a countryman of mine was the individual thus seized, I repaired to the prison of the Inquisition, and was there informed by the military officer on guard that access could not be permitted to the prisoner, who was in strict solitary confinement. I forthwith addressed myself to the Minister of War (Señor Melgar), with whom I had been long personally acquainted, and, on representing the circumstances to his Excellency, he sent for the criminal judge, Señor Don Luis Ponce, who avowed in my presence that "it was by his orders that the prisoner was so placed"; that "he" (Judge Ponce) "was in possession of the most undoubted evidence that the said prisoner had committed a very great crime, one of the most hideous character, but that he felt it his duty to refuse stating what the crime was"; and that "he would allow no communication with the prisoner, whether verbal or written." On my demanding, as a favour, to be permitted to see the prisoner, in order to ascertain if he really was (as asserted) my friend, Captain Melville White, Judge Ponce objected, assuring his Excellency that, with the exception of being kept in strict solitude, the prisoner was in every other respect well off, and amply provided with every comfort. His Excellency, however, having expressed himself in favour of my request, as being no more than reasonable, the judge at length acceded, but only on condition that I should pledge myself not to utter a word to the prisoner, and that I should be accompanied by himself. Having pledged myself to these imposed conditions, the judge escorted me to the Inquisition, and in one of its horrible dens I was permitted to gaze in silence for a moment at its unfortunate inmate, precisely as one might look at some ferocious monster or dangerous beast of prey; but that momentary glance enabled me not only to recognise my unfortunate friend, but also to detect the falsehood uttered by Judge Ponce, when he assured his Excellency and me that the prisoner was in the enjoyment of every comfort. The den was solely occupied by the prisoner, two negro guards, and a massive heap of implements, iron manacles, chains for feet and body, iron bars, &c. It was, as I afterwards learned, the den of punishment. Indignant at what I had thus witnessed, I forthwith again communicated with his Excellency Señor Melgar, who, recognising the justice of my remonstrances and the improbability of Captain Melville White's guilt, humanely interposed, so far as to grant me free access to my suffering friend, who at first was wholly unable to detail what he had endured during the previous four days of his unmerited solitary incarceration.

7. That having obtained food, furniture, and such comforts as his position in that horrible dungeon permitted, Captain Melville White became partially recruited, but by very slow degrees, and during my frequent visits, I, at times, found him suffering from physical and mental depression to such an extent as to impose the necessity of procuring for him the most eminent medical advice and attendance, a circumstance of which he was for a considerable period wholly unconscious, in consequence of the extent to which his whole system had been shaken.

8. That when his mind had somewhat recovered its tone, he constantly made agonised appeals to me to obtain for him an opportunity of establishing publicly his complete innocence of any crime with which he might be charged.

9. That my unceasing exertions, supported by the energetic appeals of Her Majesty's Minister, the Hon. W. S. Jerningham (while still in Peru, previous to his departure on leave of absence), were productive of no other result than replies from the Peruvian Government to the effect that the Executive could not interfere with the Courts of Justices, and that the law should take its course. Such replies were nothing less than "mockery" in the case of Captain Melville White, where every applicable clause of the admirable codes of Peru was openly and grossly violated; not one of them was respected! All were set aside with contumely!

10. That I have carefully perused the subjoined recital of Captain Melville White's sufferings, and that my belief in the portion which was not permitted me to witness, is confirmed by what I actually did see, and by my knowledge of his character for truthfulness and honour.

11. That from the first moment of his incarceration it was notorious in Lima (where the real perpetrator of the crime was well known) that Captain Melville White was entirely innocent, and the Government, in a few weeks after his arrest, had positive information from their own official authorities that he was, at the time of the attack made in Lima on General Castilla, 1,000 miles from that city.

12. That Captain Melville White submitted to me, soon after our first acquaintance in Lima, a number of testimonials from officers of rank and distinction, of which he or any man might be justly proud.

13. That what he states in his claims against the Peruvian Government respecting his brilliant position and prospects in Ecuador was fully established by authentic documents which he submitted to me (while he was en route from Guayaquil in Ecuador to Valparaiso), a short time previous to his disastrous seizure. Having perused these documents relative to his engagements and contracts with the Government of Ecuador, he received my warmest congratulations, for, from the liberal tenor of those writings, and my knowledge of his energy and ability, as well as from my personal intimacy with the high characteristics of the individuals then guiding the reins of Government in the State of Ecuador, I felt assured that (unless cut off by premature death) Captain Melville White could not possibly fail to realize, not only a very large fortune, but, in addition, an enhanced reputation.

14. That previous to witnessing the outrages of which he was made the victim, I could not have been brought to believe that any Government, professing the slightest pretensions to civilisation, could have so tortured an unoffending man, or that a human being possessed of no more than ordinary physical capabilities, could have survived such continuous and wanton cruelty. As it is, he only survives with impaired sight and a shattered constitution, while his worldly prospects have been irreparably blasted by a cruel abuse of arbitrary power, unparalleled in the history of despotisms, because, in his case, there did not exist even the most remote shadow of provocation, much less of justification, for the foul charge with which it has been sought to destroy the worldly prospects and fair fame of an unoffending, honourable, and gallant soldier and sailor.

15. That I was in Lima while Captain Melville White remained in the dungeons of the Inquisition, and did not leave for Europe until I had the satisfaction of seeing him transferred from the Inquisition, where he had been brought to death's door, to the prison of San Francisco de Paula. This step towards rescuing him from death, was effected through the humane and active intervention of the French Minister (Monsieur de Lesseps), whose aid I supplicated, and happily obtained, to effect this object.

16. That Captain Melville White has placed on record that the mental and physical sufferings consequent on the cruelties to which he was subjected during the five days of solitary confinement in the dungeons of the Inquisition, have brought conviction to his mind that their continuance for a few hours longer must have terminated his existence, and my firm belief is that, from the shock then sustained, aggravated by continued imprisonment in the Inquisition, he has never since recovered, and that its effects will accompany him to the grave. My experience tells me that ten men in a thousand could not have survived the barbarous treatment to which he was subjected.

17. In addition, I have but to add (which I do with feelings of great regret), the expression of my conviction, that the British legal functionary who suggested the acceptance by Captain Melville White of the paltry sum of some 4,000*l.* or 5,000*l.*, as compensation for the grievous injuries inflicted on him, either did not read the recital of his wrongs and losses, or, having read, did not lend credence to their reality, or probably deemed them greatly exaggerated. If he acted under the latter impression, I can confidently assert he was in error.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the provisions of an Act made and passed in the Session of Parliament of the fifth and sixth years of the Reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, entitled, "An Act to repeal an Act of the present Session of Parliament," entitled, "An Act for the more effectual Abolition of Oaths and Affirmations, taken and made in various Departments of the State, and to substitute Declarations in lieu thereof, and for the more entire suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial Oaths and Affidavits, and to make other provisions for the abolition of unnecessary Oaths.

CASE.

Captain Melville White having entered into an engagement with the Ecuadorian Government, with an allowance of 12,000 dollars a-year, the age of Captain Melville White being 31 years, Mr. Scratchley is requested to state what is the value of that allowance, treated as a life annuity. The 12,000 dollars may be taken as equivalent to 2,500*l.* a-year.

OPINION.

I am of opinion, assuming Captain White to be in average good health, and taking the interest of money at 6 per cent., that the present value of an annuity of 2,500*l.* on his life, after providing for the necessary assurance, would be 12 years' purchase, or 30,000*l.*

Arthur Scratchley, M. A.,
Western Life Office.

I, Thomas Melville White, Post-captain, claimant, of the county of Sligo, Ireland, do sincerely and solemnly declare:—

That the foregoing writing, marked "C," is a complete and faithful copy of the original certificate of Arthur Scratchley, Esquire, Actuary of the Western Life Assurance and Annuity Society of this city.

And I make this solemn Declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the provisions of an Act made and passed in the Session of Parliament of the fifth and sixth years of the Reign of his late Majesty King William IV., entitled "An Act to repeal an Act of the present Session of Parliament," entitled "An Act for the more effectual Abolition of Oaths and Affirmations, taken and made in the various Departments of the State, and to substitute Declarations in lieu thereof, and for the more entire suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial Oaths and Affidavits, and to make other provisions for the abolition of unnecessary Oaths."

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith to your Lordship, in duplicate, my case against the Peruvian Government.

The volume marked "Original" is, as thereon indicated, for the arbitrator, the Honourable the Senate of Hamburg. The other volume, marked "Duplicate," is, as stated thereon, for Her Majesty's Government.

This document contains all the data which, in my opinion, are essential to enable the arbitrator to adjudicate my claims against the Peruvian Government. Lest, however, the Honourable the Senate of Hamburg might desire still further references in their adjustment of my claims, I have deemed it both expedient and just to place at the service of the arbitrator all the Codes and other Peruvian publications to which I, in my case, advert, in vindication of my just rights.

These Codes and other publications are as follow:—

1. The duly translated and legalised copy of the expediente, marked "A."
2. The original Spanish copy of the expediente, marked "B."
3. The Spanish copy of the Peruvian Constitution.
4. The Spanish copy of the Criminal Code of Peru.

5. The Spanish copy of the Code of Trials of Peru.

6. The Spanish copy of the Rules and Ordinances for the guidance of the judges and courts of Peru.

7. The collection of all the Treaties celebrated between Peru and other nations from the date of the revolt of that country from the Spanish Crown, up to the year 1858.

8. Envelope "1," containing a copy of the journal, "Comercio," of Lima, of 5th May 1860, number 6,413, wherein is published a detailed account of the various sums of money which the French Government exacted from the Government of Peru for misconduct on the part of the latter towards subjects of the former, amounting to 782,600 francs.

9. Envelope "2," containing a copy of the journal, "Comercio," of Lima, of 10th February 1862, number 7,202, wherein is published the Treaty celebrated between France and Peru, 10th December 1861.

I shall feel obliged if your Lordship will have the goodness to transmit these codes, journals, and writings to the Senate of Hamburg, in order that they may have them for their consultation if requisite.

I shall feel further obliged if your Lordship will, as soon as the arbitration of my case shall have been terminated, cause these codes, journals, and writings to be returned to me.

In consequence of my continued debilitated state of health, my physicians have prescribed change of climate for me. I shall, therefore, leave London in a day or two, and may be absent a month. I shall esteem it an accommodation if your Lordship will issue instructions for all such communications as it may be found requisite to convey to me from your Lordship's Department, during my absence, to be directed to me here, whence they will be forwarded to me immediately.

I will thank your Lordship to forward to the Senate of Hamburg, for their information, a copy of this letter, and to acknowledge, at your Lordship's earliest convenience, the receipt thereof, together with its accompaniments.

I have, &c.

(signed) T. Melville White,

Captain.

AWARD OF THE SENATE OF HAMBURGH.

(Translation from the German.)

I.

EXTRACT from the collected Papers in the Investigation and Proceedings against the English subject Thomas Melville White, in Peru.

ON the 23d of March 1861, the English subject, Captain Thomas Melville White, was arrested in the harbour of Callao, at the moment of his setting foot on land, from the steamboat "Bolivia," coming from Arica. This arrest was made by Lieutenant Illadoy, at the request of the Harbour Adjutant, Juan Antonio Valdevieso, who had been sent on board, as a watch from Arica, by the Harbour Captain there, because the latter had received notice, on the part of Manuel Francisco Romero, Commander of the Coastguard at Arica, according to his written announcement to the general administration of marine affairs, that there was on board the "Bolivia" a certain Melville White, who, according to the information received, was the delinquent who, on the 25th of July 1860, made made an attempt on the life of Don Ramon Castilla, President of the Republic of Peru.

At Callao the prisoner was kept in solitary custody. On the day of the arrest, however, inquiry was made by Nicolas Freyre, Prefect of the Province of Callao, of the Ministry of the Interior, at Lima, what was to be done with him, and answer was at once returned that he should, with all necessary security, be delivered up to the prefect of the department at Lima, and be by him placed at the disposal of the criminal judge. On the very same day, this order of the minister was communicated to the Prefect Lavalle, and on the following day, with the remark that the prisoner would be placed at his disposal in the public jail at Lima, it was communicated to the criminal judge Carillo, who referred the case to the judge, Don Luis Ponce.

On the 26th March, the latter directed that notice should be given to the attorney (fiscal) and opened the examination, on the same day, at the prison, "Carcelletos."

On being questioned, the prisoner deposed that his name was Thomas Melville Fol. 4, sqq. White; that he was an Englishman and a sailor; that he did not know the cause of his arrest. He had come in the "Bolivia" from Valparaiso to Callao, and intended to travel to Guayaquil, where he had friends, and would easily get a living, in some way or other. He had stayed eight days at Valparaiso, and before at Lima. He had been captain of a ship in Europe and Asia, and had travelled in both hemispheres. He had earned money by work, and with that and some dollars given him by his countrymen, especially the British Chargé d'Affaires, he had betaken himself to travel for his pleasure. In the year 1860, he had been three or four times at Lima; his travels in America had extended to Ecuador, Peru, Chili, and Bolivia. He had everywhere had much intercourse with his fellow-countrymen, and in Bolivia had been entertained as a guest, although he had been kept in confinement there for 10 or 12 days by President Linarez, who had taken him for a secret agent of General Castilla or General Belzu. He had had friendly relations with General Echenique, and had spoken to him, on private affairs, two or three times at Caracoto, otherwise he had no acquaintance with Americans in Bolivia. After he had been released from confinement there, if he remembered rightly, at the beginning of July, 1860, as he believed, he went to Peru, and was present there at the festivities on taking oath to the Constitution. Afterwards he went to Ecuador.

Being at the time at Tacna he had there heard the news that, in July of the year 1860, the President of the Republic had been wounded by a pistol-shot in the grand square (Plaza Mayor), and he was disgusted at the act as that of a cowardly and criminal hand. Besides the confinement at Bolivia, already mentioned, he had been in custody of the police, at Callao, in the carnival time.

After the close of the examination, the prisoner, although by order of the criminal judge, Dr. Ponce, he was to be kept in custody alone, and without communication, transmitted by one of the political prisoners, a written request drawn up the same day, to José Banda, who acted as clerk at the examination, that an interpreter might be allowed him (White), as he was not a perfect master of the Spanish language. To this request Banda added the remark that he recollected that, at the examination, the prisoner, in answer to a question of the judge, Ponce, declared that he understood Spanish; moreover, that at the close of the examination, the minutes of the proceedings were read to, and signed by the prisoner without remark.

Hereupon, the Attorney General refused to grant the request, which appeared quite frivolous, as it was clear, from the minutes, that the prisoner was a perfect master of the Spanish language.

Ponce directed, that in regard to the pending investigation, the necessary examinations should be made at Arica, especially of Manuel Romero, of the Sub-Prefect of the Province of Callao, of the Adjutant Valdivieso, and of the British Chargé d'Affaires. This order was communicated to the prisoner in writing, but he declined to sign it.

On the 1st of April Miguel Baquero, intendent of police, reported that he had offered to White the money (1 $), which is given daily to political prisoners for their support, but that he declined to receive it. The clerk Banda certifies Fol. 9, sqq. this, and adds thereto, that in his own presence, as well as that of the alcaid and sub-alcaid, and the political prisoners, the prisoner declared that he should receive satisfaction for all his claims against the Peruvian Government at the same time, as the British Chargé d'Affaires was about to advance claims against the Government for that purpose. The said persons were thereupon put upon oath, and certified that White refused the offered daily money; that in presence of the political prisoners he noisily asserted his claims to a money compensation for his imprisonment, and they added moreover that White received frequent visits from Englishmen.

Fol. 15.

After the steamboat "Bolivia" had returned to Callao, on the 3d May, her crew were examined.

Ed. Michael, the purser, deposed that he had met with White when travelling from Valparaiso to Callao, in the second cabin of the "Bolivia," about 18 months ago.

Robert Hart deposed, that he had seen a man named White (but whether it was Melville White he did not know) as a passenger of the first class in the steamer "St. Carlo," and as a second-class passenger in the "Bolivia."

Andrew Wilson. At that time people on board took White for a British spy.

Fol. 21.

On the 10th of April the witness, Manuel Francisco Romero, commander of the coast guard at Arica, deposed before the tribunal there, that he had given notice to the harbour-captain at Arica, that White, who was on board the "Bolivia," was, according to the information he had received, strongly suspected of being concerned in a plot with General Echenique and Linarez, the President of Bolivia, against the Government of Peru, and that he had reason to believe that he was either the very person who had made the attempt upon the President Castilla, or an accessory; for he was at Tacna in December 1860, and in Isabella Dorras's hotel; there he met a Scotchman, David Douglas, who said to him that he would tell him an important secret touching the President, with whom witness has connections, and Douglas then related to him as follows:—

He looks upon White as an obstinate plotter, in connection with General Echenique. He (White) came to Corocoro in May or June 1860, without any means whatever, and lived there at the house of Pedro Caro, an Argentinian and friend of the said general. After some days he went to Caracato, where General Echenique was then staying. For the purpose of his journey there, White had borrowed of him, Douglas, 10-15 dollars, as others, whom he had asked for the loan, had refused him. From Caracato, White returned, about eight days later, to Corocoro, with a bill of exchange for 60 dollars, drawn by Echenique, as he thought, upon Caro, and which Douglas saw. Soon after he went back again to Caracato, and from thence he betook himself to La Paz, where he had free entry to the palace of the President Linarez, and was treated with attention. The latter gave him a bill of exchange for 500 dollars, as Douglas believes, upon Gonzalez Velez, at Tacna. Douglas himself did not see this bill, but a certain Terr did, who advanced White 50 dollars, at Corocoro, through which place he had passed in his way to Tacna, and which sum White paid back again to Terr's agent at Tacna. During this last visit of White to Corocoro there was an assembly at Caro's house, at which a toast was introduced and drunk to the downfall of General Castilla; that the Republic of Bolivia would then forthwith put General Echenique in his place, without any necessity for a revolution of the people or the army. The question was merely that Castilla should disappear. That an astonishing event would happen in Peru, such as had never been known. Caro, as a compensation for his pecuniary sacrifice, was, by Echenique's intervention, to have some advantageous business in horses.

Deponent does not know whether Douglas was present at that assembly. The last mentioned was told by Caro to Douglas, when he returned, after having accompanied White a part of the way to Tacna. Douglas also told him, the witness, that at the beginning of July, White had embarked at Arica for Lima, and had gone from thence, in the middle of August, by Corocoro to Caracato, as was told to Douglas on several sides.

Deponent first became acquainted with Douglas when he was at Tacna, as above-mentioned. Of White he only knows, by inquiries, that he is either an Irishman or a Canadian, without settled residence, and that he travels a great deal on steamboats. According to the evidence of James Brain, an Englishman, White went, on the 4th of November, from Arica to Islay, in the "Respigadora," and was then in the greatest poverty, so that Brain solicited a subscription for him, as John Williams and Charles Worm told him, the witness.

Deponent has always kept a watchful eye on White, and at the time of his arrest he learned from the purser of the "Bolivia" that he was on board that vessel as a second-class passenger, but always kept in his room. On occasion of the conversation with the purser, the latter remarked, that he could not think where White got money for travelling, as it was not known that he had any employment.

Deponent has learned by inquiry, that White, towards the end of December or in January, went to Valparaiso, and from thence to Coquimbo, probably on business with Echenique. He came back again at once by the "Bolivia" to Valparaiso, and embarked thence for Coquimbo, where Echenique came on board and travelled with him to Callao.

The Englishman, Charles Worm, deposes (Arica, 11th April):—When the "Respigadora" went to Islay, White begged of him a loan of 20 dollars, as he was indebted that sum at the hotel; but he refused it to him as he only knew him by sight. He knows that White went away without paying the debt,* but that he sent the amount from Islay. * Fol. 30.

The Scotchman, David Douglas, deposes (Arica, 12th April):—He knows Romero, whom he saw for the first time, if he remembers right, towards the end of November last year, at Dorra's hotel at Tacna. He also knows White, and made his acquaintance in April last year, at the house of Mr. Thomas Pearson at Corocoro; also saw him several times, at Don Pedro Caro's, there. He had a confidential meeting with Romero at Tacna at Dorra's hotel, and then told Romero he believed that White was engaged with General Echenique against President Castilla; and, indeed, he was led to this belief from having heard in the house of Pedro Caro that White had spoken ill of General Castilla, wishing for his downfall, and the elevation of General Echenique. Caro had joined in this wish, in order to get paid for 500 dollars which he had lent to a physician, who was in connection with Echenique. He had also told Romero what he had heard from Caro, namely, that in the latter's house, in May last year, an assembly took place, wherein they drank to the downfall of General Castilla, and the elevation of General Echenique, at the same time remarking that no revolution would be necessary, as an astonishing thing would happen in Peru. He, witness, had told Caro that such a man as White was not fit for him; to which Caro answered, this man will cause a great disorder in Peru. White was in a poor condition there. His countryman, as well as witness, thought him a good-for-nothing fellow, because he busied himself with revolutionary plans in a foreign country. Fol. 32, sqq.

In the evening before the issue of the Interdiction-Decree, White set out from Corocoro in the direction of Lima, in company with Daniel Roberts. After a stay of three weeks at Louis Blondel's mine, he went to Cerro de Passa. See note below.

Being asked whether he knew that General Echenique had had several meetings with White at Caracato, witness stated, that when he became acquainted with White at the house of Pearson, he (White) had just come from Lima; about four or five days afterwards he went from Corocoro to Caracato, where General Echenique was staying. Witness gave him 10 dollars for this journey. From Caracato White came back with a bill of exchange for 800 dollars given to him by Echenique. After that he went again to Caracato, and from thence to La Paz, and came to Corocoro again with a bill of exchange for 500 dollars given to him by Echenique, and as he believes drawn upon Gonzalez Velez, and then from thence, as already stated, he went to Lima.

Being asked what reason he had to suppose that it was White who had fired at the General President, witness said, Don Emeterio Maldonado (one of those present at the assembly already mentioned, at the house of Caro) had expressed this supposition to him. Being asked if he knew what relations White had had with the President of Bolivia, Don Linarez, witness says White had told him that he was on very good terms with him, and had open access to him. He, witness

Note.—In this decree, issued on the 14th of May 1860 by President Linarez, of Bolivia, at La Paz, after a statement of many complaints against the Republic of Peru, and especially against President Castilla, all communication between Bolivia and Peru was entirely forbidden from 30th of May.

witness, had become acquainted with the President at Cochabamba and at Ingari, where he lodged at his (witness's) house, and on this occasion witness had exchanged many letters with him. Echenique he knows only by sight.

Deponent is personally acquainted with President Castilla, and has exchanged many letters with him.

Fol. 36.

Isabel Aimé de Trochon, deposes (Arica, 11th April):—White has in the past year stayed twice at her hotel, once in July or September, the other time in December. Then he did not pay his account, but sent however the greater part from Islay. He looked sad and meagre, and said he had come back by Arequipa, from Lima to Bolivia.

Fol. 37.

John Williams, deposes (Arica, 13th April):—Calista Peralta and Donna Dorra requested him, in last September, to apply to White for some small sums, not more than six dollars altogether; these he did not receive, but on the contrary White asked him for a loan of 20 dollars, which he refused him. He does not know of White having any employment. He said that he had been a captain in the East Indies.

Fol. 41.

Isabel Palacios de Dorra (Tacna, 16th April), deposes:—White, who gave out that he was an Irishman and a captain, has stayed four times at her hotel; he came first from Lima on the 1st of April, and left for Bolivia on the 4th. On the 1st of May he came back from thence, and after about six days went to Lima. On the 21st of July he came back again, and after eight days went away to Bolivia; from thence on the 10th of September he arrived again at Tacna, and on the 16th of the same month went away again. White had no intercourse with anyone, except herself and her husband, except somewhat with Patrick Dauling, whose debtor he was for clothing delivered. White was quite without means and badly clothed. He also owes her some 40 dollars for the last two occasions of his stay.

It is true that Romero and Douglas met at her hotel at Christmas last year.

Fol. 45.

Gonzalez Velez (Arica, 16th April), deposes:—He does not know White. The statement of the alleged bills of exchange for 800 and 500 dollars, drawn respectively by Echenique and Linarez upon him in favour of White, is altogether false. He does not know General Echenique personally at all.

Fol. 46.

Calisto Peralta (Tacna, 16th April), deposes:—He knows White well, but it was not true that he employed Williams to collect money from him, as he had never been his debtor. In April, White went away to Bolivia. A month later he met with him again at Dorra's Hotel in better clothing, and expressed his surprise that he had so soon finished his journey. White answered him, that the political circumstances of Bolivia had determined him to come back again speedily from Corocoro. It struck the deponent that White, who a month before spoke bad Spanish, now suddenly spoke it well; as he expressed his surprise at this, he answered that that was his way, to learn a language by degrees. A few days after White set out for Lima, deponent suspected that he was connected with the Bolivian politics, as he often took pains to change his appearance; sometimes being shaved quite close, sometimes with mustachios, and sometimes with whiskers; and making frequent journeys to Lima and Bolivia without having any known business there. White himself and Dorra, with whom he was well acquainted, also told the deponent that he had accompanied General Belzu in his journey to Europe.

Fol. 50.

Luiz Dorra (Tacna, 18th April), deposes:—The evidence read to him of his wife is according to truth; but he must deny what Peralta says about the alleged relations of White with Belzu, of which he knows nothing.

Patrick Dauling (Tacna, 20th April), deposes:—White came to him to have his clothes mended.

White told him that he was a British naval captain, and had served in India in the Indian army; he had left India on account of his health, and had no other object than travelling. He was now travelling to Bolivia likewise, only on account of his health, and at the same time to see if he could find any suitable employment in the mines there. Some days after he went to Bolivia, and did not come again to him until the beginning of June last year, when he bought a suit of clothes, and gave a note of hand, dated 6th June, for the amount, 64 dollars, which which, although payment was to follow immediately from Valparaiso, has not yet been discharged. On the 24th of June White departed. In December, deponent met White in Lima, and reminded him of his debt, but he said he could not pay then.

Armand Louis Blondel (Tacna, 27th April), deposes :—On the 4th of April last year, White came to him and asked for employment in his mines at Huailillas. He worked some days as a digger, and then went away again in order to seek for a better position at Corocoro. Fol. 54.

Towards the end of July, White came again to deponent, so he does not think that White could have been guilty of the attempt.

Manuel Francisco Romero (Arica, 25th April), deposes :—In his opinion, White could not have stayed at Dorra's Hotel in July, as Donna Dorra stated, but in June, when he drew the note of hand for Dauling.

David Douglas (Arica, 25th April), deposes :—Besides his former evidence, he remembers that Dauling told him that White had asked him in writing—deponent does not know from what place—to uphold his credit by a certificate, as he was looked upon with suspicion. Dauling, however, did not do it, as he considered him a mysterious man; to which deponent agreed, as White was looked upon as such by all strangers at Corocoro. Fol. 60.

Patrick Dauling (Arica, 29th April), deposes :—He is quite convinced that White was at Tacna in June, as his note of hand shows. He confirms the above evidence of Douglas. The letter referred to was written from Callao. White wrote therein that he was much blamed there, because, when he went in the steamer "San Carlos" from Valparaiso to Arica, he had not paid the passage money. Deponent might, however, speak to Juan Ner from whom that report arose; for it was indeed true that at that time he had no money to pay his expenses, but that need not be published to his prejudice. Fol. 63.

Deponent had called White a mysterious man, because he travelled without purpose, without employment, and without means.

Isabel Palacios de Dorra (Tacna, 2d May), deposes :—According to the showing of a book which she keeps of the arrival and departure of the visitors, White came to her hotel on the 21st of July, and left on the 28th of the same month for Bolivia. Fol. 65.

Examination of the prisoner, at the prison, "Carceletas," (Lima, 29th May): —The prisoner refuses to answer the questions put to him, and protests against the treatment he is suffering, his being taken into custody, the investigation, &c., so long as the Consul General and British Chargé d'Affaires does not interpose. Fol. 71.

Manuel Eusebio Reyes (Tacna, 21st June), deposes :—He certainly introduced Romero and Douglas to each other at Dorra's Hotel, but knows nothing of all the rest. Fol. 94.

James Brain (Iquique, 26th June), deposes :—In October last year he travelled from Iquique to Callao, and met White at Islay, and spoke to him, being a fellow-countryman, and went from there in the "Respigadora" to Callao. White was very meanly dressed, and did not seem to have any luggage with him. Several persons on board said to deponent that White, who kept aloof from all, was continually travelling by the steamers, and had no employment. The steward of the "Bolivia" in particular said so, and added thereto, that he took White for a spy of the British Government. Deponent saw White very elegantly dressed on the day after they both arrived at Callao. He did not see him again until he went back to Iquique in the "Bolivia," at the same time as Echenique.

To a written application, dated 12th July, on the part of the Minister of the Interior to the Government of Bolivia, requesting the examination of Pedro Caro, Ierr, Thomas Pearson, Manuel Ruperto, and Emeterio Maldonado, who were residing there. There was, according to the account of the clerk, Banda, no answer up to the 7th of August.

By reason of these results of the investigation, on the 8th of August the Attorney General issued an order that Melville White, who gave out that he was captain of an English ship—as he proved himself to be an adventurer without office or employment, as he was in communication with the enemies of peace Fol. 101.

and order, and of the present government, and suspected of espionage—should now be regularly committed to prison (having been in custody hitherto by direction of the Ministry of the Interior) to take his trial.

Fol. 102.

On the 9th of August the pistol that was fired at President Castilla was shown to the prisoner, who declared that he did not know it. He again asked for an interpreter. Upon this, the order of the Attorney General, of 8th August, was read to him. He refused to sign. By an order of the 13th August, an interpreter was granted to the prisoner by the Attorney General, although the request was quite frivolous.

On the 20th of August the judge and the clerk repaired to the prison "Carceletas." First of all, his former evidence was read to the prisoner, and then that of all the witnesses examined during the investigation. He answered that he did not care for such evidence as that, which might easily be brought by the Peruvian Government. He protested against his violent arrest and the whole proceedings; in particular he held the judge, Ponce, responsible that an interpreter and all information upon his case had been refused, and that for several days together he had received no other food than dry and dirty rice. He demanded then, as he had previously in his written request of 17th July, the necessary documents for his information, which Ponce had refused without reason. He raised his protest against having been forced by threats to sign a false document in prison, in presence of his examiners and a guard of armed soldiers.

On the representation that the evidence of various witnesses, especially that of Brain, agreed that he was in suspicious communication with the enemies of the Republic, the prisoner declared that he protested against such accusations, which were only brought for the purpose of finding him guilty.

When the examination was over, the prisoner having refused as before to sign the depositions, he produced various papers and delivered them to the interpreter, in order that he should read their contents, as they contained the answers to the accusations brought against him. But scarcely was the beginning of these papers read when the judge, Ponce, found himself under the necessity of reminding the prisoner, with all moderation, that it did not become him, instead of answering the questions put to him, to go into abuse and accusation against the Government and the authorities, as he had done in his written statements. When, therefore, the further reading of the same was put off, the prisoner rose and cried out in a great passion that when he was once at liberty again he would have a word with Judge Ponce, and see which was the most respectable man, he, General Castilla, or the prisoner. He would then stand before Ponce, and pretty close to him.

The interpreter, and many of the political prisoners, were witnesses of this scene. After these exclamations, which were a challenge to a duel, the judge, Ponce, ordered the prisoner to be put in the stocks.

On the 28th August the Attorney General brought forward the public charge, that Thomas Melville White was staying in the country without occupation or means of livelihood, needy, and in debt, that he had suspicious relations with the enemies of the country, and expressed himself publicly in a hostile manner against the State Government; that the murderous attempt on the person of the President was not indeed brought home to him, but that he had not by any means been cleared of suspicion in relation to that affair, especially of having been an accessory; that the self-preservation of every Government made it not only a right but a duty to expel such individuals; that the accused Thomas Melville White be condemned to leave the country, and that he be not allowed to return to it.

On account of the scene on the 20th of August the judge, Ponce, was directed by the Attorney General to take no further part in this case, but to transfer it to another judge; the case was, therefore, transferred to the Judge Carillo.

Fol. 113.

To the document is added a letter from the British Chargé d'Affairs, dated Lima, 25th July, in which he replies to a question put to him in writing on the part of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, that certainly in the last quarter of the year 1860 one of his subordinates gave White, as well as other British subjects who asked for it, some money.

Fol. 115.

On the 14th of September the judge, Carillo, ordered that the regular proceedings in the case should begin within 24 hours, and that Dr. Thomas Gadea should act as advocate, and Pablo Mora as attorney for the accused. On the 18th this order was communicated to Pablo Mora, and on the 19th to the accused.

On the 26th of September Pablo Mora delivered his written defence of the accused, in which he alleges that Romero is influenced by affection for the President, and Douglas by avarice. That as White was not guilty of the murderous attempt he must be acquitted, because it was only upon an accusation to that effect that he was arrested and brought under examination. Fol. 116.

The President, Castilla, had stated upon oath, on the 18th of September, that he knew Douglas, and had corresponded with him.

On the 30th of November the judge, Carillo, decreed in first instance that as the evidence of Dorra and Blondel was opposed to the supposition that the accused had himself committed the attempt at murder, and that as there was not sufficient proof of his acting or assisting in this crime, or for the downfall of the State Government, he must at this instance be acquitted in regard to the charge of attempted murder, or of assisting to the same, as well as in regard to that of disturbing public order; but that as it was proved that he was travelling about the country as a vagabond, without employment, and was in suspicious communication with the enemies of the country, so that even his own countrymen expected evil doings from him, he must be banished the country and forbidden to return to it. Fol. 126, sqq.

This sentence was on the same day communicated to the Attorney General and to Pablo Mora; likewise to the accused on the 2d December, but he refused his signature. The judicial order was also communicated to him by which the permission to appeal, applied for by his defender, Pablo Mora, was granted.

After hearing the appeal, the superior court gave judgment thereon, on the 14th December, to the effect that as the accused, according to the evidence of Dorra and Blondel, had not committed the attempt at murder, and there was no evidence for a further charge, he must be acquitted, and the decree in First Instance annulled. At the same time the judge in First Instance was blamed for not having published the sentence within the time prescribed by law. Against this judgment the Attorney General put in a plea of nullity on the 16th December. Fol. 135.

The highest Court of Justice thereupon declared, on the 23d December, the judgment of the Superior Court null, as the accused was not only accused of the attempt at murder, but also of assisting in enterprises against the peace of the Republic. Now, as the accused by no means appears relieved in this respect, but rather it comes out from the evidence of the witnesses that he is a mysterious individual, and undertakes continual journeys to the capital of Bolivia and Chili without any known object, and also that he was met with on the same steamboat with Rufino Echenique, it must therefore be finally decided that in regard to the second point of the charge the accused is only discharged from the Instance, and must be placed under the supervision of the police. Fol. 138.

Pablo Mora was informed of this judgment on the same day. According to a written statement of White's, addressed to the criminal judge on the 15th January 1862, he was set at liberty on the 9th January of the same year.

II.

EXTRACT from the CORRESPONDENCE between the British Chargé d'Affaires and the Peruvian Ministry.

WHILE the investigation of the charges against him was going on, the prisoner found means to communicate a statement of his case to the editor of the "Comercio," a daily paper appearing at Lima, which was printed in the same on the 26th March 1861. When the Consul General and British Chargé d'Affaires, William Stafford Jerningham, thus got information of the arrest of the British subject, a correspondence extending from the 27th March 1861 to the 27th January 1863, took place between him and the Peruvian Ministry for Foreign Affairs, to the purport following:—

On the 27th March Mr. Jerningham inquired if it was true that a British subject named White was kept in custody, without having had the cause of his arrest communicated to him. An order of the previous Minister for Foreign Affairs, Miquel Carpio, makes it the duty of the police authorities to give the British Chargé d'Affaires immediate notice of the arrest of any British subject.

In a letter of the 28th March, Mr. Jerningham makes the further complaint, that White was kept in custody without intercourse with any one, and that legal assistance had not once been allowed him, facts which the free British people look upon with horror and disgust.

On the 29th of the same, Melgar, Minister for Foreign Affairs, replied that every stranger had to submit himself to the laws of the country in which he lived, therefore British views of right could not come into the question. The Peruvian Government had no right to interfere with the ordinances of the authorities and the courts, so long as they proceeded according to law, and here the Government must decidedly guard against any attempt to exert an influence. No obligation to give notice to Jerningham of the arrest existed; it was impracticable, and if had been done before it was out of courtesy.

On the 17th April Mr. Jerningham, in accordance with a letter sent to him by White, made it a subject of complaint that the latter had been forcibly seized at Callao, roughly handled, threatened with the bayonet, and thrown into prison without any one knowing whether the arrest was by written order, as prescribed by law; that further, White was on the 23d April transported to Lima and there thrown into the prison of the Inquisition, into a dirty and loathsome dungeon, with condemned and manacled criminals, afterwards kept for days together in solitary confinement, without any communication, without sufficient food, and subject to insult from the soldiers; that, finally, under threats, he was repeatedly examined, and the examining judge, Ponce, said it was he upon whom his fate depended, until his decision he would be kept in custody without any further information. Mr. Jerningham further declares that the prisoner demands the immediate public examination of his case, to be confronted with the witnesses, and to have compensation for all the injustice he had suffered, violence, loss of liberty, and injury to his honour and reputation. In answer to this letter the Minister Melgar sent to Mr. Jerningham on the 16th of May the following report of Judge Ponce, in which he states,—

That he was charged with the examination of the prisoner, Melville White, on the 25th of March, by the Superintendent of Police, and informed that he lay under suspicion of having fired a pistol at President Castilla on the 25th of July 1860. On the same day he examined the prisoner, and being well acquainted with his judicial duties, no threats or intimidations were attempted. After the close of the examination he ordered that the prisoner should be kept in prison and not allowed to hold communication with any one. This solitary confinement lasted two days, and a place was chosen for this purpose in the court-yard of the prison, which had previously served as the residence of the keeper (Castellan). It was airy and better by far than the locality in which political prisoners are confined. The other complaints about bad and cruel treatment, which appear of themselves but little worthy of credit, must have been made by White without good cause, in an ebullition of passion. The demands of the prisoner were received, and the decisions upon them were communicated to him. With regard to his being prohibited from holding communication, the prisoner cannot complain as far as the two days are concerned during which the prohibition lasted, as he found means during that period of getting articles inserted in the newspapers, and had, according to his own declaration, received a newspaper from a prisoner from which he could learn the reason of his imprisonment.

The food which the prisoner received was tested daily by the judges, and care taken that it should be wholesome, nourishing, and of good quality. He, the judge, Ponce, had spoken with the Intendant of Police, and obtained that White should receive the sum allowed to political prisoners (one dollar per diem), which he, however, refused.

The apparent delay in the investigation is explained by the necessity for extensive correspondence between Lima and the law courts of Arica and Tacna, where witnesses in the case had to be examined.

In another report, by Benjamin Marriategni, Harbour Captain at Callao, which accompanies the above-mentioned letter, it is stated, "By the 'Bolivia,' Ensign Antonio Valdovieso, arrived at Callao from Arica, and he on the 23d of March gave notice to the first lieutenant, who, as first adjutant, superintended matters matters connected with the arrival of the ship, that he was charged by the Harbour Captain of Arica to mention that Melville White, an individual suspected by the Government, was on board. Thereupon Lieutenant Illadoy, as soon as White came on shore, told him that he was his prisoner. He followed without resistance, and was placed at the disposal of the Prefect General.

After repeated interpellations and complaints from the British Chargé d'Affairs to the effect especially that, at the command of Judge Ponce, White had been put into irons, the Minister, Melgar, obtained a further report from Ponce, a copy of which was communicated to Mr. Jerningham on the 23d of October, as follows:—

“White has since his imprisonment been treated with the same lenity as is shown to every other accused person, whatever be the offence he is charged with. An apartment was assigned to him in the prison, which freed him from the contact of other prisoners without preventing him from having intercourse with his friends, for he received numerous visits, among others from Colonel O’Gorman. With regard to the food, he had no reason to complain as he had disdained the money offered to him. The complaint of White, that he had received no written declaration respecting the accusation against him, is entirely without foundation, for this declaration is contained in the collection of documents which he himself signed. The whole collection of documents was, moreover, read to him. Instead, however, of exculpating himself from the depositions of the witnesses, he abused in an unheard-of manner the Peruvian Government, courts, and proceedings; so that he, Ponce, found himself obliged to put him in the stocks for a short time, not exceeding 10 minutes.

“With regard to the complaints concerning the refusal of counsel, what the law requires was done, namely, counsel was appointed after the preliminary examination of the accused was concluded.

“The final decision in the proceedings taken against White having in the meantime been given, the British Consul General made, on the 16th of May 1862, a communication to the Minister, Melgar, that he had received instructions from the British Government to demand, in its name, pecuniary compensation for the British subject, Thomas Melville White, as he had been kept in prison without cause for 10 months, during which time he had been cruelly treated, but had at length been exculpated from the charge made against him.

“Ribeyra showed in his reply of the 15th of September 1862, that such a demand was based neither on general law nor on the decisions of national law. White had, by being without any occupation, by his mysterious manner, his suspicious acquaintances, and journeys, drawn upon himself the attention of the police, and he was subjected to an examination because it was believed, not without reason, that he was the instigator of the attempt to murder the President of the Republic. He is not one of those inoffensive foreigners who, by leading an industrious and respectable life, show themselves deserving of the hospitable friendship extended to them. But as White was not examined without suspicion, but on the most weighty grounds, there was reason for a thorough investigation, the more so as one of the greatest of crimes was in question, namely, that of murder against the person of the Chief of the State.

“The result was, that the strong grounds of suspicion were never removed; the accused, therefore, was freed from the instance for want of satisfactory evidence, although he was by no means declared not guilty.

“There was, therefore, no proof whatever of a hostile feeling towards a British subject, nor was there any delay or partiality in the course of justice. It is only in cases of evident injustice that a complaint should be made by the agency of diplomacy. Not the slightest ground, however, existed for bringing such a charge against the judges who acted in this case; on the contrary, the abuse which White heaped upon them, whilst in the performance of their duties, was leniently overlooked.

“White has left the accusations respecting his political agitations against the Government totally unanswered, although he was not deprived of any means of defence whatever that were legally admissible. Counsel was granted to him as to any native of the country, and he was defended with the utmost zeal. He appears to be one of those foreigners who interfere in the affairs of State, but who, when called upon to answer for their misconduct, appeal to their exceptional position and claim the protection of their consul, to avoid being brought to justice.

"For these reasons, the Minister, Melgar, considered the complaints put forward as completely refuted, and declined, on the part of the Government, a responsibility which it could never admit.

"On the 8th of January 1863, Mr. Jerningham informed the Minister, Paz Soldan, that he was ordered by the British Government to claim for White the sum of 4,500 l., as a compensation for the ill-treatment he had suffered, and to enter into no further negotiations of any kind in the question. The British Government expected an explanation within a reasonable time, and would not suffer the demand to remain unsettled.

"To this Soldan, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, replied that he had made known the contents of the above letter to the President of the Republic, and had been instructed to state that the British Government must have been misinformed as to the transactions, as all White's complaints had been refuted.

"It does not appear what foundation there was for the claim made in so peremptory a manner, to the exclusion of further negotiations, especially as up to this time it rested solely on the assertions of White, which could not possibly be deemed sufficient to inculcate a Government, and render it responsible for alleged ill-treatment undergone. These unfounded accusations of White's appear to have been purposely invented to produce dissension between the Peruvian and the British Governments, in order thereby to obtain a capital.

"But, even if White had been definitively acquitted, which was not the case, there would have been no ground for requiring the Peruvian Government to indemnify him in the sum demanded, as such a proceeding in favour of a foreigner would be an innovation in the legislation of Peru, which would entail the most serious consequences.

"The exclusion of further negotiations on the question is the more surprising, as Lord Russell remarked, according to the copy of a note dated 31st of July 1861, addressed to the British Chargé d'Affaires, and communicated to the Ministry: 'That the Government of Her Majesty is of opinion that all further discussions on this subject should take place at Lima.' The Peruvian Government believes that it has a right to place full confidence in this remark, and to look forward to a discussion which has not hitherto taken place. Besides which, Mr. Jerningham on the 13th of May 1861 expressly reserved to himself further discussion. Thereupon Mr. Jerningham repeated on the 26th January 1863, that he had strict instructions not to enter into any further discussion whatever; inasmuch as the British Government had well considered everything, and had fixed the sum demanded accordingly.

"This correspondence was closed by the Peruvian Government, to refer the final settlement of the question to arbitration."

III.

AWARD of the COMMISSION appointed by the Senate of the Free Hanse Town of Hamburg, to adjudicate in the case of Captain Thomas Melville White, referred for arbitration by the Governments of Great Britain and Peru.

THE demand of the British Government for an indemnification of 4,500 l. in favour of Thomas Melville White from the Republic of Peru, now under consideration, is based on the following points:—

1. The arrest and the long unjust imprisonment of White, founded on a serious but wholly groundless and unsupported accusation.
2. The suffering and annoyances to which he was subjected during his imprisonment.
3. The neglect of the rules and principles not only of Peruvian but of universal law, which was evinced by delaying the trial, and by the manner in which the preliminary proceedings were conducted.
4. His expulsion from the Peruvian dominions, as the result of these unjust proceedings.

As

As Captain Thomas Melville White has also communicated a statement drawn up by him as claimant, it is to be observed, in reference to that document, that it can only be taken into consideration as being specially referred to in the representations of the British Government.

It appears to be in general a passionate and partial account, with obvious misrepresentations and exaggerations, and wherein candour is wanting; for this reason the British Government could not get a clear idea of its contents. The arbitrator has, therefore, only to keep to the official representations of the Government.

The four above-mentioned complaints will now be examined separately:—

1. With regard to the first complaint, the unjustifiable arrest and long imprisonment, it is first of all to be shown that White was arrested on the 23d March 1861, and, as his own account of the matter has not been contradicted, (White's letter, Folio 140 of the Investigation Documents), he was released on the 9th January 1862. The arrest took place in consequence of a communication made by Romero to the Harbour-Captain at Arica, that he had reliable information that White was the delinquent who had attempted to murder the President of the Republic of Peru, Don Ramon Castilla. Now there can be no doubt that it became the imperative duty of all the authorities—in consequence of the universally known fact that the President Castilla had been wounded, on the evening of the 24th of July 1860, by a pistol-shot, fired by an unknown hand, and that the investigations to discover the author of this attempt had hitherto led to no definite result—to use all means in their power to prosecute inquiries with respect to such a suspected person, after the information given by an official of the Republic.

The crime in question was one of the most serious nature, and the arrest of the suspected person was the less to be avoided, as he was caught travelling and was well known to be without any fixed residence. It therefore remains to be ascertained whether the arrest of White was accomplished according to the precepts of the Peruvian laws applicable to the case.

Now, Art. 18, Tit. IV., of the "Constitution Política de Peru Reformada en 1860" enacts that no person shall be arrested without a written order of the competent judge, or of the authorities whose duty it is to maintain public order, "excepto in flagrante delicto," and that in every case the arrested person shall be placed at the disposal of the proper tribunal within 24 hours. In the present case White was arrested at Callao on the 23d of March 1861, and on the same day, on the application of the Préfet Freyre, there came the order from the Minister Morales that he should be kept in custody, sent to Lima, and there placed at the disposal of the criminal judge. (Folio 2 of the Investigation Documents.)

By this the above legal requirement was the more undoubtedly satisfied, as at least a preliminary detention of the person caught on his journey must appear to be demanded at once; and if the Préfet Freyre, who apparently had the power of issuing the written order for the arrest, did not do so himself, but left the decision to the highest authority, it can only be looked upon as a proof of his caution and care in the performance of his duty.

The second part of the first point of complaint advanced on the part of the British Government contains the assertion that the imprisonment of White had taken place in an unjust manner, on a serious but unfounded and in no way supported accusation. As a further proof of this assertion, it is said, at page 4 of the statement drawn up in the name of the British Government, that White was, according to the judgment in First Instance, accused of being the instigator only of the crime of murder, and that no other accusation whatever was brought against him. This single accusation was, however, in the course of the proceedings, not only proved to be quite groundless, but that there was no evidence at all, nor a single fact, to give any apparent ground for it. But herein the British Government, irrespective of the correctness of the facts contained in its statement of the matter, proceeds on the erroneous supposition that the rules of criminal procedure in England are to be held good and applied in the criminal proceedings in Peru; but, little doubt as there can be that the rules of procedure to be observed by the courts in any country are to be judged solely and alone according to the legislation in force there, it is quite as certain that in the proceedings in White's case no fault can be found with the Peruvian courts of justice, or with the Peruvian Government, since they were fully justified according to the Peruvian procedure.

The difference between the English and the Peruvian mode of proceeding, which latter obtains also in other countries, consists in the diversity of the principle observed in the accusation and investigation. In Peru, when there are grounds for suspecting any person, an investigation takes place, during which all means are employed which may lead to the establishment of any crime whatever, without such investigation being limited to the particular crime of which the accused was originally suspected. It is only after the completion of the investigation, which embraces everything that can be elicited during the proceedings, that the Attorney General can proceed to the framing of the formal act of accusation, in which all the facts brought to light in the investigation are to be considered. Then only is the accused put upon his trial, and counsel appointed to defend him; up to this point he has only been the subject of inquisition; the whole of the proceedings, before the time of accusation, are withheld from the public. It is obvious, therefore, that the principles of proceeding on simple accusation, observed in England, cannot, in any way, find application in Peru, and therefore it is not consistent with justice, on the part of the British Government, to reject, as inadmissible, the statements of the Attorney General relating to the first accusation of Romero against White. This view is founded on the erroneous supposition that Romero is the accusing party, and therefore bound by his statements.

It is further, also, to be pointed out, that the assertion that Romero only accuses White of being the instigator of the attempt to murder is in nowise in accordance with the documents; for it was not the first preliminary information given to a subordinate authority, the harbour-captain at Arica (the only object of which was the arrest of White), but his depositions on oath before the judge, that would then have to be considered as the complaint. But herein also is found the accusation that White was associated with open enemies of the country, and implicated in a plot against the Government of Peru, and it was distinctly stated that he was an obstinate conspirator (Folio 21 of the Accusation Documents). Although the sworn statements of Romero and Douglas, which fully agreed with each other, were, in regard to White having himself attempted to murder the President Castilla, certainly only suppositious, yet such positive facts were elicited as proved beyond doubt the hostile feeling of White towards the Government, and led to the fear that he might commit acts which would endanger the peace of the country. It was thus the strict duty of the judge to continue the investigation, with all care and exactitude, as long as other disclosures might be expected therefrom; and so all persons who might be supposed to have relations with the person under inquisition, or to be acquainted with him and his doings, were examined, except that unfriendly relations with the Republic of Bolivia rendered the examination of persons residing there impossible.

It may here be observed that probably the testimony of Caro, who for this reason could not be examined, and to whom Douglas referred several times in his depositions, would have been of particular value; it was therefore impossible to avoid waiting, at least a reasonable time, for an answer to a request to the authorities of Bolivia, dated 12th July, concerning the examination of Caro.

A glance at the depositions of the accused himself, and of the witnesses examined, will suffice to prove that the charge of Romero was by no means unsupported.

The accused deposes that he is on friendly terms with General Echenique, and admits that he is without occupation, as he believes he will be able to obtain it at Guayaquil by the interest of his friend. He admits that he is totally without means, as he received pecuniary assistance from the British Chargé d'Affaires, which is confirmed by the latter himself (Folio 113 of the Investigation Documents).

The witness Douglas deposes to having heard the accused speak ill of the President Castilla, and wish for his fall; further, that the accused had been present at an assembly at Corocoro, in which a toast had been drunk to the fall of Castilla and the elevation of Echenique, and that it had been stated it would be sufficient for this end to get Castilla out of the way. Caro, a friend of the accused, had told him (the witness), "This man (White) will create a great sensation in Lima." Deponent has seen bills of exchange from Echenique in the hands of the accused, and knows that he has much intercourse with him.

Andrew Wilson deposes that the accused was thought to be a spy. Romero knows that he frequently travelled to visit Echenique, and that he was in connection with him and Linarez, whilst it could never be understood whence he derived the money for his journeys, as he was without occupation.

Calista Peralta suspects him of being connected with a political association hostile to the Government, from his mysterious manners and the frequency with which he tries to alter his appearance. Brain, Isabel, Dorra, Dauling, Worm, Williams, and others testify unanimously that the accused makes frequent journeys to the Republic of Bolivia and to Lima, without having any known business, and that he is in debt.

At the conclusion of the investigation, the accusation of the Attorney General now declares that White is proved to be an individual without means or occupation, in debt, and without any fixed residence, and at the same time a friend of notorious enemies of the country; that he was strongly suspected of having attempted the murder of President Castilla, and of participating in plots against the Government; but, as such proofs as the law requires for the purpose of conviction were wanting, the Attorney General proposes that the accused be released from the Instance, but that he be banished from the Republic as a foreigner without occupation and means, and of proved bad conduct.

The sentence of the First Instance is fully in accordance with this proposition; the sentence passed in Second Instance by the Corte Superior, on the appeal in the name of the accused, annulled the previous sentence, and declared the accused quite free; finally, the sentence in Third Instance of the Corte Suprema—which, strange to say, has not been mentioned at all in the statement of the British Government—declares the sentence in Second Instance null and void, and certifies further that White has not only been accused for an attempt to murder, but also of participating in enterprises against the peace of the Republic, and frees him in this latter respect only from the Instance, with the orders that he be placed under the surveillance of the police.

Therefore, not only is the above-mentioned assertion, that the exclusive accusation against White was an attempt to murder, based upon error, but it is evident that the further assertion, namely, that it was proved in the course of the proceedings that this sole accusation was quite groundless, is in manifest contradiction to the documents, which can only be explained by the essential void in the statement of the British Government, occasioned by the omission of the sentence in Third Instance. But it is precisely on this final sentence that a proper understanding of the case depends, whilst all the conclusions drawn by the British Government, being based on the judgment in Second Instance, are valueless, as this sentence itself has been declared void. Moreover, the sentence in Third Instance, in so far as it frees White only from the Instance, is the more justified, as, besides that the accused had by no means fully cleared himself from the grounds of suspicion, the examination of all the witnesses could not take place, on account of the external obstacles which interposed, and it might well be expected that a future examination of the witnesses Caro, Jerr, Maldonado, Pearson, and Ruperto would throw further light on the suspicions against the accused that were not cleared up.

Therefore the first point of complaint is to be pronounced of no force; and now there is to be investigated how far, second, the sufferings and injuries to which the accused was subjected, during his imprisonment give just occasion for a complaint.

Here it is to be observed, first of all, that in general, when the question concerns complaints made by a person kept long in prison of such injuries as he has endured during his imprisonment, his own assertions are always to be examined with the greatest caution; and unconditional credence is the less to be given to them, as such complaints very frequently arise in cases where the imprisonment was well deserved, and in nowise too severe. Now, it appears incontrovertibly, from the documents, that White, being at the time of the arrest a foreigner, without occupation, income, or any fixed domicile, was by no means a personage who could lay claim to particular credibility for his statements, and especially not when the matter in question was a claim from which he, according to his own view, was to receive a good round sum of money. Numerous contradictions and demonstrable falsehoods which he put forward will be noticed hereafter in their proper places. To prove that the British Government, so far as it has sifted the matter, has always given by far too much weight to the assertions of White, it may suffice here to refer to that part of his statement (vide p. 22 ff.) which is described as an extract from the Investigation and Process Documents. It contains, in almost every line, the most evident and grossest misrepresentations of the truth, as, on the one side, everything implicating White is throughout passed over in the extract, whilst what is quoted is often either entirely falsified, or at least so disconnected that the result appears quite contradictory to the documents. For example may be quoted that, according to the statement of White, the sentence in First Instance reads, in its decisive part, word for word as follows:—

“Upon which grounds I ought to acquit, and do acquit, Thomas Melville White, as regards complicity in the crime of which he is accused, and generally from co-operating to upset public order; but he must be expelled,” &c.

Whereas in the attested English translation, from the documents which he had before him, the sentence corresponding with the Spanish original is as follows:—

“Upon which grounds I ought to acquit, and do acquit, from this Instance, Thomas Melville White, as regards,” &c.

It is further said, page 30: “Page 139 (of the English translation) contains the sentence passed by the Supreme Court in claimant’s case, the substance of which is as follows:—

“We confirm the sentence of the Superior Court, acquitting Melville White of the horrible charge of which he has been accused. He must remain under the vigilance of the police.”

But it is stated, word for word, on page 139 of that attested English translation:—

“They declared null the sentence pronounced by the Most Illustrious Superior Court, in as far as regards that, in absolute manner, it absolves Thomas Melville White, and reforming it, absolved him from the Instance (Instantia) as to the rest of the charges that have weighed against him, and have been cited, and he ought to remain subject to the vigilance of the police.”

And in the face of such wilful misrepresentations of the truth, Thomas Melville White maintains by declaration, in place of oath, before Major Rosi, on the 25th of September 1863, “that all the statements contained in the subjoined case, written and drawn up by me, are strictly in conformity with truth.”

No weight whatever ought, therefore, to be attached to the assertions of a man so wanting in veracity.

On entering upon the second point of complaint, it is, in the first place, scarcely necessary to remark, that the arrest of White, as carried out, was fully justified, and was effected without any resort to force; for the harbour-captain, Benjamin Mariategui, reports that White submitted without resistance to the order for his arrest, and there is nothing that could support a contrary supposition.

The above-mentioned complaint may be thus specified in detail: that White was kept in custody for a long time incommunicado; that he had been kept, up to the 27th of August, confined in a dirty loathsome cell, without sufficient food, and, lastly, that he had been subjected to torture and ill-treatment. Now, with regard to the first point, it has not been asserted at all that, according to Peruvian law, the Examining Judge has no power to order the imprisonment of a person under examination debarring communication. It would be unjust to deny the judge such power on the general principles of law; it ought rather to be taken for granted that, when a person has been arrested on suspicion of a serious crime, the judge can often only secure the necessary disclosures by preventing all communication with the prisoner, and thus avoid the danger of collusion, by which the investigation might be prejudiced. Besides, according to the Report of Judge Ponce, White was only in custody incommunicado for two days (namely, on the 26th and 27th of March); and Judge Ponce, to prove that the isolation was by no means strict, justly states that even during this time the prisoner found means to elude the order, as, according to his own statement, he received a newspaper from a fellow-prisoner, and found means to have his written complaint printed in the Journal Comercio of the 26th of March.

It is, moreover, fully proved by the depositions of Bauda, Carillo, Milan, and Harzu, who were examined upon oath at the beginning of April (Folio 9 et seq. of the Investigation Documents), that White, at the beginning of the imprisonment, was not incommunicado, but received frequent visits from his countrymen, and had, moreover, the opportunity of repeating his complaints and threats before fellow-prisoners.

By the same witnesses it has been proved—and this also has been acknowledged by the British Government (vide page 16 of its statements), but denied by White (vide page 22 of his statement)—that the sum allowed to political prisoners to procure comforts during their imprisonment (namely, one dollar per day) had been repeatedly offered to White, but was refused by him in an insolent manner. His statement, therefore, that he had for days together received no other food than damaged rice is the less credible, as Judge Ponce declares, in his report of the 29th of April 1861, that the food given to prisoners is, according to the legal regulations, tested by the judges every day, and that strict care is taken that it be good and wholesome. With regard to the locality in which the prisoner was, Judge Ponce declares that, so long as the isolation of the prisoner lasted, a place was assigned to him in the courtyard of the prison, which had formerly been the residence of the keeper (castellan), and was airy and by far better than the locality assigned to political prisoners. Ponce further reports, on the 23rd of October 1861, that during the whole of his imprisonment, up to that time, an abode had been assigned to him which freed him from contact with other prisoners, without preventing him from receiving the visits of his friends: in fact, he received frequent visits, amongst others from Colonel O'Gorman. The credibility of these official reports of Ponce does not appear to be at all shaken, for there is nothing whatever against them except the assertions of White, which have been partly refuted by the fullest proof, and which do not appear to be sustained by the slightest probability. The British Government has mentioned nothing that would do so, nor has it referred to the documents contained in his statement, which therefore do not require consideration. But it may be openly stated that the pretended declarations of Henry Cornell, produced in an unattested copy, cannot be attended to at all, since there is no warrant whatever for their genuineness; further, that the voluntary depositions of O'Gorman, on the 28th September 1863, cannot be allowed to have any force as proof, considering that, at that time, two years and a half had elapsed since White's arrest, that nothing was positively known either of the deponent himself or of his relations with White; but these depositions themselves are only calculated to lead to the conjecture that he was too intimately connected with the interests of White to be willing to give altogether the unbiassed truth. Now and then he is guilty of notoriously false statements; for instance, when he asserts (page 39 of White's statement):—

“That from the first moment of his incarceration, it was notorious in Lima (where the real perpetrator of the crime was well known), that Captain Thomas Melville White was entirely innocent; and the Government, in a few weeks after his arrest, had positive information, from their own official authorities, that he was, at the time of the attack made in Lima on General Castilla, a thousand miles from that city.”

It can only be thought natural that the British Government has not even once appealed to such testimony as this.

An evident refutation of White's statements in regard to the condition of his prison must be found in this: that Mr. Barton personally visited the prisoner, on the 23rd of August 1861, as representative of Mr. Jerningham, and on the following day wrote the letter before us in reference thereto to the Minister Melgar. He says not a word about having found the prison unfit, but merely requests to be informed whether it was likely that the investigation would soon terminate, as the prisoner complained that he was suffering from an affection of the liver in consequence of his long detention. When therefore, on the following day, a better prison was assigned to White (page 24 of the Report of the British Government), it only shows how anxious the Government and authorities of Peru were to anticipate the wishes on behalf of the prisoner.

The description of White's sufferings which precedes the above-mentioned letter of Mr. Barton, who is supposed to have witnessed them, is in evident contradiction with the contents of this document, and appears to be only based on the false statements of White.

The occasion of that visit of Mr. Barton was the complaints made by White of the tortures that he had suffered in the “barra,” in which he had been shut up for a long time. But it is proved by the documents (see fol. 106 of the investigation documents) that White, on his examination on the 20th of August, demanded the reading of various documents, which, as is admitted at page 23 of the statement of the British Government, were drawn up in an unbecoming tone, and contained abuse of the Government and of judicial persons.

But it is again a misrepresentation when it is said that the judge on this occasion was not satisfied with refusing to receive these documents, but ordered White to be put in irons; for he received this punishment for having answered Judge Ponce by personal threats, when cautioned with regard to these documents (see fol. 107 and 108 of the investigation documents).

Such contempt of the dignity of the judge demanded punishment, and that inflicted on White does not appear to have been too severe, as, according to the official statement of Ponce, dated 7th of September, he was not shut up in the "barra" for more than 10 minutes.

After all this, there is not the slightest proof that White was treated during his arrest with undue severity; and his unsupported assertions with reference to his treatment have not even probability in their favour, considering his proved untrustworthiness, and in the face of the official reports of the judge and other authorities.

3. The third complaint of the British Government is, that in the present case the rules and principles of Peruvian law, and the universal sense of justice, have been neglected, as is demonstrated by the delay of the trial, and by the course and mode of proceedings which preceded it.

In the first place, with regard to the delay of the trial itself, it has been already stated that the mode of criminal procedure in Peru is a combination of proceedings on investigation and accusation, and that, in conformity therewith, the accusation can only be proceeded with after the preliminary investigation is fully completed.

Now by a decree of the Attorney-General of the 8th of August, the penal proceedings were commenced, and the accused was informed of this decree on the same day; on the 11th it was ordered that Judge Carillo should take cognizance in First Instance after the penal accusation had been made, and he gave up the further instruction of the matter on the 14th to Juarez. On the 13th the Attorney General ordered the appointment of an interpreter, on the representation of the accused that he had to make some declarations in his cause. This interpreter was appointed on the 19th; on the 20th the final examination of the accused took place, and on the 23d of August came the public accusation on the part of the Attorney General. On the 26th of September the Advocate, Pablo Mora, delivered his written defence; on the 30th Juarez ordered the examination on oath of the President Castilla for the completion of the documents. This examination took place on the 18th of October. On the 8th of November Juarez ordered the production of an authenticated copy of the "decreto de interdiction," which was obtained on the 10th, and on the 30th of November the sentence in First Instance was delivered. It is evident from this account that no delay had taken place from the delivery of the accusation to the 10th of November; and if the Judge in First Instance was reprimanded by the sentence of the Corte Superior for not having delivered his sentence sooner, this reprimand can only refer to a delay between the 10th and 30th of November, as he had not acted as judge at all in the investigation.

As the sentence in Second Instance was given on the 14th of December, and that of the Corte Suprema on the 23d of that month, it certainly appears that sentences in criminal cases are delivered in Peru with especial promptitude. But as the period of 20 days between the completion of the documents and the finding, in First Instance, cannot be considered a delay of importance, compensation on this ground in favour of the accused can be the less demanded as, according to the Peruvian law, a fine (ordnungsstrafe) only can be imposed in cases of delay in official judicial proceedings. It is, moreover, to be questioned whether the reprimand of the judge by the Corte Superior ever came into operation, as the Corte Suprema has declared the sentence of that tribunal to be null.

It remains, therefore, to investigate how far the above-named third complaint of the British Government appears to be founded on the course of the proceedings during the preliminary examination.

This

This complaint may be divided, according to the contents of the statement before us, into the following points:—1. That a written order, by virtue of which White was arrested, was never shown or delivered to him; 2. That no document containing an accusation was produced during the investigation; 3. That an interpreter was denied to White, notwithstanding his request; 4. That no counsel was allowed him up to the conclusion of the investigation; 5. That force and intimidation were resorted to in the examinations during the investigation, and that the examinations were altogether of a very inquisitorial character; 6. That White was not confronted with any of the witnesses on whose evidence the accusation of the Attorney General was based; 7. That the investigation and, consequently, the opening of the trial had been delayed.

As regards the first point, it has already been stated that the written order of arrest above mentioned was issued by the Minister Morales, as prescribed by the law. The Art. 18 of Tit. 4 of the Constitution Politica del Peru ordains—"Los ejecutores de dicho mandamiento estan obligados á dar copia de el siempre que se les pidiere" (Those who execute this order are bound to give a copy of it whenever they are asked).

Now, it does not appear from the Investigation Documents that White himself ever asked for the communication of such a copy, whilst, according to the above legal provision, it was in that case only that it was usual to give the same; but there can be the less doubt that a copy would have been delivered to him on his asking for it, as from the documents it is evident that the whole of the important judicial decrees had been handed over to him whenever the rules of procedure permitted. A reference to the correspondence between Mr. Jerningham and the Minister Melgar shows that the former requested to be informed, on the 17th of April, whether the arrest of White had been legally made on the written order of a competent authority. To this question a perfectly satisfactory answer may be found in the reports of Miguel Bagnero and Manuel Freyre of the 1st of May, communicated to Mr. Jerningham. It is, however, certain that from the 20th of August, at any rate, White was aware of the wording of the order of arrest, although he had not asked any official for the production of the copy, as on that day the whole of the documents were read over to him (Folio 104 of the Investigation Documents).

Lastly, an irregularity on the part of the authorities against the prescription of Tit. IV., Art. 18, could only entail a fine, as the documents prove that the order of arrest had been made according to law, and that, consequently, no material right of the prisoner had been violated.

The fact of no document containing the accusation having been put before the accused requires no justification. In the preliminary investigation the communication of the accusations and grounds of suspicion takes place regularly and properly only when the investigating judge who has to prepare the accusation considers it necessary.

No less untenable is the complaint that no counsel was allowed to the accused during the investigation. That appears to be utterly inadmissible in preliminary investigations. At the opening of the judicial trial, counsel was granted to White, as the Peruvian law requires, and he conducted the defence with the utmost zeal. It is evident that the granting of counsel in preliminary investigations preceding a criminal trial cannot be claimed by Art. 7 of the Treaty of the 10th April 1850, which stipulates that in no case shall counsel be denied to British subjects any more than to natives, as at this stage counsel is not allowed to natives. (See Report of Judge Ponce, dated 7th September 1861.)

The complaint also that an interpreter was denied to the accused is proved to be unfounded. The report of Banda (Folio 7 of the Investigation Documents) proves that the accused was asked, before the examination, whether he was acquainted with the Spanish language, and that he replied in the affirmative. White's knowledge of the language may also be inferred from his signing, without protest, the minutes of the examination (folio 6, ibid.), and it is also proved by the testimony of Calista Peralta (folio 48, ibid.). The order, therefore, of the Attorney General which denied this request as frivolous is fully justified.

The assertion of White that threats and intimidations were used, and that he had even been forced to sign a false document, appears to be a pure invention in the face of the documents and the official reports of Ponce (Vide Folios 4 and 102 of the Investigation Documents), and the reports of Ponce of the 29th of April and 7th of December 1861.

That White was forced to sign any document is the more evidently untrue, as not only was there no reason whatever for it, but also because he refused to sign nearly all the documents laid before him; nor was he ever asked to do so a second time, for it was quite immaterial to the course of the proceedings whether his signature was given or not.

Finally, just as little can there be any just complaint that the accused was not confronted with any of the witnesses examined, the order for such confrontation depending solely on the discretion of the investigating judge, and on his conscientious consideration whether it would be desirable for the purpose of ascertaining the true state of the case.

In the present case the Judge could not deem it desirable, as there were no contradictions to be cleared up, for which purpose such confrontations are usually ordered; for White says nothing at all against the evidence of the witnesses, but contented himself by declaring that such testimony did not affect him, and accusing the Peruvian Government of having bought it.

But, as it is stated on page 17 of the statement of the British Government, "It appears that the Judges, when they ascertained from his answers to their own interrogatories that he desired any particular witnesses to be examined on his own behalf, took similar means for procuring the testimony of these witnesses." It is only thereby acknowledged that the Judge did his duty according to the legally inquisitorial character of the preliminary investigation for a penal accusation.

It must be repeated, that the principles of law which obtain in England are not applicable here.

Now, as White was arrested on the 23d of March 1861, and the accusation of the Attorney General was not made until the 28th of August, it appears at first sight that the investigation lasted an unusually long time. But it was necessary, first of all, to examine a great number of witnesses, and at four places far distant from each other—namely, Lima, Arica, Tacna, and Iquiqui; and it appears from the documents that the time up to the 4th of July was fully occupied by that examination, and by the necessary official communications of the various courts with each other, as well as those of the acting judges with the higher authorities for the purpose of obtaining their decisions; and there does not appear to be any grounds for charging the courts and authorities with laziness. On the 4th of July it was reported from Arica that the examination of the witnesses, Pedro, Caro, Jerr, Thomas Pearson, and Manuel Ruperto could not be obtained, as they resided in the Republic of Bolivia. Then, as it could not well be left undone in the then state of the investigation, the necessary steps were taken to obtain their evidence there; but as no answer had, up to the 8th of August, been given by the Ministry of the Republic of Bolivia to the written request made for that purpose, the Attorney General, in order to avoid a useless delay, decided on the following day that the proceedings should be commenced forthwith. That from this day no delay took place up to the sentence in the Third Instance, with the exception already mentioned as not satisfactorily explained, but at all events of no importance, has been shown above.

This complaint also must, therefore, be considered as disposed of.

4. The last complaint of the British Government—"The expulsion of White from the territory of Peru, as the result and consequence of such unjust proceedings."

As the basis of this complaint, the statement of the British Government says (at page 29), that although the Corte Superior had annulled the sentence in the First Instance, that White should quit the country, the Peruvian Government ordered him to leave the country, and that this order had been transmitted to him through the prefect of the town of Lima, to whom he was ordered to present himself on his release on the 9th of January 1862.

These alleged facts are, however, contradicted by the documents. In the first place, the sentence of the Corte Superior is of no importance, as that sentence was quashed by the Corte Suprema, and only orders a surveillance by the police of the accused, who was freed from the Instance. There is no mention, therefore, of banishment in the sentence. Moreover, there is no foundation whatever for the assertion that the Peruvian Government gave this order of banishment contrary to the final judgment. The circumstance also that this complaint was never pressed at the previous diplomatic proceedings by the British Government against the the Peruvian Government does not add to its credibility ; but the untruth of this assertion is evident from the letter which White addressed to the criminal judge on the 15th of January, in which he requests (Fol. 1 of the Investigation Documents) to be furnished forthwith with copies of the documents of the trial, " as he was obliged to quit the Republic on account of urgent private affairs."

As it appears, therefore, from all that precedes, that the British subject, Captain Thomas Melville White, was arrested on Peruvian territory, on occasion of serious suspicions, based upon important information ; that the investigation has been conducted with zeal and circumspection, in conformity with the regulations of the Peruvian laws, and without procrastination ; that he was publicly accused in consequence of the result of this investigation, and by no means found innocent, and was therefore not absolved by the legally valid sentence of the Supreme Court of Lima, whose jurisdiction is not at all questioned, from the charge of hostile agitation against the Republic, but only freed from the Instance ; whilst the assertions that White had been treated during his arrest with cruelty and severity, and expelled the country by the Peruvian Government, contrary to the sentence, when not in direct contradiction to the documents, are wholly destitute of any credible foundation ;—the present claim on the part of the British Government for a pecuniary compensation for White appears of no force whatever, and is to be rejected as unfounded.

The costs to which each party has been put with regard to these proceedings are to be borne by themselves. The costs incurred by the Commission in these proceedings are to be paid, a moiety by each party.

Correspondence relating to Poland.

No. 1.

Earl Russell to Lord Napier.

My Lord,

Foreign Office, August 11, 1863.

ON the 18th of last month Baron Brunnow communicated to me a despatch which he had received the evening before from Prince Gortchakoff.

This despatch, of which I inclose a copy,* is far from being a satisfactory answer to the representation which, in concert with France and Austria, Her Majesty's Government addressed to the Cabinet of St. Petersburg.

The despatch begins, indeed, by stating that "the Imperial Cabinet admits the principle that every Power signing a Treaty has a right to interpret its sense from its own point of view, provided that the interpretation remains within the limits of the meaning that it is possible to put upon it according to the text itself." Prince Gortchakoff adds, "In virtue of this principle the Imperial Cabinet does not dispute this right on the part of any one of the eight Powers which have concurred in the General Act of Vienna of 1815."

Prince Gortchakoff, however, departing widely from the question of the interpretation of the Treaty of Vienna, proceeds to ascribe the continuance of the insurrection in Poland to the moral and material assistance which it receives from without; admits vaguely the six points; rejects the proposed suspension of hostilities; refuses to accept a Conference of the eight Powers who signed the Treaty; and, finally, declares that the re-establishment of order must precede the serious application of any measures destined for the pacification of Poland.

Her Majesty's Government will now proceed to examine calmly the principal topics of Prince Gortchakoff's reply to the considerations brought before him in my despatch.

1. Prince Gortchakoff, while he admits that confidence on the part of the governed, and the ascendancy of law over arbitrary power, must be the foundation of order and stability, adds that the indispensable corollary to these principles is respect for authority. But the Russian Cabinet cannot be ignorant that clemency and conciliation are often more effective in establishing respect for authority than material force. It would be a lamentable error to seek to restore that respect by force of arms alone, without the addition of some adequate security for the political and religious rights of the subjects of the King of Poland. Such security the proposals of the three Powers held out to Russia and to Poland alike.

It has pleased the Cabinet of St. Petersburg not to avail itself of this mode of restoring respect for authority.

2. Prince Gortchakoff affirms—and this view is the theme of the beginning and end of his despatch—that the re-establishment of order in Poland is dependent upon a condition to which he had called the attention of the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, "and which is not only unfulfilled, but is not even alluded to in the despatch of Lord Russell; we refer to the material assistance and moral encouragements obtained from abroad by the insurgents."

Her Majesty's Government would have been glad to have avoided this topic, and instead of commenting on the past, to refer only to healing measures for the future.

But thus compelled by Prince Gortchakoff's reference to allude to the subject, Her Majesty's Government have no hesitation in declaring their conviction that the principal obstacle to the re-establishment of order in Poland is not the assistance obtained by the insurgents from abroad, but the conduct of the Russian Government itself.

The Empress Catherine in 1772 promised to the Poles the maintenance of their religion. The Emperor Alexander I in 1815 promised to the Poles national representation and national administration.

* See "Correspondence respecting the Insurrection in Poland, 1863," Part IV, presented to Parliament, July 20, 1863.

These promises have not been fulfilled. During many years the religion of the Poles was attacked, and to the present hour they are not in possession of the political rights assured to them by the Treaty of 1815 and the Constitution of the same year.

The violation of these solemn engagements on the part of the Russian Government produced disaffection, and the sudden invasion of the homes of Warsaw in a night of January last was the immediate cause of the present insurrection.

Unless the general feeling in Poland had been estranged from Russia, the moral and material assistance afforded from abroad would have availed the insurgents little. It is true, however, that lively sympathy has been excited in Europe in favour of the Poles. In every considerable State where there exists a national representation,—in England, in France, in Austria, in Prussia, in Italy, in Spain, in Portugal, in Sweden, in Denmark,—that sympathy has been manifested. Wherever there is a National Administration, the Administration has shared, though with prudence and reserve in expression, the feelings of the legislature and the nation.

Russia ought to take into account these sympathies, and profit by the lesson which they teach.

3. Prince Gortchakoff lays much stress on the fact, which cannot be denied, that “the insurgents demand neither an amnesty, nor an autonomy, nor a representation more or less complete.”

But it would be a mistake to suppose that in cases of this kind there are only two parties, viz., the Government occupied in suppressing the insurrection, and the leaders of the insurgents busy in fomenting and extending it. Besides these parties there is always in such cases a large floating mass who would be quite contented to see persons and property secure under a just and beneficent Administration. The confidence of this great mass has not been obtained, and their continued inaction can hardly be depended upon.

Her Majesty's Government must again represent the extreme urgency of attempting at once the work of conciliation which is so necessary for the general interest.

In profiting by the loyal and disinterested assistance which is offered her by Austria, France, and Great Britain, the Court of Russia secures to herself the most powerful means towards making ideas of moderation prevail in Poland, and thus laying the foundations of permanent peace.

4. In referring to the Treaty of Vienna, Prince Gortchakoff says that “we should not be far from the truth if we affirmed that the 1st Article of the Treaty of Vienna was prepared by and directly emanated from His Majesty the Emperor Alexander I.”

Her Majesty's Government readily admit the probability of this supposition. In 1815, Great Britain, Austria, France, and Prussia would have preferred to the arrangement finally made, a restoration of the ancient Kingdom of Poland as it existed prior to the first partition of 1772, or even the establishment of a new independent Kingdom of Poland, with the same limits as the present kingdom.

The great army which the Emperor Alexander then had in Poland, the important services which Russia had rendered to the Alliance, and, above all, a fear of the renewal of war in Europe, combined to make Great Britain, Austria, and Prussia accept the arrangement proposed by the Emperor Alexander, although it was, in their eyes, of the three arrangements in contemplation the one least likely to produce permanent peace and security in Europe.

But the more Her Majesty's Government see in the decision adopted the prevailing influence of Russia, the more they are impressed with the conviction that the Emperor of Russia ought to be, of all Sovereigns, the most desirous to observe the conditions of that arrangement.

It would not be open to Russia to enjoy all the benefits of a large addition to her dominions, and to repudiate the terms of the instrument upon which her tenure depends.

In stating these terms Prince Gortchakoff says that the only stipulation which can have made it appear doubtful that the Emperor of Russia possessed the Kingdom of Poland by the same title as that by which he holds his other possessions, the only one which could make his rights dependent upon any condition whatever, is contained in two passages, which he proceeds to quote.

But there is another passage which he does not quote. It is found in the beginning of the 1st Article, and says:—

“The Duchy of Warsaw, with the exception of the provinces and districts which are otherwise disposed of by the following Articles, is united to the Russian Empire, to which it shall be irrevocably attached by its Constitution, and be possessed by His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, his heirs and successors in perpetuity."

Were not a national representation intended by this Article it would have been sufficient to say, "to which it shall be irrevocably attached," without any mention of a Constitution.

It is, therefore, evident that the Constitution is the link by which Poland was connected with Russia. It is important to know what this Constitution was which united Poland and Russia. It was not prescribed by the Treaty; it was not promulgated by the European Powers; its construction was left entirely to the Emperor Alexander: but nevertheless, when once promulgated, it must be taken to be the Constitution meant by the framers of the Treaty of Vienna.

It was for this reason that Her Majesty's Government proposed as the second of the six points laid before the Government of Russia, "national representation with powers similar to those which are fixed by the Charter of the 1st 5th November, 1815."

5. Passing to the specific propositions of Her Majesty's Government, Prince Gortchakoff says in regard to the six points, that the greater part of the measures which were pointed out by the three Powers "have already been either decreed or prepared on the initiative of our august Master."

Towards the end of the despatch an allusion is made to "the measures which His Majesty adheres to, both in the germs already laid down, and in the development of them which he has allowed to be foreseen."

This passage, though far from being a definite assurance either of a national representation with efficacious means of control, or of a national administration, gives some hope that the Emperor Alexander will ultimately listen to the inspirations of his own benevolent disposition and to the counsels of Europe.

The proposal of a suspension of hostilities is rejected "in justice to the Emperor's faithful army, to the peaceable majority of Poles, and to Russia, on whom these agitations impose painful sacrifices."

The proposal of a Conference of the Powers who signed the Treaty of Vienna is rejected, and with it the prospect of an immediate and friendly concert.

In the place of this fair and equitable proposal, the Russian Cabinet suggests that the three Powers who proposed the separate Treaties between Austria and Russia, and Prussia and Russia, previously to the General Treaty of Vienna, should meet together, and that France and Great Britain should be afterwards informed of the result of their deliberations.

There are two reasons, either of which would be sufficient to condemn this suggestion:—

1. The Treaties in question, taken apart from the provisions inserted in the General Treaty of Vienna, have reference only to material objects,—the use of the banks of rivers, the regulations for towing paths, the free passage of merchandize from one province to another, and such other matters of convenience and of commerce. No political developments or details are contained in them.

2. It is obvious that such a Conference would place Austria in a false position, and be inconsistent with her relations to France and Great Britain.

His Majesty the Emperor of Austria, therefore, with a proper sense of his own dignity, has at once rejected the Russian proposal.

In communicating their views to Prince Gortchakoff, it remains to Her Majesty's Government to discharge an imperative duty.

It is to call his Excellency's most serious attention to the gravity of the situation, and the responsibility which it imposes upon Russia.

Great Britain, Austria, and France have pointed out the urgent necessity of putting an end to a deplorable state of things which is full of danger to Europe. They have at the same time indicated the means which, in their opinion, ought to be employed to arrive at this termination, and they have offered their co-operation in order to attain it with more certainty.

If Russia does not perform all that depends upon her to further the moderate and conciliatory views of the three Powers, if she does not enter upon the path which is opened to her by friendly counsels, she makes herself responsible for the serious consequences which the prolongation of the troubles of Poland may produce.

I HAVE to instruct your Excellency to read to Prince Gortchakoff, and to give his Excellency a copy of, my previous despatch of this day's date. But before doing so you will concert with your Austrian and French colleagues as to the time and mode in which the communication of the replies to Prince Gortchakoff's despatch respecting Poland shall be made to his Excellency.

No. 3.

Lord Napier to Earl Russell.—(Received August 24.)

My Lord,

St. Petersburg, August 19, 1863.

YOUR Lordship's despatch of the 11th instant, embodying the reply of Her Majesty's Government to the Russian communication of the 18th ultimo respecting the affairs of Poland, reached me on the night of the 16th. The French Ambassador had been for several days in possession of the instructions of his Government, and the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires had received his orders on the previous evening.

In conformity with the instructions contained in your Lordship's other despatch of the 11th instant, I concerted with my colleagues that an application should be addressed to Prince Gortchakoff on the 17th instant for interviews at which the communications of our respective Governments might be laid before his Excellency.

Prince Gortchakoff appointed an hour this afternoon for each of us at the Foreign Office in St. Petersburg.

The Austrian Chargé d'Affaires was received first.

I waited upon the Vice-Chancellor at 1 o'clock, and placed your Lordship's instruction in his Excellency's hands. The Prince read it through aloud, and informed me at the close that he would take the orders of the Emperor.

The French Ambassador entered as I left the apartment of the Vice-Chancellor. I have seen the Duke de Montebello since. I learn from his Excellency that he communicated the despatch of M. Drouyn de Lhuys and the Memorandum accompanying it to the Russian Minister, and received the same reply which had been given to me.

Prince Gortchakoff to Baron Brunnow.—(Communicated to Earl Russell by Baron Brunnow, September 14.)Tsarkoe-Selo, le ^{26 Aout,}_{7 Septembre} 1863.

LORD NAPIER m'a donné, d'ordre de son Gouvernement, communication d'une dépêche de Lord Russell, dont votre Excellence trouvera ci-près la copie.

Elle sert de réponse à ma dépêche du $\frac{1}{13}$ Juillet dernier, que vous avez été invité à communiquer à M. le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique.

Les ouvertures que nous avions consignées dans cette pièce nous avaient été inspirées par le désir d'arriver à une entente.

En accueillant les observations qu'elles ont suggérées à Lord Russell avec l'attention que nous accordons toujours aux opinions du Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique, nous ne pouvons que regretter de devoir en conclure que nous n'avons pas atteint le but que nous nous étions proposé.

Du moment où cette polémique n'aboutirait qu'à constater et à confirmer la divergence de nos points de vue, elle serait trop contraire à nos dispositions conciliantes pour que nous cherchions à la prolonger, et nous ne croyons pas nous éloigner en cela de la pensée de M. le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique.

Nous préférons ne nous attacher qu'aux points essentiels de ses dépêches, sur lesquels nous nous trouvons d'accord, au moins d'intention.

Le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté Britannique désire voir promptement rétabli dans le Royaume de Pologne un état de choses qui rendrait la tranquillité à ce pays, le repos à l'Europe, la sécurité aux relations des Cabinets.

Nous partageons entièrement ce désir, et tout ce que peut dépendre de nous sera fait pour le réaliser.

Notre auguste Maître reste animé des intentions les plus bienveillantes envers la Pologne, les plus conciliantes envers toutes les Puissances étrangères.

Le bien-être de ses sujets de toutes les races et de toutes les convictions religieuses est une obligation que Sa Majesté a acceptée vis-à-vis de Dieu, de sa conscience, et de ses peuples. L'Empereur consacre toute sa sollicitude à la remplir.

Quant à la responsabilité que Sa Majesté peut assumer dans ses rapports internationaux, ces rapports sont réglés par le droit public. Sa violation de ces principes fondamentaux peut seule entraîner une responsabilité. Notre auguste Maître a constamment respecté et observé ces principes envers les autres Etats. Sa Majesté est en droit d'attendre et de réclamer le même respect de la part des autres Puissances.

Vous voudrez bien donner lecture et copie de cette dépêche à M. le Principal Secrétaire d'Etat de Sa Majesté Britannique.

(Translation.)

Tsarkoe-Selo, ^{August 26,}
^{September 7,} 1863.

LORD NAPIER has, by order of his Government, communicated to me a despatch from Lord Russell, of which your Excellency will find a copy hereunto annexed.

It is an answer to my despatch of the ^{1st}_{15th} July last, which you were invited to communicate to the Principal Secretary of State of Her Britannic Majesty.

The overtures which we had set forth in that document were dictated to us by the desire to arrive at an understanding.

In receiving the observations which they have suggested to Lord Russell with the attention which we always pay to the opinions of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, we cannot but regret that we must come to the conclusion that we have not attained the end which we had proposed to ourselves.

From the moment that this discussion could only end in establishing and in confirming the divergence of our views, it would be too contrary to our conciliatory disposition for us to seek to prolong it; and we believe that in this we are not acting at variance with the sentiments of the Principal Secretary of State of Her Britannic Majesty.

We prefer to fix our attention only upon the essential points of his despatches, upon which we find ourselves agreed, at least in intention.

Her Britannic Majesty's Government desire to see promptly re-established in the Kingdom of Poland a state of things which shall restore tranquillity to that country, repose to Europe, and security to the relations of the Cabinets.

We entirely share in this desire, and all that can depend upon us shall be done to realize it.

Our august Master continues to be animated by the most benevolent intentions towards Poland, and by the most conciliatory towards all foreign Powers. To provide for the welfare of his subjects of all races and of every religious conviction is an obligation which His Imperial Majesty has accepted before God, his conscience, and his people. The Emperor devotes all his solicitude to the fulfilment of that obligation.

As regards the responsibility which may be assumed by His Majesty in his international relations, those relations are regulated by public right. The violation of those fundamental principles can alone involve responsibility. Our august Master has constantly respected and observed those principles with regard to other States. His Majesty has the right to expect and to claim the same respect on the part of the other Powers.

You will be pleased to read and give a copy of this despatch to the Principal Secretary of State of Her Britannic Majesty.

Receive, &c.

Earl Russell to Lord Napier.

My Lord,

Foreign Office, October 20, 1863.

BARON BRUNNOW has communicated to me a despatch from Prince Gortchakoff dated ^{August 26} ~~September 7~~, in reply to my despatch to your Excellency of the 11th ultimo, of which you were instructed to give a copy to his Excellency.

Her Majesty's Government have no wish to prolong the correspondence on the subject of Poland for the mere purpose of controversy,

Her Majesty's Government receive with satisfaction the assurance that the Emperor of Russia continues to be animated with intentions of benevolence towards Poland, and of conciliation in respect to all foreign Powers.

Her Majesty's Government acknowledge that the relations of Russia towards European Powers are regulated by public law; but the Emperor of Russia has special obligations in regard to Poland.

Her Majesty's Government have, in the despatch of the 11th of August and preceding despatches, shown that in regard to this particular question the rights of Poland are contained in the same instrument which constitutes the Emperor of Russia King of Poland.

I am, &c.
(Signed) RUSSELL.

P.S.—Your Excellency is instructed to give a copy of this despatch to Prince Gortchakoff.

No. 6.

Lord Napier to Earl Russell.—(Received November 9.)

My Lord,

St. Petersburg, October 27, 1863.

IN conformity with your Lordship's telegraphic instructions I waited on Prince Gortchakoff this forenoon, and placed in his Excellency's hands your Lordship's despatch of the 20th instant, having reference to the affairs of Poland.

The Vice-Chancellor read your Lordship's despatch through aloud without offering any remark. At the conclusion his Excellency observed that in the communication with which I was charged he saw a proof of the friendly disposition of Her Majesty's Government, and an act conformable to the true interests of Poland, for the moderation of Her Majesty's Government must discourage the exaggerated expectations of the Revolutionary party, and hasten the moment when the Emperor would be enabled to carry into effect his benevolent intentions towards his Polish subjects.

I have, &c.

Communications with the French Government respecting Poland.

No. 1.

Lord Cowley to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received September 17.)

My Lord,

Paris, September 16, 1855.

A COMMUNICATION of considerable importance is about to be made to your Lordship on the part of the French Government.

The Emperor is most anxious that in any future discussions for the re-establishment of peace the condition of Poland should be considered. Count Walewski informs me that he has addressed a long and elaborate despatch on this subject to M. de Persigny.

He observed to me that the political position of Poland was settled by the Treaties of 1815; that the Treaties were made chiefly against France, and that if France is called upon, on all occasions, to respect them, she has, in her turn, a right to call for a like observance of them by others; that both France and England would have been justified in going to war when the political condition of Poland was arbitrarily changed by the Emperor of Russia, but that their not doing so did not bar their right to take advantage of any opportunity which might present itself to put forward the claims of that kingdom. But although France and England had not considered it necessary to go to war, they had protested against the injury practised against Poland, and their protests were upon record, but that now that war had broken out on other grounds, it was their duty and interest to make the re-establishment of the Kingdom of Poland, as defined and settled by the Treaties of 1815, one of the conditions of peace. Count Walewski added that neither the Emperor nor himself doubted of the acquiescence of Her Majesty's Government in such moderate views.

It would not have become me to pronounce any opinion on a subject of so much importance without some previous knowledge of the language which Her Majesty's Government might wish me to hold. I could, of course, have no doubt as to their sympathies, but I could not prejudge their policy. I listened, therefore, to Count Walewski in silence.

No. 2.

Count Walewski to Count Persigny.—(Communicated to the Earl of Clarendon by Count Persigny, September 22.)

M. le Comte,

Paris, le 15 Septembre, 1855.

CETTE dépêche a pour but d'appeler votre attention et de vous engager à fixer celle du Gouvernement de Sa Majesté la Reine Victoria sur une question qui excite à juste titre la sollicitude de l'Empereur, et à laquelle le Cabinet de Londres ne prend sans doute pas moins d'intérêt. Il s'agit de la question de la Pologne; je n'en parlerai que dans la mesure pratique du possible, et à un point de vue qui, j'aime à le croire, aura l'assentiment du Ministère Anglais.

Au moment où les glorieux succès des armées alliées semblent autoriser l'espérance de voir se rapprocher le terme de la guerre, et lorsque, en vertu des principes de désintéressement et de loyauté si hautement proclamés par la France et l'Angleterre dès le début de la lutte, le rétablissement de la paix devra n'apporter aucun changement à l'ensemble des circonscriptions territoriales consacrées par les Traités de Vienne de 1815,— à ce moment, dis-je, le Gouvernement de l'Empereur en rappelant avec quel respect scrupuleux la France a constamment observé ces Traités si onéreux pour elle, se croit justement fondé à demander que d'autres Puissances, pour qui leurs stipulations n'étaient pas moins obligatoires, soient tenues de les respecter et de les exécuter avec la même fidélité.

Parmi ces stipulations, l'Article I du Traité de Vienne du 9 Juin, 1815, en prononçant la réunion du Duché de Varsovie à l'Empire de Russie, régla qu'il y serait lié invariablement par sa constitution sous le nom de Royaume de Pologne. Ce n'était là, sans doute, qu'une réparation bien incomplète de l'injustice des partages qui ont anéanti la Pologne. Toutefois, c'était un hommage rendu par la Russie au principe indélébile de la nationalité Polonaise, et le Royaume de Pologne avec sa constitution, avec son administration distincte et son armée toute nationale, possédait en réalité des garanties qui manquaient aux autres provinces démembrées. Ces garanties et l'ordre de choses qu'elles avaient pour but de protéger ont disparu en 1831, après la répression de l'insurrection de la Pologne, sous l'influence d'une politique violente et réactionnaire. Contrairement à des promesses et à des assurances formelles de l'Empereur Nicolas, le Royaume de Pologne, incorporé à la Russie, n'a plus été qu'une province de cet Empire. Les Traités qui en avaient constitué l'existence politique étaient ouvertement méconnus. Et cependant, celui du 9 Juin, 1815, était alors comme aujourd'hui, un acte essentiellement Européen, par lequel toutes les Parties Contractantes sont liées virtuellement l'une envers l'autre, et chacune d'elles envers toutes. Ni le soulèvement de la Pologne ni le triomphe de l'armée Russe sur les insurgés n'avaient pu, sous aucun rapport et à aucun titre, dégager la Russie de ses obligations à l'égard des Etats avec la participation et sous la garantie desquels ce Traité fut signé. La France et l'Angleterre réclamèrent contre une telle infraction au droit public de l'Europe; et si, dans l'intérêt du maintien de la tranquillité générale, elles évitèrent d'en faire un cas de guerre, toutes deux n'en réservèrent qu'avec plus de force les droits pour lesquels elles venaient de protester, en attendant qu'il s'offrit une occasion de les rappeler et de les soutenir avec plus de force.

Cette occasion peut, M. le Comte, ne pas tarder à naître, et le moment est venu de se préparer à faire du rétablissement du Royaume de Pologne, dans les conditions stipulées par le Congrès de Vienne, un des objets essentiels des négociations de la paix, aussitôt qu'elles deviendront possibles, en même temps qu'une des bases fondamentales de cette paix. Une demande semblable de la part de la France et de l'Angleterre n'aurait assurément rien de nouveau ni d'inattendu; elle ne serait que la conséquence logique des réclamations présentées à une autre époque en faveur de la Pologne, et viendrait attester d'une manière encore plus solennelle les grands principes d'équité et d'équilibre politique qui les unissent et les dirigent. En un mot, la France et l'Angleterre, pour prix de tant et de si douloureux sacrifices déjà faits et qu'elles continuent de faire à la cause de l'indépendance et de la sécurité de l'Europe, ont certainement le droit de vouloir qu'une question qui s'y trouve si essentiellement liée soit ramenée à une solution plus conforme à ces grands intérêts; et je pourrais ajouter, plus conforme aussi à ceux de la Russie, qui verrait ainsi disparaître pour elle une cause incessante de troubles et de fâcheuses complications.

Le Gouvernement de l'Empereur se plaît à espérer que celui de Sa Majesté Britannique, envisageant au même point de vue cette importante question, n'appréciera pas moins la nécessité de la comprendre dans les futures négociations de la paix, et n'hésitera point à unir ses efforts aux nôtres pour obtenir le redressement d'un acte contre lequel la conscience des Gouvernements et des peuples n'a cessé de protester, car le temps n'a pu en affaiblir ni l'iniquité ni les funestes conséquences.

Vous voudrez bien donner lecture et laisser copie de cette dépêche à Lord Clarendon, et m'informer des dispositions du Cabinet Anglais.

Agréé, &c.

M. le Comte,

Paris, September 15, 1855.

THE object of this despatch is to call your attention and to invite you to direct the attention of the Government of Her Majesty Queen Victoria to a question which justly excites the solicitude of the Emperor, and in which the Cabinet of London is doubtless no less interested. I mean the question of Poland; I shall only speak of it within the limits of what is possible, and from a point of view which I flatter myself will meet with the assent of the English Government.

At a moment when the glorious successes of the allied armies seem to warrant the hope that we may see the end of the war drawing near, in virtue of the disinterested and loyal principles so loudly proclaimed by France and England since the beginning of the struggle, the restoration of peace must introduce no change in the general territorial circumscriptions consecrated by the Treaties of Vienna of 1815. At this moment, I say, the Government of the Emperor, recalling the scrupulous respect with which France has constantly observed these Treaties so onerous for her, believes herself entitled to demand that other Powers, upon whom their stipulations were not less binding, should be held to respect and to execute them with the same fidelity.

Among these stipulations, the 1st Article of the Treaty of Vienna of June 9, 1815, in declaring the union of the Duchy of Warsaw with the Empire of Russia, ruled that it should be unchangeably bound to it by its Constitution under the name of Kingdom of Poland. This was doubtless only a very incomplete reparation of the injustice of the partitions which have annihilated Poland. At any rate it was a tribute paid by Russia to the indelible principle of Polish nationality, and the Kingdom of Poland, with its Constitution, with its distinct administration and its purely national army, possessed in reality guarantees which were wanting to the other dismembered provinces. These guarantees and the order of things which it was their aim to protect disappeared in 1831 after the suppression of the insurrection of Poland, under the influence of a violent and reactionary policy. Contrary to promises and to formal assurances of the Emperor Nicholas, the Kingdom of Poland, incorporated with Russia, has since been nothing but a province of that Empire. The Treaties which had constituted its political existence were openly disregarded, and yet, that of the 9th June, 1815, was then, as now, an essentially European act, by which all the Contracting Parties are virtually bound to one another, and each of them to all the rest. Neither the insurrection of Poland, nor the triumph of the Russian army over the insurgents, could in any respect or by any right relieve Russia from her obligations towards the States with whose participation and under whose guarantee this Treaty was signed.

France and England protested against such an infraction of the public law of Europe; and if, in the interest of the maintenance of general tranquillity, they avoided making it a cause of war, they both reserved with only greater force the rights for which they had been protesting, while waiting till an opportunity offered for reiterating and supporting them with increased vigour.

This opportunity, M. le Comte, cannot fail to occur, and the moment is arrived for preparing to make the re-establishment of the Kingdom of Poland, according to the conditions stipulated by the Congress of Vienna, one of the essential objects of the negotiations for peace, as soon as they become possible, as well as one of the fundamental bases of such peace.

Such a demand on the part of France and England would assuredly be in no way novel or unexpected; it would be only the logical result of the representations put forward at another epoch in favour of Poland, and would tend to attest in a still more solemn manner the great principles of equity and political equilibrium which unite and direct them. In a word, France and England, in return for the many and painful sacrifices which they have already made and continue to make for the cause of the independence and safety of Europe, have certainly the right to desire that a question so essentially connected with the same should be brought to a solution more in conformity with these great interests, and, I might add, more conformable to those of Russia, who would thus see disappear an incessant cause of troubles and vexatious complications for herself.

The Government of the Emperor indulges in the hope that that of Her Britannic Majesty, looking at this important question from the same point of view, will not the less appreciate the necessity of including it in the future negotiations for peace, and will not hesitate to unite their efforts with ours for obtaining redress for an act against which the conscience both of Governments and of nations has never ceased to protest, inasmuch as time has not been able to diminish either its iniquity or its melancholy results.

You will be so good as to read and leave a copy of this despatch with Lord Clarendon, and to inform me of the intentions of the English Cabinet.

Accept, &c.

Foreign Office, September 22, 1855.

I INCLOSE the copy of a despatch from Count Walewski,* which Count de Persigny has placed in my hands, with respect to the reconstitution of the Kingdom of Poland. His Excellency having read to me the despatch, I assured him that I would lose no time in bringing before the Cabinet the important subject to which it related; and I requested him to consider the observations I was about to make as the expression of my own personal opinion. It appeared to me, I said, that, upon general principles as well as for reasons which especially concerned France, the view taken by the Emperor of the question was indisputably just and correct. France had with perfect good faith observed the Treaties of 1815, and the first act of the Emperor's reign had been a declaration that he would not disturb the territorial arrangements secured by these Treaties. His Imperial Majesty was therefore completely justified in complaining that Russia should have been allowed to violate the engagement she had contracted by the 1st Article of the Treaty of Vienna, and in demanding that the reconstitution of the Kingdom of Poland should form one of the conditions of peace with that Power.

Her Majesty's Government, I added, were as desirous as that of the Emperor not only that the Treaty of Vienna should be fulfilled as an act of justice towards Poland, but also that the independence of Poland should be re-established as the most effectual barrier which Europe could possess against the encroachments of Russia, and the only question was whether the present moment would be opportune for England and France to contract any engagement upon the subject, and to bind themselves not to make peace until Russia pledged herself to give effect to the Treaty of Vienna with regard to Poland, and I ventured to think it was not, because we might be sure that any engagement, or even understanding, come to between the two Powers for this object would in a very short time become public, and would create alarm in Europe. It would be said, not without some reason, that upon the first news of victory England and France had lost sight of the original causes of the war, had thrown aside the terms upon which they had declared they would be ready to make peace, and intended to demand from Russia a concession which she would never make until she was far more beaten and humbled than at present.

We should thus, by an engagement which would be premature and which would not further the object in view, set all Europe (but more especially Austria, whose conduct with respect to Cracow was fully as unjustifiable as that of Russia towards Poland) against us, and fear would be felt, or pretended, that further successes against Russia would lead to fresh demands.

A sudden but not unnatural change had taken place in public opinion throughout Europe. A great delusion has been dispelled; the resources of Russia are no longer thought to be inexhaustible, and it is now known that she can be successfully assailed in her own territory. Her military prestige was destroyed, but alarm was already beginning to manifest itself at the imposing force presented to Europe by the union of England and France, and no efforts would be spared and no means would be neglected to break up the alliance.

As these efforts, however, would fail, and as we might hope for further military successes, it was not unreasonable to expect that the Powers of Europe would take part with the victors, and then would be the fitting time to consider seriously the question of Poland.

I thought therefore that without entering into any engagement, or binding themselves to any particular course of action, it would be sufficient for England and France to agree generally upon the principle involved in this question, and to determine that future events should as far as practicable be turned to account in favour of Poland.

I further begged to suggest to Count Persigny that, although the people of England and France were well disposed towards Poland, and would gladly learn that the wrongs of that unfortunate country were redressed, yet it might well be doubted whether they would for that object consent indefinitely to prolong the war, and whether the two Governments would not lose the support of public opinion in carrying on the war if it became known that the reconstitution of Poland were made a condition sine quâ non of peace.

M. de Persigny promised to report what I had said as the expression of my own individual opinions, but I have now to inform your Excellency that Her Majesty's Government, after mature deliberation have concurred in those opinions, and you are therefore instructed to read this despatch to Count Walewski.

No. 4.

Lord Cowley to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received September 25.)

My Lord,

Paris, September 24, 1855.

I HAD the honour to receive yesterday, shortly before I went to St. Cloud, your Lordship's despatch of the 22nd instant, giving the opinion of Her Majesty's Government upon the observations lately submitted to them on the part of the Emperor respecting the re-establishment of the Kingdom of Poland. I took, therefore, the opportunity of stating to the Emperor in general terms the nature of the observations contained in the despatch, and I requested His Majesty to read himself the concluding paragraphs, which sum up in a few words the conclusions of Her Majesty's Government.

The Emperor said that the nature of the proposition which he had desired Count Walewski to make through M. de Persigny to your Lordship had been entirely misunderstood. He had simply stated that, in his opinion, whenever negotiations for peace were resumed with Russia, the re-establishment of the Kingdom of Poland, as settled at the Congress of Vienna, should be insisted upon, and he wished to know whether Her Majesty's Government coincided in that opinion. He demanded nothing new—no alteration of the map, but merely that which was part of the general international law of Europe; nor had he asked for any engagement from Her Majesty's Government; he had only inquired whether their opinion agreed with his. He was quite satisfied with the answer returned by your Lordship and was quite willing to leave the question to be decided by the march of events.

I endeavoured to see Count Walewski after leaving the Emperor, in order to fulfil your Lordship's instructions by reading him the despatch in question, but I was unable to find him.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's despatch of the 24th instant, reporting a conversation which your Excellency had held with the Emperor of the French relative to the propositions of His Imperial Majesty for the reconstitution of the Kingdom of Poland, and I have to state to your Excellency in reply, that I approve of the language which you held to His Majesty on this occasion.

Her Majesty's Government would gladly see the Kingdom of Poland reconstituted, if the course of events proved favourable to that important measure.

IN consequence of the authorisation conveyed to me in your Lordship's despatch of the 5th instant, I have furnished Count Walewski with a copy of your Lordship's despatch of the 22nd ultimo, relative to the reorganisation of Poland becoming a condition of peace in any future negotiations with Russia.

Count Walewski profited of the opportunity to state that the views and opinions of Her Majesty's Government on this matter, as laid down in that despatch, were in perfect unison with those of the Government of the Emperor, and he expressed an intention of instructing M. de Persigny to give your Lordship this assurance.

Papers relative to the Arrest of the Rev. F. Anderson.

No. 1.

Lord Napier to Earl Russell.—(Received September 19.)

My Lord,

St. Petersburg, September 13, 1863.

I RECEIVED a letter yesterday from an English gentleman, the Rev. Mr. Clark, from Grodno, stating that a young Englishman of the name of Anderson, son of the English clergyman at Bonn, had been arrested at Grodno, and was confined there without being allowed to communicate with his friends.

I at once addressed the Minister of the Interior on the subject, who has informed me that Mr. Anderson has been set at liberty under an engagement that he will not leave Grodno until the investigation to which his conduct is being subjected has been brought to a close.

He is accused by the deposition of two insurgents who have come in of having abetted one of the proprietors of the country in importing arms and funds for the use of the revolt.

No. 2.

Lord Napier to Earl Russell.—(Received September 21.)

My Lord,

St. Petersburg, September 16, 1863.

I RECEIVED the inclosed letter this morning from Mr. Anderson, the British subject recently arrested at Grodno, as reported to your Lordship in my despatch of the 13th instant.

It appears in the highest degree improbable that an English gentleman in holy orders, and engaged in the profession of teaching, should have taken any part in revolutionary proceedings, and I trust that the Russian authorities will speedily recognize the error into which they have fallen, and restore Mr. Anderson to perfect liberty. Mr. Anderson acknowledges that the Russian authorities, after some rigorous measures at the moment of his arrest, have treated him with courtesy. It appears, however, that there are two insurgents who have made a deposition to the prejudice of Mr. Anderson.

As the accompanying letter is a natural and unstudied narration of what has occurred, I thought it would have a good effect in favour of Mr. Anderson if communicated to the Russian Government; I therefore hastened to place a translation of it in the hands of M. Moukhanow, begging his Excellency at the same time to accelerate the conclusion of the inquiry as much as possible.

In regard to the two insurgents who have given evidence against Mr. Anderson, I requested the Assistant Minister to impress upon the local authorities the untrustworthy nature of such testimony. I reminded his Excellency that General Mouravieff in a recent proclamation had made the denunciation of accomplices one of the conditions under which parties desiring to return to their allegiance should be admitted to the Imperial clemency, and I stated that, although all depositions made under these circumstances might not be untrustworthy, this regulation tended certainly to provoke false depositions, and to invalidate the value of statements made by parties in that position. I also recalled to the Minister that the Russian Government incessantly asserted that the reports and assertions of the insurgents were tinctured with falsehood, and that there was no reason to believe that these two rebels who appeared against my countryman were any more veracious than others; indeed, I said that it was not absolutely impossible that some of the Polish insurgents might find an interest in involving a British subject in order to produce a controversy between Her Majesty's Government and that of Russia.

M. Moukhanow replied that he would not lose sight of my remarks, and that he would attend to the case without delay.

Inclosure in No. 2.

The Rev. F. Anderson to Lord Napier.

My Lord,

Hotel Romer, Grodno, September 13, 1863.

YOUR Lordship's kind telegram I received this afternoon. Your Lordship will ere this have received a letter from me, written in prison on Wednesday, and which the Governor has forwarded.

I left Bonn on the Rhine (where my father the Rev. James Anderson, late of Brighton, is Chaplain) on the 26th of February with a Polish gentleman, the Count Bisping-Galen, and arrived here on the 4th of March. I had taught my friend English in Bonn for three months, and at his invitation I came to finish those studies. I have travelled with him a great deal from one property to another, and we have never met with the slightest inconvenience until Monday last, the 7th instant, when we were leaving Grodno for Wiercielszki (a property of my friend's, about six English miles distant). The carriage was stopped at the barrier, and we with our luggage were conducted upstairs. I was commanded to undress; this I at first declined doing, on the ground that I was an English subject travelling with an English passport duly viséd at Berlin, also with a Russian passport which I received on my arrival here; but finding that resistance might make matters worse, and was utterly useless, I complied in every way with their demands. A strict revision took place, conducted by the officials with the greatest civility. All my private papers, letters, and books were seized, and I was told that I was under arrest, and conducted to the prison, ignorant of the charge against me; then after another strict revision of myself and luggage, I was conducted to a cell, where I was locked up and left to my own reflections. I never passed such a miserable night in my life, and I hope I never shall again.

On Tuesday I was taken before a Committee of Officers of the Guards, and was then told that I was accused of supplying money, cannons, revolvers, cloth, &c., &c., to a band of insurgents, which band I had visited three or four times. I denied the charge in toto, and after three hours' examination was sent back to my cell, where I passed the rest of the day.

On Wednesday I was against brought before the Committee, and wrote three letters—one to your Lordship, one to the Consul at Warsaw, and one to my father, which letters the Governor told me on Saturday he had sent. I asked permission to walk in the open air for some time, which request was granted, and then I returned to my cell.

Thursday, early in the morning, the Governor of the prison came and by signs made me to understand, that I should go out that day; and at 1 o'clock I was called again, the money that was due to me from the Count was given to me; and I was told that I was to go and lodge with the Head of the Police, who soon after came, and with him I went, first of all to the Governor of Grodno, who told me that there were three Englishmen in the town. I asked immediately, Under arrest or free? but he was not at liberty to tell me then, he said. I after went home with the Head of the Police; he gave me dinner, soon after which I retired to my room where I stayed the rest of the day; at night I had a guard of three soldiers stationed outside the door.

On Friday about 11 in the forenoon I saw the Head of the Police coming to his house with three gentlemen, who soon turned out to be the three Englishmen, so you may imagine my delight when I heard from English lips that I was at liberty to go with them and live where I like, but must give my word not to leave the town without the Russian permission. I signed a paper to that effect, which they then witnessed, and I went with them away. The names of the three gentlemen are Messrs. Clarke, Ballock, and Birkbeck, all known personally to the Consul, but all strangers to me. They have fully sustained their character as Englishmen. No men could have acted more promptly or prudently. No men could have taken more trouble than they did for me, and by their representations I have no doubt I was liberated on parole. They left for Wilna the same evening, but I was in hopes to see them on their return to Warsaw.

On Saturday I went again before the Committee, and then two young men were produced, one of whom said that he had seen me with my friend three or four times in the band of insurgents where he was, bringing with us, money, cannons, revolvers, swords and cloth, and that once I brought two men, and that I spoke Polish well, and understood all I heard in Polish. The other said that he had only seen me once, and that then I brought one gun, and that I spoke French, and that I brought money to the band.

Both these denunciations are utterly and entirely untrue. I have never been near any band of insurgents. I have never supplied them with any of the aforesaid articles, neither have I mixed myself at all in their affairs, neither do I speak Polish, neither do I understand it.

At my last examination there was an officer (late of the Marines), but now in the Guards, who speaks English fairly well, and by his very kind assistance I got on better, as before I had to speak French, and I speak both French and German indifferently.

This is how the case at present stands ; I know not how it will end.

There was a German servant, a Prussian subject, with us when we were arrested ; he has remained in prison until this morning, when he also was released on parole, and is now with me. I went last night to the Governor and told him of the poor German's case and innocency ; and so willing was the Governor, when he heard that he was a foreigner, to help him, that an officer went to him at midnight to tell him he might go out then if he liked, but he preferred staying till the morning, as he was in bed. My friend is still there.

I thank your Lordship most sincerely for having so promptly taken up my affair, and I rest assured that your Lordship will do all in your power to help me in my difficulties.

The three Englishmen immediately put themselves into communication with your Lordship, also with the Consul, from whom I have received two telegraphs, the last telling me that he could not help me out of the Kingdom of Poland, but that he had telegraphed to your Lordship.

I am excessively sorry that this difficulty has arisen, but it is through no fault of mine, as I have tried to live as peaceably and quietly as I could. I was on the point of leaving Grodno last week ; Thursday I had fixed to begin my journey, and was arrested on my way to fetch my luggage, intending to return the next day to Grodno.

I have told you in my first letter that I am a clergyman of the Church of England. My letters of orders have been seized with the rest of my private papers. I must add that I have throughout received great civility from the officials, and the greatest possible kindness from the Baron Hoven (or some name like that), with whom your Lordship may be acquainted.

I am, &c.

No. 3.

Lord Napier to Earl Russell.—(Received October 5.)

My Lord,

St. Petersburg, September 30, 1863.

I AM directed by your Lordship's telegraphic despatch of the 26th instant to request that Mr. Anderson may be permitted to leave Russia on the understanding that he will not revisit it.

On the following day I received from the Assistant Minister for Foreign Affairs the accompanying note, informing me that the inquiry concerning Mr. Anderson was concluded, that the question had been referred to the decision of General Mouravieff, and that it might be presumed Mr. Anderson would shortly receive permission to go abroad.

Under these circumstances, as there seems to be every chance that Mr. Anderson will be set at liberty unconditionally, I have thought it best to suspend for a day or two the execution of your Lordship's instruction, but should any ulterior difficulty occur, I will offer the engagement sanctioned by your Lordship.

I have been in constant communication with the Minister of the Interior on the subject, and in correspondence with Mr. Anderson, of whose innocence I entertain not the least doubt.

I have also endeavoured indirectly to be of some service to Count Bisping, the Polish gentleman with whom Mr. Anderson has been residing, by imparting to the Russian authorities some particulars respecting his opinions and conduct which have reached me from Mr. Anderson.

I have, &c.

My Lord,

No. 5.

Lord Napier to Earl Russell.—(Received October 19.)

My Lord,

St. Petersburg, October 14, 1863.

IN conformity with your Lordship's orders I have conveyed to Prince Gortchakoff the thanks of Her Majesty's Government for the liberation of Mr. Anderson, the English gentleman lately arrested at Grodno.

In announcing his liberation to me, Mr. Anderson intimated that he might probably prefer a claim for pecuniary compensation against the Russian Government on account of the false imprisonment and groundless detention to which he has been subjected.

I have written to Mr. Anderson to-day, stating that I cannot advise such a course. Mr. Anderson was residing in a disturbed country. As a foreigner he was not unnaturally an object of some suspicion. A deposition, undoubtedly a false one, was made against him. He was arrested, and at the outset treated with some severity, but he was soon set free, and though subject to local detention longer than may seem consistent with necessity or justice, he was treated with civility, and even met with a friendly counsellor among the Russian officers. The inconvenience to which Mr. Anderson was exposed may be regarded as an accident not unnatural at a period of political revolution under a military Government. He may, I think, accept and excuse it as one of the contingencies of the position which he had chosen.

The conduct of the Russian authorities, however, in extorting from him a declaration that he will never return to the Empire appears to me very superfluous and puerile.

I have, &c.

The Rev. F. Anderson to Earl Russell.—(Received October 19.)

My Lord,

96, Coblenzer Strasse, Bonn-on-the-Rhine, October 15, 1863.

I BEG leave to submit to your Lordship the following account of the unjust treatment which I have lately experienced at the hands of the Russian Government in Grodno:—

I arrived at that place on the 4th of March last from Bonn, where I had been staying with my father, who is the English Chaplain.

During my residence in Bonn I had formed an intimate acquaintance and friendship with Count Alexander von Bisping-Galen, a student of high character in the university. I had instructed him in English, and having received from him an invitation to pay him a visit in his own country, accompanied him when he returned to take possession of his extensive estates in Lithuania.

I beg to assure your Lordship in the strongest terms that during the whole of my six months' residence with Count Bisping, I carefully refrained from mixing myself up in any way with the proceedings of the insurgents, and, to the best of my knowledge, he also kept aloof from them. So careful indeed was he not to compromise himself in this matter, that upon our arrival at Königsberg, finding there would be a difficulty in taking to his home a pair of guns and a pair of pistols which he had bought last year, he begged me to send them at once all back to Bonn, with a request that my father would take charge of them. I did this, and my father has still the unopened packages in his possession.

The Count appeared to me influenced by no other wish than that of improving the condition of the tenants and labourers of the soil of which he was proprietor. He had to suffer, in common with all landowners in Lithuania, the many annoyances and hardships which were the necessary consequences of the miserable state of the country; being robbed on the one hand by the insurgents of his horses and provisions, and on the other hand compelled to furnish free quarters for Russian troops as long as they chose to remain. But these difficulties never seemed to slacken his zeal for the welfare of his people.

I had arranged to return to Bonn in the beginning of September, and on the 7th of that month (Monday), about 3 P.M., was proceeding with Count Bisping and his servants to visit one of his farms about six English miles from Grodno. At the barriers of the town the carriage was stopped as usual, and the Count went up stairs to show the passports. A policeman then came to me, and ordered me to go up stairs with all the luggage, which was strictly searched. The police officer then ordered my friend and his servant to undress and submit their persons to be examined, which order they obeyed. He next turned to me, and told me in French to do the same. I said, "I am an English subject travelling under the protection of an English as well as of a Russian passport, and that the English were not in the habit of being undressed in that manner." I expressed my readiness, however, to go to the Governor, and answer any questions which he might choose to ask. Upon this the Chef de Police and the Chef Militaire, and a party of Cossacks, were sent for. The Chef de Police, upon his arrival, said to me in broken English, "You must undress." I replied, "I do so under protest;" showing him at the same time my passport, which I had obtained from the English Foreign Office when I came to visit my father on a former occasion. It is dated October 17th, 1860, and bears your Lordship's seal and signature. It had been duly viséd also at Berlin by the British and Russian Embassies when I passed through Berlin. He took the passport from me, crumpled it up, and thrust it into his pocket, saying in a contemptuous and half-jocular tone in French, "You have it no longer." I made no remark, but could not help thinking that your Lordship would have felt very indignant had your Lordship witnessed the insolent manner in which the ensigns of your authority were set at naught. The soldiers then proceeded to undress me, stripping me to my shirt, and taking off my boots.

My journal and other manuscripts, with a few letters, were found among my luggage. The officers sealed them all up, and told me I was to remain under arrest until they were examined. I demanded three or four times the reason of my arrest, but could obtain no answer whatsoever. We were then driven to the prison, under escort of four soldiers. On our arrival there we had to go up into a room, where the Commander of the prison received us. He spoke to me at first in a most savage and threatening tone, but being informed by Count Bisping that I was an Englishman, and did not understand the Russian language, he changed his manner. After another strict search of the luggage and my person, I was ordered to go to my cell. A Cossack carried my portmanteau, and I had to follow. My cell was of a tolerable size, but filthy; the window was boarded up, so that there was scarce any light or air. It contained also a nuisance, which, on my entrance, nearly knocked me down by its stench. I signed to the Cossack to remove it, but he only laughed and shook his head. I tried to have it removed three or four times that evening, but no attention was paid to me, and in the morning I obtained leave to carry it down, and throw it out of the window in the passage. The stench was so offensive that it caused me actually to vomit.

On Tuesday morning (the 8th September) at 11 o'clock, I was summoned to a room in the prison, before a Court composed of officers of the regiment of Guards stationed in Grodno, and having asked them the cause of my arrest, I was told that a charge had been laid against me of supplying cannons, pistols, revolvers, guns, swords, cloth, and money to a band of insurgents, whom I had visited three or four times in the forest. I denied the charge in toto. After a time the President of the Court told me that he had heard that I spoke Polish as well as a Pole. I could hardly forbear smiling when I denied this absurd charge, since my inability to pronounce a word of the Polish language, and my unwillingness to learn it, had been notorious to all who were acquainted with me. A Jew professed to act as interpreter, but he could not speak two words of correct English, and I had to translate all I said to him into bad German, and to the officers into bad French, for in neither language am I a great proficient. The Jew in looking over my letters found a passage in one of them, in which the term "unfortunate" was applied to Poland. The officer demanded "what right the writer had to make use of that term?" Another correspondent had used the following expressions, as nothing had been heard of me by them for some time. They said, "We were nearly thinking that you had been killed by the Russians." When this passage was translated by the Jew to the Russian officers it produced great excitement among them, and one of them came to the table where I was placed, and said to me in a bullying tone in French, "See, Sir, how your friends in England regard us as barbarians." Happily the next passage in the same letter alluded to the satisfaction of the writer that I was passing a pleasant visit with the Count, and upon my translating this into French they appeared somewhat pacified. I had my letters of orders with me, which showed that I was a clergyman of the Church of England and a Graduate of Oxford. I submitted them to the officers of the Court, but the officers made no remark. I also requested permission to write to the English Ambassador at St. Petersburg, to the English Consul at Warsaw, and to my father at Bourn, but my request was distinctly and peremptorily refused. I then was sent back to my cell, after having been under examination for three hours. It will be readily understood with what feelings of deep anxiety, and even of apprehension, I passed the following night in my cell; for looking to the determination of my (so-called) Judges to wrest to my prejudice every trivial expression in the letters of my correspondents, to their eagerness to receive any charges against me, however absurd, and, lastly, to their refusal to allow me any means of communication with those persons who could alone help me, what could I expect but months, perhaps years, of hopeless imprisonment or exile, if not a violent death?

Early on Wednesday morning, the 9th, I was again summoned to attend the same Court of officers, and was immediately struck by the great apparent change in their treatment of me. I was told, for instance, that I might write the letters which had been prohibited the day before, but it was still said that the Governor might possibly not allow them to be forwarded. I sat down and wrote the three letters in their presence, and gave them (according to their orders), unsealed, to one of the officers. I have since found that in my hurry and excitement I dated the letter to my father the 10th instead of the 9th. These letters, I learnt afterwards, were first sent to Mouravieff at Wilna, and by him forwarded to Lord Napier. This may account for the great delay which followed, for my letter to Lord Napier did not reach his Lordship till eight days after I wrote it, and the one to my father came to hand twelve days after date.

But the permission to write these letters at all I believe was mainly owing to the arrival of three English travellers in Grodno on the evening of the 8th,—Messrs. William George Clark, William Lloyd Birkbeck, and William Henry Bullock. I never can be sufficiently grateful to these gentlemen for their active exertions on my behalf. I had never seen or known any of them before; but the most intimate and zealous friend could not have done greater service to me than they did. I first heard of their arrival on Thursday, the 10th, when I had been brought from the prison to the Governor's house, when I was examined by him in the presence of the Chef de Police. At the end of this examination I was removed to the house of the Chef de Police, which certainly was preferable to the prison. But at 8 o'clock that evening he came into the room which I was to occupy for the night, with three soldiers with fixed bayonets, who mounted guard at my door. All egress into the streets was forbidden, and even when I went into the yard to relieve the necessities of nature one of the soldiers marched before me and the other behind, and remained as sentinels over me until I returned to my room.

On Friday morning the Chef de Police brought to his house the three Englishmen, of whose arrival he apprized me; and on my signing a paper, witnessed by them, promising not to leave the town without the permission of the Russian Government, I was released from any further restraint.

The English Ambassador, Lord Napier, was first informed of my arrest by Mr. Clark, and from that moment manifested the utmost interest in my behalf; and but for his Lordship's representation to the Russian Government, I believe that the inquiries carried on by the officers at Grodno would have been much more protracted. As it was, three weeks elapsed before their inquiries terminated. Lord Napier communicated also most kindly with my father, both by telegraph and post, and thereby greatly relieved his anxiety. The English Consul, Colonel Stanton, at Warsaw, proved likewise his willingness to assist me, but as his authority did not extend beyond the limits of the Kingdom of Poland he could do nothing more than make known (by telegraph) my position to Lord Napier. I gratefully acknowledge also the help which I received from a Russian officer, Baron de Howen (late of the Navy, now Lieutenant of the Guard), who, seeing the utter incompetency of the Jewish interpreter, came forward on two occasions on my behalf in subsequent examinations. He was thoroughly convinced of the falseness of the charges brought against me, and did his utmost to bring the officers of the Court to the same conclusion. Upon one occasion I was confronted with the two boys who had made the charge, one of whom affirmed that he had heard me speaking Polish to the officers of the insurgents in the forest; and when that was proved to him to be an impossibility by Baron de Howen, he immediately shifted his ground, and said that I might have spoken French, for that he was not near enough to hear what I actually said. Such conduct, it might have been thought, was a sufficient proof of the worthless character of these boys as witnesses. Nevertheless I had to attend at the Governor's house several times afterwards; and it was not until Monday, the 28th of September, that the Governor told me that I was allowed to leave the Russian dominions, on condition that I would sign a paper promising never to enter them again. I was very unwilling to do this, as it seemed to me that to sign a paper to that effect implied that I had been guilty of some violation of the law which justified my expulsion from the country. But there was no other way by which I could regain my entire freedom; and yielding, therefore, under the necessity of the case, I signed the paper. On the 29th I left Grodno, accompanied by a gendarme, who delivered to me my passport at the frontier of Russia. The Governor had told me the day before that I should only have to pay my own expenses. Nevertheless I found myself obliged to pay for the journey likewise of this gendarme.

Your Lordship will see from the detail here given that I have not without cause trespassed upon your Lordship's attention.

I do not, indeed, complain of the mere fact of my detention, for such an act was a contingency perhaps inseparable from the state of conflict prevailing in the unfortunate country in which I was a temporary resident.

But I do protest against the indignities which I was made to suffer; against the refusal of the privileges (which certainly were secured to me under your Lordship's passport) of making known immediately to the English Ambassador at St. Petersburg the position in which I was placed; and against the loss of time and money to which I was subjected in consequence of this refusal.

I protest also against the prohibition now in force against me ever to re-visit the Russian territory. I am not aware, indeed, that any calls of duty are likely to summon me to that country; and certainly I have no inclination voluntarily to revisit it. Nevertheless, I ought not to be placed under the ban of perpetual exclusion from it; and I feel that I am justified in demanding that the paper which declares it be returned to me.

Lastly, I protest against the charge of being compelled to pay—it matters not how paltry the amount—the expenses of the gendarme who was sent to accompany me to the Russian frontier.

I will only add that, upon obtaining my own release from imprisonment, I succeeded in obtaining from the Governor of Grodno the release of Count Bisping's German servant, assuring him that the man was a Prussian subject, that there was no charge whatever against him, and that he had nevertheless remained a prisoner for six days. Of all these facts the Governor professed to be ignorant; and on his ascertaining the truth of my statements, the man was released. From this German servant I have since heard that, on the 3rd instant, Count Bisping himself was released from imprisonment, though still required to remain in Grodno. Considering the temper of the Russian authorities at this moment, I cannot but regard the fact of the Count's release as the most triumphant proof of the falsehood of the charges attempted to be urged against us.

I earnestly hope that I may soon receive from your Lordship the assurance that I am justified in having submitted this matter to your notice, and that the wrongful treatment which I have experienced may not be unnoticed and unremedied.

I have, &c.

My Lord,

Foreign Office, November 4, 1863.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 14th ultimo, on the subject of the detention of Mr. Anderson at Grodno, and the proceedings of the Russian authorities towards him, I have to inform your Excellency that Her Majesty's Government concur in the opinion expressed by you, that this not a case in which compensation can be demanded. Your Excellency will not therefore take any further steps in the matter.

Mr. Hammond to the Rev. F. Anderson.

Sir,

Foreign Office, November 4, 1863.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th ultimo, giving an account of your detention by the Russian authorities at Grodno, in March last, and protesting against the treatment which you underwent on that occasion.

I am to state to you in reply, that your case does not appear to Her Majesty's Government to be one in which they would be justified in making an application for redress to the Russian Government.

You chose to visit Poland in company with a Polish landed proprietor, at a time when you were aware that civil war was raging, and that the country was under military law. As soon as the Russian authorities were satisfied that the accusations against you, and which led to your being arrested and imprisoned, were false, you were released and kindly treated; and it cannot be maintained that the Russian authorities had not a right to insist on your promising not to return to Russia.

I am, &c.

Correspondence respecting Removal of Inhabitants of Polynesian Islands to Peru.

No. 1.

Mr. Barton to Earl Russell.—(Received June 28.)

My Lord, Lima, May 29, 1862.

I HAVE just been informed that Mr. Byrne has formed a Company here with the object of introducing into Peru colonists from the New Hebrides for the purpose of agriculture, under the privilege granted him by the Peruvian Government, and that he has chartered a vessel which is now victualling, and in which will be also embarked some trifles, such as beads and other articles, for the carrying out of the enterprise.

I intend writing Mr. Byrne a note requesting information, and will furnish your Lordship with all the particulars I can collect on this subject by the next mail.

I have, &c.

No. 2.

Mr. Barton to Earl Russell.—(Received July 14.)

My Lord, Lima, June 11, 1862.

IN continuation of the subject of the despatch which I had the honour to address to your Lordship on the 29th of May last, I have now the honour to acquaint your Lordship that I find that Mr. J. C. Byrne became a French citizen in 1857, since which time he has introduced into the French Settlement of New Caledonia upwards of 3,000 colonists taken from the New Hebrides.

The vessel he is now fitting out is a Peruvian vessel called the "Adelante," of about 300 tons; she will sail from Callao on Saturday next, and Mr. Byrne takes with him a surgeon and commissioner on the part of the Peruvian Government; it is his intention to bring about 170 colonists of both sexes, who are to engage to serve in Peru for the term of five years, at the end of which term they are to be sent back to their own country if they wish it, at the expense of the purchaser of their contract, which is printed in Spanish, English, and the Polynesian languages, and which is of course transferable.

The privilege granted by the Peruvian Government to Mr. Byrne is for the term of five years.

Mr. Byrne has informed me that after he has made this trial trip he intends introducing as many colonists into Peru as he finds are requisite.

Mr. Barton to Earl Russell.—(Received November 14.)

My Lord, Lima, October 11, 1862.

IN continuation of the subject of the despatches which I had the honour to address to your Lordship on the 29th of May and on the 11th of June last, I have now the honour to acquaint your Lordship that the Peruvian vessel "Adelante" has returned to the Port of Callao, from the Island of Tangariba, bringing 83 men, 83 women, 30 boys, and 38 children; the vessel is only 151 tons register, not 300 as reported to me by Mr. Byrne. Only one died on the passage—a very old woman.

The contracts, said to be written in Spanish and Polynesian, of these colonists, have been sold at 200 dollars each the men, 150 dollars each the women, and 100 dollars each the boys; care has been taken not to part the families.

No less than seven vessels have been fitted out, and three more are getting ready by licences granted by the Peruvian Government, for the purpose of bringing to Peru more of these people; their names, tonnage, flags, &c., are contained in the accompanying list.

The Chargé d'Affaires of the King of Hawaii has made a remonstrance to the Peruvian Government on this subject, copy of which I have the honour to inclose herewith, and the French Chargé d'Affaires intends to make a like representation.

Mr. Byrne died on board the "Adelante" about fifteen days previous to the arrival of that vessel at Callao: his effects have been deposited under inventory at Her Majesty's Consulate in that port, and advice given to his brother, Mr. Mark Byrne, residing at 24, Arran Quay, Dublin.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 2 in No. 3.

Mr. Eldridge to Señor Ribeyro.

Lima, October 9, 1862.

THE Undersigned, Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General of His Majesty the King of Hawaii, has been informed with some surprise that the Government of Peru has conceded indiscriminately to all applicants, licences to introduce into Peru the natives of the Polynesian Islands for personal services for several years.

His Majesty the King of Hawaii, besides the large and important group of islands from which he derives his title, possesses other islands in the Pacific Ocean, of the occupation of some of which I had the honour to advise his Excellency the Minister of Foreign Relations in my communication of 30th December, 1858.

It is not improbable that while this traffic, entrusted to one or two individuals well acquainted with its peculiarities, having a perfect knowledge of the islands that enjoy their independence, and those which recognize the sovereignty of a civilized power, might have been conducted in a manner that would not have given cause of complaint, but confided to an indiscriminate multitude, ignorant of these particulars, it will, beyond doubt, lead to serious reclamations.

From none of the islands under the jurisdiction of His Majesty the King of Hawaii are the native inhabitants permitted to be removed, except for a very limited term, and under heavy bonds to be returned to their place of residence at the expiration of that term; the undersigned, therefore, is constrained to protest against the introduction into Peru of any of His Majesty's native subjects; and if any should be brought to its ports under the licences so profusely granted, it will be his duty to require that the Government of Peru cause them to be returned to their native land free of expense, and compensate them adequately for any damages that they may have suffered.

No. 4.

Earl Russell to Mr. Jerningham.

Sir,

Foreign Office, November 26, 1862.

IN his despatch of May 29, Mr. Barton has reported to me that under a privilege granted by the Peruvian Government, Mr. Byrne has formed a Company at Lima for the purpose of introducing into Peru colonists from the New Hebrides.

From Mr. Barton's despatch of the 11th ultimo, it also appears that no less than seven vessels have been fitted out, and three more were getting ready, under licences granted by the Peruvian Government, for the purpose of conveying these colonists to Peru.

Mr. Barton also states that the Chargé d'Affaires of Haiti has formally protested against these proceedings, and that the French Chargé d'Affaires intended to make a similar representation.

You will carefully watch the proceedings taken under the privilege granted by the Peruvian Government in this matter. Her Majesty's Government have already had occasion to call the attention of the Peruvian Government to the evils which have sprung up in connection with the efforts made for the introduction of coolies from China; and it is not improbable that the system to which I have now called your attention may degenerate into the slave trade in disguise.

You will forward to me a copy of the contract under which the colonists are introduced, and you will report to me what arrangements are made to insure their immunity from ill-treatment whilst on ship-board, as well as subsequent to their arrival in Peru.

I am, &c.

Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received November 29.)

My Lord,

London, November 27, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to state that your Lordship's despatch of 26th November reached me this evening, in which my attention is called to a report mentioned in Mr. Barton's despatch of May 29 to your Lordship, respecting a privilege said to have been conceded by the Peruvian Government to a Mr. Byrne, who had formed a Company at Lima for the purpose of introducing into Peru colonists from the New Hebrides.

Since your Lordship instructs me carefully to watch the proceedings taken under the privilege granted by the Peruvian Government in this affair, it being not improbable that the system, to which my notice has been called, may degenerate into slave trade in disguise, I beg to say that, upon my arrival in Peru, I will give this matter my earliest attention.

A copy of the contract, as soon as procured, shall be forwarded to your Lordship; and I shall report what are the arrangements made to ensure immunity from ill-treatment whilst on board and subsequent to arrival with regard to these colonists.

I have, &c.

M. de Lesseps to Señor Ribeyro.

M. le Ministre, Lima, le 15 Octobre, 1862.

VOTRE Excellence n'ignore pas qu'en vertu d'une autorisation antérieure donnée par son Gouvernement à un sujet Irlandais, la barque Péruvienne "Adelante" parcourut certains groupes d'Iles de la Polynésie et y recueillit environ 250 naturels. Conduits au Callao sous la clause d'un engagement de cinq années, ces émigrants ne tardèrent pas à être écoulés dans le public, satisfait d'acquérir, aux mêmes conditions que celles stipulées pour les contrats de coolies Chinois, les services d'une race d'hommes plus vigoureuse et plus morale.

C'est sans doute animé par le désir de doter le pays d'une immigration aussi utile que le Gouvernement de votre Excellence a souscrit, assure-t-on, aux nombreuses demandes d'introduction qui lui ont été adressées, dans ces derniers temps, par divers spéculateurs. Dans cette circonstance, et sans m'arrêter aux bruits répandus sur la légalité de l'expédition de "l'Adelante," ni infirmer le rapport de la commission d'enquête qui s'est constituée à bord de ce bâtiment dans le courant du mois de Septembre dernier, il est de mon devoir d'appeler votre attention toute spéciale sur l'abus auquel ces concessions peuvent donner lieu. En effet, M. le Ministre, rien ne garantit que les porteurs aient une connaissance très-exacte de la constitution politique des divers points où s'exercera leur trafic, et qu'ils n'exploiteront pas celles de ces Iles qui, sous une forme ou sous une autre, se trouvent enclavées dans le territoire de l'Empire Français. Votre Excellence trouvera juste que, dans cette éventualité, je proteste contre ces opérations, en tant qu'elles affecteraient la souveraineté de mon pays, et que je me réserve à la fois un droit de contrôle sur tous transports d'émigrants Polynésiens arrivant au Pérou, et des indemnités pour ceux d'entr'eux qui, soumis à la juridiction de l'Empire, n'auraient pas quitté leur patrie de plein gré et du consentement des autorités qui les gouvernent.

No. 7.

Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received March 2.)

My Lord, Lima, January 28, 1863.

WITH reference to your Lordship's despatch of 26th November last, received in London prior to my departure from England, instructing me carefully to watch the proceedings taken under the privilege granted by the Peruvian Government to certain parties for importing Polynesian colonists to Peru, I beg to state that since my return I have given the subject my attention.

Soon after my arrival, when visiting Admiral Sir Thomas Maitland on Her Britannic Majesty's ship "Bacchante," I conversed with him about these new emigration enterprizes, and found him alive to the matter; however, Sir Thomas seemed to think that there was difficulty in obtaining here positive information as to whether the Pacific Islanders that were being imported into Peru, were procured by force or came of their own free will, and said that the best way for ascertaining this, would be the visit of one of Her Majesty's ships to the Polynesian Islands, where her commander could have, by making enquiries, proof how the process of obtaining the natives was carried on, and detect and report upon any such abuses as might be practised.

In this opinion of the Admiral I most assuredly concur, and could a vessel be despatched to the islands (Marquesas, Friendly, and New Hebrides groups) to carry out an investigation, it would be the surest and best way of arriving at real trustworthy information.

In speaking with the French Chargé d'Affaires, M. Lesseps, on the subject of this immigration, I found him inclined to believe that ruse is had recourse to in obtaining them; and he even told me that the way in which the affair was managed was when the natives, swimming out probably to the ship for the sake of procuring provisions, as a famine or great scarcity is said to reign in some of these islands, that liquor was administered to them, and that whilst under its influence the vessel put to sea, and thus the natives had no other alternative but to proceed on the voyage. The French Chargé d'Affaires did not mention the grounds he had for making this assertion; but as he has lent much of his attention to these Canaca expeditions since the commencement, he has probably discovered sources from whence good information can be procured.

Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Callao upon being applied to by me, on my return, furnished me with a report, copy of which I beg to inclose, relative to two vessels that had returned to Callao having Polynesians on board; but this does not throw any light upon the exact way in which they were procured. He also incloses sample of a contract, bearing the signatures of natives, and also that of the Captain of the importing vessel, and viséd by the Indian authority of some island.

Mr. Robertson says in his letter that the emigrants appeared in robust health.

M. Laranaga, the consignee, seems to have afforded the Consul every facility for visiting his vessel, and it appears he found on board nothing to object to.

This gentleman above-mentioned and other owners of vessels, may have the wish to carry out their enterprize according to the Rules and Regulations of the Peruvian Government Licences; but then the people they employ may possibly be less scrupulous upon those points. I believe in one of the ships that have gone and returned (belonging to some one in Peru) there was a captain who had formerly been engaged in the African slave trade.

I shall continue to watch proceedings in this matter; but I am convinced that the only real way of arriving at thorough information on the subject is, as I said before, to despatch a vessel of war to make an investigation in Oceania.

I have now the honour to forward to your Lordship several extracts from the "Peruano." 1st. The law permitting the introduction into Peru of Asiatic colonists, the fundamental law upon which the licences for bringing Polynesians are based.

2nd. The Government resolution granting leave to Mr. Byrne to import colonists from the Pacific.

3rd. Note from the Peruvian Government to the Prefect of Callao to take the necessary steps for causing the existing Laws and Resolutions to be carried out with regard to the Polynesians brought from the Pacific.

4th. A Decree of the 20th December, published lately in the "Peruano," ordering that a Committee, composed of the Prefect, the Mayor, and the Recorder of the city of Callao, should proceed to make the investigation which was resolved upon in June, in order to ascertain whether or no the formalities prescribed by law have been fulfilled. This decree is intended to apply to other ports in Peru where the Sub-Prefect and other functionaries will compose the acting Committee.

Lastly, I inclose copy of the form of contract, lent for my inspection by the consignee of immigration vessels, which is made out printed in Spanish and English, but not in Polynesian, as it was reported was to be the case. I send the English version after having compared it with the Spanish, of which it is a right translation.

Should I have anything further to communicate later on respecting Polynesian immigration, I shall take care to do so in obedience to your Lordship's orders.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. STAFFORD JERNINGHAM.

P.S.—In the body of this despatch I state that Mr. Robertson had already been on board of M. Laranaga's vessel, but upon reading his letter again I find that M. Laranaga had given him permission to go on board to examine and inquire into matters connected with the Polynesians, and that he would report to me the result of his visit.

Acting Consul Robertson to Mr. Jerhingham.

Sir,

Callao, January 11, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to report that on the 5th instant, two vessels, under Prussian colours named respectively "The General Prim" and "Truxillo," arrived at this port from the Polynesian Islands with colonists, natives of those islands.

The first-named vessel brought 106 men, 2 boys, and 7 women, all having arrived in apparent robustness and good health, there not having been in either two vessels any death or sickness whatever.

These colonists have been brought to this Republic in virtue of a permission granted by the Supreme Government in the early part of last year.

M. Laranaga, one of the Consignees of the "Truxillo," a gentleman worthy of all faith, has assured me that these colonists have come here of their own free will and accord, in proof of which he has allowed me to take a copy of one of the contracts made by a chief and a missionary on behalf of 40 men, and 12 women, brought from the Island of Rakaan (Redmon), copy of which I inclose. M. Laranaga has also given me permission to proceed on board the "Truxillo," that I may personally examine and inquire into all matters connected with the traffic, the result of which examination I shall do myself the honour to report; the same gentleman has assured me that many of these colonists can write, and that all those who could, have individually their own contracts in their possession.

I should likewise add that I have already seen many of these emigrants, and that they appear in good health, happy, and content.

Extracts from the "Peruano" of March 23, 1861.

Ramon Castilla, President of the Republic.

WHEREAS the Congress has made the following law:—

The Congress of the Peruvian Republic considering

1. That the first branch of industry is agriculture, without which no society can exist.

2. That in consequence of the abolition of slavery, which was effected in the Republic in 1855, landed estates have been abandoned.

3. That the want of a rural ordinance, which shall take charge of determining the proceedings of hired labourers, and regulating the labours on landed estates, renders it necessary to take steps for remedying the present state of things.

4. That if the Congress remain indifferent, and do not repeal the decree of March 5, 1856, articles of consumption, and of the first necessity for existence, will very soon reach a higher price than it is possible to pay out of the employment or calling in which the citizen is engaged;

Has issued the following law:—

Art. 1. It shall be lawful to introduce Asiatic colonists, intended for the cultivation of landed estates on the coasts of Peru, for useful arts, and for domestic service, provided that they be hired directly by the masters who employ them, or by their agents, in the ports from whence they come, or on their entrance to Peru.

Art. 2. The vessels conveying Asiatics, shall not take on board any larger number of colonists than one per ton of register, under the penalty of a fine of 500 dollars for every one who shall exceed the number.

Art. 3. The bargains made abroad shall take effect in all cases when not in opposition to the laws of the Republic, the transfer of such bargains being prohibited without the consent of the colonist hired.

Art. 4. The Decree of 5th March 1856, relative to the immigration of Asiatic colonists, is repealed, in so far as it is contrary to the present law.

This is to be communicated to the Executive Power in order to the execution of what is necessary for carrying the same into effect.

MANUEL MORALES.

From the "Peruano" of April 12, 1862.

D. J. L. Byrne having requested permission to introduce colonists for the South Western Islands of the Pacific, his Excellency the President has issued the following decree :—

Lima, April 1, 1862.

The permission requested is granted to D. J. L. Byrne to introduce into Peru, during six years and on the terms named, colonists of both sexes, natives of the South Western Islands of the Pacific, intended for the labours of agriculture and for domestic service, subject to the forms prescribed by the law of the 15th January, 1861. Be it published.

MORALES.

From the "Peruano" of September 20, 1862.

To the Prefect of the Constitutional Province of Callao.

Lima, September 15, 1862.

On the 17th June I wrote to you as follows:—

"In a document of D. J. C. Byrne upon the introduction of colonists from the South Western Islands of the Pacific, requesting permission to name agents who should be present at the bargains made with the said colonists, his Excellency the President has issued the following resolution:—

"Lima, June 10, 1862.

"Whereas there are no Consular Agents of Peru in the places where contracts are to be made with the colonists, whom D. J. C. Byrne proposes to introduce, be it resolved that the investigation, which is intended to make known to the Government whether or not the forms which are prescribed by Article I of the law of the 14th March last, have been observed, shall be made by the authorities of the harbours of Peru, at which the colonists arrive, without which requisite they shall not be permitted to land.

"I copy the above for your information and for the consequent effects."

"As the Government has been informed that the colonists introduced by Byrne are selling in Callao, in contravention of the provisions of the aforesaid law, and as this offence against the liberty of the individual should be severely punished, it is necessary that, in compliance with the resolution copied above, you do not permit the landing of immigrants until you have inquired whether or not all those conditions have been observed which are imposed by the said law on those who introduce colonists, especially if they have been hired with their own spontaneous wish, by the persons in whose service they are to be employed; that you prohibit absolutely those bargains being transferred to other persons without their consent, and that you order the offenders to be brought to judgment.

"God preserve, &c.,

"MANUEL MORALES."

To the Prefect of the Littoral Province of Callao.

Lima, September 17, 1862.

I transmitted to you, under yesterday's date, suitable instructions for the repression of the scandalous abuse which is practising in your port, of selling the colonists, brought from the islands of the Pacific, as if they were slaves. The Government has this day received fresh advices, in which it is asserted that those under age and even adult persons are publicly sold at 200 or 300 dollars; and as this traffic is an offence against the liberty of the person, and the utmost outrage that can be committed on the dignity of man, the honour of Government, and of the authorities of your port, in whose presence this scandalous crime is committed, demands that energetic and effective measures be set on foot for repressing the same; and that those who are found to be guilty be brought to justice, in order that they may be punished with all the vigour of the law.

You are to take care that the provisions of the law of the 14th May of last year be strictly complied with by the introducers of colonists; and for this effect you must ascertain for yourself if the colonists have made bargains of their own spontaneous will, with particular persons, and in terms which are not in opposition to the laws of the country, and you will absolutely prohibit the transfer of those bargains to other persons without the express consent of the colonists.

Being charged with the observance of the laws and supreme provisions in the province under your command, you are responsible for the strict fulfilment of these directions.

God preserve, &c.

MANUEL MORALES.

THE orders issued on the 17th June, 15th September, and 16th November last, having proved inefficient to accomplish the object of the law of 14th March of last year, relative to the introduction of labourers from Polinesia, it is hereby resolved :

That a Committee, composed of the Prefect, the Mayor, and the Recorder of the city of Callao, proceed to make the investigation which, by resolve of 10th June last, is ordered to be made to ascertain whether or no the formalities prescribed by the 1st Article of said law have been fulfilled.

This resolve is extended to apply to all the other ports, where the Committee will be composed of the sub-Prefect and above-named functionaries.

No. 8.

Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received March 2.)

My Lord,

Lima, January 28, 1863.

I FIND by yesterday's paper that vessels continue to arrive at Callao, one after the other, with Polynesians.

On Saturday entered the "Adelante" (second time), proceeding from the Islands of Penrhyn, in 50 days, bringing 202 individuals. Yesterday two other vessels entered the port, one named "Carolina," coming from the Island of Oroa in 28 days, bringing 122 colonists; the other the "Hermosa Dolores," proceeding from the Island of Pascoa in 29 days with 160 natives.

It is stated in the "Cronica de Callao" that the colonists brought by the last ship came as passengers; 25 were sent by the captain of the "Guillermo," 28 by the master of the "Micaela," "Miranda," and 45 by the commander of the "Rosa Patricia," the remainder were from the ships "José Castro," "Rosa y Carmen," and "Cora," which were at anchor before the Island of Pascua at the departure of the "Hermosa Dolores."

The "Cronica" then goes on to say that it appears the inhabitants of the above island refused to embark, intimidated by the artful stories forged by the speculators who were ultimately carrying on work there, and that such was the terror of the natives that not only did they abstain from visiting the ships, but likewise retired into the interior, setting on fire the bushes on the coast. For this reason the vessels were obliged to abandon it and continue their voyage.

Thinking this information might interest your Lordship, I have deemed it right to forward it.

Mr. Robertson informs me that the colonists who have lately arrived are reported to be in good health and that no deaths occurred on the voyage.

No. 9.

Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received March 17.)

My Lord,

Lima, February 9, 1863.

I BEG to inclose copy of a further report which I have recently received from Her Britannic Majesty's Acting Consul at Callao, respecting the Polynesian Emigration.

It appears from it that two seamen, named John O'Neil, and Charles Winter, who had proceeded to the Pacific Islands, in the Peruvian brig "Truxillo," which lately returned to Callao, presented themselves at the Consulate, and made a statement, which I now have the honour to submit to your Lordship for perusal. It would seem that during the voyage, according to information given to deponents by the crew of a boat that was sent on shore at an island called Mongananara, that the chief of that island, his wife, a woman, and two boys, were taken by force, for the purpose of compelling them to proceed to some other islands to act as interpreters, after which, it would appear, the vessel went to Nakahana, where the chief was left behind; but at other islands, it is stated by these seamen, many Polynesians were received on board by their own free will and consent.

Upon the deponents informing Mr. Robertson that a native, named Frank, was detained on board against his will, and that he requested to be allowed to see the British Consul, as he claimed British protection, on the ground that the island of Nakahana belonged to Great Britain, the Consul requested that the Canaca Frank might be brought before him, which was accordingly done.

After carefully examining this man, Mr. Robertson says, that the statement made regarding him by the deponents, turned out to be either false, or a misunderstanding on the part of the informers, as this Frank is one of the crew of the "Truxillo," and earns sixteen dollars per month, and had never requested to be taken to the Consulate, nor had any complaint to make whatever, further assuring the Consul that all the colonists who came to Peru in the "Truxillo," did so willingly.

In this case, the above may possibly be correct; but if the natives in general have left their homes of their own free will, how is it, from what I hear, that they do not in many cases seem inclined to work at the Peruvian haciendas, to which they have been taken? In their own islands, they appear to be not much accustomed to labour, and probably, had they been fully aware of what would be exacted of them at Peruvian farms, where the labour required is not perhaps excessive to a man accustomed to toil, their free consent, if such has been acquired, would not have been so easily obtained by speculators in Polynesians.

Mr. Robertson considers that these speculations will die a natural death on account of the unwillingness which the emigrants evince for work. However, I believe, there are now in the Port of Callao a good many Polynesians waiting to be collocated by those who may purchase their contracts.

I have seen some of these individuals in the streets of Lima, who appear erect and well-built; but evidently ill at ease in their clothes, and not wearing much the appearance of agriculturists; in fact they looked to me very primitive specimens of humanity.

Since writing the above, I find in the "Comercio" of Lima, February 8, an article upon Polynesian emigration.

This states that "the Polynesian immigration to Peru is becoming a very serious affair, and that it is being converted into real 'trata,' meaning slave-trade; that the authorities and populations of the islands of the Protectorate are becoming alarmed, and that they are taking measures to prevent the continuation of this criminal traffic, and to capture the vessels engaged in it."

Information from the "Mensajero," of Tahiti, is then detailed, the substance of which I will endeavour to give your Lordship. It states that the "Latouche Treville" had gone to the Island of Tuamotu, in search of the vessels indicated by the natives, as being guilty of acts which have the character of piracy; that some natives had been embarked in these vessels deceived by one, or many residents, who have made themselves the mediums of these criminal enterprizes, and after having received advances in commodities and money, designed making a voyage of three or four months with the intention of afterwards returning to their islands.

Mention is then made of the letter which the French Commisary has addressed to the Chiefs of the Archipelago of Mamotu, a dependency of the Protectorate which revealed all the indignation which these operations had caused.

It says that the Islands of Fakaraod and Barnia were the centre of these recruitings, and that the "Latouche Treville" would soon be able to give information on that point.

It also added that it was certain that the Governments of France and England, when they knew that the natives of Oceania were the objects of such speculations, would adopt efficacious means that no flag should cover the agents of speculations which bear such similarity to slave-trade.

It also states that the Queen had wished her husband and eldest son to bear to the Islands of Tuamotu tokens of her sympathy, but at the same time severely reprimand the Chiefs who had permitted themselves to be so grossly deceived, as even to forget their respect for the laws.

Here follows the Proclamation of the Imperial Commissary.

A person, apparently a Chilian writing from Papete, says, according to the extract: "In listening to the authorities of the Protectorate, to the press, and to information which deserves credit, it appears indubitable that the Polynesian emigration is the result of criminal operations. The speculators who send vessels to the islands of Oceania cannot affirm that there exists between them and the people they take on board a legitimate contract. To carry off a man from his home and to go and sell him in a strange land, if it is not a form of slave-trade, approaches very nearly to it. The Polynesian emigrant, like the negro, is ignorant of his destination; like the negro he is sold, and like the negro he has no real interference in the contract which is realized upon his person.

"The speculator sells the emigrant according to his age for 120 up to 250 dollars and does not trouble himself respecting the work to which he is to be destined. This is making of man a merchandize. There is in all this an attack against morality and humanity. We do not maintain, as the French diplomatic agent in Peru has, in an exaggerated way pretended, that Peru has to answer for the violation of the laws which govern the islands of the Protectorate, but we believe that her duty and honour oblige her to forbid that her ports shall receive cargoes of men, who in her cities, and under the protection of her laws, and in presence of her authorities, are sold as goods, only because they are savages. The nation which has destroyed slavery, which has proclaimed liberty for whoever comes to live under the protection of her institutions, this nation cannot, without self contradiction, allow such revolting contracts to be concluded in her sight.

"If Peru wants hands there are a thousand means of attracting legitimate emigration without casting a shade upon her respect for the liberties of mankind.

"In this traffic there is a fact which nearly concerns us.

"Some of the vessels employed in transporting emigrants are 'Chilian.' This involves a responsibility for the flag. Our flag cannot be, without disgrace, the protector of similar speculations.

"It appears that our Government has understood it thus, and has already taken energetic means to prevent such unworthy complications. To pursue without tarrying these speculators in human flesh is the duty of Peru. We trust that she will perform it. The liberty of commerce will not permit this offence. Let the introduction of the Polynesian emigration be permitted; but let them come as free men and not under the tutelage of speculators; let them come to enter into contracts, not sold. If the truth of the matter is such as the facts known up to the present time present it, a tremendous responsibility weighs upon the Government of Peru. It is necessary that this Government should give explanations; it is fitting that America should know—that the world should know—if they have tolerated this abuse, or have been ignorant of it. If the former let them put an end to their toleration; if the latter let the evil be repressed with all the energy of justice and offended humanity."

I beg to offer the foregoing to your Lordship without making any observations of my own, not having received any official data or private information from the Pacific Islands on the subject.

With regard to what may be ascertained at Callao respecting Polynesian emigration, I shall continue to direct Mr. Robertson to give me what information he may be able to obtain.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 9.

Acting Consul Robertson to Mr. Jerningham.

Sir, For information of the Hon. Secy of State, I beg to send you a copy of a letter from Callao, February 5, 1863.

TWO seamen, named John O'Neil and Charles Winter, who proceeded to the Polynesian Islands in the Peruvian brig "Truxillo," presented themselves at this Consulate, and made the following statement with regard to the voyage of their vessel to the above-mentioned islands, viz., that the "Truxillo" left this port towards the end of September and arrived at an island called Mongananara, where the chief of that island, his wife, a woman, and two boys, were received on board ; that according to the statement made to the deponents by the crew of the boat, which was sent on shore for these people, they were taken by force from the island for the purpose of compelling them to proceed to some other islands to act as interpreters ; that the vessel then proceeded to Nakahana Island, where the chief was left behind ; that at the Island of Manahe between seventy and eighty persons, including men, women, and children, were taken on board by their own free will and consent ; that at the Island of Nuay about fifty more (men only), were likewise received on board by their own desire. The deponents further stated that a Cnaca, named Frank was detained on board the "Truxillo" against his will, and that he requested to be allowed to see the British Consul, as he claimed British protection on the ground that the island of which he was a native, Nakahana, belongs to Great Britain.

In sight of this statement, I requested the consignees of the "Truxillo" to allow the said Frank to be brought before me, which they immediately consented to. After having carefully examined the said Frank as to the statement made with regard to him, it turned out to be either false or a misunderstanding on the part of the deponents, as Frank is one of the crew of the "Truxillo," and earning sixteen dollars per month, and had never requested to be taken to the Consulate or had any complaint whatever. He further assured me that all the colonists, who have come to Peru in the "Truxillo" did so willingly.

On the 2nd instant, the Peruvian barque "Rosalia," arrived from the Island of Hayram, bringing one hundred and ninety-six Canacas, of whom thirty-seven are women and ten children.

Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received March 17.)

My Lord, Lima, February 12, 1863.

AFTER I had finished my despatch of the 9th instant, I received via Valparaiso, from Mr. Miller, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Tahiti, a despatch, forwarding another through me under flying seal for your Lordship, giving information respecting the proceedings of Polynesian speculators in the Pacific Islands.

Some of this information is new to me, but other parts of it, which had been already in the public newspapers here, and of which I have made your Lordship cognizant in my above-mentioned despatch, is mostly what I have already learnt.

Mr. Miller, and the residents in the Pacific Islands, from their knowledge of the character and customs of the natives, are seemingly much better judges as to whether these individuals come of their own free will ; and besides, the mode which is had recourse to in obtaining them and the whole process must be better and more publicly known at the islands themselves, than to us by what we can learn in Calloa from the people engaged in this trade ; perhaps even the proprietors and consignees of the vessels, who are people of notoriety here and in Callao, are not aware themselves of all the circumstances under which many of the natives may have been obtained.

As Mr. Miller's account chiefly concerns islands under the French protection, I see no cause for my active interference until I receive orders from your Lordship, but I shall seek an occasion to inform the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs of what are said to be the proceedings of the Polynesian speculators in some of the islands of the Pacific, and warn his Excellency that if any abuses are practised at the islands under British protection, or belonging to Great Britain, complications may arise that may prove exceedingly disagreeable to Peru.

I beg to forward to your Lordship the despatch of Her Majesty's Consul at Tahiti, which I received on the 11th instant under flying seal.

(Extract.)

Papeete, Tahiti, November 29, 1862.

I DEEM it my duty to solicit your Lordship's attention to certain serious occurrences that have recently taken place in these seas, and the particulars of which I proceed to have the honour of placing within your knowledge.

Two Peruvian merchant vessels, the barque "Serpiente Marina," and brig "Barbara Gomez," called at this port early in the present month, and it has transpired that they formed part of a fleet of some ten or twelve vessels lately fitted out at, and despatched from, Callao, for the purpose of collecting natives amongst the islands of the Pacific and introducing them into Peru as immigrants under contract for service.

The abolition of slavery in Peru, a few years ago, is stated to have led to a great scarcity of labourers in that country, and this deficiency was, it would seem, sought to be met by the introduction of Chinese labourers at a considerable expense, until an apparently cheaper and easier method of procuring labour was divulged to the Peruvians about the middle of the present year. At that period a vessel despatched from Calloa succeeded in obtaining at the Penrhyn Islands (situated nearly midway between the Marquesas and Navigator's Groups) as many, it is said, as two hundred and eighty of the islanders, men, women and children, whom she conveyed to Calloa, where the title to their services was, I am told, disposed of at an average rate exceeding one hundred dollars per head, under the plea of passage-money due for their conveyance.

The successful result of the voyage alluded to, at a moment, too, when there seems to be an increasing demand for labour in Peru consequent upon the extension of rice and cotton-planting, is reported to have keenly excited the attention of speculators, who, it appears, expect to continue in like manner to realize large profits from the collection of South Sea Islanders, and from the transfer of the term of service for which these people may be bound, in the so-called contract under which they are landed in Peru—or in plainer words, from the sale of these deluded islanders into protracted servitude, and that servitude most probably of a kind which neither their nature nor their habits are likely to permit of their very long enduring.

I am credibly informed that so sanguine are these expectations of profit, that even companies, in small shares, have been got up in Lima for sending out expeditions in this new traffic, and that amongst the ships already despatched are several crazy old vessels, that had long been laid up as hulks, but which in the enthusiasm of speculators have been equipped as good enough for this service.

One of the two Peruvian ships, already referred to as having come into this port, besides being prepared with a strong open barricade upon the upper deck a little abaft the mainmast, and with other suspicious fittings, has her between decks extremely low, ill-ventilated, and much encumbered with the extensive arrangements for berthing her expected passengers. The second ship's passenger fittings had not been put up, but the necessary materials were ready on board: she was evidently very old and leaky.

It is not difficult to foresee that much suffering awaits the unfortunate natives crowded into such inefficient ships, and that great frauds and abuses will be perpetrated in collecting and engaging these ignorant people, if they be left to the mercy of interested parties, as they at present seem to be.

It is a general custom of the islanders to go in large numbers on board of vessels arriving off their shores, and the many favourable opportunities thus afforded for inducing them to consent to leave, under false promises of great advantages and speedy return, or for otherwise securing them and carrying them off, are not likely to be neglected by unscrupulous collectors, whose profits will usually depend upon the number of natives procured by them.

Slop clothing suitable to the native taste, and contracts printed in Spanish with blanks for names, dates, advances, &c., are on board in readiness. Doubtless the marks of the islanders will be obtained at the foot of such papers before they reach Peru, and probably, too, the contract will be attested by some irresponsible person hired at high wages amongst the islanders to assist in entrapping the natives and pretending to be a competent interpreter. But it may, I am sure, be safely assumed that not one of the islanders obtained will possess anything approaching a clear knowledge either as to where he is going, or as to the length or description of servitude to which he may be dooming himself when making his cross at the bottom of one of those so-called contracts.

There is in short but too much reason to fear that this new method of supplying Peru with labourers will, if permitted to continue unchecked, become in practice no better than a system of kidnapping, if not of piracy, leading, it may be apprehended, to little short of the slavery in disguise of its unsuspecting victims.

But this is not all. The abduction of the islanders on the extended scale that seems to be contemplated, must moreover sooner or later, have the effect of exasperating the natives in general, and serve to provoke in many instances sanguinary acts of retaliation, sometimes perhaps upon unoffending ships, when such might unhappily be the first to offer the islanders a chance of remedying the wrongs inflicted upon their relatives or fellow countrymen.

Great peril would thus be unjustly occasioned, even to those who, in the exercise of lawful pursuits, may continue their accustomed intercourse with the islanders of these seas, whose inhabitants will naturally become more savage under their new persecution, and of course their progress towards civilization be greatly retarded.

I have ventured to submit the foregoing statement with a view to the better understanding of the particular facts with which I now beg permission to make your Lordship acquainted.

The "Serpiente Marina" had been but a very short time in this port, when information was given to the local authorities that there were on board, under illegal detention, some persons supposed to be natives of the Gambier Islands, where the vessel was known to have touched on her way hither, and which your Lordship will recollect are French possessions.

In consequence of these reports the local authorities sent an officer off to the ship to muster her crew and passengers, and two islanders were found on board whose presence there was not satisfactorily accounted for. These two persons were accordingly brought on shore for fuller examination, and they were ultimately found to be natives of Easter Island, where the "Serpiente Marina" had also called on her way from Callao to this place. The two islanders in question had, it seems, gone voluntarily on board of the vessel, but it is quite as clear that they were kept there against or without their will, either by deceit or by force, whilst they also clearly enough make it understood, as I myself have witnessed, that their chief desire still is to return to their island, and to their wives and children. They have both been set at liberty, and remain on shore at Papeete for the present. The Imperial Commissioner has, however, informed me that it is his intention to cause them to be re-landed at Easter Island by the next French Government vessel proceeding from hence to Valparaiso.

In the course of the examination of the two islanders, they succeeded in making known, that while at the Gambier Islands, the "Serpiente Marina" had been involved in some affray with the inhabitants, in which a person belonging to the ship was wounded.

This discovery led the local authorities to proceed to the examination of the captain and crew of the vessel, whose declarations were to the effect that the natives of the Gambier Islands had assembled in arms, under the authority of their chiefs, and had disarmed the master, supercargo and surgeon of the "Serpiente Marina" whilst they were on shore at that place, the supercargo receiving a slight wound on the occasion; the inquiry did not, however, clearly bring to light the cause that led the natives to take up arms, though it was strongly suspected that the act must have been provoked by some improper attempt on the part of the Peruvian ship to carry off natives, as she had previously done at Easter Island.

At this stage of the matter, intelligence reached Papeete that a third vessel, shewing no colours, but naturally supposed also to be one of the before-mentioned fleet sent out from Callao, had quite recently been hovering about the Paumotu Islands (which, it will be remembered, are dependencies of Tahiti), and that this vessel had already succeeded in obtaining, at one of those islands some thirty or forty natives, who, it seems, were enticed to quit their homes under the false pretence that they were to be conveyed to some island at no great distance, to work there at high wages, and to be brought back again in five or six months. An unscrupulous person residing at the Paumotu Islands was found to aid in the accomplishment of this fraudulent act, in consideration of high wages, besides a bonus of ten shillings a-head for each native obtained. This person, according to the information received here, was still engaged in collecting people among the different islands of the Paumotu Group, and it was expected that the vessel in question would embark in this way as many in all as two hundred of the islanders before her final departure for Peru. As it, however, appeared highly probable that the time which would yet be required to make up this large complement, might, on the other hand, be sufficient to enable the offending vessel to be overtaken, the Imperial Commissioner despatched the French war steamer "Latouche Treville" from hence for the Paumotu Group on the day following, namely, on the 25th instant, in pursuit of her, and with orders, should she be found, to seize and bring her to Tahiti for trial.

The "Serpiente Marina" meanwhile remains here under judicial detention until her proceedings at the Gambier Islands shall have been more completely investigated, for which purpose the steamer "Latouche Treville," is shortly to be sent thither with the requisite officers of justice.

The brig "Barbara Gomez" was, like the "Serpiente Marina," subjected to search at this port, but nothing palpable appearing to warrant her detention, she was suffered to depart on the 19th instant.

It is to be hoped that the vigilance and decided measures of the French authorities at Tahiti will soon have the effect of putting an end to this odious traffic in natives throughout the islands under French protection; but a wild field for its exercise will still remain open in these vast seas, and the vessels engaged in it, whilst carefully avoiding Tahiti and its dependencies, may pass on and find in the extensive Archipelagos to the westward full scope for continuing their aggression.

Her Majesty's Government, as well as that of France, will no doubt take a lively interest in the suppression of such abuses, and it must be hoped that the Peruvian Government, will not fail, on its part, to co-operate towards the same end; but some time must necessarily elapse before complete measures can be concerted for affecting this desirable object. In the meantime every available means will be taken of warning the islanders, in all accessible directions, of the danger to which they are exposed, so as to put them, as soon and as far as possible, upon their guard against those snares into which some have already unwarily fallen.

By a vessel that arrived here this morning from the French Possession of the Marquesas Islands, information has been received of some Peruvian vessels having lately been at those islands also in search of labourers; it would appear, however, that they were not successful in inducing any of the natives to go away with them.

I acquaint Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lima with the illegal proceedings previously referred to of Peruvian vessels in these seas; and for his fuller information I transmit to him, under flying seal, the present detailed report upon the matter, praying of him to be pleased, on forwarding the same to its destination, to furnish your Lordship with any observations or additional information connected with the subject thereof, which he may think it advisable to place under the notice of Her Majesty's Government, with a view to the better understanding of the case.

I likewise transmit information of the same kind to the Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's Naval Forces in the Pacific, through the Senior British Naval Officer on the coast of Peru.

No. 12.

Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received March 31.)

My Lord, Lima, February 26, 1863.

I HAVE heard that another vessel with two hundred and three Polynesians has arrived at Callao, and I have ordered the Acting British Consul to report to me any information which he may be able to collect respecting them.

I doubt whether much cleanliness is observed on board of these vessels, for I was informed the other day that a gentleman of my acquaintance, a proprietor, went on board this or another Polynesian emigrant vessel, with the object of obtaining some islanders, but was so much disgusted with the odour proceeding from the ship and with the appearance of the people, that he did not engage any.

To-day I had occasion to see Señor Paz Soldan, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, when I asked his Excellency if, at the time when the Peruvian Government had conceded licences to bring Polynesians to this country, those licences extended to the whole of the Pacific Islands; for I observed, although I had no orders from my Government to communicate with him on these matters, yet, as there were some of those islands that might be under British protection, I trusted that no abuses might take place there, as such abuses might lead to disagreeable questions and complications which it was most desirable to obviate. His Excellency replied that the present Government had been opposed to Polynesian emigration; and that an end would now be put to any abuses, I supposed likely to occur, for that the Minister for the Home Department had issued a Decree, published in the official journal, the "Peruano," on that subject, copy and translation of which, I beg now to forward to your Lordship.

It appears by this, first, that captains of vessels bringing colonists from the Pacific Islands or from other parts must give to the Commissions established by the Decree of the 20th December, a circumstantial account respecting these colonists and of the instruments in virtue of which their services have been contracted for.

2nd. If these last documents should not be verified in the form which Article 810 of the Code of Peru ordains, or should not be recognized before the judicial authorities of the Republic, that the colonists will be assisted in their right to dispose of themselves in the way that they may deem proper, without preventing the captains or speculators who may have employed stratagem or violence in taking them away from their own country, from being judged criminally as the law disposes.

3rd. The Commissioners already mentioned will interfere with regard to the first contracts entered into with private persons respecting the services of the colonists, the judicial authorities and the police taking proper measures, as far as they are concerned, for the punctual observance of the Articles 813 of the Code of Enjuiciamiento and 1622, 1835, 1836, and 1639 of the Codigo Civil.

4th. The captains of vessels who conduct these expeditions of colonists will not be allowed to disembark any emigrants without these steps, ordered by the first Article of the above Decree, having been taken.

His Excellency finally added—"Take care of your own house, and we will take care of ours."

The French are beginning to do this at the islands under their protection, and if the agents in those islands in the Pacific which are under British protection or influence, could do the same, these speculations, in which many abuses may have probably taken place, although difficult to detect here, will fall to the ground.

I beg now to forward extract and translation of an article in the "Comercio," respecting Polynesian emigration to Peru, in which it is endeavoured to establish that these people will make better colonists than the Chinese, which is much to be doubted. It at the same time argues that if the Polynesians are treated well and made to work only lightly at first, that they will ultimately perform good service; but if differently, that they will give themselves up to regret at leaving their homes, and to despair.

An example is given of it where a Polynesian woman, upon seeing a Peruvian lady, threw herself upon her knees, begging with tears in her eyes to be taken into her service; but also it gives another example of a different kind, where an agriculturist having provided himself with several of these emigrants set them to work, as he would the "peas" or labourers of the country, and that the consequence was that two-thirds of these Polynesians died.

As to the Polynesians themselves, I do not see any advantage, even if they came here of their own free will, in leaving their own beautiful islands to work upon Peruvian farms in company with the cunning Cholo and the free Black.

I also inclose copy of a despatch just received from Her Britannic Majesty's Acting Consul at Callao respecting Polynesians.

IT being necessary to prevent the abuse of the licences granted for the introduction to Peru of labourers of both sexes, and the Executive power having the right to dictate the measures and regulations that may be adequate to secure the fulfilment of the laws—the following is resolved upon: 1st. The Captains of vessels who bring colonists from the islands of the south-west of the Pacific, or from any other parts, shall present to the Committee established by the Decree of the 20th of December last, a detailed statement of the said colonists, as well as the document in virtue of which their services have been contracted. 2nd. If this last document should not be proved in the manner ordered in Article 810 of the Judicial Code, or recognised before the judicial authorities of the Republic, the colonists shall be assisted in the right to dispose of themselves as they may think fit, notwithstanding which the captains or speculators who shall have used fraud or violence in separating them from their country, shall be criminally prosecuted as the law directs. 3rd. The Committees referred to, shall intervene in the first contracts entered into with private parties for the services of the colonists, the judicial authorities and those of Polynesia taking care, as far as regards them that Article 813 of the Judicial Code and Articles 1632, 1635, 1636, and 1639 of the Civil Code be punctually observed. 4th. The captains of vessels bringing colonists shall not disembark them in any port of the nation without having executed the orders contained in the 1st Article of this Decree. Let this be communicated and published.—A Rubric of his Excellency.—Arenas.

THE want of hands has been with us, and will continue to be so for some time, an obstacle to the progress of agriculture, and with the desire of doing away with this great inconvenience, people have occupied themselves at various periods, and with various success, in introducing colonists from different nations.

Until lately, Chinese have been brought hither; nevertheless, in general, on account of their weak constitution, they are not apparently fit for the labours of agriculture, and much less if you consider their bad habits and not very good disposition. Some are now here established in taverns and engaged in other lucrative occupations; but the most of them occupying their time in gambling and debauchery, instead of being any service to the community, only change residence, evincing an invincible inclination to idleness and their own perverse customs. For some time many merchants here have entertained the idea of bringing Polynesians to Peru, obtaining for that purpose Government licences and vessels to be employed in this traffic. Some hundred Polynesians have arrived, and we can give the assurance that they are more useful than Chinese, and that shortly they will chime in with our customs and perform that work for which they may be destined. Robust and intelligent in general, they bear a resemblance to the "cholos" (Peruvian civilized Indians), and it will be easy to fashion them to the kind of occupation that may be required.

However, we have heard them judged in an unfavourable light; and they have been supposed to be incapable of dedicating themselves with profit to any class of employment. But in advancing such an erroneous opinion, those who make the assertion do not take into consideration that men leading a wandering and savage life, accustomed to live by fishing and without social habits, plunged in the most supine ignorance, and beholding their existence passing away like the plants of the desert, without more light than that of the heavens, without more ideas than those which exist in an uncultivated mind, without other considerations than those which arise from fear and absolute independence, never constrained by any reflexions, cannot, during such a brief change, alter their customs and acquire habits of industry, submission, and respect. Out of a savage a king can be formed, but only by means of education, not by harsh treatment. He will only be made to detest the society in which he may receive such bad treatment and to harbour in his heart, virgin as yet to the impressions which cultivation and progress foster, the cursed germ of despair.

Astonished at beholding fields which his mind never imagined, delighted with the infinite variety and beauties which fascinate his eyes, and at sights which he has never been accustomed to see, he can, with good treatment, be induced to accommodate himself to the exigencies of labour. If he be treated differently, then will he sigh after his solitary coasts and abandoned fatherland.

A Polynesian woman, seeing a lady in the ship in which she came, threw herself at the feet of the latter, and there prostrate, with palpitating heart and tears in her eyes, supplicated to be taken into the lady's service, and to remain by her side. She amused herself with examining the lady's dress, finding herself under a spell.

And these Polynesians were considered rebellious, and of indomitable dispositions!

Some farmer or other took several Polynesians, and from the first day obliged them to work in the same manner as the other "Peones" (labourers) from morning to night, without other rest than what is allowed to men accustomed to such work. What was the result?—a consequence that could not fail to happen—two-thirds of them died.

Let these people be accustomed by degrees to labour; let them be encouraged; dispense with punishment at the beginning, and then they will perform good service.

Sir, Callao, February 24, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to report to you that a vessel, under Peruvian colours, called the "Theresa," arrived in this port on the 21st instant with colonists from the Island of Independencia, one of the Polynesian group.

The number brought in this vessel, including women and children, is two hundred and three.

To-day I proceeded on board the "Theresa" to gather some information as to the manner which these colonists were brought, but beyond the assurance of the supercargo that they were brought of their own free will and accord, I could obtain no information.

The men mostly are clad in shirts and trowsers, a few I observed had only shirts on; the women appear to be superior to the men, both physically and mentally, and are decently dressed.

No. 13.

Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received April 12.)

(Extract.) Lima, March 12, 1863.

I BEG to be allowed to submit to your Lordship a translation of an extract from the "Comercio" of Lima, headed "Polynesians."

This article is evidently hostile to the introduction of these colonists into the country, and advises measures to be taken in time so as to anticipate those which may ultimately be exacted from this country to put an end to a traffic (and the abuses of which it is liable), which, according to this article, would seem to be a kind of slavery.

The writer of the above is of opinion that according to the law of the land the contracts of these Polynesians are invalid because persons of no capacity and savages, unable to understand the provisions of a contract, cannot enter into a legal one, and is also of opinion that were a Polynesian to present himself before a competent judge and sue for a nullity of contract, the judge, unless being guilty of gross fraud, would not only give a favourable decision for the Polynesian, but one for all other Polynesian colonists similarly situated.

This colonization ought, I think, to be put a stop to. First of all, it is useless; these Indians die off and won't work; secondly, whatever may be said about their coming here of their own free will and accord, it may reasonably be supposed that abuses have really taken place, or why are the French authorities at Tahiti, &c., so irate and active in suppressing the attempts to take away the natives of the Pacific Islands.

From the Protectorate which the French exercise at Tahiti and other groups, it is evidently their "rôle" to be the first in investigating and suppressing this "unworthy traffic," as the enclosed extract terms it.

There have been reports of natives having arrived here who claimed British protection.

As I have no orders from your Lordship to interfere actively, I have not done so, because your Lordship's despatch of the 26th of November last only limits me to watching this business and reporting upon it.

The other day Her Majesty's Consul at Callao wanted to send up to me at Lima a Polynesian (with an interpreter), who claimed British protection. The French Consul, I believe, had wished this man to go to the British Consulate.

I answered that before this man was sent up to Lima I wished to know if he was or not a British subject; but as it could not be asserted by the Consul at Callao that he really was, he was not sent to me.

The owner of the "Truxillo" was, it appears, under contract with this man to take him back to his native island, and Mr. Robertson, the Vice-Consul at Callao, in the presence of the French Consul, agreed that the Polynesian should go on board, where Mr. Robertson felt he would be well treated. I believe this Polynesian is one of the crew.

I also beg to forward to your Lordship copy of a communication from Her Majesty's Consul at Callao, inclosing the voluntary declaration made by a Dutchman, late carpenter on board of the "Theresa," which vessel, not long ago, brought Polynesians.

This man states that about two hundred of them were brought from Easter Island and against their will; whereas Mr. Robertson who went on board the "Teresa," as reported in his despatch to me inclosed in my despatch of the 26th of February last, to your Lordship, says that that vessel he learnt brought them from the Island of "Independencia," which cannot be Easter Island, or "Isla de Pascoa," as it is called here.

To clear up this discrepancy, I wrote to Mr. Barton, copy of which note is herein inclosed, asking for explanations, stating at the same time that when it was known what Harry Mass, a native of Holland, had to declare, it appertained more to the Peruvian authorities of Callao to receive this man's statement than to the British Consulate.

From the deponent not giving any dates and saying that he had been sent to Her Majesty's Consulate by the French Consular Agent, Mr. Barton did not appear to attach very much importance to the matter. However, it may possibly be all correct, but I doubt whether Harry Mass could have been induced to make a similar declaration before the Peruvian authorities.

Without orders, I have taken no steps in this business with the Peruvian Government.

It is thought that the proceedings of the French authorities in Oceania will, with the disinclination at present of the public to take these Polynesians, put a stop to these speculations.

M. Lesseps, the French Chargé d'Affaires, tells me that his conduct with regard to the Polynesian emigration has been approved of in Paris.

Extract from the Lima "Comercio" of March 3, 1863.

(Translation.)

POLYNESIANS.—VARIOUS ships that went in search of Polynesians have been detained by the French authorities of Oceania.

The foreign press considers the commerce in Polynesians as a new slave-trade, the credit of the country being damaged by it, and all this causes us to fear, with or without reason, that this business may occasion Peru serious conflicts.

Although the introduction of Polynesians might be useful, nevertheless, it would be advisable to forego it, in order to save us from international complications which might ensue, and from the antipathies which it might cause us, but fortunately any loss to Peru, in closing her ports to these colonists, will not be occasioned.

The greater part of these people are accustomed to live on the fruits which the earth offers them spontaneously, and on this account, they detest labour. In what will our agriculture gain by having men who know nothing, who are void of aspirations, and whom it is possible by force alone to compel to pay, with the sweat of their brow, the bread and money which are given them.

If the labour of savages can be utilized, truly there is no necessity to go to "Oceania" in search of them, as we have a sufficiency of such individuals in our territory whom it would be very easy to take from their hordes and convey to the cities, and the fields which we cultivate.

The "Morocochas," and those who people the banks of the "Amazons," are not in any respect inferior to the Polynesians. But this is not the population which is necessary for the increase and amelioration of our territory.

The adult wandering in the woods, without any other than the commonest necessities, and without believing that the force with which he is endowed, can be of use for increasing and furthering the products of nature, is not only useless, but prejudicial.

The presence of savages in our fields will resuscitate the "galpon" (barracoon) and the overseer, the prostitution and abasement of not only the labourer, but the work. The family and slavery, whether temporary or permanent, are incompatible.

He who is not master of his own person, and does not derive those advantages, promised by labour, cannot be a husband or a father. Work performed under the pressure of owners ceases to be virtue, and becomes a profound sorrow whose deep-felt lamentations keep aloof strong and manly minds.

At present we have not sufficient means for civilizing the indigenous inhabitants who constitute our principal material force, and we have gone in search of other people less agricultural than the above to augment the difficulties, which, on this account, the Republic encounters in its progress.

There are considerations of another kind, as well as those we have just expressed, showing the necessity of prohibiting the introduction of Polynesians.

The mortality of these is very considerable. Many are in the hospitals, and few get well, in spite of careful attention.

Is it possible that our Government can consent to these unfortunate people being snatched away from their islands to be conducted to certain death?

May not our inhumane inattention draw down upon us an epidemical infliction that might deprive us of thousands of persons of real utility?

We know well, that after having authorized this unworthy traffic in which Polynesian speculators have embarked. The Government could not "ex abrupto" forbid the importation of these colonists, but what impropriety would there be, in order to effect it, to issue a decree conceived in the following terms:—

1. From the date of six months hence, Polynesians shall not be permitted to enter the country collectively. The fitters-out and captains of vessels shall not be allowed to convey on board more than what suffice for the ship's service, and in no case shall they pay their expenses incurred in being brought, but hiring themselves for the services which they may perform.

2. Polynesians, who, before this term, may arrive in Peru, if they should wish to return, shall be conducted, at the cost of Government, to the places from which they may have been abstracted. In this case the state shall reimburse the captains and fitters-out the expenses they have been put to in bringing them.

It may be that what we now propose, or something more may be exacted of us, not without justice, later on.

Let us put an end to this evil; let us save our credit, by anticipating all demands.

All Governments are liable to commit errors, but ours committed a very great one in authorizing the importation of Polynesians, and are committing a greater one by giving a passive acquiescence to a form which appears now to be slavery.

Retrocede in time. Save the permanent interests of the country and the national honour. It is contradictory and shameful, that a country which knew how, at the cost to its treasury, to free itself from the leprosy of slavery, consents to it under another form, and in a manner that gives rise to such evils.

It cannot be said that the Polynesians are free to dispose of their persons, and that consequently they can oblige themselves to work, under given conditions, for a certain number of years; because liberty does not exist in a person deprived of capacity; because every contract contrary to the laws is void, and the laws have prohibited temporal and permanent slavery.

Do the Polynesians understand perchance the obligations imposed upon them by these contracts, true or suppositions, which in their own, or in this country, they are made to sign, or which are forged? Do savages know what labour from four to eight years imports?

Can they have an idea of the cost of their passage, of what they ought to pay, and of the manner in which this payment must be satisfied?

All the Polynesians in Peru are free, because they are not bound by the real or supposed contracts with which it has been attempted to bind them.

No judge, without committing the most odious prevarications, can recognize the rights of the patrons; if these have been injured, up to a certain point they deserve it; but perhaps they will have the option of a restitution of what they gave for these people.

We may be wrong, but we believe that the first Polynesian who presents himself before a competent judge, applying for a nullity of contract, will not only obtain a favourable sentence, but a sentence favourable to all those who may find themselves in the same case.

We desire that this may reach the ears of the Polynesians, for it would be an excellent fulfilment of the measures which we propose for the emancipation of the unfortunate beings who may have the good luck to escape the diseases which are devouring them.

Inclosure 2 in No. 13.

Consul Barton to Mr. Jerningham.

Sir,

Callao, March 6, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith certified copy of a voluntary declaration made and registered in this Consulate by Harry Mass, a native of Holland, late carpenter of the Peruvian barque "Theresa," relative to the manner in which certain natives of Easter Island were detained on board that vessel and brought to this port. You will please to observe that the deponent does not give any dates, not being able to give them correctly and that he stated that he came here at the request of the French Consul at this port.

(Signed) JOHN BARTON.

Inclosure 3 in No. 13.

Declaration of Harry Mass.

THIS day before me, John Barton, Esquire, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Callao personally came and appeared

Harry Mass, late carpenter of the Peruvian barque "Theresa," who voluntarily declared as follows, viz., that he joined the above-mentioned vessel in this port as carpenter, in which capacity he proceeded in the "Theresa" to Easter Island; that on arriving at that island some of the inhabitants swam off and that others were brought off to the vessel for the purpose of purchasing or bartering Irish hooks and clothing; that when there were about two hundred persons on board including men, women, and children, sail was suddenly made on the vessel, and the persons on board were detained against their will and brought to this port; that the persons referred to requested to be allowed to return on shore, but were refused permission, and detained on board by the captain and chief mate of the vessel.

(Signed) HARRY MASS.

Sworn at the British Consulate at Callao this fifth day of March, in the year of our Lord 1863.

Before me,

(L.S.) (Signed) JOHN BARTON.

Her Britannic Majesty's Consul.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and faithful copy of the original declaration registered in the archives of this Consulate.

In witness whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed the consular seal of the office of Her Britannic Majesty's Consulate at Callao, this sixth day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three.

(L.S.) (Signed) JOHN BARTON,

Her Britannic Majesty's Consul.

Inclosure 4 in No. 13.

Mr. Jerningham to Consul Barton.

Lima, March 7, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of 6th instant, transmitting certified copy of a voluntary declaration made and registered at Her Majesty's Consulate at Callao, by Harry Mass, a native of Holland, late carpenter on board the Peruvian barque "Theresa," relative to the manner in which certain natives of Easter Island were detained on board that vessel and brought to Callao.

In reading the declaration of Mass I find that he states that the two hundred persons, including men, women, and children, who swam on board the "Theresa," or who were brought on board from shore and there detained against their will, were from Easter Island, whereas in Mr. Robertson's despatch to me of the 24th of February last, reporting the arrival of the "Theresa" at Callao, on the 21st of that month, he states that she had come from the Island of Independencia.

This appears a discrepancy which I wish may be investigated.

Mr. Robertson's report after his going on board of the "Theresa" mentions that he could obtain no further information excepting that the supercargo assured him that the Polynesians came of their own free will; and that their number was two hundred and three. This confirms the statement of Harry Mass as to the number more or less, there being only a difference of three; but Independencia and Easter Island (Isla de Pascoa), cannot surely be the same, and therefore I must beg of you to have the kindness to look into this for the sake of rectification.

It also appears to me that when it was known what kind of statement Harry Mass, a native of Holland, had to make; that he ought to have been directed to go and make it to the Peruvian authorities at Callao. Of course, any one can come and make a voluntary declaration before Her Majesty's Consul; but this being evidence against the navigators of the Peruvian vessel "Theresa," it appertained more directly to the Peruvian authorities to receive it, and of course to act upon it, as their late excellent decrees ordain.

Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received May 13.)

Lima, April 12, 1863.

I SUBJOIN copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Callao, stating that, on the 1st instant, the Peruvian barque, "Carolina," arrived at Callao from the Island of Baijee, bringing 72 male colonists and one female.

From what I hear, independent of the irregularities and abuses which are asserted to have occurred in procuring many of the Polynesians, the advent of these colonists to Peru has been anything but a useful speculation.

A great many of these poor people, I am told, die of nostalgia and other diseases; others want work; many also live on raw plaintains, and fish, when they can obtain it, but decline the diet of cooked meat.

Even care does not appear to succeed in preserving these inhabitants of the Pacific Islands any length of time in Peru, for I have been informed that a gentleman here, who had a lot of these people on his premises in the country of whom he took great care, has lost all but two.

Inclosure in No. 14.

Acting Consul Robertson to Mr. Jerningham.

Sir,

Callao, April 3, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to report that on the 1st instant the Peruvian barque, "Carolina," arrived in port from the Island of Baijee, bringing 72 male colonists and one female.

I should mention that this report is taken from the Book of Entries and Sailings, kept at the office of the captain of the port.

*Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received May 20.)*My Lord, Lima, April 23, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to forward to your Lordship copy of a despatch from Rear-Admiral Kingcome, Commander-in-Chief of Her Britannic Majesty's Forces in the Pacific forwarding two letters from the officer in command of the "Naiad" naval store ship at Callao, reporting that several vessels had arrived at that port with cargoes of natives from the islands of the South Pacific; and that as there seemed to be strong suspicions that these people were inveigled on board and sold in Peru, he brought the matter under my notice with a view to making such representations to the Peruvian Government as I might deem necessary.

The lists of vessels which are mentioned in Captain Reid's letters to the Admiral comprise those which arrived between the 17th January and 9th of March inclusive, most of which have been already reported to me by Her Britannic Majesty's Vice-Consul at Callao, and by me to your Lordship.

I beg also to inclose copy of my reply to Rear-Admiral Kingcome's communication, in which I inform him that the Polynesian emigration had greatly merited my attention since my arrival on the 2nd of January last, that I had written several despatches to your Lordship on the subject, that I had followed the instructions I had brought out with me regarding this matter, and awaited further orders from Her Majesty's Government. Besides, I also informed him that I had warned the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs against abstracting any Islanders illegally from places under British jurisdiction or protection.

Mr. Jerningham to Rear-Admiral Kingcome.

Sir, Lima, April 16, 1863.

I BEG to have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your communication dated Valparaiso, 31st March, 1863, in which you forward to me copies of two letters which you had received from the officer in command of the "Naiad," at Callao, reporting the arrival of several vessels with cargoes of natives from the islands of the South Pacific, and in which you state that, as there seem to be strong suspicions entertained that these poor people have been inveigled and sold in Peru, you have brought the matter under my notice with a view to making such representations to the Peruvian Government as I may deem necessary.

In answer to this I beg to state that since my arrival on the 2nd of January last, the importation of these Polynesians from the South Pacific has greatly merited my attention, and that I have written several despatches to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs upon it, and am awaiting his Lordship's further orders and instructions on the subject of the Polynesian colonization in Peru.

The instructions which I have brought out with me on this affair I have followed; and I have also made verbally a communication to the late Minister for Foreign Affairs of Peru, on my own responsibility, warning his Excellency against the abstraction of any of these islanders illegally from the places under British jurisdiction or protection.

The activity of the French authorities in the Tahiti group appears to have already checked these Polynesian speculations ; and besides, these people do not thrive in Peru ; they die, and won't work even in spite of care and fair treatment ; so in all probability there will now be an end of it, and very properly.

I have, &c.

(Signed) WM. STAFFORD JERNINGHAM.

No. 16.

Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received May 29.)

Lima, April 28, 1863.

I BEG to forward to your Lordship copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Acting Consul in Callao, Mr. Robertson, stating that a vessel under Peruvian colours had arrived in Callao on the 18th instant, bringing 63 colonists from the Island of Oparo, 8 of whom are females ; this vessel, he states, is said to have been chartered by foreigners residing in Lima and Callao, and reported to be owned by a gentleman holding an official situation, but I do not see by Mr. Robertson's letter that he figures as participating in the enterprise. He may have hired out his ship to others.

On the 20th another vessel under Peruvian colours arrived in port from the Island of Pascoa, bringing 21 colonists including 3 women.

By this it appears that the numbers that arrive are decreasing, and most probably the attitude which the French have assumed regarding these speculations will, with the failure of the islanders making suitable colonists, to all appearances cause an end to this traffic which in many cases, it is to be feared, may have been attended with deceit and illegal proceedings.

Since writing the above I have received a letter from Her Majesty's Consul at Tahiti, copy of which I inclose, by which your Lordship will learn what has been the conduct of the captain and doctor of the "Empresa," in obtaining illegally Polynesian colonists, as is shown by the depositions of Henry James Nichols, George Black Duniam, and Henry William Carr, made before the Resident des Marquises.

The British Admiral Kingcome, Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's Naval Forces in the Pacific has received an identical communication from Mr. Consul Miller.

I shall consult with the Admiral about making a representation to the Peruvian Government on the matter, especially as Mr. Duniam, the agent of the "Empresa," who recommended legal means being employed to obtain colonists, was ill-treated by the captain and the doctor, and put on shore bound hand and foot, is a British subject.

The French Chargé d'Affaires tells me he is going to take up the matter very seriously, as the outrage occurred, I believe, within the dependencies of the French Government.

The British Admiral says that he means to send a ship to visit the Polynesian Groups.

This will be one of the best means for preventing future scandals.

Inclosure 1 in No. 16.

Acting Consul Robertson to Mr. Jerningham.

Callao, April 21, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that on the 18th instant the "Empresa," a vessel under Peruvian colours, arrived in this port with sixty-three colonists from the Island of Oparo, of these eight are females. This vessel put into Huacho for provisions ; I believe there were not any colonists landed there ; this vessel is said to have been chartered by foreigners residing in Lima and Callao, and to be owned by a gentleman holding an official position.

Yesterday another vessel, the "José Castro," also under the flag of this republic, arrived in port from the Island of Pascoa, bringing twenty-one colonists, including three women.

Inclosure 2 in No. 16.

Consul Miller to Mr. Jerningham.

Sir,

Papeete, Tahiti, March 3, 1863.

WITH reference to the letters which I did myself the honour of addressing to you on the 1st and 15th of December last, covering papers upon the subject of the serious abuses that were being committed in these seas by certain ships engaged in collecting South Sea Islanders for conveyance to Peru as labourers.

I have now the honour to transmit to you two numbers of the official newspaper, "Messager de Taiti," containing further particulars showing the fraud and violence which are resorted to in the prosecution of the traffic in question.

You will find in the within papers detailed evidence of the systematic kidnapping of natives, lately practised at the French possessions of the Marquesas Islands by a Peruvian ship called the "Empresa," which succeeded in treacherously securing and making off with about 26 of the natives.

Other important particulars will be found in the inclosed papers relative to a piratical outrage that was perpetrated in the month of December last by no less than eight vessels (seven Peruvian and one Spanish), assembled together at Easter Island, a solitary and unfrequented spot, about midway between Tahiti and Valparaiso.

It appears that the masters of the vessels last alluded to, finding that the Easter Islanders would no longer go off to their ships, resolved upon a combined expedition for the purpose of seizing them on shore. Their crews, to the number of about 80 men, were in consequence armed and landed, and by surprise and force succeeded, it seems, in capturing and carrying off nearly 200 of the natives, who were afterwards shared out amongst the different ships in proportion to the number of men that had been furnished by each towards the expedition.

Several of the islanders are stated to have been killed in the course of this buccaneering assault upon them.

The greater part of the islanders that were captured were shipped on board one of the vessels present, which was despatched with them to Peru, there it is said to be sold on account of their captors.

The intelligence of these lawless proceedings at Easter Island was brought to this port about a fortnight ago by the Peruvian brigantine "Cora," one of the eight vessels engaged in the transaction. From Easter Island the "Cora" had proceeded to the Island of Rapa, or Oparo, about ten degrees to the south of Tahiti, and there she was seized by the natives and then sent hither, under the circumstances also described in the printed papers inclosed.

I understand that the "Cora" is likely to be kept at Tahiti until instructions shall have been obtained from the French Government upon the case, neither Rapa nor Easter Island being under French protection.

I furthermore learn that the Imperial Commissioner at this place is about to send to the French Chargé d'Affaires at Lima, not only the documentary evidence of the abductions effected by Peruvian ships at the French possession of the Marquesas, but likewise some of the witnesses, and also a Marquesan interpreter, with a view I believe to demanding from the Peruvian Government (under whose licences this so-called emigration is carried forward) the restitution of the kidnapped natives, as well as the repression of such piratical aggressions upon French territories.

Two other Peruvian ships, besides the "Cora," remain meanwhile under detention at this port, namely,

The "Serpiente Marina," charged with having unduly attempted to procure natives from the Gambier Islands (under French protection).

And the "Mercedes de Wholey," seized in the act of illegally carrying off 151 natives of the Paumotu Islands, which are dependencies of Tahiti.

The trial of the latter vessel will take place before the local tribunals in a few days and I shall deem it my duty in due course to inform you of the results as well as of the decision which may be come to with respect to the "Serpiente Marina."

In conclusion, I beg leave to add that by the present mail I transmit copies of the inclosed printed papers to Earl Russell.

I have, &c.

No. 17.

Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received June 13.)

My Lord,

Lima, May 12, 1863.

IN my despatch of the 28th ultimo by last mail, in which I forwarded to your Lordship copy of the "Messenger de Taiti," I mentioned that I would consult with the Admiral with regard to making a representation to the Peruvian Government on the subject of the Polynesian traffic, especially as a British subject, named G. Black Duniam, had been ill-treated upon the Peruvian vessel "Empresa," by the captain and doctor; however, as I learnt from the French Chargé d'Affaires, that the captain and doctor might escape, I thought it best to lose no time, and I consequently addressed a note to the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, copy of which I have now the honour to inclose, requesting the Peruvian Government to cause a strict investigation to be made in the matter in which a British subject had been such a sufferer, and that all the legal means in their power should be employed to bring the offenders to justice.

I also inclosed for the information of his Excellency copies of the "Tahiti Messenger," in which amongst other abuses, there was mentioned a most piratical act, reported to have been committed by some of the crews of seven vessels under Peruvian colours at Easter Island, said to have been commanded by the captain of the "Rosa and Carmen," who is stated to be about to arrive at Huacho and Callao, I deemed it right to represent to his Excellency, that Her Majesty's Government, known throughout the whole world for their detestation of every thing in the shape of slavery, were convinced that the Peruvian Government, who had abolished it throughout Peru, would not tolerate such aggressions under her flag, as those said to have occurred at Easter Island, that they would use their earnest endeavours to examine into this affair, punish the guilty and devise such precautions as to render such things for the future impossible.

On the 1st of May instant, I received an answer from Señor Ribeyro, copy of which is also inclosed, and which appears satisfactory. He adds that the Peruvian Government have abolished entirely this traffic, and that with respect to the vessels which are now on their way, they have ordered them, the moment they arrive, to be placed in absolute incommunication, so that they may be subjected to a severe examination.

With regard to the "Empresa," orders have been given to place her in incommunication, and to apprehend the captain and the doctor, and that on the arrival of the "Rosa and Carmen," at Huacho, measures with respect to her should also be taken.

The French Chargé d'Affaires, who has taken the chief part in all the attempts to put an end to these Polynesian abuses, as most of them have been committed at, and on natives of islands under the Protectorate of France, has exerted himself principally in getting the Government to act as they have now done, and to his activity and decision much praise is due.

Messrs. Duniam and Carr have arrived at Lima, and have commenced their prosecution.

The captain of the "Empresa," a Frenchman, has just been arrested, but the doctor has not yet been secured.

I have given to the Admiral copies of my note, and of that which I received from Señor Ribeyro. He has informed me that he has ordered a ship, I think, the "Tribune," to make a voyage to the Polynesian Groups; but I believe she is to come to Callao before proceeding to the islands.

Inclosure 1 in No. 17.

Mr. Jerningham to Señor Ribeyro.

Lima, April 30, 1863.

THE Undersigned, &c., has the honour to forward to the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs, copies of the "Messenger de Tahiti" of the 21st and 28th of February last, which he has lately received from Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Tahiti, in which his Excellency will perceive, by the declaration of George Black Duniam, a British subject, what was the ill-treatment which that person, together with Mr. Carr, experienced on board the Peruvian ship "Empresa," engaged in the Polynesian emigration business.

As this vessel has arrived in the port of Callao, and as the conduct of the captain and the doctor appears, from the above-mentioned declaration, highly criminal with regard to Duniam and Carr, besides the illegal means which they appear to have employed for obtaining colonists, which must be condemned by every humane and liberal-minded Government; the undersigned begs to call his Excellency's attention to these affairs, requesting of the Peruvian Government a strict investigation into the matter, in which a British subject has been such a sufferer, and that all the legal means in their power should be employed to bring the offenders to justice.

There is also mention made in the same journal of the 28th February, of a most piratical act committed by some of the crews of the seven vessels under Peruvian colours at Easter Island; they were said to be commanded by the captain of the "Rosa and Carmen," which vessel it is reported is shortly expected at Huacho, on her way to Callao.

In bringing this outrage, as reported in the "Messenger," to the notice of the Peruvian Government, the undersigned begs to state that Her Majesty's Government, who are known all over the world for their detestation of every thing in the shape of slavery, are convinced that the Peruvian Government, who proclaim the most philanthropic principles, and have abolished slavery throughout the whole of Peru, will not tolerate such aggressions under her flag, as that reported to have taken place at Easter Island, and that they will use their most earnest endeavours to examine into the matter, punish the guilty, and devise such precautions as to render such things impossible for the future.

The undersigned begs that the two newspapers above mentioned may be later returned to him.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 2 in No. 17.

Señor Ribeyro to Mr. Jerningham.

(Translation.)

Lima, May 1, 1863.

I HAVE just received the note which, under date of yesterday, you have done me the honour to address to me, regarding the ill-treatment which it is stated the British subjects, Duniam and Carr, have suffered on board of the "Empresa," and the irregularities committed in the contracts of the Polynesians. Your Honour adds that the "Rosa and Carmen" would soon arrive at Huacho and Callao, and that you hope proceedings will be taken to examine into the facts, to punish those who may be found culpable, and to adopt measures that will make impossible for the future a repetition of those abuses.

The Government, of their own accord, convinced that the introduction of Polynesians is of little advantage to the country, and that it is subject to many objections, have abolished entirely that traffic, and regarding the vessels which are now on the road, have ordered that the moment they arrive they be placed in absolute incommunication, so that they may be subjected to a severe examination.

Respecting the "Empresa," it has been ordered since the 29th ultimo, that she be placed in incommunication, and that the captain, the doctor, and the whole crew be subjected to trial, the most efficacious orders having been given for the apprehension of the accused, the prompt examination of the facts, and the exemplary punishment of those who may be found guilty.

Besides the measures that have been indicated, I have just passed to the Commandant-General of Marine, copy of your note, so that its contents may be taken into consideration, and that immediately on the arrival of the vessel you indicate at Huacho, the measures recorded respecting her may be taken.

According to the desires manifested by you, I return the numbers of the "Messenger" of Tahiti.

Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received June 28.)

Lima, May 29, 1863.

DURING a conversation which I had some days ago with M. Lesseps, the French Chargé d'Affaires, when referring to the question of the Polynesian emigration abuses, he stated that he thought that in the face of such occurrences it was highly advisable that the diplomatic body should meet and announce publicly their opinion upon the inhuman conduct of some of the parties concerned in this traffic.

I coincided with his opinion, and I intimated that I conceived it would be also advisable to make the meeting as general as possible, and invite the heads of the Consular body in Lima, as well as those of diplomatic rank.

M. Lesseps, M. Eldredge, the Hawaiian Chargé d'Affaires, and myself went to Mr. Robinson, the United States' Minister, who is doyen of the Diplomatic Body in Lima, and consulted him upon the subject of the meeting. However, Mr. Robinson did not see the exact necessity of it, and said that he had already communicated his views on the matter to the Peruvian Government; that he imagined, that if each nation did the same separately, it would have the effect desired, and that a meeting for the purpose of announcing a general opinion was, it appeared to him, a work of supererogation.

Besides he informed us that the occupations which took up his time for the approaching mail would prevent him from being able to attend personally at any meeting for the above purpose; yet, however, if such took place, and something was decided on which he could sign, he would have no objection to append his signature.

It was afterwards decided that the meeting of the Diplomatic and Consular Bodies should take place in the house of Senor Canevaro, the Italian Consul-General, who had agreed to its taking place at his residence, at which M. Eldredge, the Hawaiian Chargé d'Affaires, who is next in point of precedency to the doyen, Mr. Robinson, explained to the gentlemen present the nature of what it was desirable to express in a collective document.

A good deal of discussion took place; but after three or four "seances" they finally came to a decision upon the matter, and a document was signed (Mr. Robinson's signature was procured also), a copy and translation of which I now beg to forward to your Lordship.

M. Lembake, the Swedish Consul-General, declined to take any part in the proceedings.

The disapprobation of the abuses which have occurred in carrying out the Polynesian emigration by some unprincipled individuals is embodied in this collective procès-verbal, and at the same time satisfaction is expressed at what the Peruvian Government are now doing in the investigation, which they have inaugurated for the sake of punishing the guilty.

The Chargé d'Affaires of France and the Chargé d'Affaires of the United States of Columbia were deputed to present the above to his Excellency the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Peru, who received it with politeness, and gave an answer, copy and translation of which is hereto affixed.

M. Lesseps has been extremely active in the questions which he has had with the Peruvian Government regarding the Polynesians under French protection.

He has sent a lot of these people to the hospital in Lima, where I believe many have died, and he has exercised much charity in succouring those that were on board a vessel in the port of Callao, where, as they could not be disposed of, nobody now being desirous of taking Polynesians, they were suffering from want of clothes and possibly from bad living.

None of these being British subjects I do not see how far I am authorized in interfering, except by moral reprobation of acts evidently inhuman in their consequences, and which ought to be properly punished by those to whom it legally pertains to inflict the deserved castigation.

I beg to inclose to your Lordship a copy of Mr. Acting Consul Robertson's letter to me of the 15th instant, respecting Canacas which have been landed at Huacho by the "Empresa," and which had sought the protection of the French flag.

Some English sailors appear to be among the crew of the "Empresa," who have been arrested and are in prison; as they embarked willingly on board a vessel under a foreign flag, they must undergo their trial with the rest of the crew.

I shall instruct Mr. Robertson to see that they are treated justly.

Inclosure 1 in No. 18.

Declaration of the Diplomatic and Consular Bodies at Lima.

(Translation.)

THE Diplomatic and Consular Corps resident in Lima met on the 13th of May, 1863, in this city, and declared :

1. That the Diplomatic and Consular Corps deplore as deeply as the Government of Peru, the horrible abuses committed in the Polynesian Islands by expeditions that tried to obtain labourers, in violation of the laws and of the licences given to bring those labourers to this Republic.

2. That they are happy to express their satisfaction at the suitable measures taken by the Government of Peru to prohibit said traffic, carried on in violation of the laws and of the licences conceded.

3. That they are also happy to assure their respective Governments, that the measures taken by the Government of Peru have supported morality, justice, and humanity.

In continuation, they decided that this act be copied in the records of the diplomatic corps, and that after being signed, a copy be presented to his Excellency the Minister of Foreign Affairs and President of the Council of Peru, by the Chargés d'Affaires and Consul-General of France and the United States of Columbia ; every member of said corps, moreover, sending a copy to his own Government.

Lima, May 22, 1863.

THE Undersigned, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Peru, has the honour to address the diplomatic and consular corps residing in this city through the medium of his Excellency the Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America, in order to express to them, in the name of his Government, the sentiments of gratitude for the declaration made by them, acknowledging the benevolent disposition of this Cabinet to prevent, in conformity with the precepts of right and justice, the unfortunate events that have happened through the introduction of labourers from Polynesia.

Peru and its present administration have deeply deplored these abuses committed on the introduction of the Polynesians, which introduction was permitted with the intention to work our fields and to improve the condition of those unhappy beings by the blessings of civilization; and their grief was augmented seeing that some men under the shelter of licences legally conceded for lawful purposes, exposed the dignity and honour of the country.

The Government has fulfilled its duties, ordering judicial inquiries to be made into these offences, and prohibiting henceforward an immigration that has proved to be insufficient for the improvements intended for the national agriculture. It will not cease to take measures which, respecting at the same time all rights legally acquired, shall satisfy the laws of humanity, the prescriptions of social morality, and the respectability of the Peruvian nation.

Your Excellency will be pleased to acquaint both corps with this communication, as a proof of reciprocity and esteem.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 3 in No. 18.

Acting Consul Robertson to Mr. Jerningham.

Sir,

Callao, May 15, 1863.

IN continuation of the subject of the despatch I had the honour to address to you on the 21st ultimo, I have now to report that the supposition I entertained that the "Empresa" had not landed any Canacas at Huacho turns out to be erroneous, as by the steamer "Inca," which arrived here from Huacho on the 13th instant, several Canacas, who had been brought from different islands of the Polynesian Group in that vessel, came to this port solely to place themselves under the protection of the French flag; they consist of both sexes, and from their statement there appears to be little or no doubt that they have been kidnapped; since their arrival here they have been kindly and well taken care of by M. des Noyers, the French Consul, who has temporarily provided the men with an asylum on board the "Galathée," and the women were sent to Lima to-day to be placed under the charge of the Sœurs de Charité.

In a private note which I have this day received from M. des Noyers, he informs me that "when the 'Empresa' visited the Island Wapoa (Mankwa) she had the British flag flying," this fact is sworn to by the Canacas. Four seamen, who declared themselves to be British subjects, William Cole, John McKenzie, Laurence Silva, and Robert Walker are now detained in custody, accused as accomplices in the kidnapping of these Polynesians. They have applied to me to use my influence with the authorities to procure their release, but whether innocent or guilty as far as the kidnapping is concerned, they are no doubt subject to the same trial, as they willingly shipped in a vessel under a foreign flag, and must have been aware or could have ascertained the nature, of the intended voyage. For these reasons, and also that the ends of justice may not be interfered with, I have declined to recognize their appeal, and shall continue to do so unless I receive your orders to the contrary.

In conclusion, I should add that there are other Canacas who were left behind in Huacho by the "Empresa," are expected here to place themselves under French protection.

I have, &c.

Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received July 15.)

My Lord,

Lima, June 12, 1863.

I BEG to have the honour to forward to your Lordship copy and translation of a note from the President of the Council and Minister for Foreign Affairs, Señor Ribeyro, addressed to the Minister of the Home Department, General Freyre, which has appeared in the official journal "El Peruano," stating that the Peruvian Government would fulfil a duty to humanity and adopt a measure of prudence if they signified through the Prefectures to those Polynesians in Peru who are in complete independence, and to the masters who are willing to release those in their service without compensation, that those emigrants upon presenting themselves would be conveyed back to their country in one of the vessels of the State, and requesting his Excellency to consult with the Vice-President respecting this proposition, as also as to the means of carrying it into effect, calculated as it is, in his opinion, to produce very salutary results.

I also inclose General Freyre's answer, intimating that he had taken the orders of his Excellency the Vice-President, charged with the Executive Power, who had been pleased to direct that orders should be given for carrying out the proposition of Señor Ribeyro, and that a vessel commodious and safe should be got ready for the object above-mentioned.

I also subjoin copy of a communication which I have received from Her Majesty's Consul at Callao, informing me that the French corvette "Diamant," had arrived there from Chancay, whither she had proceeded for the purpose of collecting such Canacas as might be there, or in the neighbourhood, who might be found willing to be conveyed hither, as he states, to be placed under the immediate protection of the French authorities; and it would appear that 34 have arrived, including females; two died during the short voyage, and 15 are in a bad state of health, some not being expected to survive over a few days. He says the state some of these unfortunates were found in was repugnant in the extreme, some of them presenting the mere appearance of skeletons.

Such of these Canacas as are healthy, brought by the French war vessel "Diamant," have been placed on board the French store ship, and the sick have been forwarded to the hospital.

Mr. Robertson adds that a Peruvian vessel, the "Barbara Gomez," had arrived in Callao from the Island of Pasqua (Easter Island), with 23 natives on board, and that she had been placed "incomunicado," in quarantine, by the Peruvian authorities.

M. Lesseps has, I believe, caused application to be made to the local authorities for persons under his orders to go on board to see whether these Polynesians have been brought hither in a rightful way; but the answer received was to the effect that the vessel being placed "incomunicado," the decision of the Peruvian Government must be taken respecting her, or something to that effect.

M. Lesseps informs me that he proceeded himself in the "Diamant" to Ancón, on its trip to Chancay, when the Government Commission, attended by a French delegate, went ashore to search for such Polynesians as might be in those parts, and for whom they went expressly, to convey to Lima, and he assures me that many were found in a most deplorable state and excited great commiseration.

He says the police behaved very well, and 34 were taken away from those parts.

He tells me he has now addressed a note to the Government, requesting that all the Polynesians, under French protection I suppose, who have been imported should be directly given up for the purpose of sending those who have survived, and are able to go, back to their own country.

It is probable now that there will be no more expeditions for bringing Polynesians to Peru; the experiment has failed; abuses have been committed by some individuals in procuring them, and it is to be feared, when it had been found out that they would not work and were men of no use from the state of despondency they were in, that they have been left to eke out their miserable existence; if not, why should so many of them have been found in the dreadful state described above?

I have, &c.

Inclosure 1 in No. 19.

Señor Ribeyro to General Freyre.

(Translation.)

Lima, May 26, 1863.

YOU are, no doubt, aware that the immigration of Polynesians has been so little advantageous to the country, that many of these unfortunates perish miserably, and others are of so little use to their masters, that, according to report, some of them prefer to discharge them without any compensation whatever.

I believe, therefore, that the Government would fulfil a duty of humanity, would adopt a measure of prudence, and would be consistent with the conduct they have observed in this delicate matter, if they invited, through the Prefecture, the Polynesians who are in complete independence, and the masters who may be willing to voluntarily release them without compensation, so that the said emigrants may present themselves, and be conveyed to their country on board one of the vessels of the national navy.

You, Sir, will be pleased to resolve with his Excellency the Vice-President upon this proposition, which in my opinion is calculated to produce very salutary results, and at the same time upon the means of carrying it into effect.

God preserve, &c.

General Freyre to Señor Ribeyro.

Lima, May 28, 1863.

THE measure which you, Sir, have been pleased to indicate to me in your despatch of the 26th instant, regarding the Polynesian colonists, being so prudent, as well as humane, his Excellency the second Vice-President of the Republic, charged with the Executive Power, has been pleased to direct that through my office, the necessary orders be given, so that by the means of the local authorities, the colonists who are in complete independence, and the masters who may wish to release these emigrants voluntarily and without any compensation whatever, may be invited to present themselves to the said authorities, so that the Government may restore them to the country from whence they came, on board of one of the vessels of the State, which resolution I have communicated to the Minister of War and Marine, so that he may opportunely cause to be got ready a commodious and safe vessel for the object indicated.

I have the honour to acquaint you, sir, of this for your information, and in reply to your despatch referred to.

God preserve, &c.

Sir, Callao, June 11, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to report that the French steam corvette "Diamant," arrived in port yesterday from Chancay, whither she had proceeded for the purpose of collecting such Canacas as might be there or in the neighbourhood found willing to be brought to this port to be placed under the immediate protection of the French authorities; the "Diamant" has brought 34 Canacas, including females and 1 infant, 2 died during the voyage, and 15 have arrived in a bad state of health, some of whom are not expected to survive over a few days; the state that some of these unfortunate beings were found in, was repugnant in the extreme, some of them are mere skeletons.

I have likewise the honour to report the arrival of the Peruvian barque "Barbara Gomez," from Pascua Island, with 23 natives, 14 of whom are females; this vessel is "incomunicado" in quarantine.

I should add that such of the Canacas, brought by the "Diamant," as are healthy, have been sent on board a French store ship, and the sick to hospital.

Mr. Jerningham to Earl Russell.—(Received August 28.)

My Lord,

Lima, July 12, 1863.

I BEG to have the honour to forward to your Lordship copy of a communication from Her Majesty's Consul at Callao, by which your Lordship will see that three more ships from the Polynesian Islands have arrived with colonists, one under Spanish and the others under Peruvian colours.

The substance of this Report is gathered from the office of the Captain of the Port at Callao.

I have been informed to-day that another vessel, under the Peruvian flag, with I believe 200 Polynesians, arrived at Callao last evening.

I will inquire of the Minister for Foreign Affairs what steps the Peruvian Government mean to adopt, as, according to their own declaration, which I forwarded to your Lordship in my despatch of the 12th May last, they have abolished the Polynesian traffic.

I HAVE the honour to report that the Spanish barque "Rosa y Carmen," arrived in this port on the 10th instant from Roul Island; this vessel has brought 128 colonists, amongst whom are 35 females and 15 children; that the Peruvian barque "Urmeneta y Ramos" arrived on the 17th instant from Necua Island with 31 colonists, and that on the 19th instant the "General Prim," also a Peruvian barque, arrived from the Island of Frinatehy with 174 colonists, of this number 73 are females.

Earl Russell to Mr. Jerningham.

Sir,

Foreign Office, March 18, 1864.

IN your despatch of the 12th May last you inclosed to me a note from the Peruvian Government, stating that that Government had abolished the system which had been adopted for the introduction into Peru of natives of the Polynesian Islands, and which had given rise to such horrible abuses.

I received this intelligence with satisfaction, and approved of the steps taken by you in carrying out the instructions which you had received from me in this matter.

You will continue to bear the subject in mind, as it is not impossible that, although the system has been abolished, steps may be taken indirectly to carry out the objects contemplated by the parties concerned, thus causing fresh evils and crimes. In such case it will be your duty again to remonstrate on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and I shall be glad to learn that your Diplomatic and Consular colleagues have co-operated in your representations.

— No. 1. —

COPY of LETTER from Mr. Lindsay, M.P., to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

8, Austin Friars, City, 26 December 1861.

THIS is the first time I have had occasion to trouble your Lordship in regard to any matters of my own.

I am a holder of 14,000*l.*, six per cent. debentures, of the Union Mercantile Company of Lisbon. Seven per cent. interest is guaranteed on the stock of this Company by the Portuguese Government, of which also I am a holder, to the extent of 25,000*l.* The published statutes of the company were drawn up and adopted by the Government, and were issued under its authority. On the faith of these, I, as a British subject, became a holder of the stock and debentures. These statutes, so far as I can learn, have been violated by the managing directors and secretary, and the payment of the debentures of the Company has just been repudiated. With the details I will not trouble your Lordship, but the case is a most flagrant one; so much so, that I shall be obliged to dispatch by the steamer of the 6th January one of my partners, Mr. Miles Stringer, to Lisbon to protect my interests. As your Lordship has always been ready to afford protection to the interests of British subjects abroad, may I ask you to grant me a letter of introduction in favour of Mr. Miles Stringer to our Minister at Lisbon. May I further venture to express a hope that your Lordship will be pleased to send a copy of this letter, as soon as may be convenient, to his Excellency Sir Arthur Magenis, and request him to grant whatever assistance the British Embassy can consistently afford, should Mr. Stringer be obliged to apply to the Government of Portugal for redress; and if compelled to adopt legal measures, that he may in the courts of law of Portugal have, as a British subject, the same justice dispensed that he would have in the courts of this country.

I am, &c.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 26 December 1861.

I ENCLOSE for your information a copy of a letter from Mr. Lindsay, M.P., setting forth the views under which he is about to dispatch Mr. Stringer to represent his interests at Lisbon, and requesting that that gentleman may receive your support.

Mr. Stringer will present to you a letter of introduction from this office, and will give you such information as you may require respecting his case. I have to instruct you to afford Mr. Stringer such assistance and support as you can properly render, either with the Portuguese Government, if it is necessary to appeal to it, or as may be required to insure the case being justly disposed of by the tribunals.

WITH reference to your letter of this day's date, I am directed by Lord Russell to state to you that instructions will be sent by the mail of to-morrow to Sir *A. COPY of LETTER from Mr. Lindsay, M.P., to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

8, Austin Friars, City, 3 February 1862.

MAY I refer your Lordship to my letter to you of the 26th December and your reply of the 27th. Since then I have visited Lisbon, and delivered the letter of introduction you were pleased to give me to Sir Arthur Magen. As I had however no desire to trouble his Excellency unless my claims upon the Government of Portugal were refused, I had, on his introduction, an interview with the Minister of Public Works of that country, and afterwards left with him a letter, of which the enclosed is a translation, drawn up under the direction of one of the most eminent Portuguese lawyers. The letter states the nature of those claims. That the Government of Portugal is responsible there cannot be a doubt. The letters from its Minister, and its contracts with me, are clear. The debentures I hold are preference claims issued under the signature of its Commissioner; and an Act of its Legislature, passed last Session, guarantees 7 per cent. per annum upon the stock of the Company, of which I am a holder of 37,000*l*.

Matters of importance requiring my presence in England, I could only remain in Lisbon a few days, and had not time to receive an official reply to my letter; but I left there Mr. Howe, a member of the English bar, who accompanied me, and who, vested with authority from me, will remain in Portugal to protect my interests.

The case, as you will perceive, is one of a public nature, and as Mr. Howe may require to seek the active intervention of Sir Arthur Magen, may I ask your Lordship to instruct his Excellency to render Mr. Howe the necessary assistance should he be compelled to adopt stringent measures for the recovery of my claims. I hope such measures may not be necessary; but, if so, I feel that I shall not apply to your Lordship in vain when I desire your aid to protect my capital, invested in good faith on the representations and under the guarantees of the Portuguese Government.

I am, &c.

Enclosure in No. 5.

Sir,

Lisbon, 20 January 1862.

IN the course of the months of January, February, and March 1858, I had the honour of receiving several letters from M. Carlos Bento da Silva, at that time Minister of Public Works, and now of Marine, in which his Excellency invited me, on the part of the Portuguese Government, to assist in the formation of the Company called the Union Mercantile, which some merchants in this city, with the concurrence and assistance of the Government, were endeavouring to establish. It was, however, found that they could not do so by capital raised in this country. It was there that the Minister urged upon me, most earnestly, to furnish the steamers necessary to commence the lines for the service between this capital and the colonies of Portugal, which the Government of this country was most anxious to develop. I at last acceded to this request, and placed three steamers at the disposal of the Government and the Company, which was immediately formed on the arrival of the vessels.

The assurance which the Minister, on behalf of the Portuguese Government, gave me, that the undertaking would not only be of great advantage to this country, but would also prove remunerative to the shareholders, so far induced me to place my capital at their disposal, on the condition that it was to be repaid to me by approved credits upon London, whenever the Company was enabled to emit its shares. The directors of the Company not having succeeded in so doing, found themselves unable to discharge the payments. I then came to this capital, and it was then that, on the guarantee of the intervention of the Portuguese Government, and on the representations of the Minister, that I agreed to accept, in payment for the ships I had supplied, one-half of the price in the shares of the Company, and the other half by bills extending over three years, so as to give ample time to the directors to emit its shares. The directors paid the first of these bills as they fell due, but the difficulty of emitting the shares still continuing, they begged me to grant them a longer time for the payment of the remainder. I was thus obliged to visit this capital again in December 1859. Moved by the desire of assisting the Company, and trusting to the guarantee of the Portuguese Government, I agreed to receive in exchange for the unpaid bills then in my possession, amounting to 16,100 £, the debentures of the Company. The debentures are in the usual form; they acknowledge to have received money to that amount, and are payable to bearer. They were to be redeemed in eight years by half yearly payments, and they bear interest at six per cent. per annum. The due payment of them is further covered by a contract bond, signed by the directors, dated the 28th day of the said month and year. The first annual payments were duly made at maturity, as also the interest up to the 30th June last year; but when, in accordance with the stipulations of the above-mentioned contract, I drew two bills for the payment which was to be made on 31st December last, the directors refused to accept, under the extraordinary protest that they had no funds of mine, and were not authorised to make advances.

It was this unexpected and unheard-of proceeding on the part of the directors which obliged me to pay another visit to this capital, at a great sacrifice and loss, as it compelled me to leave important affairs, which required my attention in London.

It must appear to your Excellency inexplicable that the directors should have declared in the protest of the bills, that they would not accept them, because they had no funds of the drawer, who is still a creditor of the Company, of which they are the directors, to the amount of no less than 14,000 £, and who drew the bills in conformity with one of the clauses of the contract alluded to, and who is besides a shareholder in the Company to the extent of 37,000 £.

In this proceeding of the directors I cannot help seeing a premeditated plan to injure me, and perhaps to make me lose the very large capital which I intrusted to the Company at the instance and under the guarantee of the Portuguese Government.

Your Excellency cannot fail to acknowledge that I, as a British subject, was urged by the Portuguese Government to intrust a large capital to the Company, for the purpose of carrying on an undertaking which was represented by the Government to be not merely of great value to this country, but also of advantage to the shareholders.

The Government, by its acts, further insured to me the perfect security or the reimbursement of my capital. I therefore consider myself justified in asking the Government either to compel the Company to pay me the capital which it owes to me, and which the directors refuse to pay in such an inexplicable manner (without which I shall be obliged to suffer the expense and inconvenience of a lawsuit), or to take upon itself the payment of my debt, in which case I shall transfer to the Government my debentures and rights of action against the Company.

The Government, by the 20th clause of the original contract which it made with the founders of the Company, reserved to itself the right of naming a commission to examine the acts of the Company; but this was more expressly and positively established in the third condition of the contract which it executed with the directors on the 5th January 1861, it being therein determined that a Commission of the Government was to watch over all the acts of the Company and the execution of the contract. The Government, therefore, through the intervention of its Commission, ought to have an intimate knowledge of the contracts the directors made with me, and of the debentures which it issued, for each of these debentures are signed by the said Commissioner. It also ought to have a knowledge of the proceedings of the directors, wherein they have failed in the observance of the contracts made with me. And the Government, which not only guaranteed my capital, but also undertook to watch over and examine the acts of the directors, cannot now refuse the responsibility which I claim from it, seeing that I have been injured by the acts of the directors.

I cannot help laying before your Excellency the studied, but frivolous pretext under which the direction pretends to excuse itself for having refused to pay the debentures issued by the Company. It is now three years since the Company took possession of the steamships I supplied by the wish of the Government. Since then these ships have been in constant use by the Company in the mail service of the Government. The directors now state that these ships were badly built, badly fitted up, and badly equipped, all of which they say compelled the directors to enter into such expensive repairs, in which they spent more than 20 contos!! (6,000 £). Even if such a pretext were not, as it is, unfounded, it could not be conceived that such a claim could authorise the directors to declare that they were unable to pay the debentures because they had no funds of mine in their hands. But to show the utter futility of the pretext, it is enough to state that the direction, before it received the steamers, had them minutely examined in England by competent agents of its own, commissioned expressly for that purpose, whose certificates I hold; and, that after having received them at this port, and used them in the service of the Company, the president, manager, and directors wrote to me numerous letters, now in my possession, thanking me for the good state and quality of the steamers, and urging me to supply them with more vessels of a similar description; and they further declared, by their contracts with me of the 20th December 1858, and 28th December 1859, attested before a notary of this place and the British Consul, that they were in all respects satisfied with the steamships I had supplied, at their own urgent request and at that of the Portuguese Government, in the letters of its Minister, M. Carlos Benta da Silva, now before me.

I have now to call the attention of your Excellency to another matter not less important, viz., the stock of the Company, and the very large interest I hold in it.

It was, as I have already said, on the representation made to me on the part of the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty, and confiding in its guarantee, that I undertook to invest my capital in an undertaking so much required by this country, and agreed to assist in the foundation of the Company by taking shares in payment of one-half of my steamships, to the amount of 37,000 £.

These circumstances should have induced the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty not only to see the entire and most scrupulous observance of the statutes of the Company, because on the vigilance of the Government materially depended the safety of the shareholders; but, above all, the Government ought not (which it has recently done) to have made contracts with the directors, contrary to the express stipulations of the statutes, which, besides being illegal, are prejudicial to the interests of the shareholders, of whom I am by far the largest: and I am sorry to be obliged to inform your Excellency that these contracts, executed between the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty and the directors of the Company, are in flagrant violation of the statutes of the Company, and most injurious to the shareholders.

By the powers conferred in the 3d Article of the statutes upon the directors, it is not understood, and cannot rationally be understood, that the Company can raise loans, especially by mortgage, of the property of the Company. On the contrary, No. 5 of the 18th Article of the statutes distinctly states, and clearly establishes the necessity of the direction convoking a general meeting to authorise such acts.

The convocation of the general meeting, as laid down in Article 35 of the statutes, should be made by advertisements in the principal newspapers of the country where the Company has shareholders, 60 days before such meetings were held. Now, I never heard of the advertisement invoking a general meeting, nor of its assembling, and no such advertisement has ever been published, so that nothing has been done which could in any way authorise the direction to contract with the Government in the manner it did.

Though I am the principal shareholder, and though, according to Article 33 of the statutes, my votes were indispensable (as I hold one for every 12 shares), I was not called upon, nor was I aware of the contracts with the Government till they were concluded. These contracts, and especially the one authorised by the law of the 10th September 1861, have depreciated the value of the shares of the Company in such a manner that my stock has no value in the market.

As, therefore, the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty has contracted with the directors, without the formalities and authorities indispensable for the validity of the contract, it has made itself responsible to the shareholders, whose rights it had entirely overlooked. I am, therefore, obliged to claim from the Government the sum of 37,000 £., the value of the shares I received in payment of the vessels, which, through the representation of the Government, I sold to the Company, and, in exchange, I am ready to deliver up to the Government the above-mentioned shares.

I trust the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty will institute an immediate inquiry into all these matters, and thus acknowledge the justice of my claims, so that I may avoid the necessity of having recourse to the interference of my own country. But if, for some unaccountable reasons, my just claims are not attended to and satisfied, I protest before you for them and for all the losses I may thereby sustain.

In conclusion, I am anxious for your Excellency to clearly understand that though I am about to institute legal proceedings against the Company and the directors for the recovery of my debentures, and for the loss I, as a shareholder, have sustained by illegal acts, to which they were parties, my claims against the Government, founded on the original contract and on its guarantee will not be prejudiced by any decision in the proceedings I am about to institute against the Company and its directors.

Sir,

I HAVE a telegram to-day from Lisbon, and so far as I can understand the purport of it, it would appear that the Government, either by threats or some other means, will attempt to defeat the course of justice. Now, on the faith of the representations of the Minister of Commerce of Portugal, and under the guarantee of the Government, I invested, and now hold 41,000 l. under that guarantee, and by the acts of the Government and others, my property is placed in great jeopardy. What I desire is, that our Minister should assist my representative at Lisbon (Mr. Howe) to obtain justice, and the honest administration of the laws of Portugal; and, further, that our Minister should insist that the Government of Portugal adhere to their agreements with me, and other British subjects, who invested their capital in good faith in an undertaking in the prosperity of which the Government was much interested.

Foreign Office, 8 April 1862.

8 April.
Mr. LAYARD presents his compliments to Sir Arthur Magenis, and begs to enclose a copy of a paper which Mr. Lindsay has placed in Mr. Layard's hands, respecting the course which the Government of Portugal are supposed to be taking with regard to the legal proceedings at Lisbon, in which Mr. Lindsay is concerned.

Sir Arthur Magenis has already learnt from Lord Russell's Despatches, of the 26th of December and of the 6th of February last, the nature and extent of the assistance which Sir Arthur Magenis is authorised to extend to Mr. Lindsay's claim. Mr. Layard has, therefore, only to call Sir Arthur Magenis's attention to the facts now stated by Mr. Lindsay, and to request that he will take such steps in the matter as the facts of the case may justify.

Sir A. C. Magenis.

COPY of LETTER from Mr. Lindsay, M.P., to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

8, Austin Friars, City, 15 July 1862.

IN the year 1857, the Government of Portugal being anxious to develop the resources of the Portuguese settlements on the western coast of Africa, granted various privileges to a number of merchants at Lisbon, on the condition that they would run lines of steamers between that port and the above settlements. A company was formed by Royal Charter, which bears the name of the Union Mercantile Company. The Government took this Company under its control, and afterwards guaranteed six per cent., which was subsequently increased to seven per cent., on its stock. Neither the Government nor merchants of Portugal appear to have had much knowledge of undertakings of this nature, and considerable difficulty was experienced in the formation of the Company, as neither the steamships required for it, nor the capital required to purchase the ships, by the emission of its shares, were readily obtainable. It was towards the close of 1857 that the undertaking was first brought under my notice; and, in the months of January, February, and March 1858, M. Carlos Bentos da Silva, the then Minister of Public Works, addressed to me various letters on the part of the Government, expressing a wish that I would aid him "to set on foot an undertaking which would prove of so much benefit to the State and to the shareholders." I then visited Lisbon for the first time, and, on the faith of the representations then made to me, I agreed to supply three steamships, with which the operations of the Company were commenced, and in which the Company still carries on its business. In payment for these vessels I consented, for the convenience of the parties interested, to receive a large portion of the purchase-money in shares and in promissory notes, which latter were afterwards converted into debentures, bearing interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, and subject to an annual reduction of 12 per cent. towards their liquidation. The shares and debentures are the same as those issued for similar undertakings in this country. The Company still carries on its business. It is still supported by the Government of Portugal by means of large advances, and otherwise; in a word, it is practically a Government undertaking. Of its stock I hold at present no less than 37,000 l. in shares, and 14,100 l. in debentures.

On the latter the reduction of 12 per cent. and the interest were paid up to the 30th December 1861, but since that time I can neither obtain principal nor interest. Every conceivable effort by letters, by personal application, by remonstrance, and by process in the courts of law of Portugal, has been made, but I can obtain no redress, and no valid reason for the non-payment of my dividends.

I am

I am consequently compelled to appeal to your Lordship to aid me in obtaining justice. If it is not convenient to the Company to repay me the principal, I am agreeable to allow my stock to remain in the undertaking if the interest upon it is paid. In the legal proceedings which I was forced to institute, no reason was even given for the non-payment beyond what is contained in the words "not indebted," and no reason whatever in reply to my numerous applications, except that the Company, 12 months after the steamers I sold were in their possession, alleged that one of these steamers was not so good as they expected her to be, and that the cost of putting that vessel into efficient order was somewhere about 3,000 £., which the Company wish me to pay.

But even if that sum were due from me, your Lordship will at once perceive that it affords no ground for withholding the dividends due upon stock payable to bearer. It is, however, a mere subterfuge; for the Company not only took possession of the ships, but gave to me certificates from their surveyors and inspectors that they were highly satisfied with them, and I have in my possession a deed signed by all the directors, in which they state that the vessels were in an efficient state, and complied with all the conditions agreed upon.

But I must not trouble your Lordship with further details. Suffice it to say I have appealed as yet in vain to the Government of Portugal for redress; and in the courts of that country I have in vain endeavoured to obtain payment of the debentures. But it appears that I cannot obtain even a just execution of their own laws without, I fear, resorting to derogatory means. In fact, I have no course left but now to seek the aid and protection of my own Government, which I trust your Lordship will not hesitate to afford me.

WITH reference to Mr. Layard's Despatch to Sir A. Magenis of the 8th of April last, I transmit to you herewith a copy of a further letter from Mr. Lindsay, soliciting the support of Her Majesty's Government to obtain a just settlement of his claim against the "Union Mercantile Company."

My Lord, 8, Austin Friars, City, 6 August 1862.

I ADDRESSED your Lordship on the 15th ultimo in regard to my claims on the Portuguese Government. I regret to be again obliged to trouble your Lordship on the same subject, for without your aid I see it is impossible to obtain, through the medium of the courts of law of that country or otherwise, any approach to justice. By process in the above courts I did obtain an embargo on one of the steam ships of the Company as security for the payment of my debentures; but two days ago I received a letter from my correspondents at Lisbon, who are Portuguese merchants, in which they say, "The Company have advertised the 'Don Pedro' for the 30th instant. The embargo will be removed, for it appears the judge has ordered it. This is a most flagrant act of injustice, and is positively against the laws of this country." My counsel, one of the leading lawyers of Portugal, in his report to my correspondents, which reached me yesterday, says, in regard to the above proceeding, "My opinion is, that from this question alone Mr. Lindsay has the undoubted foundation for a claim from Government to Government, because the law has been completely set aside, the embargo has been ordered to be released without Mr. Lindsay being heard; and further, the release has been granted against the clear disposition of the law or procedure, which expressly states the forms to be followed in the embargo or arrest, which, after having been decreed by sentence, has been revoked in this most illegal manner.

So long as I had any prospect of obtaining justice in a court of law I was reluctant to trouble your Lordship; but when the Government of Portugal refuse or neglect to support its own acts, when the public statutes of the Company, under the guarantee of the Government, on the faith of which I and other British subjects invested our capital are grossly violated, and when the courts of law of that country act in the manner I have now briefly described, I trust your Lordship will not hesitate to adopt such measures as you may consider most advisable to obtain for us prompt redress.

If the Government of Portugal is prepared to see me in regard to the payment of my debentures, or the settlement of the interest upon the stock, I will immediately visit Lisbon on receipt of a communication to that effect. But, after the experience I have had, it would be a waste of valuable time to again visit that city unless I am advised, through your Lordship, that the Government of Portugal is ready to go into the question with me, without the necessity of further so called "legal proceedings."

Sir,

Foreign Office, 8 August 1862.

WITH reference to my Despatch of the 30th ultimo, I enclose a copy of another letter from Mr. Lindsay, complaining of further illegal proceedings in Portugal in connection with his claim against the "Union Mercantile Company."

6 August.

You should send home a report on this claim as soon as possible, and in the meantime you will give such assistance as you can properly afford to Mr. Lindsay's agent at Lisbon, in protecting the interests with which he is charged from any illegal proceedings on the part of the Portuguese authorities.

COPY of DESPATCH from Mr. Herries to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

Lisbon, 17 August 1862.

I HAD the honour to receive by the "Tyne" steam packet, on the 13th instant, your Lordship's Despatches of 30th July and of 8th August, with their enclosures, on the subject of Mr. Lindsay's claims.

It has not yet been possible to obtain all the information necessary to enable me to report fully on this somewhat intricate case, which I can venture to say has not been completely or accurately stated by Mr. Lindsay. That gentleman's agent, Mr. Howe, left Lisbon about a month ago, and as I do not know who is now charged with the management of Mr. Lindsay's affairs, it is difficult to ascertain precisely what is their present position; but I hope to be able to do so in the course of a few days.

In

In the meantime I may state to your Lordship that Mr. Lindsay having at the end of last year drawn bills on the Mercantile Union (União Mercantil) Company for the interest on his debentures, the Company refused to accept those bills, alleging, as the grounds for their refusal, that Mr. Lindsay was indebted to them for a larger amount; that he had been duly warned of their intention not to accept his bills; and further, that the proper forms had not been complied with in the marking and transmission of the debentures.

Whereupon Mr. Lindsay brought an action against the Company for the sum of 14,100 l., the amount of his debentures; and for another sum of 97 l. 3*s.* 7*d.*, on account of sundry incidental charges. The case was tried before a jury in the Commercial Court of the First Instance, and a verdict having been found for the defendants (the Company), judgment was given by the court on the 5th of June, pronouncing the invalidity of Mr. Lindsay's demands for both of the above-mentioned sums, and sentencing him to pay the costs of the suit.

Mr. Lindsay's advocate afterwards declared his intention to appeal to a superior court; but whether any steps have yet been taken for that purpose is not at present known, even to the directors of the Company interested.

The complaint made by Mr. Lindsay concerning the raising of the embargo which he had caused to be placed on one of the steamers belonging to the Company appears to me to be unfounded; but as soon as I can procure the requisite documents, I shall submit the question of the legality or illegality of the proceeding to the opinion of the counsel employed by Her Majesty's Mission.

With regard to the non-payment of dividends on his shares in the Mercantile Union, it seems that Mr. Lindsay is in the same position as every other shareholder, the Portuguese Government having hitherto failed to make good their engagements to the Company, the directors of which refuse consequently to admit their liability for the guaranteed interest that has never been paid on the capital of the Company.

I have, &c.

My Lord,

Lisbon, 1 October 1862.

IN submitting to your Lordship a report on Mr. Lindsay's claims, I ought to explain how it is that I have been prevented from fulfilling your Lordship's instructions more speedily. Much time has been occupied, owing to the dilatory and irregular habits that prevail in this country, in obtaining reliable evidence, and in collecting and translating documents necessary for your Lordship's information. Nevertheless, I should have reported on the case long ago, had I not been induced to wait for communications which Mr. Lindsay's agent and lawyer expressed their desire to make to me.

I have now the honour to transmit to your Lordship copies and translations of the following papers relating to this case:

A statement of the course of litigation between Mr. Lindsay and the "União Mercantil" Company, drawn up by the advocate of the latter. This paper is accompanied by the judgment of the Commercial Court of First Instance on the principal action, and the decisions of several courts on an incidental cause.

A statement by Mr. Lindsay's counsel, impugning the justice of the proceedings of the latter decisions.

The opinion of the standing counsel of Her Majesty's Mission on all these proceedings.

Besides the above-mentioned papers, I have carefully examined many documents, printed reports, and pamphlets, &c. relating to this matter, and I have likewise endeavoured to elicit the truth by personal communication with parties interested. The result of my investigation I shall try to lay before your Lordship as briefly and as clearly as possible.

The Company, called "União Mercantil," in the formation of which Mr. Lindsay appears to have been largely concerned, was established in 1858. By contract with the Government, it receives subsidies for lines of steam navigation to the Portuguese possessions on the West Coast of Africa, the Azores, and the Province of the Algarve. The chairman and two other directors are British merchants at Lisbon. The undertaking has not prospered. The expenditure of the Company has constantly exceeded the receipts, and the last accounts published show a large deficit. Not half of the shares having ever been taken, the necessary capital has not been realized, and the directors, who had for some time raised funds on their personal credit, were at last obliged to solicit the aid of the Government, which last year guaranteed a loan to the Company, besides making considerable advances.

It may fairly be presumed that these embarrassments were not without influence on the transactions between the directors and Mr. Lindsay.

On the formation of the Company, in 1858, they purchased of him a steamer, called the "Lindsay," now the "Don Estephania," for 19,000*l*. Half of that amount he agreed to take in shares at par, and the balance having been paid to him in London, he has no demand to make on account of this ship. At the end of the same year, 1858, he sold to the Company two other steamers, the "Clarendon," now the "Africa," and the "Ireland," now the "Don Pedro." The price of these two vessels together was 55,000*l*., and, as before, he took half in shares. For the other half, 27,500*l*., the directors accepted six bills drawn by Mr. Lindsay at different dates, and by the contract of sale these two ships remained specially pledged to him as security for payment. The first bill was paid, but as the term approached when the second would become due, disputes arose, and the directors reproached Mr. Lindsay with having sold them defective ships. They declared that they had ascertained the "Africa" particularly to have been for a long time in a ruinous condition, and claimed compensation for losses occasioned thereby. Mr. Lindsay's second bill was dishonoured, whereupon, according to the terms of his contract all the others became due, and in default of payment he was entitled to recover possession of the "Africa" and "Don Pedro," which stood pledged to him; but a compromise was effected. Mr. Lindsay undertook to make good part of the expenses incurred in refitting the "Africa," and a new agreement was made on the 28th December 1859, on the following terms:—

1. Mr. Lindsay gave up the special security of the "Africa" and "Don Pedro," and in lieu of the bills accepted by the Company and remaining unpaid, for half the price of those ships, he received 8,000*l*. in two bills on London, and 16,000*l*. in debentures, bearing 6 per cent. interest, and to be paid off by instalments of 12 per cent. If the sums payable on the 30th of June and 31st of December, for interest and redemption, were not remitted to him before the 1st of each of those months, Mr. Lindsay was to have the right of drawing bills for the amount on the directors.

2. The Company was bound not to alienate or pledge any of its vessels, and without previously consulting Mr. Lindsay not to issue debentures, or in any other way to raise funds except for the acquisition of ships, stores, &c.

3. The right of examining books, accounts, &c. was reserved to Mr. Lindsay.

4. The ships belonging to the Company were to be insured in a certain manner specified.

5. In case of failure, on the part of the Company or directors, to pay the interest or annual redemption of the debentures, or to accept or to pay the bills that Mr. Lindsay would be entitled to draw, or in case of non-fulfilment of any of the above-mentioned conditions, Mr. Lindsay might then sue them for the immediate payment of the whole of their debt, together with damages, &c.

The two bills on London, for 4,000*l*. each, were paid; and the sums payable on the debentures for 1860. and the first half year of 1861 were duly remitted. But at the beginning of December 1861 Mr. Lindsay received, instead of cash, an account (see Enclosure Nos. 1 and 2), in which, the repairs of the "Africa" being charged against him and various sums placed to his credit, a balance appeared in favour of the Company, greatly exceeding the amount falling due on his debentures at the end of the year. On the strength of this account the directors refused to accept the bills, which he had drawn upon them for that amount. Whereupon, in virtue of the 5th clause of the agreement of 28th December 1859, Mr. Lindsay sued them in the Commercial Court of First Instance for the whole of the Company's debt to him, 14,100*l.*, alleging, besides the non-payment of sums due to him, another violation of the agreement by the directors in contracting a loan on the security of the Company's vessels without his knowledge. A further sum of 97*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* was claimed for sundry charges.

The result of the legal proceedings in this suit I have already stated in my Despatch of the 17th of August.

Since that date I have obtained an authentic report of the trial, which appears to me to have been conducted in, to say the least, a very careless manner, and decided without much inquiry into the real merits of the case. The main points on which it turns seem not to have been touched upon at all.

Two witnesses only were called, Mr. Medicott, the chairman, and another director of the Company, who deposed to undisputed facts—the refusal of the defendants to accept Mr. Lindsay's bills, on the ground of his being their debtor to a larger amount, the loan above-mentioned, and various matters of detail.

The judge submitted to the jury a series of questions to the following effect:—

Is it proved that the defendants were bound by their agreement with the plaintiff of 28th December 1859?

Is it proved that the defendants refused to accept the plaintiff's bills?

Is it proved that they have contracted a loan on the security of the property of the Company?

Is it proved that the plaintiff has sustained loss or injury in consequence of the non-fulfilment of the conditions of the agreement?

Is it proved that the defendants owe the plaintiff the sum of 97*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.*?

The first three questions having been answered in the affirmative, and the two last in the negative, by the judgment of the court (Enclosure 3 and 4) the plaintiff was nonsuited. Now, it seems to me that the fourth answer of the jury, which is the essential part of the whole verdict, is inconsistent with the answers to the three foregoing questions; for, the binding force of the agreement between the plaintiff and defendants having been recognised, and the refusal of the latter to pay the former the sums due to him by the express terms of that agreement (also admitted), the conclusion that the plaintiff had thereby suffered no loss or injury was manifestly absurd, unless the justice of the counter-claim brought against him by the defendants as a set-off had been proved. But such proof seems to have been altogether wanting.

The judgment of the court is, in my opinion, equally open to objection. All the reasons assigned for it are, as I think, very unsound; and especially the restrictive interpretation given to the fifth clause of the agreement appears to me quite erroneous.

Mr. Lindsay has, therefore, as I conceive, good grounds for the appeal which is now pending before the Commercial Court of Second Instance; but I can see no reason why the legal proceedings instituted by himself should not be left to take their regular course, which has hitherto not been deviated from. Your Lordship will perceive, from the statement of the counsel of Her Majesty's Legation (Enclosures, Nos. 9 and 10), that even if the judgment already given be affirmed by the Court of Second Instance, it may still be set aside by the Supreme Court of Justice in last resort. Under these circumstances, the intervention of Her Majesty's Legation does not seem at present to be in any way called for.

But Mr. Lindsay's present complaints have more particularly reference to another case. Besides the principal suit, not yet terminated, he has been unsuccessfully engaged in an incidental process arising out of it; and it is in order to obtain by extra judicial action the reversal of what he considers as the unjust decisions of the courts in this secondary cause that he now claims the support of Her Majesty's Government.

As security for the payment of the sum of 14,100*l.*, for which he sued the Uniao Mercantil Company, Mr. Lindsay applied for an attachment on the steamer "Don Pedro," then lying in the Tagus. This application having been refused by the Commercial Court, which, as it would seem, could alone have jurisdiction in such a case, was then addressed to and granted by one of the ordinary Civil Courts of First Instance. The judge of that court accordingly ordered an embargo to be laid on the "Don Pedro." But the directors petitioned the Superior Court of Relação against this order, alleging that the judge who had made it was not competent to do so; and besides, that the grounds for the attachment were in themselves legally insufficient. In accordance with what seems to be the practice of the courts, this petition was referred by the Court of Relação to the judge above mentioned, who, upon reconsideration, revoked his former decision, and ordered the embargo which he had laid on the "Don Pedro" to be raised. The reason given by him for so doing, however, was not his own want of jurisdiction, but the non-existence of the debt claimed from the Company. Against this second order, cancelling the first, a petition was now presented to the Relação on behalf of Mr. Lindsay; but the court rejected the appeal, on the ground principally of the notorious incompetency of the ordinary civil courts to lay attachments in cases of a commercial nature. From this judgment a further appeal was made on the part of Mr. Lindsay to the Supreme Court of Justice, which, by the unanimous decision of all its judges, refused to grant a revision, "for want of legal foundation." Mr. Lindsay's appeals having thus been finally rejected, the embargo was actually taken off the "Don Pedro" on the 24th of July. For any possible injury that Mr. Lindsay may have suffered thereby he has no longer any legal remedy; but his assertion that justice has been denied him rests, as I think, upon weak foundations. The arguments of his counsel in support of it will be found in a paper which I enclose (Nos. 7 and 8).

It is contended in the first place that, according to an article cited, of the Code of Civil Procedure, an embargo can only be raised by means of a counter embargo, and that consequently the courts had no authority to do so in the case of the "Don Pedro" in any other mode. But I find on referring to this article that it has not the sense given to it, the counter-embargo mentioned therein being permitted, but not required, and nowhere declared to be the sole means of opposition.

It is complained that the Judge of First Instance, in revoking his first order, condemned Mr. Lindsay unheard. But whatever may be the force of this objection, it is at any rate clear that the case was sufficiently argued on the two subsequent appeals, and I have indeed now before me the appellant's petition to the Supreme Court, in 33 closely written pages.

The next objection is not very intelligibly stated, but its practical bearing seems to be that the appeal having been rejected by the "Relação," not only on account of the "notorious incompetency" of the civil courts in commercial causes, but also for the reasons given by the judge below, and affecting the merits of the case itself, Mr. Lindsay was thereby precluded from having recourse to the court pronounced to be alone competent to grant the embargo. This complaint, however, is merely frivolous, for he had done so long before, his very first step in these proceedings having been an unsuccessful application to the Commercial Court, the proper tribunal, for an attachment on the "Don Pedro." This essential point is left unnoticed by Mr. Lindsay's advocate, who has, nevertheless, admitted the fact in conversation with me.

This learned gentleman's view of this case differs entirely from that taken by the counsel of Her Majesty's Legation, whose decided opinion (see Enclosures Nos. 9 and 10) is, that the Judge of First Instance was warranted by constant usage and the provisions of the Civil Code in cancelling his own order, that all the proceedings of the courts were perfectly regular, and that their judgments were strictly according to law.

In drawing your Lordship's attention to this gentleman's opinion, I ought to observe, that, strange as it may appear, though employed as the standing counsel of this Mission, he is at the same time one of the judges of the Court of "Relação." It so happened that, owing to the internal arrangements of the court, Mr. Lindsay's appeal did not come before him in his judicial capacity; but the judgment, although he took no part in it, was still that of the court of which he is a member, a circumstance that deserves consideration.

With regard to the litigation between Mr. Lindsay and the "União Mercantil" Company, I have nothing to add; but other claims, which he and others others have made directly upon the Portuguese Government, on account of the transactions of the Company, now require notice.

They are set forth in a petition lately presented to the King from Mr. Lindsay and three other British shareholders in the "União Mercantil" Company, Messrs. Miles Stringer, William Tomkinson Riley, and John Brelley, whose names now for the first time appear in these affairs. It is worthy of remark, that in this petition, of which a copy is now lying before me, a long explanation is given to show that, as co-partners in these vessel purchased of Mr. Lindsay by the Company, they (together with other individuals since dead) received a large proportion of the shares delivered to him on that account, although there is no allusion to such an arrangement in any of Mr. Lindsay's numerous statements on this subject; and he has hitherto represented himself as alone concerned in the sale of the steamers, and as the holder of the shares taken in half payment, to the amount of 37,000 l, of which he now proves that no more than 12,666 shares, to the value of 25,320 l., ever really remained in his possession, the rest having been handed over to his associates.

The petition sets out with a detailed account of the circumstances connected with the formation of the Company, and then enters into an exceedingly minute examination of all the operations of the directors, whom it charges with having constantly and systematically violated the statutes they were bound to observe; it labours to prove that their improper proceedings have brought the affairs of the Company into a ruinous condition; and it argues that the Government having neglected to use the means it possessed of controlling the acts of the directors, which, on the contrary, it had approved and confirmed, have consequently assumed the responsibility for their mismanagement, and are morally bound to indemnify the shareholders for the losses occasioned thereby.

On these grounds, the petitioners claim from the Government the payment in full of the nominal value of their shares.

To ascertain the truth of all these allegations would require a complete investigation of the books and accounts of the Company; but, without entering upon so extensive an inquiry, it may fairly be concluded that the statutes of the Company have on various occasions been violated (but a strict adherence to them seems to have been not always possible, and it is to be observed that Mr. Lindsay was himself a party to some of the irregular proceedings complained of). That the ill success of the Company has been caused by such transgressions is a supposition which rests, in my opinion, upon no sufficient evidence.

The directors, on the other hand, with perhaps no better reason, ascribe their financial difficulties to their dealings with Mr. Lindsay, and affirm that their inability to raise capital, by the issue of shares, has been owing to the discredit thrown on the Company by the bad condition of the steamers supplied by him.

It appears to me that the petitioners have failed to prove their case, and many of the principal facts on which they rely being open to dispute, it is not to be expected that the Portuguese Government will accede to their demands.

Before concluding this report, I must add an explanation of the statement in the last paragraph of my Despatch of August 17th, as to the non-payment of dividends on Mr. Lindsay's shares in the "União Mercantil" Company. The interest guaranteed by the Government, 6 per cent. under a law of March 30, 1861, and raised to 7 per cent. by a law of September 10, 1861, has been due since the first-mentioned date. It has not yet been paid.

The amount of all the dividends which Mr. Lindsay would have been entitled to receive up to March 30, 1861, is placed to his credit in the account (see Enclosures Nos. 1 and 2) sent to him on the 26th of November 1861. His dividends are therefore supposed to have been paid to him in cash, while the other shareholders have received for their dividends nothing but shares nominally equivalent.

Earl Russell, K.G.,

STATEMENT on the part of the Company "União Mercantil."

Answers to Questions.

See Enclosures
Nos. 3 and 4.

1. The annexed sentence of 5th June 1862, document No. 1.

Lindsay appealed from this sentence to the court called "Relação Commercial," where the cause is now proceeding in due course.

See Enclosures
Nos. 5 and 6.

2d. There was only one embargo laid on the steamer "Don Pedro," on the 11th of February of the current year, document No. 2.

From this document it may be seen that the judge of the 6th district (First Instance), who had on Lindsay's petition ordered the steamer "Don Pedro" to be attached, ordered the same embargo to be raised on the 18th of February.

Lindsay appealed to the Relação, and this court by the decree of the 1st of March refused to admit the appeal.

Lindsay appealed to the Supreme Court of Justice, which refused by decree to grant the revision.

On the 22d of July the embargo was ordered to be raised, which took place on the 24th, the steamer "Don Pedro" being set free.

In consequence of this result to which the Company "União Mercantil" was in justice entitled, Lindsay is obliged to pay the Company the amount of losses and damages, which he caused by the embargo of the steamer "Don Pedro," keeping it in the Tagus, without allowing it to be navigated, and consequently prevented from continuing on the African line on which it is employed.

4th. The judgment given on the 5th of June by the Commercial Court has not yet been confirmed by the Relação Commercial Court of Second Instance, where the suit is now pending.

The debt which Lindsay claims from the Company has its origin in 161 debentures to bearer that he holds of the same Company, which debentures are to be paid off at the rate of 12 per cent. annually, and bear interest at 6 per cent.

These debentures were issued under the sanction of the Government by the Royal Charter of the 20th of October 1859, and were delivered over to Lindsay as the balance of the payment for the steamers "Ireland" and "Clarendon," now the "Don Pedro" and "Africa," there having been delivered to him 8,000 £. in two bills of 4,000 £. each on London at 8 and 30 days' sight, which were paid, the said steamers remaining free and cleared from all encumbrances by a written agreement of the 28th of December 1859.

The Company paid Lindsay the 12 per cent. redemption for the year 1860, and likewise paid him the six per cent. interest for the year 1860, and for the first six months of 1861.

On the 26th of November 1861, the Company sent Lindsay an extract of his outstanding account, namely:—

Dr. Lindsay, in his Outstanding Account with the Company "União Mercantil." Contra Cr.

	Reis.		Reis.

		Reis	17,504,332

Balance in favour of the Company - - - - Reis 6,897,652

The above extract showed a balance in favour of the company of 17,504/332 reis, arising from the repairs of the steamer "Africa" (Clarendon), in consequence of the extremely bad state in which he sold it to the Company, making a general repair necessary.

sary, as may be seen from the respective surveys, with the renewal of the boilers, and all the masts, because those the ship had were rotten.

Such being the account, the amount of which the Company considers itself entitled to receive from Lindsay, the Company told Lindsay in the said letter of the 26th of November 1861 not to draw on the said Company for the annual redemption of the debentures for 1861, or for the six per cent. interest for the last six months of that year, because the amount would be placed to his credit, in order to clear off as much as possible the outstanding account.

Lindsay, notwithstanding the Company's notice, drew bills for the redemption and interest, which the Company neither accepted nor paid, declaring itself to be Lindsay's creditor for a larger amount.

Lindsay then instituted legal proceedings against the Company, which have had the result above mentioned.

5th. Lindsay, referring to a letter of the Company, dated the , thought that because the redemption and the interest on the debentures was not paid him, he ought to institute proceedings against the Company for the total amount of the same.

He brought the action without presenting the debentures (títulos), and only in the end did he petition to have the said debentures deposited in order to prove that he possessed them; this took place in the Commercial Court when the case was heard, on which occasion the Company also presented Lindsay's outstanding account, and letters from him in which he acknowledged his obligation to furnish not only some articles that were wanting to fit out properly for sea the steamers "D. Estephania" and "D. Pedro," sold by him to the Company, but also the general repairs which the "Africa" required, and whence arises the outstanding account.

SENTENCE.

HAVING examined the process, &c., it is alleged by the plaintiff, William Shaw Lindsay, in the libel, folio 2, that in a private writing of the 28th of December 1859, the directors and the manager of the Company "União Mercantil" acknowledged that at the aforesaid date, after deducting the amount of the bills mentioned therein, the Company still owed to the plaintiff the sum of 16,100 £, the balance of the price for which they had bought from him in the year 1858 the steamers "Clarendon" and "Ireland," now the "Africa" and "D. Pedro;" that the defendants had engaged to pay him the said sum within the term of eight years, in annual instalments of 12 per cent., payable every six months on the last days of the months of June and December of each year, paying at the same time as the instalments, the interest of six per cent. accruing on the capital, and they delivered over to the plaintiff 161 debentures of the Company of 100 £. each, wherein the aforesaid mode of payment and the rate of interest were laid down, as well as the privilege of his credit, which was recognised in the contract: that in the 1st condition thereof it was stipulated, that if the directors did not make a remittance to the plaintiff for the payment of the instalment and of the interest corresponding to each six months, before the first day of June and December of each year, the plaintiff might draw bills on the Company before the expiration of the term of their falling due, up to the amount of the instalment and of the interest; that the Company paid the instalment and interest down to June 1861, but not having remitted any funds by the 1st of December of that year, the plaintiff drew two bills equal to the amount of the instalment and of the interest, and further for 97 £ 3 s. 7 d., being the amount of payments made by him in London on account, and by order of the Company, also including the expenses on account of the bills that were not paid, under the false pretext of their not having in their possession any funds belonging to the plaintiff; that the Company also failed to comply with the second condition of the contract, because they contracted, without having consulted the plaintiff beforehand, a loan of 450 contos (100,000 £), hypothecating especially all their vessels and property; that on this account, and in conformity with the 5th condition, he may institute legal proceedings against them for the total amount of his credit, namely 14,100 £. (deducting the three instalments paid till June 1861), the interest from the 1st of July forward, and the losses and damages arising from the non-compliance with the engagements into which they had entered; and in conclusion, he demands that the defendants be condemned to pay him the said amount of 14,100 £. and the respective interest thereon, the expenses of the protest of the bills, the amount of losses and damages according to the liquidation in execution of a sentence, the commercial interest on that amount from the time when the liquidation shall be settled by court of law till it is paid, and moreover the amount of 97 £ 3 s. 7 d. with the commercial interest thereon, counting from the dates of the payments mentioned in the account, folio 18. The defendants, the Company, contested by denial, folio 24; the due proceedings of the suit followed, and in the court for the trial of the case, two directors of the Company deposed, the parties handed in the documents folio 29, the plaintiff rectified a doubt which occurred in the libel, with respect to the payment of the instalments, which according to the contract ought to be annual, and the incidents mentioned in the respective process, folio 68, took place. Having seen which and the rest of the process, considering that the commercial engagement entered into by the private writing, folio 8, did by innovation, annul the previous contracts respecting the purchase and sale of the said ships, and the mode of payment of their price according to the Articles 867, 884, and 885, of the Commercial Code. Considering that with regard to the demand for 14,100*l.*, and the respective interest thereon of 6% from the 1st of July 1861, the libel is in clear contradiction with the above-mentioned writing on which it is based, and from which it appears that the Company paid the plaintiff his credit with 8,000*l.* in two bills, which he virtually acknowledges as having been paid, and the balance with 16,100*l.* in debentures, to bearer of 100*l.* each, stipulating the mode of payment of the interest of six per cent., and of the redemption of 12 per cent. on the value of the said debentures, which, as may be seen therein, the very same interest and redemption are due. Considering that the debt having been paid in that manner, and there not being any responsibility on the part of the Company except for the interest and for the redemption, according to the terms of the debentures and of the contract, which is law between the parties, it remains established beyond a doubt, that the words of the fifth condition "in the case either of the non-payment of the interest or of the redemption agreed upon, or in case of the non-acceptance or non-payment of the bills which you may draw, or in the event of non-compliance with the aforesaid conditions, you may immediately institute legal proceedings against the Company for the whole amount of your credit, and moreover for all the rights which the said debentures confer upon you," cannot have any reference to the debt which had been paid, and could not for this reason constitute a credit, but only refers to the interest and liquidation of the debentures which he might present, and moreover to the losses and damages alluded to in the same condition, if perchance they were really found to exist. Considering that, from the contradiction in which the libel is as regards the demand for 14,100*l.*, and the respective interest thereon, with the engagement itself on which it is grounded, and of which it forms part, it follows that it is of such a nature as to preclude the plaintiff from having any right to institute legal proceedings to obtain what he wants, and that consequently the discharge of the suit ought to take place in conformity to the Ordinance Book III., Title 20th, 16th paragraph, and to the 1st Article of the Commercial Code: Considering that as far as regards the debt of 97*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.*, the jury declared it to be not proved, in their answer to the 5th question: Considering that according to the above-mentioned terms, the respective answers to the questions Nos. two, three, and four, are rendered useless on account of the previous decision: Having examined the 1030th and 1103d Articles of the Commercial Code, I absolve the defendants from the suit for the demand of the 14,100*l.*, the interest thereon, expenses of the protest of bills, and losses and damages; I absolve them from the suit with regard to the demand for 97*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* and interest thereon; I condemn the plaintiff to pay costs, and the fine corresponding to the last demand only.

Decision of the Judge of the Sixth Civil District of Lisbon ordering an Embargo on the Steamer "D. Pedro."

I ADJUDGE to be proved what is alleged in the petition, folio 2, against the Company "União Mercantil," in consequence of the acts of the process of the documents and of the evidence of the witnesses, because, for the purpose of decreeing the embargo petitioned for, what is laid down in No. 1311 of the Commercial Code is sufficient, as well as the proof of the defendants not having complied with the engagements to which they bound themselves in the contract, thus rendering themselves liable to the penal clause laid down therein; so that putting aside the consideration that their condition has become worse, which the present case does not require should have taken place, as there is a special legislation for the same, I adjudge that the embargo petitioned for may be effected, and proceedings shall be taken to have it laid on the steamer "D. Pedro" of the said Company, writing officially for this purpose in the necessary form, and forwarding afterwards the papers of this Act to the competent court, in consequence of the certificate at folio 15, and also the final costs of the same.

Lisbon, 8 February 1862.

Decision of the same raising the Embargo.

I AMEND the appeal solely in consideration of the document (at folio 38, and in the reverse of the same folio) in the places underlined, because the first agreement, and its accessories, are thereby proved to have been annulled, a complete innovation thereof having been made, so much so, that at the present day the creditors are the bearers of the shares, presenting the originals, and not the authentic legal copy of the same, since the latter may remain in the possession of a person who may have passed over the originals to another, as may be the case with any promissory note; in consequence, therefore, of what is stated, I order the embargo to be raised, which I consider to be of no effect, and let the petitioner for the embargo pay costs.

STATEMENT drawn up by Mr. Lindsay's Counsel.

Mr. WILLIAM SHAW LINDSAY made a petition to the Court of the 6th Civil District of this city, for it to proceed to the embargo or attachment of the steamer called the "Don Pedro," belonging to the Company, "União Mercantil," for the security of the payment of his credit for 14,100*l.* on the same Company, being the balance of half the price for which he had sold that vessel to the Company, and also another called the "Africa," the real sale of these vessels having been effected by an instrument of the 20th December 1858, registered in the records of the notary of this city, Antonio d'Abranches Coetho, in virtue of which the two vessels were specially hypothecated to the payment of six bills, which as being the amount of half the price the Company had accepted, the other half having been paid in shares of the same Company.

Mr. Lindsay elucidated his petition demanding the decree of embargo with the following documents:—

A legal copy of the contract entered into with the Company on the 28th of December 1859.

A legal copy of the protests for non-acceptance of the two bills, which, in conformity with that contract, Mr. Lindsay had drawn upon the Company for the amount of interest and instalments due on the 31st December 1861.

A legal authentic copy of one of the debentures, which are all of the same tenor and value.

A certificate to the effect that the action brought against the Company by Mr. Lindsay to claim 14,100*l.*, was still pending in the Commercial Court of First Instance.

And he produced two witnesses to prove the ruinous condition of the Company.

The judge, in consideration of the documents, and of the evidences of the witnesses, maintained that the legal requisites had been proved, and decreed the embargo by a sentence, copy of which is annexed.

The embargo was laid on the steamer, "Don Pedro," with the observance of all the legal forms.

After the embargo had been laid, the Company petitioned the judge to order a declaration of appeal to be written out to the Civil Court of the Relação of Lisbon, from the sentence which had decreed the embargo on the ground that a civil court was incompetent to decree an embargo on a ship, for which purpose the Commercial Court alone was competent; and that, moreover, there were no legal grounds for decreeing the embargo.

The judge ordered the declaration of appeal to be made out; and when the petition for this end was presented to him for him to answer, he declared that he amended the appeal, not on the ground of incompetency (which he noted down), but on what he had mentioned in his decision, of which a copy is annexed; concluding the same by declaring the attachment null and of no effect, ordering it to be raised, and condemning Mr. Lindsay to pay costs.

From this decision Mr. Lindsay put in an appeal in the form of a petition to the Civil Court of Relação, which went up to that court, and there his petition was rejected by the decree (of which a copy is annexed); and having put in an appeal from the latter to the Supreme Court of Justice for revision, this was refused him by the decree (of which a copy is also annexed), and in virtue of this the embargo was relaxed and raised.

See Enclosures
Nos. 5 and 6.

See Enclosures
Nos. 5 and 6.

See Enclosures
Nos. 5 and 6.

See Enclosures
Nos. 5 and 6.

Mr. Lindsay complains of the decision of the judge of First Instance; of the decree of the Relação; and of the decree of the Supreme Court of Justice, because he thinks that in the same an evident and manifest injustice was done him by the laying aside and contempt of the legal forms of the process, and that a real denial of justice was made him, having been condemned without being heard.

The special law regulating the process for an embargo or attachment is the 298th Article of the Judicial Reform, which is a code of civil procedure.

It is expressly laid down in the 4th paragraph of the above quoted article that, when the embargo has been laid, it can only be contested by means of embargo opposed to the same by the person whose property has been laid under embargo, and hearing the petitioner for the embargo thereon, who will produce such proof as may suit his purpose, and that the judge shall in the end pronounce judgment as in any other case.

The courts could not, therefore, revoke the judgment which decreed the embargo after it had taken place, and order it to be raised except by means, and under the form of process, laid down in the paragraph quoted above.

And still less could they revoke the sentence and condemn Mr. Lindsay without hearing him.

The production of a document by the Company to which the judge of the First Instance alluded in his decision for the amendment of the appeal, was another circumstance that obliged the judge to order that Mr. Lindsay should be heard.

In the 3d paragraph of the above quoted Article (298th), it is laid down that no embargo or attachment shall be decreed, until the petitioner for the embargo shall have signed a declaration of responsibility for losses and damages in the event of the embargo being in the end judged to be of no effect and null on account of there having been on his part a concealment of, or an assertion contrary to truth, and Mr. Lindsay did sign this declaration by his attorney.

The judge of the First Instance declaring, in his decision, the embargo to be null, on the ground that Mr. Lindsay had passed himself off as a creditor, which he was not, and condemning him to pay costs, gave to his decision the character and effect of a final judgment on the embargo.

And thus, by taking as the ground of his decision that Mr. Lindsay had alleged what was contrary to truth, he did subject him to a claim on the part of the Company for losses and damages.

But the most complete denial of justice which a judge or court can make, is to condemn any one without hearing him, and Mr. Lindsay was condemned without having been heard.

The injustice is evident and manifest whenever a judge or court decides and judges without observing the forms of the process prescribed by the law; and, by laying aside the same, prevents the party against whom he pronounces a decision from alleging and defending their own rights and justice; and this was the case in the decisions of which Mr. Lindsay complains.

The decree of the Relação for the rejection of Mr. Lindsay's petition of appeal adopted the grounds of the decision of the judge of the First Instance, and, besides this, the ground of incompetency of the Civil Courts to decree an embargo on a ship, or any other commercial effect, on account of any credit for which an action can only be brought before the Commercial Courts.

This decision, evidently contradictory and null on account of what is laid down in the 736th Article, 2d paragraph of the Judicial Reform, which prohibits any court from taking notice of a question appertaining to the jurisdiction of another, carries out in the very decision itself an evident and manifest injustice against Mr. Lindsay.

For as the decree declares the Civil Court to be incompetent to decree the embargo, it was also incompetent to declare it null, and to order it to be raised on any other grounds except on those of incompetency, and Mr. Lindsay might for this reason go and petition for it in the court, which the decree declares competent.

But as the decree confirms the decision of the judge of the First Instance on the grounds stated in the same, it prevented Mr. Lindsay from petitioning for an embargo in that other court.

And the injustice is still more revolting, inasmuch as it establishes an incompetency which does not exist, because the Commercial Courts have not got in the code by which they are regulated, any jurisdiction to order a judicial apprehension of property.

All these grounds of complaint with the necessary development thereof, were presented by Mr. Lindsay to the Supreme Court, which did not attend to them, and condemned them by refusing the revision.

Moreover, the means adopted of an appeal from the judgment which decreed the attachment, could not have taken place, and were not compatible with it, because such an appeal can only take place in the cases expressly mentioned in the 674th Article of the Judicial Reform, none of which includes that of a sentence decreeing an attachment.

Mr. Lindsay is entitled to have the injustice thus done him by the courts, redressed by the Portuguese Government, not only putting him beyond the reach of any claims which the Company may demand from him under the pretext of losses and damages, and, moreover, indemnifying him for all losses, damages and cessation of profits arising from the injustice done him, but also the due reparation thereof.

OPINION of the Law Adviser of Her Britannic Majesty's Legation at Lisbon, respecting the legal questions at issue between Mr. Lindsay and the Company "União Mercantil."

HAVING attentively examined the papers which I have before me, respecting the questions at issue between the British subject William Shaw Lindsay, and the Company "União Mercantil" of this city, I am of opinion that there are no grounds that can justify any complaint or claim on the part of the said Mr. W. S. Lindsay, to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, because one of the questions is still pending before the courts, and the other was decided in perfect conformity with the terms of the process, and with the laws in force in this kingdom.

The British subject W. S. Lindsay, brought an action in the Commercial Court against the Company, "União Mercantil" and for the greater security of his credit, which he claimed from the same, he petitioned the Civil Court for an attachment on the steamer "Don Pedro," anchored in the Tagus, and belonging to the same Company.

There are, therefore, two actions brought by Mr. W. S. Lindsay against the Company, the principal one by libel in the Commercial Court, and the one for embargo or attachment in the 6th District of the Judicial Circuit of Lisbon, where it was proceeded with under the title "Civil Process of Justification for an Attachment."

With regard to the first, the principal one, it is still pending before the courts, and before the latter give their final decision thereon, it is obvious that Mr. W. S. Lindsay can neither claim anything on this subject from his own Government, nor can he even know whether the decision will be favourable or adverse to him.

From the papers which I have before me, it may be seen that the judgment in this suit was given against Mr. W. S. Lindsay on the 5th of June of the current year 1862, in the first instance.

See Enclosures Nos. 3 and 4.

There still remain to him therefore, 1stly, An appeal to the Commercial Court of Second Instance, which may either confirm or revoke the judgment wholly or in part, considering the grounds thereof, and examining the question in all the plenitude of jurisdiction; 2dly, in the event of confirmation, an appeal to the Supreme Court of Justice, which may either grant or refuse the revision, in the cases and in the manner laid down in the laws, whether it be by annulling the process, should it find that there has been an omission of some essential Act, or some indispensable formality; or, in fine, by annulling the judgment, should it find therein a direct infraction, or a manifestly erroneous application of any law of the kingdom, according to the terms of the law of the 19th December 1843.

Such are the regular terms of the process which Mr. W. S. Lindsay still has in his power to pursue.

Before that, the question is not ended, there is no decision of the cause; and there are no grounds therefore for any claim by the extraordinary means of diplomatic intervention.

There are likewise no grounds for a similar claim with respect to the cause for the embargo, although it is now terminated by the refusal of the Supreme Court of Justice to grant a revision.

Not only were all the formalities, and the terms laid down in the code of legal procedure in force in the kingdom, observed, but the decision was also pronounced in harmony with the law on this subject. It is not, therefore, one of those cases in which international law exceptionally admits diplomatic interference with the decisions of the judicial courts of a constituted and independent nation.

Mr. W. S. Lindsay went to the Civil Court of the 6th District of the Judicial Circuit of Lisbon, to petition for an attachment on a steamer belonging to the Company, at anchor in the Tagus, for the greater security of his credit, which he claimed from the Company in the Commercial Court. The Judge of the 6th District ordered the embargo to be laid. The Company appealed from this proceeding of the judge to the Court of Relação, and on the Acts of the process already concluded being sent to him, in order that he should either maintain his decision, or amend the appeal if he wished to do so, according to the 675th Article, 2d paragraph of the "Judicial Reform," (a) the judge on a better examination of the case, amended the appeal, as it was lawful for him to do, and according to the daily practice of the courts; and consequently he ordered the release of the attachment, which he declared to be of no effect. From this decision Mr. W. S. Lindsay appealed to the Relação, and the Relação by a Decree on the 1st of March 1862, did not admit the appeal, on the ground particularly of incompetency of the ordinary civil courts to order the attachment, considering the commercial nature and other conditions of the appellant's credit, according to what is laid down in the 1029th and 1310th, and the following Articles of the Commercial Code, and in the 1st Article of the Decree of the 21st of April 1847. From this decision Mr. W. S. Lindsay appealed for a revision of the same to the Supreme Court of Justice, which by unanimity of votes refused to grant it on account of the want of legal grounds, by a Decree of the 11th of June 1862.

See Enclosures Nos. 5 and 6.

(a) See Note at the end.

Such being the precise terms of the matter in question, that is to say, of the attachment, there is no doubt that the process was carried on with all regularity, and according to the form laid down in the legislation relating thereto, and that the decision was conformable to the law of the country, by which a British subject is bound, as well as the Company "União Mercantil."

The Commercial Code in the first Title, part II., in the only book thereof, treats of vessels, and after legislating in general respecting them, in the 1310th Article, and in the following ones it lays down the rules for embargo. It is therefore evident, that as the action in question has reference to commercial acts, and arises from a subject on which there is a special legislation in the Commercial Code, the Commercial Courts alone can have jurisdiction to decide the case.

The legislation on this point cannot be more express. The 1020th Article of the Code says thus:

“The ordinary tribunals of commerce or the Commercial Courts of the First Instance are alone competent, and have an exclusive jurisdiction in all cases that have reference to commercial acts, or arise from engagements, concerning which, there is legislation in this Code, such cases appertaining from their very nature to a special court of justice, according to the 16th paragraph of the 145th Article of the Constitutional Charter.”

“Commercial jurisdiction cannot be declined, although the parties should agree to decline it.”—Article 1034.

And in fine the Decree of the 21st of April 1847 in the first article lays down the following:—

“Sentences pronounced by civil judges in causes that appertain to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Commercial Courts, or in which the mode of procedure laid down in the Commercial Code is not observed, are null and void, notwithstanding the consent or silence of the parties.”

That the principal suit was commercial cannot be a matter of doubt, and Mr. W. S. Lindsay himself, acknowledges it by both bringing it before and continuing it in the Court of Commerce, where it is still pending, and by a necessary consequence the suit for embargo, arising from it, and tending to the security and strengthening of the same must also be commercial.

From the reasons which I have just propounded, I conclude that the British subject Mr. William S. Lindsay has no grounds on which he can establish a complaint, or any representation whatever to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, with respect to the two actions which he brought against the Company “União Mercantil.”

Lisbon, 4 September 1862.

Note.—Article 675, sect. 2. When the appeal has been lodged, the clerk shall immediately give up to the appellant's lawyer the acts of the process, in order that he may make out the petition, which being done, and the petition presented, together with the decree of the court or with the compulsory decision, he shall immediately recover the acts of the process, and after annexing the said petition, he will show them to the judge as concluded, from whom the appeal was made, in order that he may within 24 hours, either maintain his decision, or else amend the appeal, if he should so will it. WITH reference to Mr. Herries' Despatch, No. 53, of the 17th of August, I have to instruct you to report to me whether any progress is making towards the settlement of Mr. Lindsay's claim on the “Union Mercantile Company,” under the guarantee of the Portuguese Government.

Mr. Lindsay is prepared to go out to Lisbon if you should think his presence might be beneficial to his interests.

My Lord,

Lisbon, 15 October 1862.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt by the Brazil Packet on the 13th, of your Lordship's Despatch of the 8th instant.

Your

Your Lordship instructs me in that Despatch, to report to you whether any progress is making towards the settlement of Mr. Lindsay's claim on the Union Mercantile Company, and as that question has been exclusively treated by Mr. Herries during my absence, I have requested him to inform me what is the present state of the question, and I enclose for your Lordship's information copy of a letter which he has in consequence addressed to me on this subject.

When your Lordship addressed to me your Despatch of the 8th instant, Mr. Herries' Despatch of the 1st October had evidently not yet reached you, and Mr. Herries reports very fully in that Despatch both the origin and nature of the dispute between Mr. Lindsay and the Union Mercantile Company, and its present position.

I am unable to say whether Mr. Lindsay's presence here would be likely to further his cause, and he must decide on that point himself.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 17.

Sir,

Lisbon, 14 October 1862.

IN obedience to your instructions I have the honour to state for your information, with reference to Earl Russell's Despatch to you, No. 1 of the 8th instant, that my Despatch to his Lordship, of 1st October, contained, to the best of my belief, a complete report of all proceedings on Mr. Lindsay's claims up to that date, since when I am not aware of any further progress having been made in this suit now pending on appeal against the "União Mercantil" Company, or towards a decision on his claim upon the Portuguese Government, as set forth in this petition to the King.

My above-mentioned Despatch cannot have reached the Foreign Office when Earl Russell's, of the 8th instant, was addressed to you.

COPY of LETTER from Mr. Lindsay, M.P. to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

8, Austin Friars, City, 21 October 1862.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge receipt of your Lordship's letter of the 11th instant, with various documents transmitted to you from Lisbon, which I now return with my thanks.

Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon has evidently devoted much time, and bestowed great care, to the examination of the claims which your Lordship instructed him to report upon, but his information has been doubtless in a great measure necessarily derived from the parties who resist the payment of these claims; from their counsel, and from a judge of the court who gave the decision complained of, who unfortunately for the claimants, as would appear by his report, is also the legal adviser of Her Majesty's Legation at Lisbon.

I shall now, with the permission of your Lordship, endeavour to state as briefly as possible the case of the claimants,

The stock held by them is as follows:—

W. S. Lindsay	- 1,266 shares, at 20 £.	- - - £. 25,320
Henry Maughan	- 256 ditto - - -	- - - 5,120
Miles Stringer	- 252 ditto - - -	- - - 5,040
John Brelley	- 50 ditto - - -	- - - 1,000
George Western	- 84 ditto - - -	- - - 1,680
	1,908	£. 38,160

On the above shares seven per cent. per annum is guaranteed by the Portuguese Government.

W. S. Lindsay 141 debentures of 100 £. each, 14,100 £.; on these six per cent. interest per annum is payable, and an annual reduction of 12 per cent. I am, as your Lordship will perceive, much the largest holder of the stock of the Company. My own interest in it being close upon 40,000 l.

This stock has never been out of my possession, except when my agents required to produce it to the Company or in court. As I held powers of attorney to act for the other shareholders, who were my co-owners in the steamships which were sold to the Company, I consequently made all applications to the Company in my own name; and, practically, I was alone concerned in the sale of the steamers. I offer this explanation, as Mr. Herries refers to an apparent discrepancy in regard to the amount of stock held by me in his letter to your Lordship. In fact, the whole of the above stock has always been in my possession, though it belongs to the respective parties in the proportions I have named.

The facts connected with the purchase of the steamships by the Company from me are set forth in a paper herewith marked (A).

Some of the reasons why we consider the Government of Portugal responsible to us are set forth in a letter which our attorney, in my name, addressed to the Minister of Public Works in January last. It is marked (B.), and to that letter no answer has been received. I also send herewith copy of one of the debentures (C.), and copy of the deed given to me by the directors (D.), which your Lordship will notice is very clear and specific in the powers it gives me. By the paper (A.), your Lordship will perceive that the counsel to the Company, in his written statement, has misrepresented altogether the facts of the case to Mr. Herries, for as you will note there are in my possession numerous documents, signed by all the directors and by the agents to the Company, in which they distinctly state that the steam vessels which I sold, by the request of the Minister of Works, and in good faith to the Company, were acknowledged by them to be in "an efficient state," and that they complied with all the conditions agreed upon. Consequently the Company has not, and indeed in the face of such documents cannot have any claim upon me; but even if the directors had a claim, they could not make it a set-off against the payment of the debentures. See Paper (C.).

The Company on their debentures acknowledges to have received "one hundred pounds sterling," the interest of which will be paid six-monthly, and the reduction annually to "bearer." These debentures also give the holders of them "a preference right upon all the assets of the Company." With stipulations to clear, the decision of the Portuguese courts in regard to the embargo, appears to me to be not only unjust but contrary to the laws of Portugal, or I daresay any other country.

Independently altogether of the special deed in my possession (D.), the debentures expressly provides that the payment of six per cent. interest, and the annual reduction of 12 per cent. are "both guaranteed by a preference right on all the assets of the Company." I am, therefore, at a loss to understand, how the law adviser of Her Majesty's Legation at Lisbon, could report to Mr. Herries (admitting as he does that the payment of the debenture issued by the Company under the signature and approval of the Portuguese Government was repudiated) that I had no reasons for complaint, and that there are no grounds for any claim by means of diplomatic intervention. I hope your Lordship will feel that even if I had no other reason beyond this fact, it is one in itself where diplomatic intervention is specially required. But the whole of the facts have not been brought under the notice of Mr. Herries, and I fear the information he has received has been incorrect. Mr. Herries reports that I "undertook to make good the repairs incurred in refitting the 'Africa,'" "that the expenses of the Company have constantly exceeded the receipts," and that "Mr. Lindsay himself was a party to some of the singular proceedings complained of" on the part of the Company, in the violation of the statutes.

In regard to the first it is clear (Paper A.), that I was in no way responsible for any of the expenses incurred in refitting the "Africa;" at the same time I have, on all occasions, stated to the direction, that though I was not legally responsible, I would readily make good any defects discovered afterwards, for which I was in equity responsible at the time of the sale, and I gave the Company a letter to that effect. I again referred to that promise when they rendered their very extraordinary account, copy of which was in the possession of Mr. Herries, and I send herewith (E.) copy of the letter I then sent to the manager manager of the Company. Even now, if it can be shown by any impartial and competent person that there were defects in the "Africa," which in equity ought to be made good by me, I am ready to make an allowance to them, even though the Directors and their agents, by certificates, by deed and otherwise, have repeatedly expressed their satisfaction with the efficiency of the ships, and that they complied with all the conditions agreed upon.

2. If the expenses of the Company have constantly exceeded the receipts, then the Directors and the representative of the Portuguese Government have issued false accounts to the shareholders; for in every account sent to me, and in all the published statements of the Company, a profit is shown. Indeed, in one of the accounts which now happens to be before me, signed by the secretary and by the manager, a profit is certified to "equal to $18\frac{9}{16}$ per cent. in the nine months." If these accounts are not true, then I am entitled to hold not merely the Directors who passed these accounts personally responsible to me, but also the Government, whose representative sanctioned their issue and publication.

3. In regard to the statement that I "was a party to some of the irregular proceedings of the Directors," I could have wished if the Directors had furnished Mr. Herries with some more information on this point than he appears to possess, for I am not aware of having sanctioned any of their irregular proceedings; on the contrary, the bulk of my numerous letters (and they are at your Lordship's disposal) contain a protest against the Directors and the representations of the Portuguese Government, for their repudiation of all their agreements with me, whereby my interest and that of the other English shareholders has been prejudiced.

4. Your Lordship will find that these are specially referred to in the representation (B.) which my attorney made to the Minister of Public Works, in January last; and I hope your Lordship will agree with me in the opinion that, if for no other reason than those stated in that document, the Government of Portugal is responsible to make good to the English shareholders the loss they have sustained; and I cannot doubt that, when the case is represented by your Lordship, the Government of Portugal will not hesitate to make good these losses. I have already, and only since January last, expended upwards of 750*l.* on prosecuting my claims in the Portuguese Courts, and without any results, for after the decision of these Courts in the case of the embargo, it is hopeless in me to expect justice. Indeed Mr. Herries, with only very imperfect information before him, informs your Lordship that the trial in the principal case was, "to say the least of it," conducted in "a very careless manner," and was "decided without much inquiry into the real merits of the case;" that the decision of the jury against me was "manifestly absurd," and that "the judgment of the Court was equally open to objection." Mr. Herries therefore thinks that I have good grounds for the appeal which is now pending; but unless your Lordship is pleased to represent the facts of the case (I trust promptly) to the Government of Portugal, I fear that I and the other shareholders in the Royal Union Mercantile Company will, one way or another, lose our capital, even though the dividends upon that capital are guaranteed by the Government under special laws of the 30th March and 10th September 1861.

Enclosures in No. 18.

THE following is a brief Statement of the Facts connected with my claims upon the Company now called "The Royal Union Mercantile Company," of Lisbon:—

On the 28th August 1857, Messrs. Edward Medlicott, Fortunato Chamiço, junior, J. H. Fradessa de Silveira, and Candido de F. Abreu, who styled themselves "Directors of the Royal Portuguese Navigation Company," addressed a letter to me in London, through their agents here, in which they expressed an anxious desire to purchase "four" of my ships, and to pay for the same, one half in shares of the Company, which they stated would shortly be "at a premium," and the other half by "monthly instalments of 1,200*l.* to 1,500*l.*, bearing interest at the rate of not more than 6 per cent. per annum; with the condition, however, that the Directors shall be allowed, whenever convenient to them, to increase the figure of said instalments, in order thus to accelerate your reimbursement." The particulars of those ships they had previously received from their agents here. This gentleman then concluded a somewhat lengthy letter by stating that "the Directors would desire to have at once a steamer of 500 tons, destined for the Azores line;" and further, "the decision of this affair being looked upon by the Directors as of a most urgent nature, they would feel great pleasure in seeing you personally here, and thus have the honour to treat in a direct manner all the pending transactions, and they have no doubt that thus everything would be arranged to the satisfaction of all parties." Consequently, after various letters had passed, I did visit Lisbon, for the first time, in the month of September 1857, on the invitation of the Directors. Upon full inquiry I found that the gentlemen who had addressed me occupied respectable positions; that the object which they had ostensibly in view was one that was likely to prove of considerable national importance in the development of the resources of Western Africa, and in the suppression of the Slave Trade; and further, that the Company, if honestly, prudently, and economically conducted, could hardly fail to prove remunerative to its shareholders. For these reasons I sold to them one of my steamships, the "W. S. Lindsay," now the "Donna Estephania," for 19,000*l.*, payable one half in the shares of the Company, and the other half in cash credits upon London. I then returned to London.

In answer to the frivolous complaints which the Directors some time afterwards raised in regard to the capabilities and quality of this ship, I may state the following facts:—

1st. The "Donna Estephania" ("W. S. Lindsay"), was surveyed, approved, and accepted by their agents in London.

2d. She was surveyed, approved, and accepted on her arrival in Lisbon by the Company, of which I hold a certificate.

3d. In various letters from the Company now before me, extending over the months of August, September, October, and November 1858, the Directors express an anxious desire to purchase from me other similar ships.

4th. On the 21st October 1858 they make a definite proposal in writing, through one of their agents in London, Mr. Perey, to purchase from me the "Ireland" and "Clarendon" (now respectively the "Don Pedro" and "Africa"), which I then declined.

5th. On the 19th November 1858, the President of the Company, Mr. Medlicott, wrote to me as follows:—

"We are perfectly convinced that vessels with auxiliary power are most appropriate for the African trade, and I have no doubt that we shall have the whole of it as soon as we lay on the number of vessels required. The object of the Company in endeavouring to obtain a long credit from you in the purchase of your vessels was entirely to gain time to avoid at present, as much as possible, the sale of shares, until the working of the Company insures to it the confidence of the public, and envious parties, shipowners, &c., who will be put out of the trade, can no longer have a chance of doing us harm; then our shares I expect will be sought after."

And, 6th. In the foregoing letter, and in others from the Company, I was again invited to visit Lisbon, to make arrangements for the sale of the "Clarendon" ("Africa"), and "Ireland" ("Don Pedro").

As a ship appeared to be much wanted by the Company, in order to commence the African service, and as urgent requests were made to me, not merely by the Directors, but also by his Excellency Señor Carlos Bentos da Silva, the then Prime Minister of Public Works, which I have referred to in a separate paper, and marked (B.), I consented to send the "Clarendon" ("Africa") to Lisbon, but declined to transfer her to the Directors until I had received the following letter of indemnity from their agents:—

"Dear Sir,

"London, 23 November 1858.

"As we hope the 'Clarendon' will be out at Lisbon about a fortnight before you arrive there by the Brazil mail of 9th proximo, we consider it very desirable, for the interests of the Union Mercantile Company, that they should be able to avail themselves of the interval to make such preparations as may be necessary for the 'Clarendon' to commence the service without loss of time; and believing that this can best be carried out by her going to Lisbon a Portuguese steamer, owned by them, and that this will be more satisfactory to them, and also wishing to promote their interests as far as lies in our power, we, on behalf of the Company, and acting as their representatives here, propose to you the following:—If you will transfer, by bill of sale, to the Union Mercantile Company of Lisbon the auxiliary screw-steamer 'Clarendon' ('Africa') we, on the part of the Company, will hand you first and seconds of exchange, as follows:—

Due 1 May 1859 -	- - - - -	4,696	15	-
" 1 Nov. " -	- - - - -	4,811	5	-
" 1 May 1860 -	- - - - -	4,925	15	-
" 1 Nov. " -	- - - - -	5,040	5	-
" 1 May 1861 -	- - - - -	5,154	15	-
" 1 Nov. " -	- - - - -	5,292	5	-
		£.	29,921	- -

And

And certificates of shares representing stock in said Company to the amount of 27,500 l.; and we likewise will guarantee that before you are required to deliver to us the auxiliary screw-steamer 'Ireland' (payment of which is included in the above bills and shares), the said Company, or their representatives, shall give to you 1,375 shares, of 20 l. each, of the Company in exchange for the certificates above-mentioned, paid up, amounting to 27,500 l. And we further guarantee that the promise of the Directors of said Company to mortgage to you the above-named ships, which we also hand you, will be followed up by the mortgage itself, valid and good in all respects according to the laws of Portugal, and according to the conditions of said promise; and, further, that the guarantee of said Directors to cover the two last bills shall be worded the same as the letter of guarantee given to us about the payment of the 'Acoriano;' and, further, that you shall have power to insure the 'Clarendon' ('Africa') for the sum of 25,000 l., at the expense of the Company, in accordance with the contract of 20th October 1858; as also the 'Ireland' ('Don Pedro'), after she is transferred to the Company, in the sum of 30,000 l., in accordance with the same contract. In regard to the management of the Company, as we understand that your sole object is to have it conducted prudently, efficiently, and economically in every respect, we undertake, on their behalf, that they will make such arrangements as you may consider satisfactory. It is understood that the price of 25,000 l., half in bills and half in shares, representing the 'Clarendon' ('Africa'), which you transfer, becomes absolutely your property, and that the balance of 30,000 l., half in bills and half in shares, which represents the 'Ireland,' is to be held by you as security until the above conditions are carried out; and it is further understood that, when these conditions are completed, you will transfer the 'Ireland' to the Company.

"We are, &c.
(signed) "Wm. M^r Andrew & Sons.
"Pinto, Perey & Co."

With the object of completing the conditions named in the above letter, I again visited Lisbon in December 1858, and had many interviews with the Directors, and with various members of the Government of Portugal, at whose request it may be said I agreed to enter into the arrangement. After completing the necessary arrangements, and receiving the mortgage of the ships, and the personal guarantee of the Directors, &c. &c., I likewise transferred the "Ireland" ("Don Pedro") to the Company, accepting in payment the shares and bills of the Company thus guaranteed; as it was on the one hand convenient to me to lock up the value of these ships as long as the principal and interest was paid, and, on the other hand, as the Company had been unable to emit its shares, it was not convenient for the Directors to make cash payments or open credits in London, as they had previously done in the case of the "Donna Estephania" ("W. S. Lindsay"). As various complaints were also subsequently raised, long after the Company had the ships in their possession, in regard to the capabilities and qualities of these ships, &c., my best answer to these complaints is a statement of facts, and the documentary evidence of the Directors and their agents, which is in my possession. These facts are as follows:—

Before the "Ireland" ("Don Pedro"), and the "Clarendon" ("Africa") left England, they were surveyed by the duly authorised agents of the Company, who handed to me the following letter:—

"Dear Sir,

"London, 8 December 1858.

"Having been on board the steamer 'Ireland' to-day, we have much pleasure in saying that she seems to us quite complete in all her cabins and arrangements for passengers. She certainly is a beautiful ship, and we feel confident that, when our Lisbon friends see her, they will be very much pleased with her.

(signed) "W. M^r Andrew & Sons.
"Pinto, Perey & Co."

In regard to the "Clarendon" ("Africa"), the following is a copy of the surveys and reports of the practical men, the most eminent of their line in London, appointed by the agents of the Company to inspect this ship:—

"London, 24 November 1858.

"This is to certify that the undersigned, at the request of Messrs. Pinto, Perey & Co., of No. 22, Crutched Friars, have this day made a careful survey of the screw-steamer 'Clarendon,' now lying in the London Docks, and have to report that she is in good and efficient condition, well and substantially built, and fitted with 14 berths, and nine others available for bed-places in the saloon, and has 14 bed-places in the 'tween-decks already fitted up, besides ample space further aft for 16 bed-places for first-class passengers, all connected with or close to the saloon, with suitable waterclosets, pantries, cooking apparatus, and cabin furniture for first-class passengers. The masts, yards, and rigging are all in good and efficient condition; she has spare space for lower yard, &c., as usual for ships of her class. The four boats are all in good condition, and properly fitted with the necessary masts and oars, &c. The ground tackle is efficient and complete. In our opinion she is efficient in all respects for services between Lisbon and the West Coast of Africa. It appears, by a certificate produced, that the vessel was placed in dry-dock, and her bottom cleaned and thoroughly examined, and found to be in good condition, in September last. Appended hereto is an engineer's (W. Beardman) report on the machinery.

(signed) "George Bayley,
"John Gilmore,
"Surveyors to the Board of Trade.

"Signed by Messrs. G. Bayley and John Gilmore in the presence of John Harrison, Notary Public."

In regard to the engines and boilers, for which the Company claim compensation, the following is the report of the engineer they appointed:—

"Deptford, 24 November 1858.

"I hereby certify that I have this day, at the request of Messrs. Pinto, Perey & Co., made a careful examination of the machinery and boilers, of 80-horse power nominal, of the screw steamship 'Clarendon,' lying in the London Docks, and find them in good and efficient condition, and fit for immediate service between Lisbon and the Portuguese settlements on the West Coast of Africa, and back.

(signed) "Joseph Beardman.

"Signed by Joseph Beardman in the presence of J. Harrison, Notary Public."

So particular were the agents of the Company, that these documents were sworn to before the Lord Mayor. But however complete in themselves as a refutation of the claims which the Company subsequently made upon me, there are other documents, bearing the signatures of the Directors of the Company and its officers, which clearly prove that they were not entitled to make any such claims whatever, and, as will hereafter be proved, these claims were made merely as an excuse to delay the payment of the purchase-money of the vessels. When the "Clarendon" ("Africa") and "Ireland" ("Don Pedro") arrived at Lisbon, they were not merely inspected and accepted by the Directors, but I have before me receipts, signed by C. N. Munro, the Secretary of the Company, for the ships and their shares in detail, as per inventory. These receipts bear the date of 28th and 29th December 1858. But more than this: in the deed given to me, signed by all the Directors—and it will be noted that the "Clarendon" ("Africa") is the vessel for which the Company subsequently claimed compensation—and sworn to before Antonio d'Abranches Coelho, a notary public of Lisbon, every one of the directors distinctly acknowledged that I had "delivered the vessel named 'Clarendon' ('Africa') to the Company's agents in London, she being at the time of such delivery furnished with all gear and tackle, and provided with all necessaries for navigation, being supplied likewise with all furniture and needful articles for the use of 40 first-class passengers, all according to the terms and in the mode agreed upon." And, further, they (the Directors) signed and swore before the notary that both "the vessels are in the state and comply with the conditions agreed upon;" that they accepted such vessels as complete, and that they would keep and maintain the said vessels always in a perfect state of navigableness.

The ships were consequently not merely accepted and approved in every sense of the word, and in the strongest possible language, but were laden with cargo, and proceeded on their voyages to Africa for and on account of the Company. In fact, so well pleased were the Directors with them that, on the 5th July 1859, the Secretary wrote to me, stating that the "Clarendon" ("Africa") had arrived at Cape Verde in 6½ days—an extraordinarily quick passage; and by the Minutes of the Company I find that, on the 24th January 1859, at a meeting of the Directors, there being present Messrs. Medlicott, Serzedillo, Fradessa da Silveira, Flores, and Ribeiro, and unanimously carried—"To advise Mr. Lindsay that it would be of advantage to the Company to acquire the steamships 'Scotland' or 'England,' and the 'Harbinger,' ships belonging to me, and in all respects similar to the "Ireland" ("Don Pedro"), and the "Clarendon" ("Africa").

On the 2d February 1859, the President, Mr. Medlicott, wrote to me that the "Don Pedro" ("Ireland") "has filled her second and third-class cabins; a large quantity of cargo is shut out;" that if "they were in a position to advertise a vessel for April, the line would then be complete;" and he concluded by saying, "I shall be very glad to enter into an arrangement with you for another vessel to complete the line."

On the 11th February 1859, the Manager of the Company, Mr. Abreu, wrote to me as follows:—"The auxiliary system of your steamers is unquestionably the best, and most adequate for navigation to the African coast;" and he adds, "it is likewise my conviction that, for a fourth steamer for the African line, we ought to purchase one of yours only. Until next time we shall be able to continue the monthly line with our three present steamers which we bought from you; and in July I see it is possible you will have one of your steamers home from India."

On the 28th January 1859, M. Pereiro, an active Director of the Company, wrote to me:—"It is my firm opinion that so soon as we have succeeded in our great object (the emission of all the Company's shares) we ought immediately to buy your other vessel, the 'England' or 'Scotland,' to complete the African line, and the 'Harbinger' as a supplementary vessel on both the African and Azores lines."

In this strain the correspondence continued up to the 26th October 1859, or nearly a year after the Company had the vessels in use; and just five days before the second bill they had given to me in payment of these ships fell due, they then discovered, or pretended to discover, that the "Africa" (formerly the "Clarendon") had various defects, and on that plea or pretext they actually dishonoured their acceptance to me of 4,811 l. 5*s.*, which fell due on the 1st November. As I had in my possession all the other bills, I had them at once protested in accordance with the power I held, and I immediately visited Lisbon to enforce the personal guarantee of the Directors, and to receive the amount under my mortgage-deed. I would not listen for one moment to claims made against me on such frivolous pretexts, and with so disreputable an object. If, at the end of 12 months, it was discovered that the ship had defects, they arose either from the dangers and accidents of the seas, to which all vessels are liable, or from mismanagement of their Directors or their servants.

I proceeded to enforce my claims under the personal guarantee which I held, and could have sold the ships to recover the sum due on the bills, which the Directors had dishonoured, amounting to 25,224 l. 5*s.*; but by so doing I should have ruined the Company, which, under proper management, would yield profitable returns to the shareholders, of whom I was by far the largest. Consequently I consented, after many appeals, to give up the personal guarantee of the Directors for the due payment of the two last bills, and the mortgage, upon receiving from them 8,000 l. in cash, and debentures bearing interest, in exchange for the protested bills. I further agreed (too goodnaturedly) to give the Directors the time which they so anxiously desired to emit their shares, and to develop the resources of the undertaking.

I suffered the debentures to extend over eight years from that date, and was satisfied with an annual reduction of 12 per cent. The interest and reduction on these debentures were paid, when they fell due, on the 31st December 1860.

The interest of 6 per cent. was also paid on the 30th June of that year, but the amount which became due on the 31st December last has been dishonoured on the very same plea, and on the very same extraordinary claims which the Directors raised in 1859—a plea which, they admitted by the deed they signed in that year, had no existence. With regard to these claims, in an account which they rendered after they repudiated the payment of the interest and reduction on the debentures, they have not merely debited me without my sanction, but even without my knowledge, with such items as "painting" to the "Africa" ("Clarendon"), which vessel they have had in use for three years, but also for "sundries" (and these are all the particulars they give) supplied to the "Don Pedro" ("Ireland"), and "Donna Estephania" ("W. S. Lindsay"), the latter vessel having been in the constant service of the Company since 1837! I venture to say that the records of commerce in any part of the world never produced acts so disreputable; but they do not end here. After dishonouring their acceptances in 1859, on the pretext that the "Africa" ("Clarendon") was not in a condition to perform the service, and after publishing as their reasons for not paying their debts to me that she was not worth 44,200,000 reis, or less than 10,000 l., they publish in 1861, to Portugal and to the world, an "Authorised Report" for the emission of the shares of the Union Mercantile Company, in which they state that the "Africa" ("Clarendon") is worth 130,035,000 reis, or nearly 29,000 l.; and in the Stock Account of the Company now before me, dated 16th April 1861, signed by Mr. Abreu, the manager, they value the same ship at 129,362,644 reis, or 28,747 l. sterling.

And in the "Authorised Report" they describe this much-abused ship "Africa" ("Clarendon")—it suiting their purpose so to do—as "a vessel of the very best construction." I sold them a ship, for which they agreed to pay 25,000 l. (less the commission); the one half in shares, and the other half in bills and debentures, which they dishonour. They enter that ship in their Stock Account as worth 28,747 l., and at that valuation they ask (without my consent, as the largest shareholder, or even without my knowledge), as I understand, on the security of the ships they have not paid for, a large loan, which they receive in cash from the Government of their country, although they have at the present moment only paid me 6,000 l., or thereabouts, in cash for that ship, being less than one quarter of the value which they have just put upon her. But their extraordinary acts do not end here.

In the Stock Account of the Company to which I refer, they value the "Don Pedro" ("Ireland"), which they bought from me three years ago for 30,000 l., at 164,348,549 reis, or 36,521 l., although all they have paid me in cash for that ship up to the present time is 7,000 l., or thereabouts. And yet in the "Authorised Report" they have the audacity to say "that they have settled their accounts with me by paying me with debentures," which debentures they have repudiated and dishonoured.

I need offer no comment on such facts as these.

LETTER addressed by the Attorney of the undersigned at Lisbon to the Minister of Public Works in January 1862, to which no reply was sent.

Most Illustrious and Excellent Sir,

IN the course of the months of January, February, and March of 1838 I had the honour to receive various letters from his Excellency Sir Carlos Bento de Silva, at that time Minister of Public Works, now of the Marine, whereby his Excellency invited and even urged me, on the part of the Portuguese Government, to give my assistance in the formation of the Company called the "União Mercantile," which various merchants of this capital, in unison with the Government and backed by it, were endeavouring to set on foot, an object impossible of obtainment through the sole agency of the capital of this country, inasmuch as the holders of such capital would not come forward and subscribe for the Company's shares. That which his Excellency the Minister asked of me most pressing was that I should furnish the necessary steamers to set going at once the service of the mails, that being the object of the Company's undertaking.

I acceded to this application, and lost no time in placing the steamers required at the disposal of those gentlemen, who, in common accord with the Government, proposed the formation of the Company, an intention they carried out immediately on the arrival of the vessels at the port of this capital.

The assurance that his Excellency the Minister gave me, on the part of the Portuguese Government, that the undertaking of the Company and the establishing thereof, while it was of great advantage to this country, would be highly advantageous also and profitable to the shareholders, and, above all, the guarantee afforded to myself by the intervention of the Portuguese Government, were my inducements to aid in the foundation of the Company, and to supply the vessels, whereby I embarked capital to a very considerable extent.

The Directors of the Company had engaged to settle with me, by means of loans, for the amount of the vessels; but, as they were unable to succeed in issuing the shares, they found it impossible to raise such loans.

That was the occasion of my first visit to this capital, when, trusting in what was told me by his Excellency the Minister, and continuing to confide in the Government guarantee towards myself, I did not hesitate to accept shares of the Company in payment of one-half the price of the vessels, and the other half in bills of one to three years' date; so that the Direction might have a longer time wherein to effect the issue of the shares.

The Direction paid some of those bills, but, the difficulty concerning the issue of the shares still continuing, they begged me to allow them a longer period wherein to pay the remainder.

This circumstance caused me to come over for the second time to this capital—viz., in December 1859—when, moved by the desire to assist the Company, and supported by the confidence which I reposed in the Portuguese Government, I acceded to the request of the Direction, by agreeing to accept, in exchange for the bills, bonds of the Company (apólices), to the extent of 14,100 l., for which I was creditor, to be amortised and redeemed in eight years by annual instalments of 12 per cent., paid the last of December of each year, with interest every half-year in the form declared in the bonds, and laid down by the contract which I made with the Direction, dated the 28th of the said month and year.

The first yearly instalment, due at the end of December of the following year, was paid me; but having, in conformity with the stipulations of the said last contract, drawn upon the Direction two bills for the instalment which had to be paid at the end of the December following, the Direction refused to accept them, on the plea—which may be styled audacious, as being so evidently incorrect—that they had no funds of mine in their hands, and were not authorised to make advances. This unexpected, strange, and unheard-of proceeding on the part of the Direction towards me compelled me for a third time to come over to this capital, to my very great sacrifice and injury; as, in order to do so, I was compelled to forsake much public and private business that required my attendance in London.

In fact, it must appear to you both astounding and inexplicable that the Direction should have the audacity to declare, in the protests of their bills, that they did not accept them because they had not in their possession funds of the drawer, who was the creditor of the Company, whereof they, the declarants, were Directors for something more than 14,000 l., and who drew those very bills by virtue of, and in conformity with, one of the clauses of the contract alluded to and passed between them.

I cannot help discovering in this conduct of the Direction a plan hit upon by them to do me an injury, and perhaps cause me to lose the very considerable capital which, at the request and on the guarantee of the Portuguese Government, I entrusted to the Company. Your Excellency will not fail to perceive, that as, in my capacity of a British subject, I have been instigated by the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty to entrust to the Company so large a capital, on the strength of the assurance given me by the Government that the undertaking of the Company was of great advantage to this country, and of even greater to the shareholders, and that the reimbursement of my capital should be insured to me, it is with clear and well-grounded reason that I consider I have have a manifest and incontestable right to claim of the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty either that it should protect me and compel payment to me of the capital for which I am the Company's creditor, and which the Direction in so proper a manner refuses to pay me, without my being compelled to suffer the delays, inconvenience, and expense of judicial suits, which would oblige me to neglect my business in London, in order to be present in this city, and remain here for the purpose of pushing on the proceedings, thus causing me prejudice and loss, the sacrifice of lucrative business, and prospective damages which I at once protest to claim; or that it should assume my claims for its own account, on my transferring to the proper authorities my right of action against the Company, in return for my capital. The Government of His Most Faithful Majesty, in Article 20 of the conditions of the contract which was made with the founders of the Company for the adjudication of the undertaking thereof, reserved to itself power to appoint a commissioner of its own to appear at the meetings, in order to watch the proceedings thereof—an arrangement which was more expressly and positively established in Condition 3 of the contract made and passed with the Direction on the 5th January 1861, it being determined therein that the Government Agent should superintend all the acts of the Direction and the fulfilments of the contracts.

Through the intervention of its commissioner, the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty must have entire knowledge of the contracts I have made with the Direction, and their mode of proceeding towards myself, entailing the non-fulfilment of those contracts; and, moreover, the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty, by so intervening, superintending, and controlling the acts of the Direction, cannot shirk the responsibility which I claim to throw upon it, inasmuch as, by allowing the Direction to proceed, it has concurred in prejudicing my interests.

I must not omit to mention to your Excellency the strange pretext which I learn the Direction have put forward, in order to explain their refusal to accept the bills—viz., that the steamers which I sold to the Company were badly built, badly stored, and badly manned—facts which compelled the Direction to incur serious expense in the way of repairs, amounting to some twenty and odd millions reis.

Even were such a pretext not ill-founded, as it undoubtedly is, such imaginary claim could not authorise the Direction to declare that they did not accept my bills because they had no funds of mine in their possession.

But, in order to appreciate at once the emptiness of such pretext, it will be sufficient to call to mind that the Direction, before receiving the vessels, caused them to be most carefully examined by an agent of their own, expressly commissioned for the purpose; that after receiving them and giving them a trial, they thanked me for the good quality and condition of the ships, and desired me to let them have another one; and that such claim invented by the direction, and which they thought of having recourse to after the vessels had been a long time in their service, and then only when they found it was impossible to pay the bills, so far from being admitted by me, was always rejected as unfounded and incorrect; and that finally the Direction, when making with me the contracts of the 20th December 1858 and 28th December 1859, made no mention whatsoever therein of such claim, but engaged purely and simply to pay me the purchase-money of the vessels.

It is, therefore, by direct infringement of their contracts, and by throwing discredit on their own bonds, that the Direction refused to accept the bills and make the unheard-of declaration which is to be found in the protests thereof.

Again, touching another point of not less importance, I beg permission to ask the most serious attention of your Excellency.

It was, as I have observed, in consequence of the solicitations made to me on the part of the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty, and through confiding in the security and guarantee which I understood it granted my capital, that I came forward to assist in the formation of the Company, and consented to take shares in payment of one-half the price of the vessels—viz., to the extent of 37,000 l.

These circumstances should have induced the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty not only to superintend and to insist upon the entire and scrupulous observances of the Statute of the Company, inasmuch as by such vigilance of the Government the good faith of the shareholders was supported and made easy; but they should more particularly have induced the authorities not to authorise, and much less to make with the Direction, contracts for which acts and formalities prescribed by the Statutes, in order to render them legal and valid, did not provide, and whose nature must tend to prejudice the interests of the shareholders.

Unhappily, it was not so, and I regret to find myself compelled to observe to your Excellency that the contracts lately passed between the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty and the Directors of the Company were in direct violation of the Statutes of the Company, and were ruinous to the shareholders. In the attributes conferred by Chap. 3 of the Statutes upon the Directors was not comprised, nor could rationally be comprised, the power to contract loans, or, especially, mortgage the property and security of the Company. On the contrary, the disposition thereof in No. 5 of Article 18 clearly establishes the necessity that, for such acts, the Direction shall be especially authorised by deliberation of the General Assembly, which the Direction must convoke for that purpose. The legal convoking of the meeting, by the terms of Article 35 of the Statutes, be effected by means of advertisements, inserted 60 days in advance in the chief country papers, and in the principal journals of those countries where the Company have shareholders.

Yet I have never been able to learn that such advertisements convoking a general meeting have ever been inserted, or that such meeting actually did assemble, giving authority to the Direction to contract with the Government, and on the terms in which they have contracted.

And as I am the principal shareholder, and by the terms of Article 33 of the Statutes, in order to take the resolution, it was indispensable to obtain my votes, equivalent to one vote for each two shares, it seems strange that it should neither be called upon nor heard in reference to these contracts.

These contracts, and more especially the one that was authorised by the laws of the 10th September 1861, so depreciated the shares that they remained valueless upon the market; and the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty, by contracting with the Direction without seriously demanding the performance of the formalities and authorisation which are indispensable for the kind of contract, manifestly assumed a responsibility towards the shareholders whose rights were thus set aside.

I cannot be compelled to suffer the prejudice occasioned me by the contract which the Government has thus passed with the Direction without my being heard as a shareholder and advised to appear at the general meeting and give my vote.

This prejudice consists in the valuelessness to which, by nature of the contract referred to, the shares I possess have been reduced, the value and amount thereof being no longer the same.

I therefore see myself under the necessity of claiming of the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty payment of 37,000 £, the amount of the shares of which I am the holder, and which I received as part payment of the vessels that, at the request of your Government, I sold to the Company, I being ready to deliver over the said shares in consideration of such sum.

I feel confident that the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty will not hesitate to acknowledge the justice of my claims, and in such confidence I forego the having recourse to the protection and intervention of my own Government.

But in case, which I do not expect, they should not be attended to and satisfied, your Excellency must permit me to protest for the same, as well as for all prejudice and losses, stoppage of business, and damages accruing to me in consequence.

I likewise protest that these my claims shall not be or shall not be understood to be prejudiced or suspended in their decision by reason of the legal proceedings I intend taking against the Direction and my demand for payments of my entire credit, by virtue of the clause of the contract, so deposing, inasmuch as they are founded on my private rights as against the Government.

THE following is a copy of the Contract which the Directors of the Royal Union Mercantile Company gave to the undersigned, and the reasons he stated, in writing, to the Portuguese Courts for raising an Action to enforce the Conditions of the Contract:—

Lisbon, 28 December 1859.

WILLIAM S. LINDSAY, Esq.—You having assented to a substitution and renewal of the contracts which the Union Mercantile Company, whom we represent, executed with you by public documents, dated 4th November and 20th December 1858, in the notes of the notary of this city, Antonio d' Abranches Coelho, for the payment of 27,000 £, being one-half of the price of the steamships "Africa" and "Don Pedro," divided in six bills with their respective interest, and of which the first only was paid, and the second having become due and having been unpaid, and in consequence all the rest having become due and having been protested in conformity with the document referred to the 20th December 1858: you having consented to receive at the date of these presents the amount of 8,000 £. on amount of your credit, and the remainder in debentures of the said Company of the value of 16,000 £, with interest of 6 per cent., payable half-yearly, on the last days of the months of June and December of each year, dating from next year, and the reduction of 12 per cent. of the said debentures, payable on the last day of December of each year, dating from next year; and all conditions and guarantees of this new contract being agreed and accepted in order to be reduced to writing in the present form, we declare and bind ourselves, in the name of the Union Mercantile Company, and in the quality of its representing Directors and Manager, faithfully to fulfil the following conditions:—

1. That you, having now received the amount of 8,000 £. in two bills (one for 4,000 £. at eight days' sight, and the other for 4,000 £. at 30 days' sight), drawn by M. Fortunato Chamico, jun., on Messrs. Bruno Silva & Son, of London, and the amount of 16,000 £. in debentures or obligations of the Company in exchange for the bills and special guarantee which were in your power, and which you have already given up, the said Company binds itself to pay the said interest of 6 per cent. and the said reduction of 12 per cent. at the said times above stipulated, upon the said value of the debentures (16,000 £.), you being authorised to draw a bill or bills on the Company for the amount of the interest and reduction before the said times, should the Board not have remitted funds to you before the 1st day of June and December in each of the above-mentioned years.

2. That

2. That the Company, by its manager and directors who represent it, bind themselves not to alienate or mortgage their steamships or any other property in whole or in part, or issue debentures, or by any other means to raise funds which shall not be absolutely for the acquisition or purchase of ships or material for the service and augmentation of the capital of the said Company, without having previously consulted you in writing, not being able to mortgage in guarantee of the ships or material which they shall buy, except up to the value of the same ships and material purchased.

3. The Company confers on you the faculty of examining its books and the documents relative thereto, whenever it shall suit you; or of exacting a balance-sheet, signed and authenticated by its Managing Directors.

4. It having been resolved at a general meeting, after the expiration of the actual insurances on the ships of the Company, not to insure the same ships for more than a fourth part of their value, and for not less than 20,000 £, the Board will effect, or cause the said insurance to be effected in Portugal or in England, apportioning the said value of 20,000 £. on the actual ships as may seem most convenient, depositing in your keeping the respective policies of insurance.

5. That in the event of the non-payment of the interest, a reduction stipulated, or on the non-acceptance or non-payment of the bills which you shall draw, or on the non-fulfilment of the above conditions, you shall be entitled at once to sue the Company for the amount of the whole of your credit; and, besides, to exercise all the right which the said debentures confer upon you, and for the punctual fulfilment of all and each one of the said conditions; and besides this, to exact the losses and damages which shall result to you from the want of punctuality. The amount of your credit being considered by means of all legal effects, with privilege of preference over whatsoever other creditor (except the bearers of debentures lately issued by the Company) upon the value of the steamers of the said Company, and whatsoever else forms part of its assets, and by the present commercial obligation with the value of a public document.

6. That in the unexpected event of the two bills drawn by the said M. Fortunato Chamiço, jun., on the said Messrs. Bruno Silva and Son failing to be accepted and paid, the anterior contracts of 4 November and 20 December 1838, shall remain in their full vigour, and shall subsist in everything for all their purposes, and the instrument in writing for the removal and extinction of the special mortgage of the steamer Africa and Don Pedro shall be void, we declare to you that by the numbering of the debentures which we now deliver to you, they are the first which we have issued, 1 to 161.

We are, with all respect, your very obedient servants,
For the Union Mercantile Company,
The Directors and Manager,

Duarte Medlicott.
Fortunato Chamiço, jun.
José Antonio Pereira Serzedillo.
Manuel José Ribeiro.
Candido de F. Abreu (the Manager).

Recognition:—I recognise the signatures before me as those of the Directors and Manager.

In witness of the truth,

Lisbon, 28 December 1839.

Antonio d'Abranches Coelho.

THE Reasons stated to the Portuguese Courts for raising an Action to enforce the Conditions of the foregoing Contract.

William Schaw Lindsay, British subject, claims to bring an action against the Union Mercantile Company, represented by the Directors and Manager.

1. By a certain instrument in writing, dated 28 December 1859, the Directors of the Union Mercantile Company, Edward Medlicott, Fortunato Chamiço, jun., José Antonio Pereira Serzedillo, and Manuel José Ribeiro, and the Manager, Candido de Freitas Abreu, as representing the same Company, confess, after deducting the value of the bills therein mentioned, that they owe unto the plaintiff the sum of 16,100 £, being the remainder of the sum of 27,500 £, the half of 55,000 £; for which sum, the same Company, in the year 1858, bought two steamers from the plaintiff, which were given up by him in the same year, at the time of the purchase, respectively known as the (Clarendon) Africa, and (Ireland) Don Pedro.

2. And it appears by the said writing, that the defendants, the Directors and Manager of the Company, in its name, bound themselves to pay the plaintiff the above-mentioned sum of 16,100 £. in the space of eight years, by annual instalments of 12 per cent., paid every twelve months, at the end of the month of December of each of the eight years; and interest at 6 per cent. on the capital, every six months, at the end of June and December. They delivered to the plaintiff 161 debentures of the Company, each of the value of one hundred pounds, in which the above mentioned form of payment was equally established on all; as also the said interest and the privilege of the credit of the plaintiff, was also acknowledged and declared in the contract, as more clearly is seen and appears in the writing referred to, the original of which is the Document No. 1, forming an integral part of, and being the proof of, this and of the preceding article, and of the others referring thereunto, and also a copy of one of the Debentures, Document No. 2, in the public form hereunto annexed.

3. It further appears by the said writing, that by the first condition of the contract of which it treats, it was stipulated that in case the direction should not remit funds to the plaintiff in satisfaction of the instalment and interest belonging to each six months before the first day of June and December of each year, it should be lawful for the plaintiff before it was due to draw a bill or bills on the Company for the amount of the instalment and interest.

4. That the Company having paid the instalments and respective interests until June 1861, but having neglected to remit the funds on the 1st of December of the said year, for the payment of the instalment and interest to fall due on the last day of that month, the plaintiff, in conformity with the first condition referred to, drew two bills on the Company for the amount of the instalment and interest, and 97*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* more, which the direction, on the part of the Company, refused to accept, on the false pretexts on their protests that they had no funds of the plaintiffs in their hands, as can be seen and appears in their protest for non-acceptance, and is presented as an integral part of, and in proof of, this article in the original, accompanied by a legal translation, being Documents Nos. 3 & 4, hereunto appended.

5. That the sum of 97*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* which the plaintiff included in the above-mentioned bills was the amount of money he had paid in London for account of, and by order of, the Company, and of which he sent an account to the Company, and of which he had sent an account to the direction, which is acknowledged, and in which he included the expenses of the bills in the form of the account here appended, the same as the one sent to the Company, being Document No. 5.

6. That by the fifth condition of the contract of which the said particular writing treats, it was expressly stipulated that if the Company should not pay the interest and amortisation therein stipulated, or should not accept the bills that the plaintiff drew, in accordance with the first condition, or should not fulfil any of the conditions, it should be lawful for the plaintiff at once to demand from the Company the total amount which the Company might owe him at that time, and also claim all losses and damages that might result to him thereby.

7. That by the non-acceptance of the bills, the case thus foreseen in the fifth condition referred to has occurred, and the plaintiff has a right to exact the payment of the whole of his credit, which, after deducting the three instalments paid by the defendants, amounts now to the sum of 14,100*l.*, and the interest due from the 1st of June of last year, 1861, and that which shall become due, until the effective payment and recovery of the whole capital.

8. That the defendants, on the part of the Company, did not fulfil the second condition of the contract, by which they bound themselves not to alienate or mortgage the vessels, or any other property whatsoever of the Company's, either in whole or in part, without previously consulting the plaintiff in writing.

9. That the defendants, in the name of the Company, raised a loan of 450,000,000 reis, mortgaging especially all the vessels and property of the Company, that being the loan to which the law of the 10th September 1861 refers, without having consulted the plaintiff, as they had bound themselves to do.

10. That by the non-acceptance of the bills and non-fulfilment of the second condition of the contract in the terms that were stipulated on the fifth condition, the plaintiff, beyond the right to exact the entire payment of his credit by those means, abolished the form of payment by instalments; the plaintiff has a right to claim and have from the Company the damages and losses which he has sustained in consequence of the non-fulfilment of the contract.

11. That they are real damages and losses that the plaintiff has sustained, and that by the said fifth condition he has a right to claim from the Company; these are in consequence of his being compelled to abandon important affairs which required his presence in London to come to this capital, in order to obtain the payment of his money; the expenses which he has been put to here, and travelling expenses here, both coming and going; the expenses of this case and of all other judicial questions that he may enter into with the Company on account of the non-fulfilment of the conditions of the contract, and to secure the payment and privilege of his credit; besides those which come within the rule of costs, as fees for advocates, and all other expenses he may make in sustaining the law-suit, or in executing the sentence in order to obtain payment of his money.

12. That the plaintiff has a further right to claim from the Company the expenses he may may incur by the stay in this capital of Mr. Howe, a barrister of the tribunals of London, whom the plaintiff was obliged to bring with him, and to leave in charge of his affairs here, with the necessary powers to promote the institution and prosecution of the presentation, and of any others that may be necessary, and to furnish the necessary information for the purpose.

13. COPY of DESPATCH from the Right Hon. Earl Russell to Sir A. C. Magenis.

Foreign Office, 28 October 1862.

I DIRECTED Mr. Herries' Despatch of the 1st inst., reporting on Mr. Lindsay's case, to be communicated to that gentleman; and I now enclose for your information a letter which I have received from Mr. Lindsay, setting forth the grounds on which he considers that he is justified in requesting the interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

Her Majesty's Advocate General, to whom I have referred Mr. Lindsay's letter, has reported that there is at present no adequate ground for any formal intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government in this case; but you will watch the further legal proceedings which appear to be pending, and, if necessary, again report to me on the subject.

You will return Mr. Lindsay's letter and its enclosures to this Department.

I am, &c.

COPY of LETTER from Mr. Hammond to Mr. Lindsay, M.P.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 28 October 1862.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to state to you that his Lordship has referred to the proper law adviser of the Crown your letter of the 21st inst., setting forth the grounds on which you request the intervention of Her Majesty's Government in your behalf, in regard to a suit in which you are engaged at Lisbon, against the Portuguese Company called the "União Mercantil," and I am to acquaint you that Lord Russell is advised that the circumstances of the case are not such as to justify the formal intervention of Her Majesty's Government in the legal prosecution of your claim—at all events, in the present state of the question; but his Lordship will instruct Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon to watch the further legal proceedings in the case, and, if necessary, again to report to this office on the subject.

I am, &c.

COPY of DESPATCH from Sir A. C. Magenis to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

Lisbon, 3 January 1863.

MR. LINDSAY, M.P., whose claims have been the subject of your Lordship's Despatches of last year to me and to Mr. Herries, has been here since the end of November.

Those claims are against the "União Mercantil," a Company formed here under royal sanction in 1858, for the purpose of establishing communication by a regular line of steam-packets between this capital, the Azores, and Angola, and incidentally against the Portuguese Government, for having permitted and sanctioned what Mr. Lindsay believes to have been a gross violation of the Statutes of the Company, and thereby causing loss and injury to the shareholders.

Your Lordship instructed me in your Despatch of October 28th, that Her Majesty's Advocate General, to whom you had referred Mr. Lindsay's case, was of opinion "that there is at present no adequate ground for any formal intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government in this case," and I have accordingly abstained from strictly official interference with the Portuguese Government in the assistance which I have endeavoured to give to Mr. Lindsay.

I have, however, introduced him personally to the Duke of Loulé, who is the Minister of Public Works, the Department to which this question belongs, as well as of Foreign Affairs, and I have introduced him by letter to the Minister of Finance. I have also addressed several private letters to the Duke of Loulé, urging his Excellency to come to an amicable arrangement with Mr. Lindsay, who had offered to meet the Company and the Government in a very liberal and conciliatory spirit, in order to avoid what I thought might otherwise become a very complicated and embarrassing question.

I think it unnecessary to forward copies of those private letters to your Lordship, because I do not discuss in them the particular merits of the case, and only recommend its amicable arrangement as proposed by Mr. Lindsay, or complain of the delays which he had met with here.

The Duke of Loulé, after three weeks' delay, replied to my letters, in a private letter also, dated the 30th ultimo, going into the merits of the case, stating the grounds upon which he thought Mr. Lindsay's claims were against the Company, and not against the Government, and "this case is not of a nature to admit of official discussion between our two Governments."

I of course communicated that letter to Mr. Lindsay, and he addressed to me an answer to it, dated 1st January, which I communicated to the Duke of Loulé on the 2d instant, and copy of which I enclose herewith.

The Portuguese legal adviser of Mr. Lindsay, and the English shareholders whom he represents, presented on their behalf, in the month of October last, a very long protest to this Government against the illegal proceedings of the direction of the União Mercantil, and holding the Government responsible to those shareholders, in consequence of having permitted and sanctioned the alleged illegalities of the direction, and Mr. Lindsay has had this long document translated, and he requests me to transmit it to your Lordship, which I accordingly do.

He has also submitted it to five eminent lawyers of this capital, who give it as their opinion that the Government is responsible to those shareholders who protested, and I enclose copy and translation of their opinion.

I have submitted the protest and the above-mentioned opinion to the Portuguese law adviser of this mission, and he coincides in the opinion of his brother lawyers, provided the facts set forth can be proved, which Mr. Lindsay asserts can be done by the books of the Company, and I enclose copy and translation of this latter opinion.

I also enclose, in further elucidation of the case, copy of the Statutes of the Company.

I have communicated to the Duke of Loulé copy of the opinion which Mr. Lindsay had obtained, and his Excellency has since informed me he had submitted it and the protest to the law officers of the Crown. I am unacquainted with what their opinion may be, but it is probable that, if they do not disagree with the opinions I enclose, they will at least dispute the facts on which they are founded.

The

The entire case is now submitted to your Lordship's consideration, and Mr. Lindsay appears convinced that it is one which will call forth your Lordship's official interference.

In justice to Mr. Lindsay I must add, that although he appears to me to have been treated very unjustly by the Company, he has evinced a very conciliatory spirit, and desires at some sacrifice of his interests to arrive at an amicable settlement, a proposal which he repeats in his last letter of the 1st instant, a copy of which I communicated to the Duke of Loulé, and consents to leave his capital in the enterprise, provided the Company is reorganised.

I must also state, that at my request Mr. Lindsay met at my house Mr. E. Medicott, an English merchant of this place, and president of the direction of the Company, and that, as far as I could judge, he refuted completely the counterclaims brought against him by the Company, while he declared, that if it could be shown there existed an equitable though not a legal claim against him, that, as an English merchant and a man of honour, he would meet it in the fairest spirit.

Enclosure in No. 21.

(Translation.)

Sire,

WILLIAM SCHAW LINDSAY, Miles Strenger, William Tomkinson Riley, and John Bulley, British subjects, and shareholders of the Portuguese Company, "União Mercantil," respectfully come and petition your Majesty, and present their solemn protest and claim against the illegal, abusive, and arbitrary acts practised by the directors and manager of said Company in the administration and management of its transactions, and against the illegal, null, and unqualified way in which they proceeded at the sittings of the shareholders' general meetings, taken place in the evenings of the 15th April and 4th May in this present year, in order to inculcate, as an expression of the shareholders' votes, those resolutions pretended to have been there taken; the whole with manifest violation of the clearest and most express provisions of the Company's Statutes, and of the principles of universal right and justice, formal contempt and offence of the petitioners' rights, and most grievous damage of their lawful rights and interests.

For the better demonstration of the very just grounds for the petitioners' protest and claim, they will commence by succinctly narrating the circumstances that occasioned their being shareholders of the Company "União Mercantil," which will also serve for the better estimating and appreciating the directors' and manager's acts, whereof the petitioners complain, and which give place to their claim.

In 1857, the Royal Portuguese Steam Navigation Company still existing, its directors, Duarte Medicott, Fortunato Chamiço, junior, Joaquim Henriques Fradesso da Silveira, and Candido de Freitas Abreu, requested the first petitioner, William Schaw Lindsay, through the commercial firm of Pinto and Perez, of London, and through Augustus Ferreira Pinto Bastos, to sell them the steam-vessel named "Lindsay," at present possessed by the Company "União Mercantil," under the name of "D^a Estephania."

In August in the same year the said directors wrote to first petitioner, requesting him to come to this capital, so as to agree in a direct manner with regard to the contract and conditions for the purchase of said vessel, saying that the purchase of this vessel, and others they wanted, was of the greatest urgency to them.

Although the first petitioner had not the slightest acquaintance with the parties that made him that request, yet influenced by the information he had of them, he resolved to accede to their request, and in the following September came to this capital.

It was then that said directors communicated to first petitioner the project they had formed, conjointly with several other Portuguese merchants, of establishing a new company, instead of the Royal Portuguese Company, and for which they expected obtaining from the Portuguese Government a more advantageous concession, and that they desired to know whether the first petitioner would be willing to sell to the new Company some more of his vessels on the same conditions; they on that occasion agreed upon for the sale of the vessel "Lindsay," for the price of 19,000*l.*; the conditions being, that one-half of this price should be at once paid by means of credits on London, and that only on the payment being realised should the delivery of the vessel take place, and the other half in shares of that Company, or of the one that the directors desired to establish in its stead.

The first petitioner informed of the basis for the new Company, and it appearing to him that on such basis the enterprise would have the proper elements to maintain itself, and prosper under an economical and well-directed administration, he declared that he had no doubt in selling to the new Company any of his vessels they might wish to buy on the same conditions as for the sale of the vessel "Lindsay," as far as the form of payment of the price of sale agreed upon for each of them went.

And said directors and the other Portuguese merchants, with whom they were in combination for establishing the new Company, showing the greatest desire that the first petitioner should figure in the proposal they desired for that effect, immediately to lay before the Portuguese Government, they thinking that it would be advantageous for them, so that the Government might be willing to accept the proposal, the first petitioner agreed to be one of the parties signing the proposal, which was effectively laid before the Portuguese Government.

After a delay of hardly four or five days the first petitioner left for London.

Said directors proceeded on in the negotiations with the Government for the establishment of the new Company, but the Government would not accede to accept the proposed basis, and required alterations on important points.

The alterations required by the Government having been communicated to the first petitioner, he declared that he did not accept them, because he considered them very unfavourable, and that he retired from taking any part in the establishment of the new Company.

The then ministers to the Portuguese Crown who showed the greatest desire that the establishment of the new Company should be effected, no doubt considered it convenient, if not even necessary, that the first petitioner should take a part in it, and that his name should figure in it, and the parties proposing its establishment manifested the same feelings, as they not only asked with the most pressing requests that the first petitioner should accede to accept the alterations presented by the Government; but, also, on its behalf, the then Minister of the "Public Works" honoured the first petitioner by addressing him several letters, inviting him and pressing him to accede to, and accept, the alterations with the modifications the Government did in them, and seeming to make the realisation of the establishment of the new Company depend on the acquiescence of the first petitioner, and assuring him that the enterprise being of great advantage to Portugal and its Government, it would be no less profitable for the interested parties.

The pressing requests of that minister on behalf of the Portuguese Government obliged the first petitioner to take part in the establishment of the Company, considering that he thus did a service to this country and to its Government, and that in its direct interference he had a secure guarantee for the funds he might place in the enterprise; and having been resolved by these circumstances, he answered that he acquiesced, and with the date of 16th March 1858, he constituted as his legal attorney, Manoel Perez Lozano, and in his absence, Francisco Antonio Flores, for either of them to draw up and sign in his name the constituição (institution), or instrumento (deed), for the establishment of the Steam Navigation Company, "União Mercantil," and for everything that might be necessary for its formation.

This power of attorney is found copied in the printed tract published by the Company's Board of Directors, containing the official acts of the Government, the contract with same, and the Company's Statutes.

The first petitioner's acquiescence seems to have removed the only obstacle the founders of the Company and the Portuguese Government thought was offered to its realisation, since so soon as there was a certainty of the first petitioner's lending himself to take a part in the establishment of the Company, the greatest haste took place in its realisation.

And thus, on the 3d May, in the said year 1858, the contract for the new enterprise was drawn up, and it was reduced to a public deed on the 5th day of the same month. On the 6th the royal decree was passed, declaring null and of no effect the concession granted to Low Brothers & Co., and to Theophilus Berney Philippon, and by these transferred to the Royal Portuguese Steam Navigation Company, and approving the contract for the establishment of the new enterprise. On the 11th of said month the Statutes of the new Company were reduced to a public deed; on the 14th approved by a Royal Decree.

The new Company being thus established, and its directors having towards the end of said month of May remitted to the first petitioner the credits for the payment of one-half of the price of the steam-vessel "Lindsay," in the form agreed upon, the first petitioner made an immediate delivery of her to the parties deputed by the Board of Directors to receive her, and the vessel entered the service of their lines under the denomination she has at present, of "D^a Estephania."

The Board of Directors requested the first petitioner to sell them two other vessels, the "Clarendon" and the "Ireland," pretending to make the important alteration, that instead of the immediate payment of one-half their price, it should be done in instalments at long dates.

The first petitioner did not accede to it, because such proposal was not in accordance with the one previously made him; that the sales of any other vessels should be guided, as far as payment went, by the conditions for the steam-vessel "Lindsay," it having been under this supposition that the first petitioner had declared that he was ready to sell to the Company any of his vessels.

Nevertheless, forced by the pressing requests of the Board of Directors, and of their agents at London, and by the desire of aiding the enterprise in the establishment of which he had taken part, and was already interested as a shareholder, he agreed to grant long dates for the payment of the price of the two vessels, and entered with the Commissioners of the Board of Directors into a temporary contract for the sale, dated the 4th November in the said year 1858, dependent nevertheless on the realisation of the definitive contract; the price of sale being for the vessel "Clarendon," at present named "Africa," 25,000 £, and for the "Ireland," at present named "Dm. Pesho," 30,000 £, one half of those prices being paid in the Company's shares at their nominal value.

The first petitioner resolved coming to this capital, not only to agree in a direct manner with the Board of Directors upon the definite conditions and securities, but also for the better informing himself of the circumstances in which the enterprise found itself, and for assuring himself of the intentions of the Government with regard to the enterprise, and of the confidence he should set on the guarantee of said Government with regard to the larger funds he was about to employ in the Company.

The satisfactory answers he received from the then ministers to the Crown at the interviews he had with them, persuaded the first petitioner that he should have no doubt in treating with the Board of Directors for the definite sale of the two vessels, which was effected by deed on the 20th December 1858, in the notes of the notary public, Antonio d'Abranches Coelho, he stipulating that the form of payment for the one half the price of the two vessels payable in cash should be in six bills, accepted by the Board of Directors at 6, 12, 18, 24, 30, and 36 months' date, and the other half should be paid in the Company's shares at their nominal value, and establishing the especial mortgage of the two vessels, and other conditions of security and guarantee as found in said deed.

And thus the first petitioner received in payment of one half the price of the three vessels, 1,850 shares of the Company, and the Company by this means issued so large a number of shares, receiving at once their full value in the amount of the price of the vessels.

The second petitioner, Miles Strenger, and Henry Maugham, who is at present represented by the third petitioner, William Tomkinson Riley, had a share of interest in the three vessels, and the fourth petitioner, John Bulley, and George Western (deceased), a share of interest in the steamer "Lindsay."

As well on the occasion of the sale of the steam-vessel "Lindsay," as afterwards on the occasion of the sale of the other two vessels, "Clarendon" and "Ireland," the first petitioner declared to the Board of Directors the amount of shares that should be registered for each of the parties interested.

And effectively the Board of Directors did register with date of the 28th May 1858, to the parties interested in the vessel "Lindsay," the shares that belonged to each of them; and on the 23d January 1859, those belonging to each of the parties interested in the vessels "Clarendon" and "Ireland."

In result of that distribution the first petitioner, William Schaw Lindsay, became a shareholder for 1,266 shares, representing the capital of 25,000 £; the second petitioner, Miles Strenger, for 230, representing the capital of 4,600 £; Henry Maugham, represented by the third petitioner, William Tomkinson Riley, for 234, representing the capital of 4,680 £; and the fourth petitioner, John Bulley, for 46, representing the capital of 920 £; and the deceased, George Western, for 74, representing the capital of 1,480 £; the total number of shares being 1,850, and as such registered on said dates in the Company's books.

It was thus that the petitioners became shareholders of the Company; the amount of the 1,850 shares being at once fully paid, and each of the bearers of them acknowledged as a shareholder from the 28th May 1858.

The directors, Duarte Medlicott, José Antonio Pereira Serzedello, Joaquim Henriques Fradesso da Silveira, and Fortunato Chamiço, junior, and the manager Candido de Freitas Abreu, registered themselves shareholders for 300 shares each of them; Francisco Antonio Flores for 125, and Pinto and Perez for another 125; total 1,750.

Up to the 31st March 1861 no more shares were issued, so the Board of Directors declared in an account, in form of a balance-sheet, dated the 1st April, and closed on the 31st March in said year, whereof they sent a copy to the first petitioner, signed by the manager at the end of November.

In the above-mentioned account, the Board of Directors mentioned the number of shareholders that there were up to the date thereof, and the number of shares of each of them, and it is there found, Manoel José Ribeiro, as shareholder for 82 shares, transferred to him by Joaquim Henriques Fradesso da Silveira, on the same day that he had registered himself as a shareholder for the 300; as these 82 are registered to Manoel José Ribeiro on the same date, of 28th May 1858, when the 300 were registered to the former, Henry Roberts and Edmund Ellicott, as shareholders each for 20 shares, which were transferred to them by Duarte Medlicott and by Candido de Freitas Abreu; and Antonio M. d'A. C. e Brito for five, which were transferred to him by José Antonio Pereira Serzedello.

In contradiction with the declaration thus made by the Board of Directors in the account or balance-sheet, whereof they sent copy to the first petitioner, in the Company's books several shares appear registered to the directors on the date of 31st March 1861.

In October 1858 the Board of Directors agreed with the director Joaquim Henriques Fradesso da Silveira for the purchase from him of the steamer "Tejo," for 32,000 milreas, giving him in payment of the price 355 shares, but immediately afterwards they altered this agreement, substituting it by the one they effectively realised, and which was of the seller deducting 20 per cent from the price, which thus reduced to 21,000 milreas: the Board of Directors accepted his bills for that amount at 6, 8, 10, and 12 months' date, it not being therefore paid in shares, and the 355 continued remaining with the Company, as the others not yet issued, as they were not even registered to the selling director.

The Board of Directors did not mention them as issued, neither in the above-mentioned account or balance-sheet, nor on any of the occasions on which they spoke of shares issued.

This succinct narrative which the petitioners have done, will serve for the better estimating the illegality and arbitrariness of the acts practised by the Board of Directors, which they shall now narrate.

By the terms of the Article 33 of the Company's Statutes, no resolution tending to their modification can be taken by the general meeting unless the shareholders present represent one-half of the social funds.

From so positive and decisive a provision results, as a necessary consequence, that the alterations of the Statutes can only be made by a general meeting, and in which are present the legal number of shareholders, and that they do represent at least one-half of the social funds.

By the provision of Article 26 of the same Statutes, the general meeting can only be held as constituted when there be 30 shareholders present, representing a fourth part of the social capital; and only in the case that in the first meeting that number should not appear, and that it be therefore necessary to call a second meeting, does the Article 31st provide that on the second call the meeting may be constituted with 20 shareholders, whatever be the number of shares they represent.

Up to the 31st March 1861, the number of shareholders registered in the Company's books was only 16, and amongst them one for only five shares, who, therefore, could have no vote in the general meeting; and with such a number, in presence of the provisions of Article 26, the general meeting could not be constituted.

Nevertheless, the Article 30 providing that admittance be given to the holder of shares transferable by indorsement, and which he shall have caused to be registered in the Company's books 30 days previous to the one fixed for the sitting of the general meeting, and which shall be done in the terms and in the form therein declared, the circumstance might well be given, that the Board of Directors having called a general meeting, there should appear, either the number of 30 shareholders, so that it might be at once constituted by virtue of the first call, or at least the number of 20, so as to constitute a general meeting on the second sitting, in the terms of the Article 31, as the shareholders registered in the Company's books might have transferred part of their shares, or make such transference at the proper time, so that the legal number of shareholders might appear.

The circumstance that in the books the necessary number was not registered of shareholders to constitute a general meeting, either in the terms of the Article 30, or in the terms of the Article 31 of the Statutes, was not therefore a sufficient motive for the Board of Directors not calling a general meeting, that they might resolve on what, according to the Statutes, was of their special and privative competency, as that number of shareholders might appear in consequence of its call.

And when the meeting should have been called the first and second time, and at neither of them the necessary number of shareholders were to meet so as to constitute a general meeting, then it would become necessary to try to remedy this impossibility thus proved, of satisfying with the provisions of the Statutes, and in a meeting of all the parties interested establish their convenient alteration, and request their approval from the Government.

And so far did the directors and managers know, that notwithstanding that a sufficient number were not registered in the Company's books as shareholders to constitute a general meeting, it might appear, that in 1860, they projected calling a meeting, and to have it advertised in the English papers for the 28th day of May in said year, but which they did not carry into effect; and when, in the present year, they wanted one to sit, they distributed a part of their shares amongst their relations, employés, and friends.

In one of the Company's books, and in the beginning of which it is said that it is intended for writing therein the records of the sittings of the general meetings, several records of the sittings named "Sittings Extraordinary" are entered.

The first of these sittings therein-mentioned is said to have taken place on the 7th July 1858, figuring in it as chairman, the director, Duarte Medlicott; and as secretary, the one belonging to the Board of Directors; and as shareholders present, the five directors, the manager, Manoel José Ribeiro, and Francisco Antonio Flores, who is said to be there for himself, and as attorney to the first petitioner Lindsay, and as attorney to Pinto and Perez.

The character of a general meeting was not given to this sitting, nor was a president, vice-president, and secretary elected; and, in fact, in nowise could such a sitting have the character of a general meeting, as neither had it been preceded by a call in the form fixed in the Article 35; nor could it be constituted with that number of shareholders; nor, finally, had Francisco Antonio Flores a power of attorney from the first petitioner to represent him in a general meeting, as he only had the one the first petitioner had given him for drawing up the contract for the establishment of the Company; nor could the same attorney represent two shareholders, as it is expressly prohibited by the Article 28 of the Statutes.

The same thing happened on the following sitting extraordinary, that sat on the 27th of the said month of July, on the 2d and 4th August, and 5th November 1858, in all which sittings the same parties appeared; and Flores signing for himself, and as attorney of the first petitioner, and of Pinto and Perez, and Duarte Medlicott acting as chairman.

In the sitting on the 4th August, the motion of the director, Joaquim Henriques Fradesso da Silveira, that Manoel José Ribeiro, who already de facto took part in the works works of the Board of Directors, be invited to be an effective director, and having as such all the benefits, was decided upon.

Such sittings can by no means be considered and qualified as sittings of the general meetings, as they are wanting in all the conditions required by the Statutes which constitutes the law of the company.

And the second and fourth petitioners, as also Henry Maugham and George Western, being already at that time registered as shareholders in the company's books, a general meeting could not be constituted without contempt of the law, and of the rights of these shareholders unless they were called for that effect.

And, in fact, those so-called "Sittings Extraordinary," were nothing more than sittings of the Board of Directors, to which the directors bethought themselves of giving that denomination.

But they at once manifested the thought which they afterwards so openly set into execution, of considering themselves with a right of ruling, by their own free will, the business of the company, despising and tramping under foot the provisions of the Statutes.

And then, at the already mentioned sitting of the 4th August 1858, they associated a director against the provisions of the transitory Article of the Statutes which fixed the Board of Directors as composed of five members, and against the provisions of the Article 45 of the same Statutes, granting to the general meeting the right of appointing the members of the Board of Directors.

At the time when the first petitioner was at this capital to treat with the Board of Directors on the definite sale of the two vessels "Clarendon" and "Ireland," and on the day, 15th December 1858, the sixth sitting extraordinary took place therein, entering the six directors and the manager, the first petitioner, and Manoel Perez Lozano as representative of the firm Perez, say of the firm Pinto and Perez.

It does not appear from the records of this sitting, that any information was given of what had taken place on the five former ones.

The first petitioner completely ignoring the Portuguese language, was not aware of anything but what was communicated and explained to him by the interpreter, and, therefore, though he should see the books of the minutes, he could not for all that acquaint himself with what was therein contained.

The said sitting on the 15th December could no more than the others be considered as a general meeting: as for that effect, it was wanting in the conditions required by the Statutes, seeing that already at that time the second and fourth petitioners, and Henry Maugham and George Western were registered in the company's books as shareholders, and should therefore be called for the sitting; and because there were not the legal number of shareholders.

For all that, yet, as the first petitioner represented the interests of the two other petitioners, and of Henry Maugham, and of George Western, at the above-mentioned sitting, there was not so much illegality as in the former ones. As it may well be said, that on that occasion (though not in the legal manner marked out in the Article 27 of the Statutes), there were represented all those at the time interested in the company.

At this sitting the following resolutions amongst others were taken.

1st. That the Company should not enter into new enterprises, nor in the purchase of new steamers, without the consent of the general meeting.

2d. That the Board of Directors were authorised to ask the Government's authorisation for the company's capital to be raised to 900,000,000 reis, and forming part of the capital to be increased, a third issue of shares up to the sum of 225,000,000 reis.

A seventh sitting took place on the 21st day, in the above-mentioned month of December 1858, wherein were present the same parties who had intervened in the former one, which took place on the 15th day; and in the respective record it is said that the first petitioner, William Schaw Lindsay, was chairman, and that the only resolution taken, on the motion of the director, Joaquim Henriques Fradesso da Silveira, was that at all the sittings of the general meetings, the secretary should present a list of all the shareholders.

It was on the 19th day of September 1859, that the eighth sitting extraordinary took place, formed of the directors; Medlicott, Ribeiro, Serzedello, Fradesso, and of the manager, Abreu, and of Edmund Ellicott; it being said that this last represented himself and the first petitioner, and Francisco Antonio Flores.

In the respective minutes, it is said that a list of the shareholders was presented, and that those present represented 3,475 of the 3,600 shares till then issued. A most inexact declaration, as besides it having been done on the false supposition that Edmund Ellicott had power from the first petitioner to represent him in such sitting, which is false, neither did those present at that sitting represent 3,475 shares, as the director Chamigo was absent, and the imagined representation of the first petitioner could only be for his 1,266 shares, from which it resulted that those present represented only 2,691 shares.

In the same minutes it is said that the motion of the director Manuel Jose Ribeiro, that the Government be asked for an authorisation for the company to issue policies, was resolved upon.

In December, in the same year, 1859, the first petitioner came to this capital, and by an invitation of the Board of Directors he intervened in a sitting that took place on the 24th day in the said month, which was considered a sitting extraordinary, and whereof a minute was drawn out in the respective book, making no reference therein to the former resolution, and only of the resolution taken, that the insurance on the vessels be for only one-half their value.

On the 2d day of April 1860, a tenth sitting extraordinary is given as having taken place, intervening therein only the directors and manager, and Edmund Ellicott saying that he represented himself and the first petitioner, and Francisco Antonio Flores.

In the respective record, it is said that the manager proving that there were but 15 shareholders, he proposed a reform of the Statutes, and for that effect he presented the following reform:—

Article 29.—That the shareholder having 10 shares should have for them one vote, and for every 10 shares one vote; no shareholder having more than 120 votes.

Sole paragraph.—That the shareholder who, at the time of the general meeting, should be guarantee on his own responsibility for any amount raised for the company's use, should have, besides the votes on his respective shares, one extra vote for every 900,000 reis be guaranteed.

Article 31.—The necessary number of shareholders not appearing at the first sitting in accordance with the Article 26, a second sitting should be called, and the meeting shall be constituted with the number present.

This proposal was given as approved of, and it was resolved that it be reduced to a public deed, and the Government's approval to be asked for it.

The 11th and last of the so-called sittings extraordinary, took place on the 1st June 1861.

It appears from the respective minutes, that at that sitting were present the directors, Duarte Medlicott, who figured as chairman; Henry Roberts, Serzedello, Ribeiro, Fradesso, Ellicott, who said that he represented himself and the first petitioner, and Francisco Antonio Flores.

It is said that the Board of Directors had presented their report and balance-sheet, closed on the 31st March in that year, for the effects of the contract of the 5th January approved by the "Carta de Lei" (law) of the 30th March in the same year, and which guaranteed the minimum interest of six per cent. on the capital realised belonging to the company, and that the balance-sheet showed a profit amounting to 38,301,609 reis.

It is further said, that the Board of Directors proposed—1st. That a gratification for their work, up to the date of the balance-sheet, be voted to the directors, at the rate of 200,000 reis per annum for each of them, and to the fiscal directors and manager 600,000 reis likewise for each of them, and to commence on the 1st January 1860. 2dly. That the net proceeds of the profit and loss account be divided amongst the existing shareholders, up to the date of the said balance sheet. 3dly. That the shareholders, whose credits proceed from the profit and loss, should have same paid them in the company's shares. 4thly. That to shareholders, debtors to the company, the result of the profit and loss account should be met in their accounts, and that whenever a credit should result from this operation in their favour, the same to be likewise paid in the company's shares, as far as possible liquidating the odd amounts with cash to all the shareholders.

This proposal was approved of.

The directors, Medlicott and Serzedello, said that they were ready to receive the amounts of some bills they held on the company due, and to be dued in shares, and it was thus resolved.

The mere mention of such acts practised by the directors and manager of the company, evidence their illegality and inevitable nullity, and the scandalous contempt of the most important and express provisions of the Statutes.

And the petitioners thought it necessary to refer to the transactions at those sittings, entitled sittings extraordinary, that they might be duly valued.

By the provisions of the Article 34 of the Statutes, the sittings extraordinary of a general meeting can take place as often as the directors and managers may think fit, or whenever as many shareholders as may represent one-fifth of the company's capital may require it.

And by the provisions of the Articles 35 and 36 of said Statutes, the sittings extraordinary of the general meeting should be preceded by a call by advertisements, in the same manner as for the ordinary meetings. And by the provisions of Article 38, at every meeting the qualification of each shareholder shall be verified, that takes part in it; and by the provisions of the Articles 26 and 31, a meeting can be only legally constituted by the form therein declared.

Therefore, there could be no legal sitting extraordinary of a general meeting unless all the shareholders were called after the manner prescribed in the Article 35, and the legal number of them were to meet together.

As the petitioners have already observed, none of the sittings extraordinary which the Board of Directors desire to usher as having the character of sittings extraordinary of the general meetings, had the conditions of legality required by the Statutes.

None of them was preceded by a call through advertisements. At none of them were the legal number of shareholders present. At none of them were the provisions of the Article 28 of the Statutes observed, which does not allow an attorney to represent more than one absent shareholder; at none of them was the prescription of the Article 38 observed, which ordains that the qualifications of the shareholders be proved, as Edmund

Ellicott

Ellicott was admitted to vote for first petitioner without his having any power or authorisation from him; the same party also voting for Francisco Antonio Flores.

And the directors and manager can find no excuse for the illegality of such acts, neither in the circumstance of the first petitioner having taken part in some of those sittings extraordinary, nor in the circumstance that there was not the sufficient number of shareholders to constitute a general meeting in the form prescribed in the Statutes.

For the first petitioner took part in some of those sittings extraordinary without considering them as signifying sittings of a general meeting, a title that was not given them, and supposing that they were nothing more than meetings of the Board of Directors, wherein the parties interested had taken part by invitation from the Board for that effect.

Furthermore that, as already observed, at the meetings or sittings extraordinary at which the first petitioner assisted, there was no allusion or reference made to the former ones, whereby it might be said that the first petitioner had approved the resolutions taken at them, or had sanctioned his being represented, as Edmund Ellicott arrogated to himself.

Thus, from the intervention the first petitioner had in some of these sittings extraordinary, his responsibility for the resolutions on those occasions taken can only be deduced, but by no means that thereby he was bound to approve what was done at the other sittings to his perfect ignorance, and figuring at them a false attorney in his name.

None of the resolutions taken at the sittings extraordinary, wherein the first petitioner took part, can be said to be acts exclusively belonging to a general meeting, except the one for the increase of capital of the company's taken at the sitting of the 15th December 1858.

But when the petitioners mentioned that sitting, they observed that at that sitting those then interested in the company were all present or represented, as the first petitioner was effectively authorised by those interested along with him in the three vessels, and consequently as it could not be considered as a resolution taken by a legal general meeting of the shareholders, it could nevertheless be reputed a resolution of all the then interested parties of the company.

The same did not happen with regard to the resolutions taken at the other sittings, wherein the name of the first petitioner was represented by a party who had no power for that effect from him, and who did not even present himself as representative of the petitioners, Miles Stringer and John Bulley, and George Maugham, and George Western, who were all shareholders, and with large number of shares, with votes at a general meeting, and as such registered in the company's books.

From the illegality with which the increase of the company's capital may have been voted, could not result, nor did it effectively result, any loss to the company, or to the shareholders, as no issue was made of the respective shares for that increase, nor could this issue take place without all the shares belonging to the primitive capital having been previously issued, and of which many are yet unissued.

And given that the shares of the increase of capital were issued, that would be a favourable circumstance for the company and for the shareholders, as it would indicate that the company thought itself in a prosperous state.

The circumstance that there was not the legal number of shareholders to form a general meeting, could by no means justify or excuse the illegality wherewith the directors and manager pretended to constitute de per se a general meeting, or to arrogate to themselves its attributes for revoking or altering the most important provisions of the Statutes, injuring the rights of the other shareholders, and establishing innovations hurtful to their interests and to those of the company; some of them at once in manifest benefit of the directors and manager, and others with the idea of qualifying themselves for securing to themselves an arbitrary administration of the company's business.

In fact, against the express provision of the Article 33 of the Statutes, which does not permit their being modified but by a resolution of a general meeting, formed of shareholders representing at least one-half the social funds, the directors and manager, at the sitting extraordinary of the 2d April 1860, proposed and deliberated upon the important alterations which are already mentioned when referring to the details of the minutes of that sitting extraordinary.

The directors—Duarte Medlicott, José Antonio Pereira Serzedello, Joaquim Henriques Fradesso da Silveira, and the manager, Candido de Freitas Abreu—had each taken 300 shares, and Francisco Antonio Flores 125. The directors, Manoel José Ribeiro, Henry Roberts, and Edmund Ellicott, represented as shareholders with the shares that some of the former had transferred to them from the 300 they had taken.

And thus, even that the director Edmund Ellicott did legally represent Francisco Antonio Flores, the shareholders present, and Flores represented by Ellicott, would only represent 1,625 shares, or a capital of 146,250,000 reis, which is not only far inferior to the company's primitive capital, but even inferior to one-half the amount of the capital of the shares issued.

It was doubtless to elude this provision of the law and its irritating clause of nullity, that they represented the first petitioner as being there represented by Edmund Ellicott, who lent himself to figure as representative of the first petitioner, so as to sanction resolutions which brought so direct an injury on him.

But Edmund Ellicott had no such representation, and the other directors had a certainty thereof, as they well knew that the first petitioner had never given him any power of attorney to represent him in sittings of the general meetings, ordinary or extraordinary.

The petitioner had by a letter authorised Edmund Ellicott to represent him, and to take care of his interests, but only and restrictly with the Board of Directors, and not to represent him in any general meeting.

And so much so that the manager, Candido de Freitas Abreu, writing to the first petitioner, dated 17th March 1860, and communicating to him that the Board of Directors had resolved to call a general meeting of the shareholders for the 28th day of May in said year, and charging him with the publication in the "Times," and in some other English newspapers, of the advertisement he sent him, he added that he was charged with making him thus acquainted thereof, that the first petitioner and the other parties interested who reside in England might have time to send, if they liked, the necessary powers of attorney, so that they might be represented at the said general meeting; adding, that a letter of authorisation was not sufficient.

It is, therefore, evident that the directors and manager were aware that Edmund Ellicott had no powers from the first petitioner to represent him at any general meeting, and that the manager asked him to give them to somebody.

And it was with reference with this projected sitting of a general meeting for the above said day 28th May, that the first petitioner wrote to Edmund Ellicott a letter declaring therein the meaning with which he authorised him to vote.

The sitting not having taken place, the authorisation was at an end.

And said Ellicott not being able to say that he was authorised by that letter to represent the first petitioner at the sitting extraordinary of the 2d April 1860, which could not have the character of a general meeting when it was advertised for the 28th May following, nor even could Ellicott at that date of 2d April have yet received the first petitioner's letter.

Thus, therefore, was the resolution for the alteration and reform of the Statutes taken at that sitting extraordinary manifestly illegal, and of an incurable nullity; with it nothing could be done, nor could it receive the approval from the Government without contempt of the law of the statutes, and most grievously offending the rights and lawful interests of the petitioners as shareholders.

Indeed, the first petitioner having by the Article 29 of the Statutes the right of having 126 votes at the general meeting because he was a shareholder of 1,266 shares, how could he be deprived of that right unless said Article were revoked or altered by the legal means marked out in the Statutes?

The Article 29 of the Statutes does not allow any shareholder to vote at a general meeting, but in relation to the number of shares he holds, corresponding one vote to every ten shares; therefore against this express provision the directors and manager would introduce that the shareholders who were guarantee for any sum raised for the company's use should have the right of voting, having a vote for every 900,000 reis guaranteed.

And thus they pretended establishing this much for their private interests; as they, figuring as guarantees for the sums they raised in the company's name, would thus secure for themselves a larger number of votes, and thereby overruling the resolutions that might be taken at the meetings.

And it was, perhaps, so as to prepare themselves by this means for the general meeting they had called, that they hastened to take such illegal resolutions instead of waiting to present them at the general meeting, which finally they did not realise.

And nevertheless these very important alterations that the directors and manager wanted to make in the Statutes was one more powerful motive to urge them to procure the realisation of the sitting of the general meeting, to which was added another no less strong motive, which was, that they had to submit to the approval of the general meeting, the proposal they had made to the Government in the petition dated the 26th March in the same year 1860, and which they could not contract for with the Government without previous authorisation from the general meeting unless offending the Statutes, and with abuse and illegality.

But the Board of Directors understood that they could in every thing do and undo as they pleased, as though the directors and manager were the only parties interested in the company.

It was thus that without consulting the general meeting, and without submitting to the approval of such meeting and obtaining therefrom the needful authorisation, the directors and manager celebrated with the Government the additional contract of the 5th January 1861.

And they did not even have this contract preceded by a phantom of authorisation, treating this object at some of those sittings extraordinary which they otherwise tried to make appear as having the character of an extraordinary general meeting.

By the express provision of the Article 39 of the Statutes, the Board of Directors was obliged to call the first ordinary meeting in the month of February following after the company had had one year of existence.

Therefore, the Board of Directors could not neglect calling the ordinary general meeting for February 1861, without violating so positive a provision of the Statutes.

And for not neglecting so to do another circumstance occurred, that of the Board of Directors soliciting from the Government an advance of money, and so as to realise the contract they needed, the authorisation of a general meeting for it.

Besides

Besides which, the company having began to exercise its enterprise in 1858, two years and a-half had gone by, and the Board of Directors needed presenting the accounts of their administration during that long period of time.

The Board of Directors unheeded and despised all this, by not calling the ordinary general meeting, nor even an extraordinary one, as though the directors and manager had no other law but their own will and caprice.

Instead of the ordinary general meeting, the directors and manager held one of the so-called "sittings extraordinary" on the 1st June 1861, composed solely and exclusively of the directors and manager, with the exception of Fortunato Chamiço, junior, who from the end of the year 1859 had retired from the Board, not taking any part in their acts.

And at that sitting, as appears from the respective record, of the contents whereof the petitioners have already made mention, they presented to themselves the report and balance-sheet up to the 31st March in that year; and although they did not remember then to declare them approved of, nevertheless they afterwards gave them as approved, as the petitioners hereinafter shall prove.

They did not arrest themselves here; they carried further on their arbitrariness, as they voted to themselves the gratifications that appear from the respective minutes, the contents whereof the petitioners have already mentioned.

The Article 24 of the Statutes provides—The Board of Directors shall have no salary until a general meeting shall determine to the contrary in presence of the results of the enterprise; the manager shall have a commission, which shall be fixed by a general meeting.

Though the provision of the law were not so express and determined, decency and morality asked that the directors and manager should not vote to their own selves gratifications, which signified the approval of their acts of administration and their good results for the company.

But the directors and manager pledged themselves to present a new and never seen proceeding in their administration and management of any company—the company are ourselves—and here the thought wherewith they showed by their acts that they were ruled.

And so as not to fix any limit to their arbitrariness, they having said at the said sitting extraordinary that the gratifications would commence being due on the 1st January 1860, they afterwards had them credited to themselves from 1858, as is easy to be seen from the accounts of each of them entered in the company's books.

Since to those who as simple should only have an annual gratification of 200,000 reis, is found in their respective accounts, under title of gratification up to the 31st December 1861, the sum of 880,000 reis, and thus in the same proportion to the fiscal directors and manager.

At this sitting extraordinary there is still another resolution found taken by the directors and manager, which confirms the exactness and truth of the appreciation the petitioners have now made of their acts; they resolved that the credits of the shareholders resulting from profit and loss should be paid them in the company's shares, thus determining a forced capitalisation of interests which they on that very occasion had declared were guaranteed by the Government to the shareholders; it is a way of issuing shares different from the one established by the Statutes.

The month of February in the present year arrived, and still the Board of Directors understood that they could continue despising the determinations of the Statutes, neglecting to call a sitting of an ordinary general meeting for that month.

However, an occurrence induced the directors and manager to change plans.

In January in the present year the first petitioner came to this capital to claim from the Board of Directors the fulfilment of a contract they had effected, and which the directors did not fulfil; and on that occasion he wrote to the Board of Directors asking them explanations on sundry items of the accounts closed on the 31st March 1861, whereof he had received a copy at the end of November signed by the manager.

The Board of Directors who had taken the resolution of warring against the first petitioner, and who did not wish to give him the explanations he asked for, they had recourse to the shift of putting him off for a general meeting that was to take place.

It was thus that the Board of Directors resolved to call a meeting, say, to call a sitting of a general meeting for the 15th day of April.

But the Board of Directors was conscious of the illegality and arbitrariness of their acts, not to desire exposing themselves to the resolutions of a general meeting without preparing a means of securing at such a meeting votes that, in spite of the law, of justice, and of morality, would approve whatever they might wish to be approved.

Therefore, the directors and manager formed their plan, and began immediately to put it into execution, now having some of their shares registered to their relatives, clerks, and friends, now making efforts for some of them to take shares in a way to make sure a number of votes in their favour that might warrant their victory.

As they had the company's books at their disposal, they could have the registers entered on the dates they thought best, as the registers are not found in the respective book in a running order; each register is separately entered on one of its sheets.

And the petitioners do not know whether the gaps are already filled up which were found in many of the registers even after the sitting of the general meeting, on the 15th

April; and especially in those said to have been done in January of the present year, as they had neither day nor month declared on them.

The Board of Directors had recourse to another expedient for the better preparing themselves to approve all their own acts at the general meeting.

By the provision of the Article 41 of the Statutes, the Board of Directors was obliged to have the balance-sheet, their opinion, and report they should present to the general meeting, ready and printed, and distribute them among the shareholders who might ask for them, 15 days previous to the one fixed for the sitting of the meeting; and, during that period of time have the company's books open at its offices, so as to be examined by the shareholders who might choose so to do.

The Board of Directors had no scruple neither in despising the provisions of this Article of the Statute, as it did not suit them that the books should be examined; and increased their contempt of the law with the manner in which they proceeded with the attorneys constituted by the petitioners to represent them at the general meeting.

For the first petitioner's attorney having gone during that term of 15 days marked in the Statutes, to the company's offices asking to be allowed to examine the books, he was formally refused it, on behalf of the Board of Directors, under the pretext that by the above said Article the examination was allowed only and exclusively to the shareholders in person. And the first petitioner's attorney having laid his protest before the Court of First Commercial Appeal of this city, and which was legally brought to directors' knowledge, these latter, in their contra-protest, founded their refusal on the above said grounds.

The attorneys to the second, third, and fourth petitioners, did likewise go to the company's offices and presented the powers of attorney they had received from their constituents, so as to represent them at the general meeting, to the manager, and asked for a copy of the balance-sheet, opinion, and report, which, in compliance with the law, the Board of Directors should have had printed, so that after becoming acquainted with those papers the books might be easily examined; but to each of them was answered, on behalf of the Board, that the required copy of such papers could not be given to them as they were not yet printed; and they were told that the Board of Directors would send them to them so soon as their printing was done, and before the sitting of the general meeting, but which was not done.

It was only on the occasion of the sitting of the general meeting that the Board of Directors presented the printed copies of the balance-sheet, their opinion, and report, which were distributed amongst the shareholders present, and to the attorneys of those absent; and, nearly at the end of the sitting, a printed list of the shareholders was also distributed.

So soon as the chairman and secretary were elected, and the secretary to the Board of Directors had read the report and opinion, one of the directors proposed that a commission be named to report on the balance-sheet and report, seeing that they were unknown but on that occasion.

And, because the petitioners' attorneys required the observance of the provisions of the Articles 42 and 43 of the Statutes, on the part of the Board of Directors, and of those parties who charged themselves with defending, at all hazards, the directors' pretensions, a heated discussion took place, it being claimed that the provisions of the law should be put aside.

But this discussion made them abandon their determination of thus over-ruling the law; however, they tried to sophisticate the law, and that the idea should not appear in the minutes that the appointment of the commission had originated in the balance-sheet not having been approved of, so that the directors' caprice might be satisfied.

The attorneys to the petitioners laid before the meeting the refusal that the Board of Directors had made to the first petitioners' attorney, of allowing him to examine the books, and which refusal they had virtually made to the other attorneys, observing that the Article 27 of the Statutes providing that the shareholders who were absent might be represented by their attorneys, whether such attorneys were or were not shareholders. It was not possible that the law should deny to the attorney who had to vote for the shareholder, his constituent, the examination of the books, whereby he could only qualify himself to give a conscientious vote.

And indeed it being a principle and rule of hermeneutics that no law can or should be understood in such a way that from it contradiction and absurdity should result, palpable contradiction and manifest absurdity would result from the meaning that on behalf of the directors it was pretended to be given to the provisions of the Article 41 of the Statutes, as if it were not allowed to the attorney of an absent shareholder the examination of the books, so as to confer them with the balance-sheet and accounts, how can he give a conscientious vote, and with the necessary knowledge of the cause?

The petitioners' attorneys did also lay before them that in the Article 41 of the Statutes there was no expression that could mean the restriction that the Board of Directors pretended to attribute to it, and that neither by right nor by good sense could it be understood as there established, for as much as the expressions, that they may be examined by all the shareholders who may wish to see them, included the shareholders present as much as the absent; and Article 27 giving to these the right to have themselves represented by procuration, it is a legal consequence that by the intervention of the same they have the right to examine the books as a preparation for voting.

Nor

Nor can the means necessary for a proper vote be denied to the person who is admitted to the same in another's name.

And that, finally, in the disposition of Article 41, no declaration can be found that the examination can only be made by the shareholders themselves; when once the absent shareholder can be represented by procuration, according to the especial disposition of Article 27, the holder of the procuration was a competent and lawful person to exercise the rights of the shareholder he represented, in what regards the general meeting and the votings that took place at the same; and, according to the principles of right, the disposition of the law cannot be considered as annulled by a general disposition of the same, if express and especial mention of this annulment is not made.

Therefore, as in Article 41, it is not declared that to procurations of the absent shareholders should be forbidden the exercise of the right of the shareholders they might represent to examine the books; by it it cannot be understood that such prohibition is established.

A vote having been proposed whether the directors could, or could not, refuse to the procurations of the absent shareholders the examination of the books during the period in which the law allows it for the shareholders to prepare themselves for the votings at the general meetings; and the petitioners' attorneys finding that the members of the Board voted on the question thus put, they also, on their part, voted negatively, and with them voted the representatives of Pinto and Perez, and Francisco Antonio Flores.

The Board, or chair, however declared it was carried that the directors could refuse the examination of the books to the representatives of the absent shareholders, by 212 to 197 votes.

As the petitioners' representatives could not obtain a knowledge previously of the number of shareholders and votes they represented, and could not on this account verify, at that moment, if the declaration made by the chair was exact as to the result of the vote; for this reason they, on that occasion, confined themselves to protesting against it, sending to the chair their protest in writing; and demanding that it should be attached to the note of the proceedings.

Everything that thus passed at the sitting of the general meeting on the night of the 15th of last April, was in the presence of the commissary, and fiscal of the Government attached to the commissary.

The representatives of the petitioners had ascertained that at that general meeting were not present, or represented by procuration, the shareholders, Visconde de Monforte with 20 votes, nor George Western with seven votes; and also that at the time the said voting took place some of the shareholders who had come had left; and, confronting the result of the voting declared by the chair with the list of shareholders presented by the directors, they ascertained that the said declaration was entirely inexact, for there could not be 409 votes in the meeting, as was necessary for the result to be 212 votes against 197; nor could the result of the voting be what was announced by the chair.

Therefore, as there could not be more than 382, as the 20 votes of Visconde de Monforte and the seven of George Western were missing, and 192 being the majority of the 382 votes that there could only be at the meeting, the decision must have been in the negative, for in this sense voted the petitioners' representatives, and those of Pinto and Perez, and of Francisco Antonio Flores, who signed the above-mentioned protest, and which ought to appear in the proceedings; for this reason, without counting to the first petitioner more than 120 votes which were given him in the list of shareholders, instead of 126 which he had a right to for his 1,266 shares, there would have been 197 votes in the negative against 177 in the affirmative, and on this account the decision must have been for that (negative).

At the second general meeting, which took place on the 14th May, at night, after the reading of the minutes of the sitting of the above said meeting, one of the petitioners' representatives stated the inexactness with which the chair at the former meeting had declared that the decision had been carried in the negative, by counting votes which were not in the room, and by not declaring the decision such as it really ought to be considered, as by the minute it was clear that only 177 votes were negative.

The chair, however, declared that the declaration of the votes was exact, for to the 177 votes of the shareholders who voted in the negative, were to be added 35 votes corresponding to 355 shares of the company, mentioned in the list of shareholders which were given by the director, Duarte Medlicott, which made the number of 212; which it had been declared had made the decision in favour of the negative or refusal.

Against this outrageous proceeding of the Directors, and certainly never witnessed in the history of any company in the world, for one of the Board to take to himself the right of voting in the name of the company, and with votes corresponding to a certain number of shares not yet issued, the representatives of the petitioners protested, but in vain.

The Board of Directors had prepared the field, and could dispose of all the votes in compact order, excepting those of the petitioners, and Pinto and Perez's, as the new representative of Francisco Antonio Flores leagued himself with the directors.

But this majority of the meeting could not give a legal existence to an act repugnant to law, and to all the true principles of right, reason, and good sense, and incompatible with the nature and dispositions of a company.

The defenders of the directors wished to maintain the legality and competency with which the director, Duarte Medlicott, voted, according to his votes as a shareholder, with the 35 votes corresponding to the 355 shares, saying that these had been issued, and as such had reverted to the company and were in its possession; and that that director, in his position of president (a person not known by the Statutes), was the competent party to vote in the name of the company. The simple mention of such an argument shows at once how repugnant it is to good sense, and does not deserve the honour of sophistry.

The petitioners have already stated what took place respecting the purchase of the boat "Tejo," made by the directors to the director, Joaquim Henriques Fradesso da Silveira, and showed that the first agreement being broken, and a different form of payment being established by the second, the emission of the 355 shares never was realised.

The emission of shares is realised by the payment which the subscriber or taker of them makes of their amount in the manner allowed him; so much so, that the subscriber who has to pay by calls, if he fails to pay any of them, loses his right to what he had paid, and to the shares for which he has subscribed; and the Board ought to sell them by auction, the purchaser replacing the primitive subscriber in all rights anterior to the forfeit, as is expressed in Article 10 of the Statutes.

It is therefore perfectly inexact that the said 355 shares were ever issued.

It was only when the Board resolved to seize every means, even the most repugnant to law and morality, to prepare a vote that would answer the approval of all their acts and their continuation in the administration and management of the affairs of the company, that they thought of presenting the said shares as emitted.

Neither at the sittings extraordinary, to which the directors wished to give the character of extraordinary sittings of the general meeting, nor in their reports and petitions to Government, nor, finally, in the accounts, in the shape of balance-sheet, dated 1st April 1861, of which copy was sent to petitioner, did the Board think of considering those shares as issued, nor in the said sittings take account of the votes corresponding to them, and the member of the same Board called a president did not vote with the said shares.

However, if without offending the dispositions of the Statutes and the principles of law and sound reason, it could be admitted that the 355 shares ought to be considered as issued, although none of the capital which they represented had been received by the company, not having been, too, registered in any one's favour in the company's books, how can it be admitted that one of the directors could, at the general meeting of the shareholders, vote in the name of the company with the 35 votes, corresponding to the said 355 shares? Where can the Board find any argument to take on themselves the representation of the company at the general meeting, for the purpose of one of their members voting in the name of the company?

The real representation of the company lies in the general meeting of the shareholders, and the directors and manager are only delegates of this representation in its absence for certain and fixed purposes, and, as such, ought to give it an account of their acts, and submit them to their approval; how then, without the greatest aberration from good sense, can this singular representative be admitted in the presence of the true representative of the delegate in the presence of the party delegating?

And how, finally, without the greatest absurdity, can the company be considered its own shareholder as to these shares and not as to the other not issued, and any one vote as a shareholder for the company at the general meeting of the shareholders?

And which are those 355 shares amongst the 698 which remain to be issued, and which form a part of the 5,000 representing the primitive capital?

Till the day of the second sitting of the meeting, in the company's books the numbers of those 355 shares were not designated, although they figured in the list of shareholders.

Nor in the amount belonging to the director, Joaquim Henriques Fradesso da Silveira is the slightest indication to be seen that at any time the said 355 shares belonged to him and were registered in his name, with a designation of their numbers, without which the emission of certain and fixed shares could not be made.

It was, therefore, with a manifest violation of law, and of the principles of right and morality, and a perfect abuse, that the Board, in order to insure the result of the votes at the general meeting, seized on the 35 votes in the name of the company, making one of their members vote with them.

It was by this illegal and arbitrary proceeding that, at the first sitting of the meeting were given as carried in the sense the directors wanted, the votings which took place, when the real decision was just the contrary.

Such decisions were manifestly illegal, and irreparably null; and equally null were those which took place at the second meeting, as the 35 votes given by Medlicott in the name of the company entered in them.

At the first sitting of the general meeting, on the night of the 15th April, a commission had been named to give its opinion on the report and balance-sheet presented by the directors; and, with the exception of the president of the meeting, one of those chosen on the commission, all the other members of it, the directors so arranged, were relations or employéés of some of the directors or their friends.

It was the first sitting of the general meeting of the company; there had been none, either ordinary or extraordinary.

And therefore until then, the Board not having presented to the general meeting and submitted to its approval any accounts, report, or balance-sheet, they were bound to present them at that meeting, these documents comprising all the acts of the administration, and management, and doings of the company since its foundation.

The report, answer to same, and yearly balance, of which Article 18 of the Statutes treats, has reference to the ordinary meetings which may take place after the first, and which the Article 34 determines in the Statutes shall take place in February of each year.

For

For the case of the first sitting of the ordinary general meeting the disposition of Articles 39, 40, 41 rules; the last article determining that, the Board being constituted, the directors shall make known all the transactions of the Company by means of a report, and shall present the respective balance, accompanied by a report and statement.

Nor could it be otherwise, without a perfect opposition to the dispositions of the law, and a manifest absurdity.

The law requires that all the acts of the directors, all the proceedings of the Company, accounts and balance of the same, be submitted to the examination and approval of the general meeting.

How could the general meeting judge and vote on acts, proceedings, and accounts of which it had no knowledge; how could they vote with a proper knowledge, and conscientiously, about acts, proceedings, and accounts of the last year, without being acquainted with those of former years, on which they necessarily depend and originate from, and with them those of the last year are leagued?

The Board had confined themselves to presenting at this first meeting a report, statement, and balance referring only to the year just ended, from 1st April to 31st March 1862, failing to comply with the precept of Article 41 of the Statutes.

This same report and statement, so meagre and defective that in them the directors did not mention important acts which they had practised during this year, as, among others, the fact of their establishing a gratuity to the directors and manager, and paying themselves the same; the manner in which they disposed of the loan of 450,000,000 reis which they arbitrarily solicited and obtained from the Government; and to what were applied the 199,535,312 reis that, besides the loan, they declared the Government had advanced, or on what terms and conditions the said loan was made.

And the balance sheet so made out that the real state of the Company could not be perceived.

For the Company's vessels appearing for the enormous value of 831,780,849 reis on the active side, which is far superior to their cost, with an equal exaggeration in the boats, buoys, and cables; neither in the report of the manager, nor in the report of the Board of Directors, is anything said that can explain such a difference.

And also these figures in the passive the sum of 4,669,876 reis, under the name of reserve fund; nothing can be found in the report and statements that explains this matter.

Article 13 of the Statutes determines that every year 10 per cent. of the net profits shall be taken from the Company's receipts, and shall be applied to form a reserve fund, which shall not exceed 14,000 milreas.

But neither from the report nor the statement can it be inferred that there were net receipts from which to deduct the amount for the reserve fund, neither if it referred to the year to which the balance was limited or to the previous ones.

And if in effect there was a net profit from which to deduct that amount from for the reserve fund, how did it figure in the Company's passive.

The petitioners could point out many other deficiencies, and which are visible by the analysis of those papers; but limiting themselves to what they have pointed out, as they are sufficient to justify their assertions, and because they wish to diminish as much as possible the extent of their expositions.

It was impossible for any shareholder who wished to obtain an exact knowledge of the acts of the Board of Directors, of the proceedings and state of the Company, to acquire it by the report, statement, and balance sheet; and to search for it in the examination of the books without a balance and accounts which might serve him as a guide, although well acquainted and clever in book-keeping, he could not place himself in a position to judge the accounts of the Company, except by a constant, assiduous, and long examination of several months.

The commission might have taken the trouble to examine the books, and assisted with the information and explanations the directors, manager, and secretary might give, thus supplying in some measure the defects in the report, statement, and balance, and then present in its answer some data by which the meeting could obtain some knowledge of the acts and proceedings of the directors and transactions of the Company, so that it might be able to appreciate the balance sheet.

Although in this way the fault of not presenting the balance and accounts of the previous time would not be remedied, however some plausibility might be given to the approval of the balance and acts of the Board.

But the answer of the Commissioners was just as the Board of Directors wished it to be.

The Board of Directors wanted to cover with the balance of the last year, and with its respective report and answer, all the anterior acts and transactions, and that without their being known to the meeting they might be implicitly approved by the approbation of the balance of the last year; and the commission blindly subjected themselves to this wish, and gave in to the result the Board wished to secure.

The report of the commission presented at the second meeting was nothing more than an extract of the report of the manager, and of that of the Board, mixed up with eulogiums to the Board, and studied expressions, giving still greater latitude to the arbitrary conduct of the same.

And whilst on one hand the commission judged that it ought not legally to examine and appreciate the acts and transactions anterior to the year, referred to in the report, observations, and balance sheet, on the other hand it proposed the approval of the gratuity to the directors and manager of which they had not spoken in their report, and which they had established for themselves in the absence of the general meeting, and without these having been voted.

The answer of the Commissioners having been read at the second sitting of the meeting, and a debate opened on the same, one of the representatives of the petitioners stated that it was impossible to approve the partial balance presented by the Board of Directors, for it did not satisfy the express precept of Article 41 of the Statutes, neither could this partial balance of the last year be approved without showing that the balances respecting the previous years had been approved by some other meeting, with which the one now presented by the Board must necessarily be connected and leagued.

He further stated that neither in the report of the manager, or in that of the Board, nor in the answer of the commission was mention made, or any allusion to the acts of the administration, and management, and transactions of the Company from its foundation to the 31st March 1861, and that the meeting neither ought or could, laying aside the dispositions of the Statutes, which were the law, which ought to regulate their proceedings, approve blindly, and to condescend to the will or caprice of the Board; the acts, the accounts previous to these, of which not the least information was given them, and therefore they could have no knowledge of them, and that this blind approval, and without knowledge of the case, would virtually be given by the approval of the report of the commission, and therefore of the partial balance presented.

He argued the illegality and laying aside of the express disposition of the Statutes, with which the Board of Directors, without previous authorisation and approval of the general meeting, and without seeking by means of a convocation the meeting of the same, had made contracts with the Government, soliciting from it alterations, negotiations, and the substitution of important dispositions of the same Statutes, had contracted a loan, and the directors had established for themselves premiums of guarantee, bonus gratuities, and other individual advantages.

He argued also on the abuse and arbitrary act of the directors in appreciating the bonus of 60,000,000 reis granted by the Government to the Company, and also that a person was maintained as a director who could not be considered even a shareholder, as he had made the deposit required by Article 22 of the Statutes of shares really belonging to him.

He argued and stated the many other illegal acts practised by the directors, and the loss which resulted to the shareholders from the same.

The commission through their secretary confined themselves to answering that they had examined the books, nor entered into the appreciation of the acts of the directors previous to the 1st April 1861, as the mission with which they were charged was restricted to giving an opinion on the report and balance presented, and which referred only to the last year from the 1st April 1862, as if it were possible to appreciate them without an acquaintance with the anterior acts, balance and accounts.

The directors and their zealous defenders could not suffer that the petitioners' representatives should thus invade the field of the anterior acts and accounts which they proposed to themselves should be approved in a lot, and blindly, without being examined, showed in every way their impatience, not hesitating to resort to insult and sarcasms as a means of provocation.

Finally, the petitioners' representatives demanded that on the question of the report of the commission, the directors and manager should not be admitted to vote, as they could not be their own judges.

The directors sneered at the petitioners' representatives, and declared that they would vote. The chair did not listen to the petitions of the petitioners' representatives, and admitted the directors' votes. And thus with their votes, and with those of their manager's, and adding the 35 votes for the 355 shares belonging to the Company, given by the director, Duarte Medlicott, they managed to have the report of the commission approved.

The petitioners' representatives protested against the legality of such voting, and against the illegal and arbitrary acts of the Board of Directors, which was mentioned in their written protest signed by them all, and which they presented to the chair, demanding that it should be transcribed in the minutes, as may be seen in the same.

The Government Commissary and Fiscal who were presented at the two sittings of the general meeting, and witnessed what took place at the same, will, as may be expected from their known character, confirm the exactitudes of what the petitioners here state, and of every thing, as in duty bound, will have informed your Majesty's Government.

Some of the zealous defenders of the directors, whose love of their own reputation not allowing them to dispute the illegality of the acts of the directors, accused by the petitioners' representatives, wanted to attenuate them, saying, that in this way, although illegal, the Board of Directors had succeeded in saving the Company, which was lost, and bring it to the advantageous position in which it was, and which guaranteed its existence, for the directors had by every illegal means succeeded in leaguering the Government to the preservation of the Company, and induced it to identify itself with it, and therefore placed under the necessity of making all the advances in money that might be required.

But such an assertion is entirely inexact, as is easily shown.

The Company has the law of its statutes by which it ought to be ruled and governed, and and the Board of Directors and manager cannot practice any act contrary to this law, or for which they are not authorised thereby.

Not even the general meeting can depart from the observation of this law, without its acts and decisions in contravention of the same being considered as null; or if taken in a different way from what is laid down in the same, for though it represents the company, but as the moral person in this is composed also of shareholders, who, having less than 10 shares, have no admittance or vote in it, cannot for this reason, by decisions taken in a manner different from what is established by the law, offend the rights and injure the interests of shareholders who are under the shield of the law of the Company, and under the safeguard of the faithful and exact observance of its dispositions.

So much is it so, that no general meeting can decide and resolve any modifications, innovations, or alterations of the statutes, and can only be done by that one that is constituted with the conditions laid down in Article 33 of the same Statutes; and even so they can only be put in practice after being approved by the Government, who also cannot, without offending the law, approve alterations which are not presented as voted by a general meeting constituted in the manner established in the above cited article.

What the general meeting which represents the company cannot do, much less could the directors and manager do it, who are considered mere delegates of this representation, only for the ordinary acts of administration and management of the Company's affairs, and which are designated and marked down in the statutes.

Thus the result, though advantageous, of the illegal and arbitrary acts practised by the Board of Directors with offence and laying aside of the law and abuse of their powers, cannot in any way justify them and remove their nullity making them valid.

Admitting such a principle as a justification of the illegal and arbitrary means employed by the Board of Directors, the law disappears, and in its place the will of the Board of Directors remains, and at its mercy the interests of the shareholders, who became so under the protection of the law, and with the idea that it would be faithfully observed.

But it is not even true that the Board of Directors saved the Company by these successive, illegal, and arbitrary acts, but, on the contrary, the petitioners are persuaded that to these is principally due the ruin of the Company, which they consider such that it can be said that in fact it is in a perfect state of insolvency, and that the shareholders cannot expect to receive a farthing of their shares, which to-day have no value in the market.

By the disposition of Article 8 of the Statutes, the shareholders were only obliged to pay the value of their shares in payments of 10 equal parts, with an interval from one to the other of no less than 30 days.

Therefore, the directors and manager were not bound to pay the value of their shares for which each one subscribed, excepting in the way marked in the statutes.

The Board of Directors were bound to comply with the precept of the said article, making and advertising the epochs for the payment of the calls, and to put in practice the disposition of Article 10 respecting such shareholders, whether directors or not, who failed to pay their calls in due time.

The directors and manager did not follow this road, but substituted the payment of the calls by a payment in bills.

At the same date of the 28th May 1858, in which the directors and manager put down their names as shareholders for 300 shares each, excepting the director, Francisco Antonio Flores, who only subscribed for 125 shares, each of them gave a credit on London for 1,640*l.*, or 7,380,000 reis, which, at the same date, was placed for account of the payment of the value of their respective shares, and for what still remains of the value of the same, each one accepted bills dated 16th October in the same year.

The directors and manager, perhaps, adopted this plan of giving these credits on London in order to pay the petitioner half the price of the vessel "Lindsay," for her to be immediately delivered to them as agreed, and on her arrival at this port, to enable them to receive half the bonus granted by the Government, according to the terms of the 10th condition of the contract.

This anticipation in the payment of the value of the shares would have been a good service that the directors and manager did the Company, if they had applied the bonus in favour of the same, and if really by the payment in bills the Company realised the full value of the shares, as it would have realised if the payments had been made in calls in the form marked in Article 18 of the Statutes.

But it did not happen so.

The directors and manager converted the bonus to their exclusive profit, dividing it between them. And under pretext of the advance of the payment of the value of the shares with bills, they established between them and the Company a system of bill drawing, an account having been opened with the Company which, with respect to at least one director, resulted in his not paying the value of his shares.

After the first sitting of the general meeting, the Board of Directors gave it as an act of their generosity what was only a rigorous duty, to allow the representatives of the shareholders to come to the Company's offices and examine the books, but granting for this a limited number of days.

Of this facility some of the petitioners' representatives availed themselves, but in so short a time it was impossible for them to examine the books of nearly four years, and much less could they with such a complicated system of accounts as is adopted; for example, in order to be able to appreciate the account current of each director, it would be necessary to agree and confront all the books of the Company that regard the general book-keeping.

So the petitioners' representatives could only see the accounts current of some of the directors and manager, and obtain a knowledge of some circumstances, sufficient however for the petitioners to be able to estimate a part of the prejudicial consequences which resulted to the Company from the illegal and arbitrary acts practised by the Board of Directors.

From the account current of the director, Joaquim Henriques Fradesso da Silveira, it appears that the Company had to pay the bills accepted by him in payment of the value of his shares, and to pay the interest and discount of the renewal which was made of some of them.

So that in the said account the outlay of the Company appears for the payment of bills of said director, and of money stated to have been paid, amounting to 45,932,326 reis, and the bills and acceptances of said director amount to 38,051,466 reis.

And although the Board of Directors allowed the said director 4,366,000 reis on the plea of his share in the bonus, 2,072,720 reis for interest or dividends on 218 shares, and 1,150,000 reis as gratuity as director; even so on the 31st March of the current year he was a debtor to the Company of a balance of 15,035,108 reis, which appear in the active of the balance-sheet presented to the general meeting by the Board of Directors.

It is clear that, as regards the said director, the payment in bills was a phantasmagory and complete deception, and adopted with the idea of giving as paid the value of the shares when they really were not so.

If the Board had not abandoned the precept of the law, and had not admitted the payment of the value of shares in a way different from what is established in it, that director would not be a debtor for almost the total of the shares for which he subscribed, the Board of Directors not having with equal arbitrariness allowed him a part in the bonus, interest on shares not paid, and gratuity not voted by the general meeting.

But the arbitrary acts in favour of their colleagues, on the part of the Board of Directors, did not stop here.

In the same date of the 28th May 1858, on which the director, Fradesso da Silveira, was put down as a shareholder for 300 shares, was put down as his cessionario for 82 of these shares, the present and then future director, Manuel Jose Ribeiro; and he also was credited as being the cessionario of Fradesso, with 1,640,000 reis, as the part of the bonus on 82 shares.

How could the direction put down M. J. Ribeiro shareholder for these 82 shares, which were yielded to him by Fradesso da Silveira on the same day in which he subscribed for 300, without having as yet paid any part of their value.

If the director, Fradesso da Silveira, should not pay the value of his shares subscribed, and the direction following the precept of the 10th Article of the Statutes, wished to carry out the disposition of the same, how could they do not it with the 82 shares given to Ribeiro, and by him paid to Fradesso, having admitted him as cessionario of this one, and as such registered in the Company's books as the owner of shares, which were transferred to him, and by him paid to the party ceding them.

The direction still carried their despotism further, to the loss of the Company.

For, in the same October 1858, on the 16th of which the director, Fradesso, accepted bills for 19,409,858 reis, to complete the payment of the value of his shares, the direction bought from him the steamer "Pego."

This purchase, notwithstanding the circumstances and state of the boat, might be excupated if the direction took these measures to pay the value of the welt which the director, Fradesso, subscribed, or to promote a further sale of shares.

But the direction having commenced the agreement of the purchase of the boat, with the payment in shares, undid this agreement to realise it in money or bills at short dates, which they paid, instead of trying to make a balance with what the seller was owing for shares, or paying him in the bills he had accepted to pay for them. The direction, to favour their said colleague, disposed arbitrarily of the property and funds of the Company, in a way that none of its members would not like to do with his own property. And this favour to the point, not only of paying and allowing to the same colleague interests or dividends corresponding to shares, the value of which was not yet paid by him, but went still further in 30th September 1860, lent him 20 shares of the Company, not yet issued, for him to make the deposit in the Company's office, which as director he was bound to do, by the letter of Article 22 of the Statutes. This can be seen in the account current of the said director, as in it the lent shares are given as returned on the 31st December 1861, the date when he gave his dismissal as director. It is not possible to meet in the history of directions and companies an example of equal abuses and despotism. Either the said director had not told the date when his colleagues made him the loan of the 20 shares, made his deposit of them, and was there unlawfully a clerk as director, and his colleagues consenting in it in opposition to the dispositions of Article 22, or he had made it; and his colleagues with inexplicable abuse and arbitrariness, consented that he should withdraw the deposit of his shares to substitute them for those lent by the Company. What species of guarantee could the Company have in a deposit of shares which rested still to be issued, and therefore did not represent any value received. Saying that the shares were lent, the director who availed of the loan for the purpose of making a deposit with them, had no other obligation but to restore him, which did not cost him much, as being in deposit they continued to remain in the hands of the Company. If the direction had not from the beginning of its administrations substituted by his self-will the dispositions of the law, it would not happen that the said director would be till now considered a shareholder on account of the shares for which he subscribed, without payment of the value of them; and all persons who had not positively paid the value of his shares would not, as he ought not to have been, admitted to vote at the general assemblies. The petitioners' representatives in the last meeting stated these circumstances, petitioning that the said shareholder should not be admitted to vote with the votes relating to the shares, the value of which it was not ascertained was paid; but their petitions, as everything that they asked for, was not heard, and they all protested against this illegality. With regard to the other director and manager, the petitioners cannot say exactly on what present various and large sums in money were given, which in the accounts current of some of them appear to their debit, because the petitioners' representatives could not compare all the books from which they could obtain the necessary knowledge and explanations of the debit and credit. However, by the accounts current of each one of them, it is seen that from the beginning a system of bill drawing was established between them and the Company, the value of the shares subscribed by them being mixed up with it. And by them it is also said that while in favour of each one's interests, and guarantees are allowed in favour of the Company, no amount of interest appears, not even as regards the debit of the director, Fradesso da Silveira, although the Company paid the money to settle the bills accepted and not paid by him. From this illegal and arbitrary proceeding, followed by the director immediately from the beginning of their administrations, clear and heavy losses result to the Company. If the sum given by Government to the Company had been effectively applied in its benefit, as it ought, with the amount of it, the Company would have made its charges to that amount without being forced to raise it by loan, paying a heavy interest. And, in truth, it was a manifest abuse for the directors to divide the bonus between the founders of the Company in proportion to the shares they had subscribed for.

The first petitioner would not accept 225,000,000 reis that the direction destined for him in the division of the bonus, as corresponding to the shares which he held, received as half the price of the vessels which we sold the Company, as he thought that all the bonus belonged to it, to which it was granted, and could not be divided between the founders of the same. But the directors' manager went on taking their shares, which they divided, putting it at interest in the Company, or rather in the making up of their accounts with the Company, causing interest of their part of the bonus to be allowed them; and which they thus seized on the bonus, they charged the Company, with interest, which ought to be paid to Theofilo Bemen Phellipon, of what by a private agreement that the director made with him, they bound themselves to pay, as a compensation for the bonus which he lost on account of the "Companhia Real Portuguesa" not going forward (Royal Portuguese Steam Navigation Company). But what had the Company Uniaõ Mercantil to do with the claims of Theofilo Bemen could make against the directors of the other Company. The arrangement that the directors made with them was their individual act, which they could not place to the charge and account of the Company Uniaõ Mercantil. The direction, while on one hand it took on itself its right to admit by means of bills the payment of the value of the shares of directors' manager, some of which it had to pay; on the other hand, for this payment, and for the price of the boats "Tejo" and "Accorianus," and other expenses of the Company, began raising funds on loan by discount of bills guaranteed by the directors and manager, they paying themselves the premium of guarantees. This proceeding, which is clearly ruinous, could only be employed when authorised by the general assembly elected to act by all those interested at that seat in the Company, and would only be authorised when absolutely indispensable, and when it was ascertained that this guarantee was necessary to discount the bills. But the directors did not lend themselves with the considerations that they could not trade with the Company, nor turn to their private profit the transactions they carried on as directors, but went on receiving the premium of the guarantees, and taking, without calculation, the funds they thought proper, without caring for the damage to the Company's credit that must come from following such a course. From this resulted, that to the discount was to be added the premium of guarantee, which raised the interest to _____ rate, for while the bank discounted the bills at 5 per cent., the Company was paying 8 or 9 per cent. It was this reason that the amount of interest, discounts, and differences of exchange paid by the Company to 31st March 1862, reached the sum of 73,734,429 reis, and that besides this the directors received for guarantees 91,026,429 reis. The directors thought that they could do whatever they pleased, and dispose of everything without asking any authority from the general assembly, and not even hear the persons most interested in the Company; for, as the petitioners already stated, not even in the so-called extraordinary meeting did they mention their proceedings. And, on the contrary, it having been resolved at one of those extraordinary sessions, in December 1858, that no more purchases of boats could be made without a resolution of the general assembly, the direction made no account of this resolution, and bought the boats "D. Luir," "D. Antonio," and "Fairy;" and, in purchase of the last, the fact was that it was positively sold for 26,000*l.*, and the Company had to pay 28,000*l.*, for 2,000*l.* was a bonus to two of the directors and a third person leagued with them, on the plea of having guaranteed the bills passed to the seller for the price of the said boat. This system, arbitrarily followed by the direction, had the result of the ruin and discredit of the Company. A Company that, without consulting its own resources on which it can count, and takes to raising funds, at any rate, by means of credit, digs an abyss into which it must necessarily fall. And when the public saw the Company on this inclined plane of living by credit, and those who directed it appropriating gains and profits not justified and not authorised, how would they employ their capital in a company reduced by a direction to such a state. The direction wished to attribute to other causes the want of issuing the shares, not seeing, or rather not to give, doubtless, the only true and principal cause. No one in Portugal is ignorant of the advantages for this country, and for those interested, might result from this company, which if prudently and economically conducted and administered. And as Portuguese capitalists and merchants have come forward to employ their capital in other undertakings of not so wide-known advantage to the country, and of so good and promising an appearance of gain, certainly their patriotism would not fail them in taking a share in this; if they did not, the arbitrary and illegal manner in which the directors administer the affairs of the Company offers no guarantee.

One of the objects on which the direction ought to endeavour to employ the greatest care and secure economy, is without doubt the consumption of coals for the use of their boats. The direction at the beginning of their running boats had employed the first petitioner to supply the coal, which he did for more than one year. The first petitioner being acquainted with the quantity of coals that ought to be used in ordinary circumstances, observed that the consumption was very great, and frequently pointed it out to the direction, telling them it was necessary to stop this great expense, which was injuring the Company very much. The direction tried to exculpate themselves, but at last to free themselves from his observations, which annoyed them, took the resolution of withdrawing the order from the first petitioner. And this very important item of expense the petitioner does not know what it will reach since the commencement of the navigation to 31st March 1862, for neither in the report nor balance are any details to be found by which it can be appreciated; as also to appreciate in detail the expenses of the other supplies of the ships; and to obtain this knowledge from the book, it would require a minute examination, which would demand a long time. But by this system, arbitrarily followed, the directors and manager arranged for themselves advantages and personal gains, so much so, that every one of them, on the plea of bonus, and interest of the same, divided the shares, guarantees, and gratuities, and difference of exchange, which were allowed them, receiving more than 60,000,000 reis, as can be seen by their respective accounts, written in the Company's books, closed on the 31st March 1862. It was therefore principally due to the illegal and arbitrary acts practised by the direction from the beginning of their administration, the difficult position in which the Company began to be since its establishment, till it reached the state of ruin in which the directors confess it was when they asked a loan from the Government; without their informing the shareholders of this, and consulting them about the suitability of the loan, or the best means to save the Company, if possible. Although the directors may allege that they have done great services to the Company, for, to speak more lucidly, and a minute and rigorous examination of the books would perhaps show clearly many other illegal abuses and arbitrary acts of which the petitioner, on account of the want of this examination, cannot have a special acquaintance, what the facts prove is, that the directors brought the Company to a real state of bankruptcy, as is easily seen by the very balance presented to the general meeting on the 15th April of the present year. In the above mentioned balance, the direction showed the active of the Company 1,556,537,725 reis, and its passive 1,653,177,496 reis, thus presenting a debit of 96,839,771 reis. But in order to show the above active, they increased the value of the steamers to 100,000,000 reis above their real cost; and did the same with regard to boats, buoys, &c. in the river. In this manner the steamers that had by that time years of service, instead of being depreciated by the natural and inevitable wear and tear, in the estimation of the directors were enhanced in value to so large an amount. Even the steamer "Tejo," which the manager in his statement (report) indicates as unable to do service, and which in the general meeting was proposed to be sold, was valued (over its cost) in 8,504,835 reis. The steamers, boats, and buoys in the river, if reduced to their actual and real value, would not realise their cost, although it figures in the active of the Company equal to 844,252,372 reis. In the remainder of the active is found 512,285,353 reis, of which 450,000,000 reis, is said to be the amount of 5,000 deposited with the Bank of Portugal, but unsold, and that cannot show any value realised, or to be realised. The remainder, 62,285,353 reis, are as representing the value given to coals in the deposits of Lisbon, Loanda, St. Thiago, and St. Miguel, ship stores in Lisbon and Loanda, furniture in the Company's offices, merchandises, subventions, public bonds in deposit with government, and debts, in which is included the debt of the director, Fradesso da Silveira, and likewise another attributed to the first petitioner, who never acknowledged it, because in fact he does not owe the amount which the Company charges him with without foundation. It is plain that all the assets of the Company cannot be considered to be able to realise more than 450,000,000 reis. This arbitrary value which the direction chose to give to the steamers, adding the excuses of repairs to their value, cannot be considered as real assets of the Company, as, in fact, it does not exist, and in the active of the Company should only appear their real actual value, which, when the depreciation for wear is considered, will show a diminution of one-fourth of their cost. But even taking the steamers at that high valuation, carried to the active of the Company, its deficit on the date of the balance would be at least of 546,339,771 reis. And the Company having, in their contract with Government, agreed to apply the amount of the salvation to the payment of interest and amortisation of the Government loan, could not with its own resources provide the working of their their vessels, and so much so that the Government has found necessary, after the loan of 450,000,000 reis to make to the Company a further advance of 199,525,312 reis. And it being absolutely necessary for the Government to continue such supplies, the debits of the Company with the Government before the end of a twelvemonth will be 300,000,000 reis. In this state of the Company, who cannot see a real insolvency, and consequent bankruptcy, how, with every day accruing liabilities, and without the aid for many years of the subvention to meet its expenses, can the Company stand without being supported by Government by means of loans? It is not for the petitioners to appreciate if such supplies can thus continue to be made by Government, and abstain themselves from doing. But what the petitioners can appreciate is, that Government can any day refuse to continue to make further supplies, and on that day the Company must stop working their steamers, and present themselves in the Court of Bankruptcy, and from that moment will cease the Government guarantee of the interest upon the shares. Therefore, that advantage guarantee of the interest which the directors have put forth as a great service to the shareholders, is most precarious, and in the state the Company is it is not likely to exist long, and the interest of five years cannot compensate to the shareholders the certain loss of their capital, not only in their shares, but besides in the capitalization of the dividends, such as the directors have already begun to force the shareholders to submit to.

The directors and manager know very well, better even than the petitioners, the real state of insolvency in which the Company is at present, and that the capital produce of the shares is completely sacrificed and lost; but they have other special reasons which induces them to try every means to hide such state of things, and prolong as much as possible the existence of the Company, and thus their administration and management.

And to that purpose it was that the balance was made out in the manner already explained by the petitioners, limited only to the last year, so that the real state of the Company should not be so easily appreciated; and employed all the means already referred to, to obtain from the general meeting the approval of the balance of their acts, and add to the direction individuals their dependents of friends. The petitioners, by your Majesty, will forgive this long exposition which they were obliged to make in consequence of the absolute necessity of referring and proving before the loan, the principles of right, and universal justice, the acts and proceedings which justify and show the just foundation for their protest and claim, leaving, notwithstanding, some other facts out, although important, in order to be as concise as possible.

It is not the intention of the petitioners to seek for the dissolution of the Company, nor to proceed against the directors and manager, for the petitioners do not come to the feet of your Majesty's throne moved by ill-will or hatred, nor would such feelings advance their interests, for the reason that their only end is to enforce their rights as to be paid by your Majesty's Government the value of their shares. And such was the petitioners' reluctance to take this present step, and expose their acts and proceedings, both in the direction, and at the general meetings, that they allowed nearly four months to elapse since the last general meeting before they come to present their claims, expecting that the Government of your Majesty indeed were aware of what passed at the meetings, through its employés officially attached to the Company; and being cognizant after protest there entered by the attorneys of the petitioners, your Majesty's Government would cause forthwith an inquiry to have been made respecting the exactness of the accusations, and provide for the vindication of the laws and statutes of the Company so respectively and manifestly violated, and to protect the interest and rights of the petitioners as shareholders; so much so, that the petitioners gave verbal information to your Majesty's Government, that they could be under the necessity of making their claims.

But the petitioners have seen their hopes frustrated; no proceedings whatever have taken place on the part of Government of your Majesty tending to protect the interests of the petitioners, therein disregarded and despised, whilst, on the other hand, by persevering to countenance the acts of the direction, the Government of your Majesty tacitly and virtually inculcate its approbation and defence of the past acts of the direction.

Sire! The direction of the Company, União Mercantil could never have been able to choose and follow the illegal, abusive, and arbitrary course it has pursued in its administration and management of the affairs of the Company if it had not had the support of the Government, which was ready to approve and authorise those illegal acts by its decrees, and even by soliciting the approval and legalization of some of those acts, by passing Acts of Parliament to that effect. It was under the protection of the laws, and trusting to the guarantee of its faithful observance, and specially in that they expected from the Portuguese Government that the petitioners, English subjects, resident in London, were induced to enter with their capitals in the Company, submitting to losses through misfortune, or eventualities, but not through illegal, abusive, and arbitrary direction of its affairs. By the 20th Condition of the contract of concession of the undertaking the Government reserved to itself the faculty of naming a Commissioner to be near the Company, and which was, in fact, named. And afterwards, by the contract that the Government made on the 5th of January 1861, with the direction of the Company, it was agreed that there would be a fiscal office of the former near, and paid by the latter, to rigorously, check the service, book-keeping, and operations of the Company. The Government had therefore the means, through its officers above-mentioned, attached to the Company, to obtain information respecting the legal and illegal acts of the direction, and specially of those that the latter submitted for its approval.

If the direction tried to delude the Government, inculcating, as attributive to it, what by the laws of the Company belonged solely and exclusively to the competency of the general meetings of the shareholders, the Government had there the laws not to admit or approve illegal acts which were not based upon the deliberation of a general meeting,—sole and exclusive means competent for such purpose. If the direction attempted to delude the Government, inculcating as the result of the deliberation of any general meeting any act submitted for its approbation, in the examination of the document referring to it, and and in the information that the Government should have required from its employés attached to the Company, the Government had plenty and easy means to ascertain that such deliberation of the general meeting had been, and could not exist, when no such general meeting had been called according to what is prescribed in the statutes of the Company; as well that one of the members of the direction fraudulently arrogated to represent the fourth petitioner, as his attorney, for which he had no power. Thus, in either case, the Government could not be ignorant that the alterations and reforms of the statutes which were proposed by the direction, being against the rights of the shareholders, and giving votes for the mere guarantees given, which is an innovation incompatible with the disposition and nature of a company, were entirely the work of the direction, without the shareholders being heard in general meeting, and by them sanctioned, after deliberation, as is expressly stipulated in Article 33 of the Statutes.

Notwithstanding all this, the Government, by its decree, sanctioned and approved the arbitrary act of the Board.

The conditions of the contract of the undertaking could not be altered by a new contract without the alteration being deliberated upon by the general meeting, according to the Article 33, for that very reason that imparted modification in the statutes, and notwithstanding the Government made no difficulty in entering into the contract of the 5th January 1861, with the Board, without the latter being authorised to that effect by some deliberation of a general meeting.

In the same way the directors could not contract for a loan which they solicited from the Government, mortgaging to the same the assets of the Company, and apply the subvention for the payment of interest and amortisation, without being previously authorised by deliberation of a general meeting, whilst, on the other hand, the Government, without the sanction of such deliberation, agreed to grant the loan to the Board of Directors, and obtained a Bill in Parliament to close the contract.

The Government had, in the annual balances that the Board presented to them, a proof that they had not as yet been submitted to the approval of a general meeting, for they were never presented to Government accompanied by the report of the commission that should have been named by the general meeting, according to the terms of the decree of approval of the statutes, and notwithstanding that the Government allowed this omission of legality, violating the laws, without obliging the Board to present the accounts and balances of their administration, as given to the general meeting legally called and constituted for the purpose.

It was therefore the Government, who, by authorising and approving the illegal and null acts of the Board, more directly offended and injured the rights and legitimate interests of the petitioners, and deprived them of the guarantees that the religious observance of the law might have given them; and the Government has constituted itself obliged to indemnify the petitioners for the damages which thus directly it has caused them; and if the Board can find an excuse, it is in the sanctions the Government has given to their deeds.

Nor can the Government justify itself by setting forward that it should shut its eyes to the illegalities of these acts, sanctioning them, although offensive and prejudicial to the rights of the shareholders, for considerations of public convenience, in addition to which it was found convenient to set aside the dispositions of the laws of the Company authorising their violation.

The petitioners, foreign subjects, who, relying on the protection of the laws by which the Company was to be governed, came here to invest their capitals, and cannot be obliged to submit to those illegal acts, null and void, and subject themselves to the losses and damages therefrom resulting.

The petitioners can no longer expect anything from a Company without laws, at the mercy of an arbitrary Board, which has found the means of disposing of the votes in the general meeting, at their own pleasure and convenience.

In these circumstances the petitioners come respectfully to present at the feet of your Majesty their solemn protest against all the violations of the laws, and illegal and null arbitrary acts of the Board and general meeting, claiming from the Government of your Majesty an indemnification of the damages that, in consequence of the acts of the Government, the petitioners will suffer in the inevitable loss of their capital invested in shares.

And this act is of so manifest justice that the Government of your Majesty will surely not refuse to attend to.

The indemnification which, with so manifest right and justice the petitioners claim, cannot be but for the payment in full by your Majesty's Government of the integral value of their shares, with their respective interests, the petitioners being ready and willing to cede and deliver their shares to your Majesty's Government.

The petitioners in making their claim so limited show they have no intention of making profits, but merely to prevent the loss caused by the Government if not indemnified.

The petitioners feel sorry that so promising an undertaking should be brought to ruin, which which they consider to be by the want of observance of the law, and by the arbitrary administration.

Trusting, therefore, that your Majesty may receive benignly the claims which the petitioners here make, with so manifest right and justice, beg your Majesty will order that the capital and interest of their shares due up to the present be integrally and fully paid to the petitioners.

May it please your Majesty so to grant them.

September 1862.

MINUTE of Opinion of five Lisbon Lawyers. Responsibility of Portuguese Government with respect to Mr. Lindsay's Claims against the Company União Mercantil.

THE undersigned, Mansel Maria Ferreira da Silva Beirão, a pleader in the courts of this city, and before the Tribunal of the Administrative Council of State, and President of the Society of Lawyers; Francisco Jeronymo da Silva, a pleader in the courts of this city, and Vice-President of the same society; Antonio Joaquim da Silva Abranches, a pleader in the courts of this city, and before the said tribunal, and perpetual secretary of the aforesaid society; José Luiz Gonçalves Ferreira de Cunha, a pleader in the courts of this city, and before the said tribunal; and José Antonio Luiz Gallo, a pleader in the courts of this city, and before the said tribunal,— Having examined, in consultation, the claim which William Shaw Lindsay, and other British subjects, in their capacity as shareholders in the Royal Union Mercantile Company, have presented to his Most Faithful Majesty's Government, give it as their opinion that the said Government is responsible towards the claimants above mentioned, from the damages accruing to them from the approbation, which it (the Government) may have given with full knowledge of the case to the acts which may be proved to have been practised by the directors of that Company, in contravention of the articles of its statutes.

OPINION of the Law Adviser to H. M. Legation, as to the Responsibility of the Portuguese Government with respect to Mr. Lindsay's Claims against the Company União Mercantil.

As soon as a Government practises an act, of whatever nature it may be, or gives its approbation to an act practised by another person, after due examination, and with full knowledge of the matter, it is unquestionable that it becomes responsible for that act, and liable to the consequences resulting from it. I therefore consider as correct the doctrine laid down in the Minute of the Society of Lawyers of this city, which I have before me, in which they declare that, having examined, in consultation, the claim put forward to his Most Faithful Majesty's Government, by the British subjects, W. S. Lindsay and others, in their capacity of shareholders of the Union Mercantile Company, it is their opinion that the said Government is responsible towards the aforesaid claimants for all the damages arising from the approval which it (the Government) may have given, with full knowledge of the case, to the acts which may be proved to have been carried out by the directors of that same Company, in contravention of the rules of its statutes.

With respect to the admissibility or inadmissibility of the claim, I have not, as yet, sufficient grounds to form my judgment; and the Minute itself does not also touch upon this point. What is indubitable to me is, that the right of the claimants against the Company, on account of the illegality of the acts, of which it has assumed the responsibility by approving them, is certain, should the existence of that illegality, the origin and source of the damages upon which the claim is based, be really proved.

COPY of DESPATCH from the Right Hon. Earl Russell to Sir A. C. Magenis.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 21 January 1863.

I HAVE consulted the proper legal adviser of the Crown on your Despatch of the 3d instant, respecting Mr. Lindsay's case.

It appears from Mr. Lindsay's Memorial to the King of Portugal, that the object he has in view is that the Portuguese Government should be ordered to repay to the Commissioners the integral value of their shares, with their respective interests: and this demand appears to be advanced on the plea that the Portuguese Government had been a consenting party to numerous illegal acts, and to the violation of the statutes of the Company concerned.

The legal opinions which have been forwarded to me by you sustain the proposition that, according to Portuguese law, the Government of Portugal, if it had full knowledge of the acts of the directors, and had in any way publicly sanctioned them, would be responsible to the claimants for the damages consequent on that sanction.

The same legal opinions also lay down the principle that, in order to establish the liability in question, the Portuguese Government must have participated in the act of the directors by some public act, and must be proved to have a full knowledge of the proceedings of the directors.

On this point the statements are conflicting. According to Mr. Lindsay, the Portuguese Government has a Commissioner present at the meetings of the Board; but, according to the Duke de Loulé, that Government takes no part whatever in the management of the Company.

To arrive at the truth, as regards this important point, I have considered that it was only just that you should communicate to the Portuguese Government, in an official form, Mr. Lindsay's statements regarding their intervention, together with the opinions of the Portuguese lawyers, and that you should, on these grounds, ask for the aid of the Portuguese Government, in Mr. Lindsay's behalf.

My telegram of the 19th instant conveyed to you instructions in this sense, but this is the utmost extent to which the direct interference of Her Majesty's Government can, at all events, for the present, be exerted.

Mr. Lindsay has not exhausted the legal means of redress which are open to him; for although he has failed in his action against the Company, it is not denied that an appeal is open to him. He may or may not also have an opportunity of redress by legal proceedings against the Portuguese Government. On this point I am left without information; but if Mr. Lindsay has the opportunity, he should avail himself of it. It is only on the presumption that he has no such remedy, and that the Portuguese Government are liable, on account of the alleged sanction given to the acts of the Directors, that I have considered myself justified to instruct you to take the step to which my telegram of the 19th instant refers.

I have, &c.

(signed) Russell.

— No. 23. —

COPY of DESPATCH from Sir A. C. Magenis to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

Lisbon, 28 January 1863.

I RECEIVED on the 20th instant your Lordship's telegraphic despatch of the 19th.

With Mr. Lindsay's knowledge and consent I have not as yet acted on your Lordship's instructions.

That the question has not been allowed to rest since my Despatch of the 3d instant to your Lordship on this subject, the correspondence which accompanies this present Despatch will abundantly prove.

This correspondence consists of copies of letters either addressed by myself to the Duke de Loulé, or of letters addressed to me by Mr. Lindsay, for transmission to the same Minister, and copies of which I at once forwarded to his Excellency, and of the copies and translations of letters from his Excellency to me in reply, which were immediately forwarded to Mr. Lindsay.

Your Lordship will observe that Mr. Lindsay, and his Portuguese legal adviser, endeavour to prove that the Portuguese Government is responsible to the British shareholders for the amount of their shares and interest thereon, in consequence of that Government having sanctioned, either by its negligence or by its connivance, the illegal acts and violations of the Statutes of the Company by the direction, acts against which said shareholders had protested, and claimed the intervention of the Government to put a stop to, and further, that as neither Portuguese nor British shareholders can bring an action in this country against the Government, the latter can have recourse alone to the intervention of Her Majesty's Government, and thus that the question becomes an international question.

The Duke de Loulé, on the other hand, maintains that it is merely a question between certain shareholders who happen to be British subjects, and the Company, that the suit between the parties is still pending, and that its decision belongs to the law courts of the country; that the Government is not responsible to these shareholders, and that the question is not and cannot become an international question, and, in support of this latter opinion, his Excellency quotes the provision of the Statutes which declares "that the undertaking is considered national to all intents and purposes, and, as such, subject only to the laws of the kingdom, and to the Portuguese authorities."

Such is a brief summary of the ground of argument relied on by Mr. Lindsay, on the one side, and replied to on the other by the Duke de Loulé, on the part of the Portuguese Government; and on its solution, according to views of the one party or of the other, the question now turns.

Mr. Lindsay received, a few days ago, a letter from the secretary of the Company, enclosing to him an extract from the "Diario de Lisboa," the Government official journal, announcing that the payment of the dividends of this Company due for the year ended March 1862, was in progress at the office of the Company.

Although the sum to be received by Mr. Lindsay would amount to between 2,000 £. and 3,000 £., he has decided, by the advice of his lawyer here, not to accept it from the Company, because, by so doing, his lawyer believes he would acknowledge, to a certain extent, the validity of the direction, against which he had previously protested, and thus weaken his claim against the Government, whom Mr. Lindsay holds to be responsible.

Mr. Lindsay, who leaves by the Brazil boat, by which I intend to forward this Despatch, announced to me this day his intention to address me a letter for transmission to the Duke de Loulé, expressing his willingness to accept the payment of his dividends from the Government, though he refuses to do so from the Company; but I do not expect that his proposal will be acceded to, and, in fact, I believe it is not made in that expectation.

I enclose, in addition, for facility of reference, a printed copy of the memorial memorial presented on behalf of the British shareholders to this Government in October last, translation of which was forwarded in my Despatch, No. 1, of the 3d instant. Appended to this memorial is the Portuguese lawyers' opinion, declaring this Government responsible to those shareholders who had protested. Mr. Lindsay has had these documents printed for circulation among members of the Cortes, and other persons of influence in this capital.

My dear Sir Arthur,

Braganza Hotel, Lisbon, 6 January 1863.

I HAVE received copy of the letter of yesterday's date addressed to you by His Excellency the Duke of Loulé. It is not, however, I presume, meant to be an answer to my letter of the 1st instant.

I am well aware that the Chief of the Cabinet of this country must have many questions to occupy his earnest and often his immediate attention, but I think you may venture to remind His Excellency that the important memorial (and I am prepared to prove the facts in that memorial) referred to in my last, was delivered to him as far back as the early part of October, and that it was only on the 31st ultimo he informed you that he had sent it to the legal advisers of the Crown for their opinion.

In my letter to you of the 1st instant, I stated that after what had taken place I could have nothing more to do with the persons who style themselves the Directors of the Royal Union Mercantile Company, and I gave my reasons. I adhere to that resolution.

I further stated that I was ready to go into the affairs of the Company in an amicable and liberal spirit, and to meet any person (the Directors excepted) his Excellency might be pleased to name, to consider with me the re-organisation of the undertaking. On that question I gave my opinion nearly a month ago to Mr. Palha; but as his Excellency desires that I should again do so, I may here repeat what I then stated.

1st. Call upon the Directors to refund the money they have taken from the coffers of the Company, which would amount to more than sufficient to liquidate all my debentures with interest.

2dly. Call upon the persons to whom the Government made the loan to repay the amount. Failing this, the Government would do well to get all the shareholders of the Company, to whom they supposed the loan had been made, to consent to issue shares to the Government in exchange for the loan, and thus secure it by capitalising it.

3dly. The Government should double, at least, the annual subsidy, for it is much too small in comparison with what is granted to similar undertakings in other countries.

4thly. Steps should be taken to place the business of the Company in the hands of some honest and active firm who understand it, and who would attend to it, and if the assistance of some person familiar with steamships is required to assist, I daresay I can find such a person.

5thly. All accounts should be made up, closed, and audited every six months; and,

6thly. Two competent persons should be named (they may be called "directors," and paid according to the work they did) who would represent the Government and other shareholders, and audit the accounts.

If these changes were made and vigorously carried into effect, I think the stock of the company might be made to pay more than seven per cent. per annum, and the Government would have regular lines of steamers, which would prove of great value to this country and to its African possessions.

I fear, however, that in making these suggestions, and which I do by the desire of his Excellency, and without prejudice to my full and entire rights, that no attention may be paid to them, because I have remonstrated against the mismanagement of the Company, and protested against their illegal acts for years in vain; and I have now been here for more than five weeks, and no more has been made to meet my just claims. On the contrary, I see this afternoon that the directors publish in a Lisbon newspaper something like an attempt to repudiate them in the face of all the bonds and letters they have signed in my possession.

I respect, and indeed I admire, your anxiety to maintain the friendly relations which have long existed between the two countries, and in the business which has brought me here I think you will admit that I have shown every disposition to settle it in a friendly and in a liberal spirit; but I cannot remain here much longer, and if a definite reply is not given in the course of this week to my letter of the 1st instant, I must leave for England, and claim, which I do not now do, compensation for the wrongs I have suffered, besides the restoration of my capital.

My dear Sir Arthur,

Braganza Hotel, Lisbon, 12 January 1863.

It is now between three and four months since the memorial, referred to in my former letters, was presented to his Most Faithful Majesty the King of Portugal, and I am not aware that its receipt has ever been acknowledged. It is now more than six weeks since I arrived in Lisbon, and the business, which at great inconvenience brought me here, does not appear to have advanced one step.

I am still waiting a definite reply to my letter of the 1st instant, and as yet I have had no answer to my letter of the 5th instant.

As the time approaches when I must return to England, would you do me the favour to ask the Duke of Loulé if he will at least grant me an opportunity, before I leave, of proving the accuracy of the statements in the memorial to his Most Faithful Majesty, and the total inaccuracy of the claims which the Company made up against me for alleged deficiencies in the steamships which, at the request of the Minister of Public Works, I unfortunately was induced to supply, to start the undertaking, more than five years ago?

These requests are so reasonable, that I hope his Excellency will at once accede to them.

My dear Sir Arthur,

Braganza Hotel, Lisbon, 17 January 1863.

YESTERDAY afternoon I received the translation of the letter which his Excellency the Duke of Loulé addressed to you, bearing date the 14th instant, in which he repeats his own opinion that he does not consider the Portuguese Government responsible, but at the same time candidly admits that he will not come to any "final resolution" till he receives the opinions of the law advisers of the Crown to the memorial.

I must express my regret that his Excellency is not yet in a position to give a reply to my letter of the 1st instant, to the applications I personally made to him six weeks ago, or to the memorial placed in his hands as far back as October last.

The appointment of a committee is often a convenient excuse for further delay. I do not say it is so in the present instance, but it would have been much more satisfactory to those British subjects who have been so grievously wronged had his Excellency been pleased to place upon that committee, not merely two gentlemen holding office under the Portuguese Government, but an equal number named by you to represent my interest as a "shareholder," when it is considered that I hold more than one-half of the stock of the Company actually paid for and legitimately issued.

Before such a committee, in whose report I could have confidence, I am anxious to give my evidence; but at the same time I am ready to appear before the gentlemen his Excellency has named to substantiate what has been stated in the memorial, in my numerous letters, and in the protest.

As time is now becoming of great importance to me, would you do me the favour to invite his Excellency to allow me, for the above object, to appear before the committee on Monday or Tuesday next.

Sir A. C. Magenis, K.C.B.,

My dear Sir Arthur,

Braganza Hotel, Lisbon, 19 January 1863.

THE Government has, without doubt, rendered itself responsible to the shareholders who protested. The amount of their stock, with interest, &c. &c., is, in round numbers, 60,000 £. I represent the whole of it.

The whole of the debentures issued by the Company amount to 14,100 £. They all belong to me. Having a preference claim over all the stock of the Company, and over any advances made to it, they must under any circumstances be quite good.

The Government, I understand, owes to the Company more than the amount of these debentures, in unpaid subvention, and in the interest guaranteed by the acts of the Cortes and decree.

Now, nothing could be easier for the Government than to take up these debentures, passing the amount to the debit of the Company, and thus clearing the Company from all preference claims upon it, receiving as security for this payment my debentures. But even if there was no subvention, and no interest due to the Company, as these debentures, from their nature, are equal to cash (for the Government could realise their value from the assets of the Company at any moment), the Government, in making this payment, or rather by buying the debentures, or by enabling the Company to buy them, would not, in either case, thereby come under any further advances to the Company.

If

If the Government would agree to this, my reasonable proposition, I would (for I do not wish to return to England without doing something), on the other hand, agree—

1st. To refrain from enforcing my claims for the stock for three or four months, so as to give the Government ample time to consider its responsibility, and the course it ought to adopt in regard to the Company.

2dly. I would take no steps to move for the correspondence in Parliament til the end of three or four months. The mere fact of the correspondence, &c. &c. being laid upon the Table of the House of Commons and printed would, I know, send down Portuguese stock, and injure the credit of this country to an extent far, far greater than the value of all the stock of the Union Mercantile Company, and;

3dly. I would be prepared to co-operate with the Government in any reasonable and practical plan for the continuation of the service of the mails to Africa, &c. &c., and for the security of the advances which the Government has made.

I am most anxious, as you are aware, to avoid extreme measures, and as I know you are equally anxious to effect an amicable settlement, would you, as a friend to both parties (if your health permits), be so kind as to call upon the Duke, and make this proposal to him, without prejudice, or write to him on the subject.

I remain, &c.
(signed) W. S. Lindsay,

His Excellency Sir Arthur Magenis, K.C.B.,
&c. &c. &c.

I hope the Duke will not construe this friendly and reasonable proposal to any doubt in my mind as to the justice of my claims and the certainty of the responsibility of the Government. If ever I had any doubt on this point I have none now.

Braganza Hotel, Lisbon, 22 January 1863.

I RETURN herewith the letter, of date the 19th instant, addressed to you by his Excellency the Duke of Loulé, as also the official notification of the appointment, by the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty, of a Commission to inquire into the affairs of the Royal Union Mercantile Company. I have further to thank you for the copy of his Excellency's letter to you of the 20th instant.

Though the most eminent lawyers in Portugal have decided that the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty is responsible, I do not complain that his Excellency should still maintain that it is not responsible. He has a perfect right to do so if he thinks proper, but I cannot refrain from expressing surprise that, on a legal question, he should continue to repeat in all his letters his "own opinion," as a sufficient answer to the written opinions of five of the leading counsel of Lisbon.

I was glad, however, to see by his Excellency's letter to you of the 19th instant, that he had at last opened the door to have those questions set at rest, and that the Commission of Inquiry had been appointed in consequence of my representations, and that my "claims would be the basis of the inquiry." I was also glad to see that his Excellency repudiated, in the most positive manner, the idea that the Commission was named to delay the solution of this business, or that the employés whom he had appointed to constitute the Commission were otherwise than men of intelligence, with characters "above suspicion." At the same time assurances of this kind appear to me to have been unnecessary, for there is nothing in my letters to you to lead his Excellency to suppose that I thought his Commissioners were even tainted with corruption. I thought that a Commission of Inquiry, in which the English shareholders, as well as the Portuguese Government were represented, would likely be able to furnish his Excellency with a more accurate report, and one for which I would have a greater respect; and that a Commission thus constituted would be more likely to look to both sides of the case. I still hold that opinion.

In compliance, however, with the invitation, or rather the intimation contained in his Excellency's letter of the 19th instant, and with the request for all shareholders to attend, which was published in the "Portuguese Gazette," I waited upon the Commission at noon on the 20th instant. As I do not understand the Portuguese language I took with me my friend and agent Mr. Pinto Basto, and my legal adviser Mr. Abranches. You may imagine our very great surprise when we found the Commission holding its meetings, not in an office of its own, nor in one belonging to the Government, but in the office of the criminated parties, where the directors and their clerks could have free and ready access to all the books and papers of the Company, and immediate and close intercourse with the members of the Commission.

I, however, felt that I had no right to draw, even from a circumstance so suspicious, the conclusion that the British subjects who had been wronged, and who had protested against the illegal acts of the Company and of the Government, would not receive impartial justice at the hands of the Commissioners appointed by the Government; nor was I justified in supposing that because one of the persons criminated, Mr. Fradessa da Silveira, was a Government official, and, I understand, a colleague of one of the members of the Commission, that the same measure of justice would not be served out to him as to any other person. I consequently, without remark on these circumstances, tendered my evidence, in accordance with the invitation as a shareholder, and as the only bondholder in the Company. I offered to prove, from the documents in my possession, from the books of the Company, and from the minutes of its proceedings—

1st. That certain entries in the books of the Company, where various sums had been passed to my debit, were altogether incorrect; and that the Company was neither justified in making these entries nor in allowing these sums to remain in the books of the Company as assets, thereby erroneously and falsely increasing its capital.

2dly. That the directors had, in numerous instances, appropriated the funds of the Company to their own use.

3rdly. That the directors had left unpaid its debentures which had preference claims upon all the stock of the Company, and had used the funds of the Company for the payment of debts alleged to be due to themselves and to their friends. I may here remark, that I am indeed amazed that his Excellency, in his letter to you of the 20th instant, should raise a doubt in regard to the preference right of these debentures. Even if the loan from the Government was legally made, which it was not, and even if the directors had power to grant the mortgage to which he refers (which they could not legally do without the sanction of the general assembly of shareholders), his Excellency does not surely mean that, by a mere stroke of the pen, or even by an act of the Cortes, either the directors or the Government could sweep away, without my sanction, the property of the Company, which three years ago had been especially mortgaged to me by these debentures.

4thly. I was further prepared to prove before the Commission, that the directors had borrowed money without the sanction of a general assembly of shareholders, and had misappropriated the funds thus borrowed.

5thly. That the directors and manager had been guilty of many illegal acts; and 6thly. That the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty had been a consenting party to those illegal acts, and had consequently rendered itself responsible to the shareholders who had protested against them.

The Commission, however, declined to hear me, stating that they "must act in accordance with their instructions," and that they were not prepared to receive evidence from me. I asked them when they would be prepared to do so. They answered, if they required my evidence at all, it would not be for a month or two.

I then left, and accompanied by Mr. Pinto Basto, verbally reported to your Excellency what had taken place.

I have now been here for two months. No exertions have been spared on my part to effect a just and amicable settlement. I am debarred by the statute law of this country from instituting legal proceedings against the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty. I could, therefore, only, as an English subject, appeal through you as the minister of my country. You have ably and readily assisted me; but as your efforts, as well as my own, have failed to do justice, my last and only resort (which I will most assuredly adopt) is to appeal to my countrymen, through their representatives in Parliament, and ask for the production of all the papers, including the letters of his Excellency (which though marked "private," are all on public business).

I will do so, not merely in justice to myself and those British subjects who, with me, have been greatly wronged, but as a warning to other persons to be cautious how they invest their money in Portuguese undertakings, and especially in stock guaranteed by the Government of this country, by an Act of the Legislature, and by Royal Decree, but on which, so far as I can ascertain, not one sixpence of the interest thus guaranteed, has been paid.

What course Parliament may think proper to adopt after the production of these papers, I cannot pretend to say. The people of England will see by these papers the perpetration of great wrongs to British subjects. They will see that you have remonstrated in vain against these wrongs, and it may so happen that both the Parliament of England and the Government, having regard to their own dignity and that of their Sovereign, may have recourse to measures which both you and I are most anxious to avoid.

My dear Sir Arthur,

Braganza Hotel, Lisbon, 22 January 1863.

I FORWARDED a letter to you at 1 p.m. to-day, copy of which I hope you have sent to his Excellency the Duke of Loulé, as it contained, besides my account of what had taken place before the Commission, an answer to various questions raised in his letters to you of the 19th and 20th instant.

Since dispatching the above, I have received the letter which his Excellency addressed to you, dated yesterday. It is at least satisfactory to find that you now receive prompt replies replies to your letters. The enclosure I have handed to Mr. Pinto Basto and Mr. Abranches to answer. They, understanding the Portuguese language, will be able to give an accurate account of what was said by the Commissioners when I tendered my evidence; and it is fortunate that two witnesses accompanied me. I may merely remark that the items which the directors passed to my debit, form part of the accounts of the Company, and I presume that one object of the inquiry is to see to the accuracy of the books.

By reference to the report of Mr. Herries to Earl Russell, you will see that the directors never even ventured to raise, in their own courts of law, these manufactured accounts, as counter claims against me, and as a reason for not paying my debentures.

The Commissioners, it is true, sent me a formal invitation the day after I had seen them, but it was merely to inform me that if I had anything "new" to state, they would hear me. I have no desire to raise any new questions; a sufficient number of questions have been already raised. It was to confirm the accuracy of these, as stated in my letter to you of to-day's date, that I desired to give my evidence; and if the Commission was not appointed to inquire into these questions, I am at a loss to understand for what object it is sitting.

I am glad to find that his Excellency in his letter of yesterday, does not again deny the responsibility of the Portuguese Government, but even furnishes you with a clause from the contract, which was entered into when the Company was formed; and which he says must debar the English shareholders from appealing to the only court of justice which is open to them. The clause is not exactly as he gives it. I have the contract before me. It is very short, and is dated the 28th April 1858. The words are these: "The Company is considered a national one for all purposes, and is, in this capacity, subject only to the laws of the country, and to the Portuguese authorities."

The meaning of the clause is clear enough. It prevents me from proceeding against the Company in an English court of law. I am sorry for it, for if I had had that power, my debentures would have been paid long since. I am not, however, proceeding against the Company for the value of my shares, but against the Government of Portugal, who, by its illegal acts, have rendered them nearly worthless. If I was a Portuguese subject, having a claim upon this Government, my only appeal, by the laws of this country, would be through the Cortes; but an English subject has no such right, and he must, therefore, make his claims against the Government of Portugal, through his minister, or through the British Parliament.

Consequently, the question is, to all intents and purposes, of an international character, and no clauses which his Excellency can pick out, and no laws which he can pass, can debar me from the right of appealing to the Parliament of my country.

His Excellency Sir Arthur Magenis, K.C.B.,

(Translation.)

My dear Sir Arthur,

Lisbon, 19 January 1863.

I ACKNOWLEDGE the receipt of your letter of the 17th, enclosed in which was the one addressed to you by Mr. Lindsay, on the same date.

I cannot help presenting some observations to you with respect to what Mr. Lindsay says in his letter above mentioned.

You will remember that I have always told you that it is my opinion that His Majesty's Government is not in any way responsible to Mr. Lindsay, even should the exactness of all the facts alleged by him be proved; but you are perfectly well acquainted with the practices of public administration, and, consequently, you are not ignorant that ministers never adopt a final decision on points of law, without consulting the proper departments, and without hearing the opinion of men versed in the law, namely, the lawyers of the Crown, the indispensable counsellors in such cases. By acting as I did, and forwarding Mr. Lindsay's claim to the Assistant Attorney-General to the Crown in the Department of Public Works, Commerce, and Industry, I have followed the proper rules of administration, and have shown the wish of His Majesty's Government to be duly informed on this subject.

The examination made by the law officer of the Crown, of Mr. Lindsay's memorial, has already been the cause of the appointment of a Committee of Inquiry, as I have already acquainted you, and from the copy of the Government Order (Portaria) which I send you, you will see that the committee has the charge of hearing, not only Mr. Lindsay, but also every shareholder of the Company União Mercantil, who may wish to lay before it any complaint, claim, or information. The committee having been appointed in consequence of Mr. Lindsay's memorial, it is evident that his claim is to be one of the bases of the inquiry, and Mr. Lindsay may, therefore, rest assured that the committee will inquire into all the facts adduced by him against the directors of the Company; and he may also on any day call on the members of the committee at the office of the Company, to give them any explanation.

Allow me, my dear Sir Arthur, to reject, in the fullest manner, the idea that the committee was appointed to delay the solution of this affair. The Government wishes to obtain a perfect knowledge of everything relating to the Company União Mercantil, to be able to decide the affairs concerning it, in accordance with its rights, with the laws of the country, and with the public convenience.

You will observe that the Government has ordered the committee to take charge of all the mercantile books of the Company, and of all the documents, directing the book-keeping to be carried on, whilst the inquiry lasts, in supplementary books.

I am surprised that Mr. Lindsay, a man conversant with affairs, should imagine that a Committee of Inquiry is a committee of arbitrators. If it were a committee of arbitrators it would be just that they should be appointed by the Government and by the complaining shareholders; but the committee is one of inquiry, and not for arbitration, or judgment, and therefore no one interested could take part in it, since, however respectable his character might be, his report might be considered partial.

In appointing the committee as I did, I have followed the most elementary rules of good administration; and you may be sure that the officials selected by me for this work are, on account of their intelligence and character, beyond all suspicion whatever. They will report to the Government with full exactness and truth; and thus far does the charge committed to them extend.

I again, therefore, repeat that it is difficult for me to comprehend how Mr. Lindsay could imagine that either he, or some one else representing him, ought to be a member of the committee.

Accept, my dear Sir Arthur, &c.

Sir Arthur Magenis.

PORTARIA or Ministerial Order through the Department of Public Works, appointing a Committee of Inquiry into the acts of the Company União Mercantil.

MR. WILLIAM SHAW LINDSAY, a subject of Her Britannic Majesty and a shareholder in the Royal Company União Mercantil, having made representations against several acts in the management and administration of the said Company, and whereas it is proper that the Government should obtain the amplest and fullest information on the subject, in order that it may adopt, within the limits of its own functions and rights, those measures that may be just and convenient: His Majesty the King ordains through the Department of Public Works, Commerce, and Industry, that the Councillor Antonio Jozé Torres Pereira, at the head of the Account Department in the Home Office, Jozé de Torres, at the head of a section in the Statistical Department of this office, and Jozé Maria d'Andrade, constituting a Committee of Inquiry, shall proceed with the greatest urgency to a most minute examination of all the acts in the administration and management of the Company from its foundation till the present day, receiving from its directors all the books, memoranda, and documents of their mercantile transactions, to be kept by them, under their own power and custody, as long as the inquiry lasts, without the said committee hindering in any manner whatever the continuation of the acts and operations of the Company, which is to continue its functions independently of the inquiry, according to the terms of its statutes, carrying on its book-keeping in supplementary books.

His Majesty likewise ordains that the committee shall exact from the present and the former directors and managers all the explanations and information that it may deem necessary, and shall invite, by means of public advertisements, all the shareholders also to furnish any information that they may consider to be useful.

And His Majesty commands the foregoing to be made known to each of the members of the said committee for the proper purpose.

My dear Sir Arthur,

21 January 1863.

I ACKNOWLEDGE the receipt of your letter of the 20th of January.

I immediately ordered it to be communicated to the members of the Committee of Inquiry, who, in their answer, which I send you in copy, give an explanation which I hold to be fully satisfactory.

I already expressed to you yesterday the regret which I feel at seeing that Mr. Lindsay wishes to take this question before the British Parliament, and, at the same time, the full confidence which I cannot but place in the enlightened spirit and impartiality of your Government.

It would be necessary to forget all the rules of law to admit that any claim of Mr. Lindsay, as a shareholder in an anonymous company, having its seat in Portugal, and which was organised according to the laws of this country, can form the object of an international question. This rule is so general, and so elementary, that even if it had not been expressly laid down with reference to this undertaking, Mr. Lindsay could not ignore ignore it; but in order to obviate all doubt, I cannot help calling your attention to the contract signed by all the founders of the Company, one of them being Mr. Lindsay, represented by his attorney, wherein it is expressly laid down, in the 21st condition, "that the undertaking is considered national to all intents and purposes, and, as such, subject only to the laws of the kingdom, and to the Portuguese authorities."

As a shareholder of the Company Uniaõ Mercantil, and for the effects resulting from his contract, Mr. Lindsay can have no more rights than any other Portuguese shareholder.

(Translation.)

Most Illustrious and Excellent Sir,

By your Excellency's order, the chief of the section of Commerce and Industry has just communicated to the Committee of Inquiry appointed by the Government, on the administration and management of the Company, Uniaõ Mercantil, the private letter of Her Britannic Majesty's Minister at this Court, with reference to the conference which the shareholder of that Company, Mr. Lindsay, had with the said committee yesterday, the 20th instant. In consequence of this the committee has the honour to acquaint your Excellency with the following observations, with which it impugns those made by that shareholder and claimant to his Minister.

Mr. Lindsay says, that it was a cause of surprise to him to find the committee meeting and working in the very office of the Company.

We will draw a distinction.

The committee meets in the same building as the Company, but on the first floor, in an independent and private house, placed entirely at its disposal, where it has got under its custody the books and documents concerning the whole administration of the Company from its foundation till the 16th instant, when the committee commenced its functions.

The Company's office is on the second floor of the same building, and independent of the office of the committee.

And the committee could not meet at a better place for the inquiry to be of use and as expeditious as possible. The information of which the committee is at every moment in need, demanded that it should be near at hand to the administration whom it requires to consult, in order not to protract and delay indefinitely its work by means of written correspondence.

The proximity of the two offices was also advisable in order not to disturb the administration of the Company, which may in many of its acts require, and does require to get from the committee elements to continue the book-keeping in the supplementary books; elements of which the administration was deprived, by the fact of the committee having suddenly taken possession of all its books and documents, in the state in which they were found; the said administration having had no notice given to it of the appointment of a Committee of Inquiry upon it.

All this shows, that, for the office of the committee to be in the same building as the office of the Company, has not got the drawbacks ascribed to it.

The guarantees required by the parties interested ought to be others; guarantees of a moral order, far superior to those raised by these groundless apprehensions; it not being yet the time, until the presentation of the general result of the inquiry, for setting the proper value on those which the committee may offer to the parties interested, and to the Government.

Another cause of surprise to Mr. Lindsay was, that a clerk of the Company was present at the proceedings of the committee; and that the directors had free access to the office where the inquiry was being proceeded with.

It would be more prudent for Mr. Lindsay not to venture upon such a suspicion, until he became acquainted with the plan of the committee's proceedings.

The clerk whom he found there was an agent, an employé in the confidence of the Company, called and admitted in this capacity only.

As the committee is proceeding at present to the collecting of thousands of cash documents, which were delivered to it, in order to enable it to ascertain in a solemn manner those it has received, and those that perchance are missing, it is obvious to all, having a tolerable knowledge of the importance of this operation, that the aforesaid collation ought not to be made, without the concurrence of the manager of the Company, or of a person in his confidence, in order that the Company might at no time complain that documents were missing, which had been delivered by it, and had been mislaid by the committee. If the committee did not proceed in this manner, it would be liable to incur a serious responsibility which it neither ought nor wishes to assume.

As soon as the collation of these cash documents is concluded, the necessity of the presence, at the office of the committee, of the employé to whom the administration of the Company has delegated that charge, ceases, and no more employés or directors of the Company will be seen at the office of the committee, except those called upon to give information, or those who may go and seek it for the regular continuation either of the administration or of the supplementary book-keeping. With the exception of these cases it is incorrect and groundless to suppose that the directors frequent the office of the committee, or are present and assist in the carrying out of the inquiry.

Mr. Lindsay asserts that, on presenting himself before the committee with bundles of documents with which he wished to prove his accusations against the administration of the Company, the said committee had answered him, that it could not receive his evidence, until it had concluded the general examination and investigation of the affairs of the Company.

The committee will now re-establish the facts, and for this end it invokes the testimony of Doctor Antonio Joaquim da Silva Abranches and Mr. Theodoro Ferreira Pinto Basto, who accompanied Mr. Lindsay to the conference, one as his lawyer and the other as his friend and interpreter.

The committee hopes these two gentlemen will bear witness to the truth, and that the one who acted as interpreter did not fail to transmit faithfully to Mr. Lindsay the explanations and answers, which the committee gave him.

Mr. Lindsay, provided with two or three bundles of papers, which were said by him to be documents, appeared yesterday in the office of the committee, to give information concerning the Company União Mercantil.

On asking the committee whether it was acquainted with the nature of his representations to the Portuguese Government, he got an answer in the affirmative, and that they would be held in full consideration in the general inquiry to which it proceeded.

On that shareholder and claimant offering to show the committee the documents concerning his accounts and transactions with the Company, the committee was of opinion that it was not competent to take cognisance of the same, because it appertained to the tribunals alone to form a judgment as to the impugning and liquidation of such accounts. On Mr. Lindsay declaring that with regard to his accusations against the Company, he could not give the committee any other information or documents in addition to those mentioned in his representations to the Government, the conversation with respect to those documents was not continued.

On Mr. Lindsay insisting upon the committee ascertaining especially and in the first place the points of his complaints, because he could not stay any longer in Portugal; the committee replied, that it could not do so, because the end of the inquiry was more general, comprehending not only what Mr. Lindsay pointed out, but also any other complaints that might still be presented by other shareholders, in consequence of the public invitation made to them, and besides this, anything that might appear to be irregular in the administration of the Company.

The committee did not say that it could not receive Mr. Lindsay's evidence until the conclusion of the general examination, but it said, that only in the course of the same examination, or after its conclusion, would it be able to know whether it would require to request other information from Mr. Lindsay, in addition to that which he had already given in his representations to the Government.

The committee did not tell Mr. Lindsay that the general examination would take one or two months, but it declared that it could not well calculate the time which it would take; and that, by shortening it, it does not wish to prejudice an examination, which had reference not only to the representations of the said Mr. Lindsay, but also to many other public and private interests.

And so much did the committee not wish to avoid hearing Mr. Lindsay, that this very day it has invited him in writing to declare unto it, whether he wished to furnish it with new information or accusations on the points already mentioned in his representations, or on others concerning the management and administration of the Company; provided such information has no reference to the liquidation of his accounts, for which the committee is not competent.

Mr. Lindsay's suspicion that the only end of the committee is to gain time until his departure, is groundless; and the committee rejects it as injurious to the character of its members, and to the instructions which it received from the Government.

The committee wishes to work with activity, but does not wish to compromise through thoughtlessness the inquiry intrusted to it. It will spend therein the time that may be indispensable to form its judgment; but it neither can nor will modify its method of examination at the whim of any interested party, because above all interests and individualities it places its conscience, which it is its wish to save in a question both complicated and of the highest importance for the public administration and morality.

May God preserve your Excellency.

COPY of LETTER from Mr. Lindsay, M.P., to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

8, Austin Friars, City, 20 February 1863.

MAY I beg reference to my various letters respecting my own claims and those of other British subjects upon the Portuguese Government, and especially my letter to your Lordship so far back as the 3d February 1862, containing copy of a letter I addressed to the Minister of Public Works while at Lisbon. To that letter, however, the Minister made no reply, and various other communications have been treated in a similar manner. Though the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty has not merely broken faith with us, but have also, in numerous instances, violated the laws passed for the security of our capital, I was anxious to avoid the necessity of appealing to your Lordship to adopt measures which would disturb the existing friendly relations between Great Britain and Portugal. I consequently again, and for the third time, visited Lisbon on the 28th November last, and remained there until the 1st inst., in the hopes that I might effect a just and amicable settlement. I received great assistance from Sir Arthur Magenis, who spared no exertions to make himself fully acquainted with the nature of our claims, and who personally and by letter made on behalf of myself and the other British subjects, the most earnest appeals for justice to his Excellency the Duke of Loulé. We laid before his Excellency the letters of the Minister of Public Works, the bonds securing the stock, and reminded him of the Acts of the Legislature of Portugal and the Royal Decree, guaranteeing the payment of the dividends. The written opinion of the most eminent lawyers of his own country, stating that the Government of Portugal, by its illegal acts, had rendered itself responsible to the English stockholders, who had solemnly protested against these acts, was also laid before his Excellency. I further offered to prove these illegal acts, and to show how the statutes had been violated before any persons the Government of Portugal might be pleased to name.

No claim for compensation was made, even though much valuable time had been lost to us as men of business, and, apart from the depreciation of our bonds and shares, we had suffered much loss. All I asked was the restoration of my own capital and of that of the other English shareholders at the price we paid for the stock which the Government of Portugal, by the violation of its own laws, had rendered nearly worthless. Indeed, so anxious was I to come to an amicable settlement, that I offered to make an ample allowance for counter claims made against me, even though Sir Arthur Magenis, after investigation, declared these counter claims to be frivolous and without foundation. In all my efforts, I had, as I have stated to your Lordship, his best assistance, but up to the time I left Lisbon it was of no avail. Though the legal adviser to the Legation has, I understand, held the Government of Portugal to be responsible; and though Sir Arthur Magenis has, I also understand, written numerous letters warning that Government of the serious consequences which must arise from a denial of justice, my claims and those of the other English subjects remain in much the same position as they were 12 months ago; and it may be said that little or no attention has been paid by the Portuguese Government even to the letters of our Minister. In fact, the first letter he addressed to the Duke of Loulé after my arrival in Lisbon was not answered for three weeks.

I and the other holders of the Portuguese stock are now at a loss to know what to do. We still hesitate to ask your Lordship to have recourse to measures to compel the Portuguese Government to abide by its agreements and its laws; but the amount of money at stake is considerable, and we are in ourselves powerless, as the matter is now beyond the reach of any courts of law. All we can now do is to appeal to your Lordship for protection from great wrongs.

I have, &c.

COPY of DESPATCH from Sir A. C. Magenís to the Right Hon.
Earl Russell.

My Lord,

Lisbon, 28 February 1863.

I HAVE the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's telegram of the 26th instant, respecting Mr. Lindsay's claims against this Government.

Your Lordship instructs me to represent Mr. Lindsay's case personally to the Portuguese Minister for Foreign Affairs, and I have requested the Duke de Loulé to give me an interview on Monday or Tuesday next, when I will not fail to carry out your Lordship's instructions.

I may, however, at once mention that I saw the Duke de Loulé on the 26th instant, on the evening of which day your Lordship's telegram reached me; and that I told him Mr. Lindsay's case was everyday becoming, in my opinion, more serious; and that I foresaw, unless something was done to satisfy him (and I added he had evinced in the whole matter a very conciliatory spirit), I was confident a motion would be made in Parliament to lay on the table of the House the correspondence on this subject, and that it would not be resisted by Government, for if no other practical result followed, it would serve as a warning to other British capitalists not to embark in speculations in this country, or to put faith even in those speculations which were supported and patronized by the Government. I said that I could hardly doubt the production of this correspondence would give a blow to Portuguese credit in England, and he was well aware how important it was to this country to support in every way that credit.

The Duke de Loulé, with more warmth than he usually shows, answered "How can you make the Government responsible for the proceedings of an anonymous society, or how can its credit be shaken by those proceedings?" I answered I entirely acquit this Government of any preconceived intention of injuring Mr. Lindsay, or the other British shareholders in this Company; for it was evidently the interest of that Government, as the principal creditor of the Company (they having, as His Excellency had previously informed me, advanced close on 120,000 l. to it, as well as from their interest in maintaining a regular and periodical communication, with their colonies) that the Company in question should prosper and continue; but if the injury had been caused by the negligence of the Government in not watching over the proceedings of the Company, as they had engaged to do, the result to the British shareholders was practically the same; and I concluded by saying that, from the very commencement, I had warned His Excellency that this question was far more serious than he seemed inclined to think.

I confess to your Lordship I do not expect much result from my personal representation of Mr. Lindsay's claims, nor do I indeed believe that an official representation would be attended with greater effect. The Duke de Loulé will intrench himself behind the opinion of the law advisers of the Crown, respecting the non-responsibility of the Government towards Mr. Lindsay; and whether that opinion, or that of the advocates consulted by Mr. Lindsay, be the legally correct one, this Government will hold to the opinion of their own law advisers, and maintain that the question is simply one between Mr. Lindsay and the Company, and to be judged alone by Portuguese law and in Portuguese courts.

EXTRACT of DESPATCH from Sir A. C. Magenis to the Right Hon.
Earl Russell.

My Lord,

Lisbon, 9 March 1863.

ALTHOUGH I requested the Duke de Loulé to grant me an interview at his earliest convenience, on the 28th ultimo, and I was twice to have seen his Excellency last week, yet he was prevented by indisposition from keeping his appointment, and I only saw him on the 7th instant.

The Duke de Loulé began by observing he did not see in what respect this Government had failed in its promises; upon which I put into his hands the first instruction from the Department of Public Works in February 1859 to the agent of the Government, stating that he "is to watch that in the general assemblies" (of the Company) "the deliberations are carried on with all the legality and with a sufficient number of shareholders, according to the statutes, of which he has received a copy, and the decisions are taken in legal terms, reporting any infractions which may be made in those regulations to the Government," &c., as stated in the last page of Mr. Lindsay's printed memorial, of which a copy was transmitted to your Lordship in my Despatch, No. 11, of the 28th of January last; his Excellency then replied, Mr. Lindsay had attended these assemblies himself; to which I answered, once, when nothing of importance was transacted, and that he had never been represented by any one holding his power of attorney, as he emphatically denied that Mr. Ellicot had ever been authorised to act as his representative.

I requested the Duke to inform me what reply I was to make to your Lordship. He then said, reading a letter which had been brought into him, that the opinion of the law officers of the Crown was ready, and only required to be written out fairly, and that he would send it to me in a few days; that he had endeavoured, by appointing a commission to investigate the accounts and books of the Company, to arrive at the truth; and, admitting that some of Mr. Lindsay's allegations had been proved, that in all probability the direction would be entirely reorganized; and he finally promised me that he would use his best endeavours to settle the matter in an amicable manner.

I observed that Mr. Lindsay, while here, had shown a very conciliatory spirit; had declared frequently in his letters, of which I had forwarded copies to his Excellency, and by word of mouth when I introduced him, that he had no desire to break up the Company, which he thought, if well and economically managed, might prove a very good investment; besides, too, the shareholders had the Government guarantee of seven per cent. to fall back on as a minimum rate of interest. Mr. Lindsay had also pressed the Government to take his debentures, amounting to about 15,000*l.*, with six per cent. interest guaranteed by a first mortgage on the plant of the Company; and though I had now no authority on his behalf to make any proposal to that effect, it appeared to me not improbable that he would still hold to his former proposal. The Government, which was now the largest though not the first creditor of the Company, would thus become the sole creditor, and, in the not impossible event of the dissolution of the Company, would be enabled to keep up the steam communication with its colonies. I was, however, very particular in assuring the Duke that I was not authorised to make any such proposal on Mr. Lindsay's behalf, and though I only suggested at present a proposal he had made himself when here, and would certainly have held to it, yet it might not suit his views to accept it now:

Enclosure 2, in No. 27.

(Translation.)

OPINION of the Assistant Attorney General to the Crown, on the Lindsay Question.

Most Illustrious and Excellent Sir,

I REQUEST your Excellency to excuse the great delay of mine in giving my answer with respect to the memorial addressed to the Government by William Schaw Lindsay, and other shareholders of the Company União Mercantil. The importance of the subject, the incidents which have complicated it, and the necessity I have been under of attending to other equally important and more pressing affairs, were the causes of my delaying this answer longer than was required to examine and study the question.

It has been my constant opinion, and one which I have expressed in several conferences in your Excellency's presence, that Mr. Lindsay and his colleagues had no right to claim from the Portuguese Government the amount of the shares of which they are the bearers. I will at present show at a greater length the reasons upon which I ground my opinion.

The Government, making use of the authorisation granted by the law of the 16th of July 1857, declared by the decree of the 6th of May 1858, the concessions made to Low, Brothers, & Co., on the 26th of January 1856, and to Theophilus Bernex Philippon, on the 18th of April of the same year, to be null and of no effect. This decree also approved the contract entered into on the 5th of May 1858, in the register of the Notary Public, Antonio de Abranches Coelho, between the Government and Edward Medicott, Fortunatus Chamiço, junior, José Antonio Pereira Serzedello, Francisco Antonio Flores, Joaquim Henriques Fradesso da Silveira, Candido de Freitas e Abreu, William Schaw Lindsay, and Pinto, Peres, & Co.

The object of this contract was the establishment of a regular line of steam ships between Lisbon and the ports of Ponta Delgada, Angra and Horta, in the Archipelago of the Azores, and between Lisbon and the ports of Portuguese, Western Africa. By the 1st and 8th conditions of the contract, the Government adjudicated and guaranteed the exclusive right of this navigation to the Company, Unias Mercantil, which the said proposers wished to form.

In truth, those individuals did found the Company União Mercantil, and agreed to the statutes by which it was to be ruled by the public deed of the 10th of May 1858. The decree of the 14th of the same month and year approved the establishment of the company, and confirmed the social compact.

By the contract of the 31st of August 1858, the Company engaged to establish a regular steam navigation between Lisbon and the ports of Villa Nova de Portimao Othas, Tavira, Villa Real de Santo Antonio, and Sines.

The statutes were subsequently altered on three points:

1st. Raising to 900,000,000 reis, the primitive capital of 450,000,000 reis. This increase was approved by the decree of the 23d of May 1859.

2d. Allowing

2d. Allowing the emission of debentures to bearer, with a fixed interest and certain rate for redemption, provided their amount did not exceed two-thirds of the Company's capital. This new stipulation of the statutes was approved by a decree of the 28th of September 1859.

3d. Modifying the 26th, 29th, and 31st Articles of the Statutes, in order to enable the regular meetings of the General Assembly to take place. These modifications were approved by a decree of the 23d of May 1860.

William Schaw Lindsay sold to the Company, Uniaõ Mercantil, as soon as it was founded, the steamer "Lindsay," which is now called the "Dona Estaphania," for the sum of 85,500,000 reis, or 19,000 £, half this price being paid in bills, and the other half in shares of the Company. By a public deed, registered in the books of the Notary Public, Antonio de Abranches Coelho, on the 20th of December 1858, the same William Schaw Lindsay sold to the aforesaid Company two steamers, the "Ireland," now called the "Don Pedro," for the price of 135,000,000 reis, or 30,000 £, and the "Clarendon," now called the "Africa," for the price of 112,500,000 reis, or 25,000 £, these two sums amounting to 247,500,000 reis, or 55,000 £. One half of this sum was paid in shares of the Company; the other half in six bills at 6, 12, 18, 24, 30, and 36 months' date, and amongst other conditions under the following ones:

1st. That if any of the aforesaid six bills were not paid, all the later ones should be considered due.

2d. That the two ships "Don Pedro" and "Africa," were a special mortgage for the full payment of those bills.

3d. That all the other property, effects, rights and shares of the Company, were to be a supplementary mortgage.

The first bill became due and was paid. The second became due and was not paid. On account of this default, and in accordance with the terms of the contract, William Schaw Lindsay had a right, without any dependence upon a process, to demand the sale at public auction of one only, or of the two steamers in the port of Lisbon, or in any of the ports in England, at his own option and choice. He did not, however, make use of this right; but, rather, on the contrary, on the 28th of December 1859, he came to an agreement with the Company, in which he agreed to receive at that date the sum of 36,000,000 reis, or 8,000 £, and the balance of his credit in debentures of the company, of the value of 68,450,000 reis, or 16,100 £; and, on the same day he ratified, by a public deed written out in the books of the notary, Abranches, the agreement which he had made with the directors and representatives of the Company, expressing himself in the following manner, in these very words:

"That having entered on the same date into a new agreement and convention with the directors, the second consenting party, in the name and in the capacity of representatives of the Company, Uniaõ Mercantil, as to the form of payment of the balance of half the price for which he had sold to them his steamships "Clarendon" and "Ireland," now called the "Africa" and "Don Pedro," stipulating new conditions and guarantees, to which the second parties agreed in a private writing, he, Lindsay, by the present deed, and in the best form of law, declared to be extinct and of no effect, the special mortgage placed on the said ships by the deeds of the 4th of November, and 20th of December 1858, which were continued in my note as a guarantee for the bills drawn on the 1st of the aforesaid month of November, by him, Lindsay, and accepted by the directors of the Company, which are also to remain of no effect, in virtue of that new engagement."

The debentures mentioned in this agreement were issued in virtue of the alteration which I stated above, made in the statutes and approved by a decree of the 29th of September 1859. They are titles granted in trust, of 100 £ each with 6 per cent. interest payable half-yearly, and a rate of redemption of 12 per cent. paid annually.

The Company paid William Schaw Lindsay all the instalments up to June 1861, but did not pay those corresponding to the last six months of that year.

Founding himself upon this default, and interpreting the agreement of the 28th of December 1859 in the most favourable sense to his claim, William Schaw Lindsay sued the Company in the Commercial Court of Lisbon of First Instance, claiming from it: 1stly, 14,100 £, being the amount of the unredeemed debentures which he had received. 2dly, the corresponding interest, expenses with the protest of bills, losses and damages. 3dly, 97 £ 3 s. 7 d. with the respective interest thereon, being payments which he had made in London on account and by order of the Company. The suit was proceeded with in the regular forms, and on the 5th of June 1862 judgment was given, acquitting the Company from prosecution on the first and second claim, and acquitting it from the suit on the third. From this sentence William Schaw Lindsay lodged an appeal, and the suit is still pending on the decision of the Commercial Court of Second Instance.

Under these circumstances, William Schaw Lindsay and others addressed a memorial to the Government, wherein, stating the loss of the capital in their shares to be inevitable; they ascribe this risk to the arbitrary, null, and illegal acts of the directors, and of the general assembly of the Company, Uniaõ Mercantil: they say that the Government is an accomplice in these acts, that it approved them, and became therefore responsible for them; and consequently that the Portuguese Treasury ought to pay over to them the capital of their shares, and the interest already due and hereafter to become due.

Let us examine the grounds of this claim. In the first place:

"Illegality of the general assemblies which met on the 7th and 27th of July, 2d of August, 18th of September, 5th of November, 15th and 21st of December 1858, 19th of September and 24th of December 1859, 2d of April 1860, and 1st of June 1861; in which there were violations of the statutes in the Articles 35th and 36th with respect to the manner of calling them together; in the 38th Article with respect to the conditions required to qualify any one to take part in a general assembly; in the 26th and 31st Articles with respect to the constituting of the same; and in the 28th Article as to the manner in which the absent shareholders may be represented there."

By the 25th and 26th Articles of the Statutes, the shareholders who shall at least possess ten shares, are alone to have a vote in the general assembly; and in order that the latter may be considered as constituted, it is necessary, 1stly, that there should be at least 30 shareholders present; and 2dly, that one-fourth of the social capital should be represented.

It was impossible to comply with the first of these clauses in the sittings which were extraordinarily called together in the years 1858, 1859, and 1860; because the Company in 1858 had 14 shareholders, 15 in 1859, and 16 in 1860. The founders of the Company might promote the increase in the number of subscribers; but the result depended upon the credit of the undertaking, and upon the confidence which the public might place in its founders. To take shares in a Company is a voluntary act, and solely determined upon by considerations of private interest. The founders cannot therefore be responsible if the public are not eager to take part in the undertaking. What they ought to have done, and what they probably did do, was to make use of the means conducive to this end. Indeed in the extraordinary sittings of the 15th and 21st of December 1858, William Schaw Lindsay being present, they decided upon the publication of prospectuses of the Company in Portugal, Spain, and England; and they authorised Mr. Lindsay to make this publication in his own country in the most efficacious manner, and to issue security bonds for the shares taken there, receiving the proceeds of that subscription. The result was null. The influence, credit, respectability, and wealth of William Schaw Lindsay, did not bring a single shareholder into the Company. If such as Miles Stringer, Henry Mangham, John Bulley, and George Western appear there, the reason is because they had a share in the steamers sold by Lindsay, and because half the price was paid for in shares.

The Government also was not in the least responsible, because the number of subscribers did not increase from day to day. The public authorities did as much as lay in their power; they showed indulgence to the Company, in consideration of the difficulties with which it struggled in the first years after its establishment, and guaranteed by the laws of the 30th of March, and 10th of September 1861, the minimum of interest at six and seven per cent. on the capital realized by the issuing of shares. This was an incentive that might attract subscribers.

Would it be just to withdraw the Royal sanction from the statutes, for the sole reason of the Company not having succeeded in getting 30 shareholders in the first three years after its establishment? I do not hesitate to answer, it was unjust and most improper. The unquestionable utility of steam navigation to Africa and the Azores, the capital already laid out in the undertaking, the hope that it would become a remunerative concern, were powerful motives for the Government not to be inexorably severe.

The presence of 30 shareholders to form a general assembly was impossible; and by the well known legal rule, "Impossibilium nulla obligatio est," it is clear that the want of that number does not constitute a violation of the statutes, and that the Government had no right to withdraw the Royal sanction. We shall return to this point further on.

Mr. Lindsay says that in this case the directors ought to do one of these two things; either to call it together for the first and second time, in order to avail itself of the rule in Article 31st of the social law, or contrive to get 30 shareholders by endorsing the shares that might be necessary for this purpose.

Neither of these expedients was admissible; the first being impossible, and the second being fraudulent.

The 31st Article orders a second meeting to be convoked, should the number of shareholders necessary to form a general assembly not have appeared at the first; but at this second meeting the same article requires the presence of at least 20 shareholders. Now, as I have already said, the Company in the years 1858, 1859, and 1860, never had more than 16.

The expedient of the indorsement would be a fraud, inasmuch as those in whose favour the indorsement had been made, would go and vote in accordance with the suggestions of the original shareholders, and thus the material part of the law would be complied with; but but its spirit and intention, and the guarantee which it thought proper to establish, would be clearly and grossly sophisticated.

The other clause of the 26th Article which requires that in the general assemblies one-fourth of the social capital should be represented, was complied with in all the meetings in 1858. Because, until the decree of 1859, the capital of the Company was 450,000,000 reis, represented by 5,000 shares; one-fourth was 112,500,000 reis, or 1,250 shares; and by comparing the records with the list of shareholders, it may be seen that those present at the said meetings, either in person or by their attorneys, possessed more than 1,250 shares.

It is important to prove the existence of this requisite, inasmuch as not only were these interests far superior in value to the minimum fixed by the statutes represented there, but also because William Schaw Lindsay was present at the sittings of the 15th and 21st of December 1858, which in spite of the absence of 30 shareholders, indispensable, according to his opinion, he says were not so illegal as the previous ones, because all those interested in the Company were represented there.

It is however convenient that I should transcribe the very words of Mr. Lindsay; he says thus:—

“However as the first petitioner (William Schaw Lindsay) represented the interests of the other petitioners (Miles Stringer and John Bulley), and those of Henry Mangham and George Western, the aforesaid meeting (the one of the 15th of December), was not so very illegal as the previous ones, since it can well be said, that all those interested at the time in the Company were represented there, although not in the manner laid down in the 27th Article of the Statutes.”

For the full comprehension of this period, it is proper to remark, that the 27th Article of the Statutes allows the shareholders who are absent to be represented by their attorney, and by the 28th Article an attorney cannot represent more than one shareholder; that in the sittings of the 15th and 21st of December 1858, the shareholders, Henry Roberts, Edmund Ellicot, Miles Stringer, and George Western were not present, and all of them had the right to take part in the assembly, inasmuch as each of them possessed more than ten shares: that John Bulley and Henry Mangham were not yet shareholders at that time.

This being premised, let us examine the assertions contained in the period which was transcribed.

1st Assertion. Mr. Lindsay took part in the sitting of the 15th of December in his own right, and as the representative of the interested parties, Stringer, Bulley, Mangham, and Western. In this manner, Mr. Lindsay asserts and maintains that he could represent more than one shareholder; and as this is prohibited by the 28th Article of the Statutes, such a fact and opinion can only be explained by the extraordinary circumstances of the Company, which did not allow the social law to be literally put into execution in its meetings and preparatory conferences. Let it be observed, that one of Mr. Lindsay's complaints is, that the shareholder, Francisco Antonio Flores had, in the previous meetings, called himself his representative, and also of Pinto, Peres, & Co.

2d Assertion. That Mr. Lindsay represented those colleagues of his who were interested, but not in the legal manner laid down in the 27th Article of the Statutes. Here he acknowledges that he presented himself and was received, that he discussed, and voted as an attorney, without the proper power, as a representative without any order thereto; in opposition to the express rule of the 27th Article above quoted, let it be observed, that Mr. Lindsay complains that Flores had entered and had been accepted as his attorney and representative at the previous meetings, without possessing or exhibiting any power of attorney.

3d Assertion. That in consequence of Mr. Lindsay's presence, and of the shareholders whom he represented, it can well be said that all interested in the Company were present; and therefore, that the meetings of the 15th and 21st of December had not been so very illegal as the previous ones. Here Mr. Lindsay acknowledges himself to be an accomplice in the illegalities, which were, up to this period, the grounds for his claim. Here Mr. Lindsay maintains, that under the exceptional circumstances of the Company, the absence of shareholders might be diminished, if not compensated, by the concurrence of all, or of part, of those interested in the preparatory decisions of the same Company. And such being the case, Mr. Lindsay cannot, with good logic, refuse to accept the argument which I drew above, that in the meetings of 1858 more than one-fourth of the social capital was represented, which is the minimum required by the 26th Article, under the ordinary circumstances of the society.

From this analysis it may be concluded, that Mr. Lindsay cannot accuse others of facts similar to those he committed, and that others acted as he did himself, when all were impelled by the same forced necessity, of there not being at the time the legal number of shareholders, and guided by the same powerful motives of not allowing so promising an undertaking to die away at its very birth.

Like those of 1858, Mr. Lindsay now also charges the meetings of the 19th of September, and of the 24th of December 1859, of the 2d of April 1860, and of the 1st of June 1861, with being vitiated and illegal. Of these Mr. Lindsay was only present in person at the one of the 24th of December. At the others he was not. At the first five of 1858 he was represented by Francisco Antonio Flores; and at the others of 1859, 1860, and 1861, by Edmund Ellicott. Mr. Lindsay asserts, that none of them had a power of attorney to represent him in the general assemblies of the Company, because Francisco Antonio Flores had only got a power of attorney for the purpose of, in the name of William Schaw Lindsay, signing the constitution, or instrument, for the formation of the Unias Mercantil Steamship Navigation Company, and to do and execute anything whatever which might, or could either be demanded, or necessary, with reference to the formation of the said Company. These are the very words of the power of attorney mentioned in the public deed of the 10th of May 1858, which contains the statutes of the same Company. And with respect to Mr. Edmund Ellicott, Mr. Lindsay says that he had authorised him, by a letter, to represent him, and to look after his interests, but only and strictly with the directors, and before the same, and not in any general assembly.

This important statement by Mr. Lindsay, leads us to examine what was the character, and how the meetings above-mentioned ought to be considered.

In the registered records from Nos. 1 to 9 inclusively, these meetings are called extraordinary sittings; and it is, from the records of No. 10 forward, that is to say, from the 2d of April 1860, that they are called sittings of the extraordinary general assembly.

Our inquiry shall be into each of these periods separately, and the very texts of Mr. Lindsay's memorial will tell us what those meetings were, in the opinion of all interested therein. He says:

"To this meeting (the one of the 7th of July 1858) the character of a general assembly was not given, and no president, vice-president, and secretary were elected; and indeed such a meeting could not in any way have the character of a general assembly, because no previous convocation had taken place, it could not become constituted with that number of shareholders, and the same attorney could not represent two shareholders.

"It was the same case with the subsequent extraordinary sittings.

"And indeed those so called extraordinary sittings were nothing beyond meetings of the directors, to which the directors thought proper to give that name. Because the first petitioner (William Schaw Lindsay) took part in some of those extraordinary sittings, without his considering them to mean meetings of the general assembly, a title which was not given to them; and supposing that they were nothing beyond meetings of the directors, in which those interested took part, being invited by the directors for that purpose."

Behold here, from the unsuspecting testimony and authoritative opinion of Mr. Lindsay what those meetings were, and what they were not. Neither the character, nor the title of general assembly, was given to them. They were meetings; they did not go beyond meetings of the directors, wherein those interested and invited by them took part.

He further says:

"... that the manager, Candido de Freitas Abreu, writing to the first petitioner (William Schaw Lindsay) under date of the 17th of March 1860, and informing him that the directors had determined to call together a general assembly of the shareholders, on the 28th day of May of the same year, and instructing him to cause the advertisement which he forwarded to him, to be published in the 'Times,' and in a few other English journals, he added that he had been instructed to make that communication to the first petitioner, in order that he and the other interested parties who lived in England might have time to send out, if they wished, the necessary powers of attorney to be represented in the said assembly, adding that a letter of authorisation was sufficient."

In this period Mr. Lindsay gives another unobjectionable testimony, that like himself the directors did not consider the meetings to which we are referring to be general assemblies; inasmuch as for none of these did they address Mr. Lindsay, in the manner and in the terms they did, for the intended general assembly of the 28th of May. Other corollaries are to be inferred still, and these are:—1st. That the directors were acquainted with the powers of Flores and Ellicott, and knew that they were not sufficient to represent Mr. Lindsay in a general assembly. 2d. That they would not admit them in the general assembly, as they had received them in the extraordinary meetings, without special powers for that act, which, in my opinion, shows that there was no fixed purpose of passing over and defrauding the interests of the English shareholders, and that every one acted at all times with full knowledge of the case, and in the best good faith.

In my opinion also those meetings were not the ordinary, or extraordinary, sittings of a general assembly, according to the regulations of the statutes. They were conferences between the directors and the shareholders resident in Lisbon, and those absent that could be represented there, for the purpose of treating upon the formation and organisation of the Company. Such conferences were indispensable, not only to overcome the difficulties which were occurring, but also to combine as to the means of getting shareholders, realising the capital originally stipulated, of increasing it if necessary, and, in fine, to take all the decisions required by the engagements which the founders of the Company made in the contracts entered into with the Government on the 5th of May, and 31st of August 1858.

And the founders of the company were so well aware of the embarrassments which they were to meet with in organising the society, that having agreed in the 15th Article of the Statutes to the annual election of the directors, the mandatories of the shareholders, in the second paragraph of the same article they decided that the first direction should last three years; and in the transitory article they appointed to form the same Edward Medicott, Fortunato Chamiço, junior, Jozé Antonio Pereira Serzedello, Francis Antonio Flores, and Joaquim Henriques Fradesso da Silveira; and to be the manager, Candido de Freitas Abreu. They did more: in the 39th Article they agreed that the first ordinary general assembly should be convoked by the direction in the month of February following that in which the Company shall have completed one year of its existence. This article is interpreted by Mr. Lindsay in his memorial in the following manner:—

“The directors could not, therefore, avoid convoking an ordinary general assembly for February 1861, without violating such an express rule of the statutes.”

What is to be inferred and concluded from these exceptional measures? That the founders had foreseen the obstacles which the undertaking might meet with in the first period of its establishment, that they made choice of their most skilful pilots to carry it without shipwreck into a port of safety, that they invested those elected with discretionary powers for so long and difficult a voyage.

In truth, the articles of the statutes above quoted cannot have any other meaning. It was a dictatorship, which the founders instituted by their unquestionable right. The directors, in virtue of this lawful mandate, joined to their functions the powers of a general assembly, for the most praiseworthy and prudent purpose of concentrating in the direction which had been appointed all the faculties and rights of the Company, and forming a strong administration, and, in their opinion, an intelligent and zealous one, to carry the organization of the Company to the desired end, complying immediately with the engagements it had entered into with the Government. Therefore, the decisions of the directors, as long as these extraordinary powers lasted, that is, till February 1861, were the decisions of the Company, as lawful for the Government and as binding on the shareholders as if the general assembly had decreed them.

The shareholders went to and had a vote in the meetings of 1858, 1859, and 1860, with the full knowledge that they were going to assist the directors to give moral force to their decisions, and to help them in the work of the foundation of the Company, and did not think, nor did Mr. Lindsay think, that they were the sittings of a general assembly. Now, for the purpose of representing Mr. Lindsay at these preparatory conferences, Francisco Antonio Flores had, in his power of attorney, and Edmund Ellicott subsequently had, in the above-mentioned letter of authorization, full and most sufficient powers.

So that it is Mr. Lindsay himself who, in the statutes which he drew up and in the memorial addressed to the Government, legalises those meetings and the mandate given to his representatives. It was he himself who agreed to the suspension of the articles of the statutes as to the manner of convoking and constituting the general assembly till February 1861; it is he who replies by his own acts and confession to the incoherent charge of arbitrariness, abuse, and illegality against the directors whom he himself appointed, to whom he granted exceptional and extraordinary powers for the space of three years, and with whom he made all his agreements and entered into all his contracts.

It thus remains clearly proved what was the character of those meetings in the judgment of the founders of the Company and in the opinion of Mr. Lindsay himself; what ought to be the opinion of the Government with respect to the same, in accordance with the acts of the founders themselves, and of the statutes which they drew up; and that consequently the defects, vitiation, violations, and arbitrary proceedings brought forward by Mr. Lindsay in his memorial are not proved.

Let us proceed to the second ground.

“Illegality of the acts which the directors submitted to the sanction of the Government, without showing that they were based on a decision of the general assembly, which was solely and exclusively competent to carry them on, as might easily be seen by examining the documents, and might be known from the information of the respective functionaries.”

The only reason for the illegality of these acts is the illegality of the meetings in which they were decided. But this reason is untenable on account of the observations which I made in my inquiry into the first ground. Nevertheless, it is useful to examine what acts were approved by the Government.

The decree of the 23d of March 1859 sanctioned the increase of the Company's capital from 450,000,000 reis to 900,000,000 reis.

The decree of the 28th of September 1859 sanctioned the issuing by the Company of bonds or debentures to bearer, with a fixed interest and with a certain rate for redemption.

The decree of the 23d May 1860 approved of the modification of the 26th, 29th, and 31st Articles of the statutes.

In the period from 1858 to 1860, that is at the time when the directors were in joint possession of all the social powers, in virtue of the express and lawful delegation of the founders, no other act was submitted to the sanction of the Government.

The decision to increase the capital of the Company was adopted in the sitting of the 15th of December 1858, Mr. Lindsay being present and voting in the affirmative, as in the records it is said that there was unanimity in all the resolutions taken in that conference. With respect to this increase, Mr. Lindsay expresses himself in the following terms:—

“From the illegality with which the increase of the capital of the Company might be voted no damage could accrue, nor did it indeed accrue either to the Company or to the shareholders, inasmuch as the issuing of the corresponding shares to this increase never took place. . . . And even should the issuing of the shares for the increase of the capital take place, this would be a favourable event both for the Company and for the shareholders, because it would be a sign that the Company showed itself to be in a prosperous condition.”

Consequently, the Government sanctioned an act having in its favour the authoritative vote of Mr. Lindsay, an innocent act which did not injure any one, and an act which might be the cause of great prosperity to the Company.

Let it be remarked that this act was decided in one of the sittings charged by Mr. Lindsay with being illegal, but not to such an extent as the others, because he was present, and represented, without a power of attorney, his London colleagues. Whence it is shown that Mr. Lindsay concurred in and was accessory to the illegal decision, in his opinion, to increase the social fund; a most important decision, since in anonymous societies capital is everything, and persons are nothing.

In the decree above quoted of the 23d of March 1859 sanction was also given, in order that the direction, composed of Medlicott, Chamico, junior, Serzedello, Flores, Fradesso da Silveira, Manuel Jozé Ribeiro, and Henry Roberts, should continue to manage the affairs of the Company till January 1863. This authorization was granted at the request of the directors, and the directors were authorised to make this request in virtue of the decision taken in the sitting of the 21st of December 1858, at which William Schaw Lindsay presided.

It is proper to transcribe here two periods from Mr. Lindsay's memorial. These are:—

“In the sitting of the 4th of August (alias the 18th of September 1858, see Record No. 4) it was decided that Manuel Jozé Ribeiro, who had de facto been taking a part in the working of the direction, should be invited to become an effective director, having all the emoluments as such.

“And thus in the sitting already quoted of the 4th of August 1858 (alias of the 18th of September), they had already associated unto themselves a director, in contravention of the rule of the transitory article of the statutes, which established a direction composed only of five members, and in opposition to the rule of the 45th Article of the same statutes, which confers the power of electing the members of the direction upon the general assembly.”

And what did Mr. Lindsay, the author of those charges, do in the sitting of the 21st of December 1858, at which he presided, and having a vote in his own right and in that of his colleagues?

He confirmed and approved the election which the directors had made of Henry Roberts to be an effective director; he therefore gave this vote of confirmation and approval in opposition to the rule of the 45th Article, and of the transitory article of the statutes.

He resolved that the individuals, whom I mentioned above, amongst whom is to be found the name of Manuel Jozé Ribeiro, should continue to be directors till the 1st of January 1863; he did, therefore, by this vote and decision, ratify and confirm the act of this shareholder having joined the directors, an act which he charges as illegal and abusive in the periods quoted above.

The decision to issue bonds or debentures was taken at the meeting of the 19th of September 1859 (Record, No. 8). Mr. Lindsay was not present, and in the record it is stated that he was represented by Edmund Ellicott. The next conference or meeting took place on the 24th of December of the same year. Mr. Lindsay was present, and he says in his memorial that at this meeting “no reference was made to the previous decision,” that is, to the decision to issue debentures. And, in truth, it is not stated in the record that the previous one was read and approved; but if Mr. Lindsay wishes to draw an argument from this omission, in order to maintain that he neither decided nor confirmed the act approved by the Government in the decree above quoted of the 28th of September 1859, this plea will not avail him on account of what I am going to say.

On the 28th of December 1859, Mr. Lindsay made an agreement with the Company, União Mercantil, to receive instead of the bills, representing one-half of the price of the steamers which he had sold, 161 debentures, amounting to 68,450,000 reis, or 16,100*l*. This agreement was ratified the same day by public instrument.

Mr. Lindsay was not, therefore, ignorant of the decision which had been adopted to issue debentures; he was not ignorant that this decision, from its very nature, stood in need of the sanction of the Government, and that it was really granted by the latter. Consequently, he considered them as legally issued bonds, and of such value, and so valid and safe, that he exchanged them for the bills which he had, and desisted from the special mortgage placed on the two steamers “Africa” and “Don Pedro,” in virtue of previous contracts.

Is not this the solemn and manifest confirmation on the part of Mr. Lindsay of the act which the Government sanctioned? It is. And one acting in this way has no right to attack the decision of the Company, and to accuse the sanction given by the Government.

The decision to propose to the Government the alterations to be made in the 26th, 29th, and 31st Articles of the statutes was adopted in the sitting of the 2d of April 1860. The record says that this was a meeting of the extraordinary general assembly. I am not aware whether all the formalities laid down in the statutes to give the sitting this name were complied with; and I know that the nature of an act is to be determined not by the description and name given to it by the interested parties, but rather by the whole of its clauses and results. And, in accordance with this principle, I shall examine the legality of that meeting.

In 1860 the Company had only 16 shareholders, an insufficient number to form a general assembly, not only, according to the terms of the 26th Article, requiring 30 shareholders, holders, but also to those of the 31st Article, which required 20. Consequently, the Company was de facto in 1860 in the same circumstances and under the same impossibility as in 1858 and 1859, an impossibility which had been foreseen by the founders, who, in order to remedy the inconvenience of that state, and prevent the expiration of the undertaking in its very first years, had named the directors in the transitory article, had fixed for them in the second paragraph of the 15th Article a duration of three years, and had in the 39th Article appointed the month of February 1861 for the first ordinary general assembly to take place. These rules, which were stipulated as exceptions to the 15th Article, which enjoins the annual election of the directors, and to the 34th Article, enjoining the convocation of a general assembly every year, prove that the directors combined the attributes and powers of the general assemblies with their own powers and attributes; that they had been constituted into a dictatorship, as I said above; and, consequently, that during the whole of that time, the compliance with all the articles of the statutes regulating the mode of convoking and constituting the ordinary and extraordinary general assemblies was suspended. If such was not the sense and the effects of those exceptional causes, then there could be no grounds nor any possible justification for them; and, moreover, the founders who had agreed to this would not obtain their end, which was to establish and continue the navigation according to their engagements, and to do everything that was required and necessary for the definitive organization of the Company. According, therefore, to the just estimation of the law the sitting of the 2d of April 1860 has the same character, nature, and legality as the conferences of 1858 and 1859; and the decisions adopted both in the latter and in the former are equally valid with respect to the Government, and binding in the same manner on the shareholders. As I have already stated, the 26th Article required the presence of 30 shareholders, and that one-fourth of the social capital should be represented in order to constitute a general assembly; and the 31st Article only required 20 shareholders, whatever might be the amount of their shares, if at the first convocation the former number were not present.

Now, after the efforts and endeavours during two years of the founders in Portugal, and of Mr. Lindsay in England, in spite of the publication of the programme, composed by Mr. Lindsay, in the two countries and in Spain, the Company in 1860 had only 16 shareholders, one of whom could not vote in the general assembly, being the holder of five shares. The time for the meeting of the general assembly was approaching; this state might continue, and the social law could not possibly be complied with. Prudence, therefore, suggested that this risk should be prevented, because either the undertaking would have to cease, or the directors would have to prolong, by their own act, their discretionary powers, until the good condition of the Company should have peopled the society with the indispensable number of shareholders necessary for the exercise of its functions.

To convoke with the certainty that there was not a sufficient number, was mere childishness; to convoke in the hope or with the concealed design of the founders making up the number by means of the indorsement of a part of their shares, was either to practise a fraud or to sophisticate the spirit of the social compact. Besides, the indorsement ought to be, and could only be a spontaneous and free act; and neither was it imposed by law, nor had the Government the right to decree it. And the directors and the other founders showed very clearly that they did not wish to give up or to transfer their shares, inasmuch as they did not do so; and it was only by the entries in their books that they always calculated the legal number of shareholders. Moreover, by means of the indorsement, the part of the social capital which would be represented would be exactly the same; and if the assembly gained in the number of voters, it was a loser as far as regarded the sincerity and independence of the votes. But the number of votes would not even be increased, because the 29th Article allowed the shareholders one vote for every 10 shares, without any limitation.

Under these circumstances it was necessary to provide a remedy. The directors and shareholders resident in Lisbon understood it so, and Mr. Lindsay was of opinion that they ought to have acted in this manner, in the following period of his memorial.

"And when the meeting shall have been convoked for the first and second time, and at neither of them there shall have appeared the number of shareholders necessary to constitute a general assembly, it would then have become necessary to try and remedy this impossibility thus proved, of complying with the rule of the statutes, and settle the most convenient alteration of the same at a meeting of all those interested, and petition the Government to sanction them."

Hence it follows that Mr. Lindsay does not contest the right of the founders interested to settle the convenient alterations of the statutes, and to petition the Government to sanction them, without observing or complying with the social law. The only difference between this opinion and the fact which took place is, that Mr. Lindsay did not think the occasion chosen by the directors to be the proper one, and would have wished that two convocations should have been tried in order to prove the impossibility of complying with the statutes. The difference being reduced to a mere question of convenience, it does not seem to me that this circumstance can influence the validity of what was decided; inasmuch as the statutes and laws did not foresee and regulate, nor could they have foreseen and regulated the case. In order to form a judgment upon the necessity and opportunity of altering the social compact, the founders and interested parties had the same liberty and rights which they had and exercised when they, for the first time, came to an agreement. At all events, it was a domestic concern with which the Government ought not to have interfered, by placing embarrassments on an undertaking with which it had entered into important contracts, and which stepped forward to say, "I cannot continue without this reform."

Mr. Lindsay also says that the alterations ought to have been voted at a meeting of all those interested. From the record, No. 10, it appears that out of the 16 existing shareholders, 11 were present, Mr. Lindsay being represented by Edmund Ellicott, who, as we have seen above, was fully authorized for this purpose. The four colleagues and partners of Mr. Lindsay, and a holder of five shares, were alone absent. Now, in these conferences, as well as in all the previous ones, there had been no rule with respect to numbers. The directors alone, by themselves, in virtue of the powers which they held, could decide and propose the alterations; and with much more reason could they do so with the votes and concurrence of the great majority of those interested in the Company. And even should this consideration not possess the force which it has, the Government had already, under the same conditions, sanctioned the increase of the social capital, which was decided with Mr. Lindsay's vote in the sitting of the 15th of December 1858, when all those interested were not present; and the increase of the capital was also a change in the statutes, much more serious and important than the one sanctioned in the decree of the 23d of May 1860.

The proposed alterations, which obtained the royal sanction, consisted: the 1st, in suppressing the number of 30 shareholders, whose presence was required by Article the 26th, and that the general Assembly should be considered to be formed if one-fourth of the primitive capital were represented; the 2d, in restraining to 120 only the unlimited number of votes which the 29th Article conferred upon the shareholders; the 3d, in fine, in allowing the formation of the general assembly, whatever might be the number of shares of the shareholders present, if those necessary to represent one-fourth of the capital had not appeared at the first meeting, thus suppressing the number of 20 shareholders, which in this hypothesis the 31st Article required.

These alterations were compiled into a public instrument on the 22d of May 1860, and they show that their object was to facilitate the meetings of the general assemblies, and to withdraw the Company from the extraordinary circumstances which compelled the founders to place it under abnormal conditions.

It appears from the records that there was a paragraph in the proposal conferring upon the shareholders who might have guaranteed with their signature and responsibility any loan made to the Company, as many votes as might be equal to the number of times the sum guaranteed could be divided by the sum of 900,000 reis. This paragraph was not, however, approved by the Government. The sureties and creditors of a company are entities apart from the society, and cannot interfere in its management. If Mr. Lindsay had read the instrument in question, he would not have unjustly and groundlessly charged the Government with having approved that paragraph.

The modifications made in the statutes were approved by the Government in 1860, in the same manner as they would have been in 1858, had the founders of the Company drawn up the 26th, 29th, and 31st Articles, as they subsequently did think, on taking counsel from experience, that they ought to draw them up. The new rules were no offence against morals, and were not contrary to law. No more did they diminish the guarantees of the associates, because the rights of the present and of the future associates to discuss and vote in the general assemblies, to elect and control their proxies, to receive dividends, and all the others laid down in the social compact for the mutual advantage of those interested, were equally secured. The fixing of a maximum of 120 votes, of which Mr. Lindsay so much complains, instead of being a motive to reject the reform, was rather the best principle laid down in the same, inasmuch as it tended to the equality of the voters, without injuring the just and reasonable preponderance of the large shareholders.

The reform, therefore, of the statutes, considered in its essence, was just; with respect to its effects, it was useful as it facilitated the regular functions of the Company; with respect to the reasons for the same, it was necessary on account of the small number of shareholders which there was; and, as to its origin, it was legal, because it was decided by the great majority of the founders assembled in a preparatory sitting or conference, and by the directors, who centred in themselves, as I have said above, all the powers of the society.

Mr. Lindsay has no right to contest the legality of the sitting of the 2d of April 1860, and the validity of the decisions taken thereat, because Edmund Ellicott, his lawful and acknowledged representative, was there and voted. Mr. Lindsay's protest does neither give him nor take any rights from him, and, if it did, it is against his mandatary. Besides it is not to be presumed that Mr. Lindsay was ignorant for two years of the alterations in the statutes.

The Government consequently approved what it considered to be worthy of approval, with the same right and for the same purpose as it had approved the different clauses of the primitive statutes. It sanctioned the reform as to the mode of forming the general assemblies, as it had previously sanctioned the reform which increased the social capital. It found in both a favourable vote on the part of Mr. Lindsay. Both arose from the same origin, and were proved and authenticated by the same documents. Both were decided and approved with the object of obtaining advantages for the Company, without detriment to the public.

From what has been said with respect to the different acts which were sanctioned by the Government, it may be seen that the second ground of Mr. Lindsay's claims is not proved, proved, inasmuch as the facts are incorrect, its doctrines erroneous, and it is contrary to the exceptional rules to which he agreed in the statutes, and contradictory to the votes he gave, and to the acts and contracts which he practised, and into which he entered.

Let us proceed to the third ground:—

“Illegal application and distribution of the extraordinary bonus granted to the Company by the 10th condition of the contract of the 5th of May 1858; abuses, malversations, and infractions of the statutes perpetrated by the directors and manager, in not convoking the general assembly at the time laid down in the 39th Article; in not allowing the attorneys of the shareholders absent to examine the books of the Company; in approving the accounts and balance up to the 31st of March 1861; in illegally counting in the sittings of the 15th of April and 14th of May 1862, the votes corresponding to 355 shares inscribed in the Company’s name, as if they were the votes of shareholders present; in taking possession of salaries and bonuses which did not belong to them; in not distributing within the proper time the report and accounts which were to be discussed at those sittings; and, finally, in practising many other acts beyond their own powers and of the social law, and to the detriment of the shareholders.”

These facts, asserted in Mr. Lindsay’s memorial, stand in need of proof. In order to ascertain their accuracy, and likewise to acquire ample and full information with respect to the acts of the administration and management of the Company (União Mercantil) from its foundation to the present day, the Government appointed a committee of inquiry, by a Ministerial order of the 14th of January of this year. It is, therefore, indispensable to await the result of this administrative investigation, not only to ascertain the facts, but also to give them their due value, and to decide what may be just and legal, and as far as what is compatible with the faculties of the Government.

Mr. Lindsay also impugns the validity of the additional contract of the 5th of January 1861, sanctioned by the law of the 30th of March of the same year, and the loan of 450,000,000 reis, which was effected in virtue of the authorization given to the Government in the law of the 10th of September of the said year, 1861. As I shall have to refer to these contracts in another part of my opinion, I reserve until then my inquiry into the reasons set forth by Mr. Lindsay.

Let us, however, put it down as certain and settled—that all the facts alleged by Mr. Lindsay, that all his complaints and charges are proved; that the statutes were violated; that the affairs of the Company were recklessly and ignorantly managed; that the social capital was misspent; that it was unlawfully and criminally applied; that the directors falsified their powers, misused the faculties conferred upon them by the statutes, and injured their constituents.

Do these facts, if true, impose any responsibility upon the Government?

The inquiry and discussion on this point carry us into considerations of an exclusively legal order, with respect to the nature of anonymous societies and their relations with the Government.

The distinguished juriconsult, now irreparably lost to the glories of the Portuguese bar, who took upon himself the defence of Mr. Lindsay’s cause, forgot to prove some indispensable premises. In his long reasoning I do not find any national or foreign law, any principle of administrative law, either civil or commercial, which imposes upon the Government the obligation of paying the amount of the shares which William Schaw Lindsay and his colleagues subscribed. I regret still more the remarkable brevity with which lawyers, versed in letters and science, gave their opinion of the 20th of December 1862. I regret that they should have acted thus, as it may be inferred from those few words that the serious responsibility of the Government of Portugal, on account of the extravagances, the errors and blunders of commercial companies, or especially of those of the Company União Mercantil, or still more especially of those that are prejudicial to the interests of foreign shareholders, is a matter of current doctrine and a law so well known as to preclude the necessity of any quotation.

I respect the nobleness of character of those consummate jurists; but reason and justice have greater influence upon my mind than the authority of their votes.

The Company União Mercantil is an anonymous society, or a commercial company (Article 538th of the Commercial Code). The different commercial societies, whatever may be their peculiar nature, are all subject to the general principles laid down in the 527th Article, and in the following ones, till Article 537th of the code above quoted. Of these principles I shall transcribe the following:—

“It appertains to the essence of all commercial societies that each member shall give the society a part of its capital, either in goods, money, credit, or in work or industry (Article 527th).

“Every society ought to be established for the common interest of its members (Article 528th).

“When the society has once begun, the profits and losses are common to the members, in proportion to the shares with which they entered it, or in accordance with what may be settled in an express lawful agreement (Article 534th).

“All mercantile societies are to be ruled by the conventions between the parties and by the special laws of commerce. Civil law, properly so called, is only applicable in the case of the absence of the law and of the usages of commerce (Article 537th).”

From these principles we may conclude, 1stly, that the Company Uniaõ Mercantil was established for the common good of its members; 2dly, that the losses and profits of this society are common to all the members, in proportion to the shares with which they entered, and according to the terms of its statutes; 3dly, that as the statutes are the convention between the parties, it is by them that the rights and obligations of the members amongst themselves are to be regulated; and, 4thly, and finally, that the same Company, in addition to its statutes, ought to be regulated by the special laws of commerce; in the absence of these, by the usages of commerce; and, in the absence of both, by civil law, properly so called.

These are the sources of law on the question in point—social, compact, commercial laws, the usages of commerce, and civil law; such is naturally the order I shall follow in my inquiry into the responsibility brought forward against the Government.

The founders of the Company Uniaõ Mercantil agreed, in the public instrument of the 10th of May 1858, to the clauses, conditions, and organic rules of the society, which they formed amongst themselves, and with those who might afterwards take shares. The Government was no party to that contract, and no mention is made in the instrument of the same or of any one representing it. The rule of law, laid down in the 27th Law, section 4, fl. de pactis, says thus: “Animadvertendum est ne conventio in alia re facta aut cum alia persona in alia re aliave persona noceat;” consequently, as conventions have no effect except amongst the persons who entered into and agreed to the same, it is evident that the Government has neither acquired any rights nor contracted any obligations by the convention which the founders of the Company made amongst themselves; and as the Government on its part never invoked, nor could it invoke, the stipulations of that compact to have a share in the gains and advantages of the Company, so also in the same manner its shareholders cannot, in virtue of the articles of their social law, impose upon the Government the responsibility of making good to them the losses which they may have suffered.

And, moreover, such a responsibility is not laid down in any of the articles of the statutes. Availing themselves of the advantages of anonymous societies, the shareholders avoided the personal, individual (“solidario”), and indefinite responsibility of societies possessing a signature, and also the prohibition of interfering in the management of the social fund of societies en commandite. They agreed to divide amongst themselves all the gains and profits of the undertaking, however considerable they might be; and as to the losses, that they would only be answerable up to the amount of their shares. If Mr. Lindsay’s theory were exact, anonymous societies would be real “leonine” contracts—all the dividends for the shareholders, and all the losses for the State. If the statutes implicitly contained this condition, they would carry with themselves their own inefficacy, nullity, and death; and such a society would be reprobated by morality, by justice, and by the law.

And so clear is it that the social compact is not of this nature that the shareholders laid down the rules as to the mode of forming the capital of the Company, with respect to its administration and management, as to the control which appertained to all and to every one of them, and with respect to everything else that appeared to them to be conducive to the employment and useful application of their money. They are their own legislators, the executors of their own laws, responsible for their unskilfulness, exposed to losses, sharers in the profits, and exclusively bound by their contract and according to the terms of the same.

The Government does not appear there in any manner: it was not there then, it is not there now; neither in the Company Uniaõ Mercantil, nor in any other anonymous society; because there is not, because it would be iniquitous and absurd that there should be a special and particular jurisprudence for the nature and effects of the statutes of the Company Uniaõ Mercantil.

It is William Schaw Lindsay whom I do find in the compact and in the Company as a founder, and his colleagues as shareholders; consequently, from the stipulations of the statutes, and from their nature and effects, the obligation of paying the shareholders the capital of their shares, which they fear they may lose, or which they may have really lost, cannot be inferred against the Government.

Let us proceed to the commercial laws.

Anonymous societies are treated in our Commercial Code under the head of commercial companies, from Article 538th to the 546th inclusive. The law defines what a company is: it says how it ought to be formed; who can be its manager; what is the responsibility of the directors and what is that of the shareholders; how the social fund is divided into shares; the nature of the latter, and the mode of transmitting them. In these articles there is not one in which the responsibility of the Government is decreed, nor is there any principle from which it might be inferred. On the contrary, the 538th Article defines a company, a society of shareholders without a social firm; that is to say, that it is a contract by which several persons bind themselves without compromising their individual responsibility; and the 543d Article does not bind the shareholders for any losses beyond the amount of their shares. Therefore, in societies of this nature the only responsibility that there is, is that of the shareholders, limited and restrained to the amount of their entries, or to the sum total of their shares. If that of the Government were to be found there, it would be an element both strange and contrary to the nature of the society, in opposition to the general principles which I have transcribed above, and still more to what is laid down in the 532d Article of the Code. This 532d Article declares the nullity of the convention convention by which one of the partners should enjoy the whole of the profits, and likewise any stipulation or clause which should exempt from all share in the losses the sums or effects with which one or more partners should have contributed towards the fund of the society or association.

This principle, most unquestionably just, and sanctioned by commercial law, condemns Mr. Lindsay's claim irrefragably, who, being a member, wishes to save from the losses he apprehends the sums and effects which constitute his entries to the social fund. Now, if such a claim cannot be stipulated under pain of nullity, much less can it be invoked when it has not been stipulated. If this clause, whether express, tacit, or understood, has no force or value against the other members who have all entered into the same contract and are bound by it, and responsible for the same, with much less reason can it be of any force or value against a third person, who is the Government in this case, which did not enter into the contract, is not bound by it, and is not responsible for the same.

But the 546th Article of the Commercial Code makes the establishment of Companies, and the approval of their institution, dependent upon the special authorisation of the Government. It is in virtue of this law that the statutes of all anonymous societies are submitted to the Government to approve, modify, or reject them.

What rights does the Government acquire, and what obligations does it contract by this act? In other words, what is the nature and what are the effects of a decree approving the statutes of an anonymous society?

In societies with a firm, in those with capital and industry, in a tacit society, in a society with account shares, and in societies en commandite, either all or some of the members are solely and individually responsible. Such is what is laid down with regard to this point in the 549th, 558th, 570th, 576th, and 582d Articles of the Commercial Code.

In anonymous societies the shareholders are not responsible for any losses beyond the amount of their shares, and their mandataries, the managers, are not answerable for the execution of the charge which they have received and accepted, and do not contract any obligation, either personal or individual, with respect to the conventions of the Company, as is set forth in the 542d and 543d Articles.

So that in anonymous societies, neither the shareholders nor their mandataries contract any personal and individual responsibility towards any third person. The shareholders are individually bound in the sums which they subscribed, and no further. The Company is responsible to the extent of its capital, and no further. For this reason, anonymous societies are not known or distinguished by the name of any of their members, but in general by the end of the undertaking. For this reason their mandataries are temporary and dismissable; they can be shareholders or strangers, receiving a salary or serving gratuitously.

The persons of the shareholders disappear, there remains the moral person of the Company. Any third person does not care to know the solvency and credit of the members, but rather the capital of the society, because the only guarantee for those who negotiate with it is placed in its capital. In the event of bankruptcy or forced dissolution, it may happen that the shareholders have received the amount of their shares in the previous dividends, and that the real capital in existence produces only 20 or 30 per cent. of the liabilities; it may happen that the capital which has been realised may be far below the amount of the debts contracted on account of the commercial operations of the Company; and on liquidation the creditors lose everything in excess of the social fund, and the shareholders, although very wealthy, do not pay more than their shares.

Hence it comes that our Commercial Code, when defining the different kinds of societies, in its Articles 547, 557, 571, 577, and 580, always makes use of these words: "A contract of two or more persons, a society of merchants;" and in the 538th Article it says: "A society of shareholders," calling them not after their names or professions, but by the fact of contributing towards the formation of the capital, and of holding a title which represents a certain share in the same capital. In other societies the will of one partner (Article 693), bad behaviour (Article 696), bankruptcy (Article 698), death (Article 699), madness (Article 701), are legal causes for dissolution, but not in anonymous societies. Shares, according to their nature, are transferable either by the mere delivery of the title, by their inscription or register in the books of the Company, or by any other lawful means of transmitting property; and in this manner the shareholders change and vary daily, without this fact having any influence upon the legal existence of the anonymous society, because it is not a society of persons but of shareholders, as the law says—a society of capital, as the commentators call it.

These are the essential elements which characterise anonymous societies and distinguish them from all other civil persons. Owing to their special nature, our Code requires that they should be formed by means of a public deed (Article 539), and that the context of that deed should be transcribed at full length, and not an extract, in the Commercial Public Register (Article 540).

It is also for the same reason that our own laws, those of France, of Belgium, and of other countries, make the establishment and the statutes of companies dependent upon the authorisation and special approval of the Government.

Other commercial societies are not in need of this authorisation. In the same manner societies en commandite, the capital of which is formed and divided into shares, as in those which are anonymous, and whose shareholders are not responsible beyond the amount of their entrance shares, as the Commercial Code expresses itself in the 580th Article, are not subject to the approval of the Government; and the sole reason is, because they have managers individually responsible, and because, consequently, their social contract has on one hand a part of the nature of anonymous societies, and, on the other, in relation to the public, the nature of societies with a firm. It is, therefore, the want of responsibility and of the individuality of the shareholders and managers of companies which justifies the interference of the Government in their foundation, and which gives the public authorities a right to examine and to ascertain beforehand the basis of their organization.

But as individual responsibility is not a guarantee for the members of a society, but rather for those individuals who may have business with the society, it is clear that the Government interferes solely and exclusively in the interest of the public, in order to give it that moral security which in the case of other societies it obtains from its knowledge of the responsible firm and from the credit of the same.

Anonymous societies, however, are usually founded by a few individuals; and, during their existence and development, a part of the public takes interest in it by taking shares, and the other part keeps aloof, limiting itself to treating with the undertaking in its branch of business or industry. Hence it comes that the previous examination, to which the law subjects the institution of a Company, has merely and simply for its object—1st. To assure the public in general that the Company does not conceal any artfully got up plan, without any lawful and real purpose, without a proportionate capital, and guaranteed by the shares of the members that it is no fraud, that it is not an imaginary commercial speculation. 2dly. To assure future members that the statutes guarantee unto them the right of having a proportionate share in the profits, of having a vote in the operations of the Company, of regulating and watching the employment of the social capital, of controlling the acts of the administration, of electing their own mandataries, and, in fine, of exercising all the faculties which are derived from their capacity as shareholders, in accordance with the law, with the lawful stipulations of the social compact, and with the interest which they may have in the society.

Such are the reasons, such the purpose and end of the previous examination which the law renders incumbent on the Government. In these reasons, purpose and end, are comprised the rights and obligations of the public authorities with respect to the establishment and institution of anonymous societies.

After this examination has been made, and after the legal sanction has been given, the anonymous society remains a legal personage, in the full enjoyment of its rights, independent and free in its own sphere, like all other social beings. It enters into civil society in its own individuality, and the State has only the same duties to comply with towards it as towards all other civil persons, that is, the duty of guaranteeing in its favour, by the general means of law, its legal independence and freedom, in order that it may advance and develop itself by the force and by the laws which apply to it.

Consequently anonymous societies, as far as regards their foundation and organization, stand in need of the sanction of the Government; but, with respect to the exercising of their business or industry, to the domestic acts of their administration and management, to the manner of promoting their own interests by the employment of their capital, they are not governed by any special power, and are not bound by any peculiar law.

It is by these general principles of law that the 546th Article of the Commercial Code has always been understood and put into execution in our own country, and has also been understood and put into execution in those countries where a similar legislation exists.

According to the terms of this article, the Government authorises the establishment of companies, and sanctions their institution: nothing more. To go further, to intermeddle in their interior administration, would be to exceed the limits which the law laid down, by a manifest abuse of authority, and to the evident risk of the interests of the State.

By combining the 546th Article with the Articles 537, 539, and 540 of the above-quoted Code, it may be seen, that every mercantile society ought to be regulated by the agreement of the parties; that this agreement, in anonymous societies, ought to be made by a public deed, transcribed, in extenso, in the Commercial Public Register.

Hence it follows that the existence of anonymous societies depends upon two distinct acts—1st, the social compact which forms them; 2d, the act of the Government which sanctions them.

The first is an act merely civil; it is a private contract, subject to the same principles of law, to the same legal rules, which prescribe the internal and external formalities of contracts, which regulate their validity or nullity, and limit the extent of their effects.

The second is an act of the executive power, exercised by the delegation of the legislator; it is an act of the discretionary power of administration, as Dalloz says; an act of administrative guardianship, as Chauveau calls it. And it is a current doctrine that acts of this nature have neither influence upon the essence of conventions, nor can they repair any essential or formal defects by which they may be vitiated.

Consequently the Government's sanction does not take the nature of a private contract from the statutes of anonymous societies. If any of the members shall have just grounds to annul the convention which was made, either through error, violence, fraud, wrong, or through the absence of consent, or of any other lawful reason, he may do so, and obtain it, without the decree of the Government which approved that convention being any obstacle to him. In the same manner, and in spite of the act of the Government, any third party, whose rights may have been offended by the formation of an anonymous society, may contest the validity of the statutes. For instance, if the majority of the members of a civil society were to come to a decision of forming themselves into an anonymous society, though the latter may have been authorised and sanctioned by the Government, the dissenting members may contest the validity thereof, and obtain its repeal. So Alphonse Demeur relates in his work, Les Sociétés Anonymes de Belgique en 1857, that it was judged in the Belgian Courts.

Dalloz,

Dalloz, founding himself upon the nature of conventions and private contracts, which statutes always continue to possess, maintains ("Répertoire de Législation," under the word "société," No. 1,474; Demeur, above quoted, Nos. 35, 43, and 151; and Chauveau, "Compétence Administ.," in his note to No. 413, sec. 11) that the ordinary courts are alone competent to judge the question as to the validity and effects of the same statutes. They quote, in support of their opinion, that of other distinguished jurists, the decisions and judgments of the respective courts, and the opinion of the lawyers "à la Cour Royale de Paris," who, in a conference, decided that the judicial power, in adjudging the nullity of the foundation of an anonymous society, and in judging the questions arising from its statutes, did not offend the independence of the executive power, and did not slight the administrative act of approval.

In order to conclude the analysis of the nature, character, and effects of the decrees authorising and sanctioning the statutes of an anonymous society, I shall say, with the authors above mentioned, that it is an act of gratuitous administration and not of judicial administration. If the Government did not wish to authorise the establishment of a company, or if it required or imposed modifications in the statutes, the founders are obliged to submit to any of these decisions, or to abandon the idea of the undertaking which they proposed to found. No law, no principle offers them any appeal against the decision of the Government, which, in the name of the public good, has the sovereign right of fixing the conditions under which an anonymous society can be constituted; and in the use of this unquestionable right, though it may wound the interests of the founders and of the members, it does not offend any rights already acquired.

It appears to me, therefore, that I have proved that the Government, on account of the authorisation and sanction which it grants in virtue of a general law, does not acquire the right of interfering and having a vote in the direction of the affairs of the companies, and in their management and administration; that the contract of the society, made and entered into by those interested according to the rules of commercial law, and under the empire of the general laws of the kingdom, is not binding on the Government, and that, consequently, the Government is not answerable either for the success of the undertaking, for the misfortunes which may injure it, for the unskilfulness, negligence, or temerity of its operations, or for the abuses, errors, or crimes of its directors.

Will your Excellency allow me to transcribe in this place the words of the Minister of the Interior in France, in his instructions of the 22d October 1817, as to the nature of the Government authorisation, its effects, and on the process to obtain it?—"Les précautions legales une fois accomplies, c'est au public à mesurer sa confiance envers des établissements dont le but, les moyens et les règles fondamentales ont été appréciés et portés à la connaissance du public."

In harmony with the principles which I have mentioned, and in the execution of the laws above quoted, the Government proceeded in regard of the Company Union Mercantile in the same manner that it has proceeded with respect to all anonymous societies. It examined the statutes, and found that they did not contain any stipulation contrary to law or injurious to the rights of its members; that the Company intended to establish lines of steam-navigation to Africa and to the Azores; that these lines were useful to the country, and might be remunerative to the undertaking, and that the founders were persons both trustworthy and of credit. The result of this examination was that the statutes were approved, that the Company obtained the qualification of a legal entity, and that it commenced its operations. The public came into the knowledge of what was the end, the means, and the fundamental rules of that society. From that point forward it was the business of the public to regulate and moderate the confidence which it ought to have in the Company, and how far, in what manner, and under what risks it could carry on business with it.

Mr. Lindsay says, in his memorial, "That having been informed of the basis for the establishment of the Company, and as it appeared to him that by them the undertaking would be in possession of all the proper elements for its continuance and prosperity, provided there should be an economical and well-managed administration, he did not hesitate to become one of the founders, and one of the largest shareholders."

Now one of the bases, and doubtless the most important one, was the capital with which the Company was founded; even at the present day there are many who think that it was a mistake on the part of the founders to fix the sum of 450,000,000 reis only. Nevertheless, Mr. Lindsay did not think in the same manner, and was convinced that that sum was sufficient, and in proportion to the operations which the Company was about to commence. In Mr. Lindsay's opinion, the continuation and prosperity of the Company depended upon an economical and well-managed administration. It was naturally with this view that he and all the founders, in the transitory article of the statutes, elected and appointed amongst themselves the members who were to be directors; they agreed, in the 15th article, section 2, that the first direction which was appointed should last three years; and they invested it with all social powers, suspending the meetings of the general assembly until February 1861.

With the same right, for the same purpose and effects, and for the same reasons, did the Government sanction the modifications in the statutes which were submitted to it in the course of time—namely, the raising of the capital to 900,000,000 reis, the duration of the first direction till January of the present year, the issuing of debentures or bonds, and the alterations in the conditions for the forming of the general assemblies.

Both the original statutes as well as the subsequent alterations had, and still have, the character and nature of private contracts, which the Government publicly ratified. Mr.

Lindsay was a party to these contracts, personally in some, and in others through the intervention of his representatives and mandatories. The stipulations of these contracts were some of them decided by the vote, and, with the previous assent of Mr. Lindsay and others, were ratified by his subsequent proceedings. If the contracts, however, are so vitiated as to be rendered null, either with respect to all interested or with respect to Mr. Lindsay only, the act of the Government approving and ratifying the same did not amend those defects, and did not deprive anybody of the right of claiming, in the ordinary courts and by the legal means, the annulling of conventions which may be considered null and injurious to any rights already acquired.

All the decrees published by the Government are, from their nature, acts of gratuitous administration, and the safeguard of the public interests; tending to acquaint the public with the end, object, and means of the Company União Mercantil, in order to give those who might wish to enter into business with it, or might wish to have some interest in the same, that moral security which they would have if the members, instead of the anonymous form which they chose, had adopted the firm of "Lindsay, Abreu & Co.," or any similar one.

The Government did not take part in the establishment of the Company União Mercantil either in deference to Mr. Lindsay, or in order to protect and save his capital from the risks of the undertaking. It interfered because Mr. Lindsay and the other founders did not wish to take upon themselves an individual and personal responsibility for the losses which might happen, and for the debts which the society might contract, and limited their responsibility to the amount of their shares.

If this form of society is adopted, the Portuguese law ordains that certain precautions should be taken in favour of the public. It was this the Government did.

The Government, therefore, by sanctioning the statutes and their modifications, did not become liable to the charge and responsibility of indemnifying the shareholders of the Company União Mercantil, or any third party, creditors of the same, for the losses which they might have suffered. And, as I have already shown that there is no article in the Commercial Code that imposes that obligation, it follows that, in virtue of the special laws of commerce, there are no grounds for Mr. Lindsay's claim.

Let us see whether our commercial usages, another source of law in this matter, will justify Mr. Lindsay's claim.

Our commercial usages, which have been constantly observed by all the shareholders of anonymous societies, are all in the sense opposed to Mr. Lindsay's claim. When one or more shareholders think that either the general assemblies or the directors have transgressed the respective statutes, they denounce that infraction to the Government, in order that it may inquire and withdraw the royal sanction, or take any other measures for which it may be competent and which may be just. In those countries which are governed by identical laws on this matter, and in which jurisprudence has been already settled by means of numerous decisions of the judicial power, the shareholders of an anonymous society, and persons in any way interested in the same, always have recourse to the ordinary courts, for them to judge their right to claim indemnity for damages caused by the illegal acts of the managers, or by the illegal decisions of the other members. This is attested and taught by the authors above quoted.

Consequently, commercial usages also do not authorise Mr. Lindsay to claim what he does. If any wrong was done him by the Direction of the Company, or by its members, let him claim compensation for it in the courts of justice.

Civil law, properly so called, which is applicable to mercantile societies in the absence of commercial law and usages, does not also impose upon the Government the responsibility which Mr. Lindsay wishes to render effective.

There is no contract or semi-contract, no crime or semi-crime, whence the obligation of indemnifying the English shareholders might result to the Government; neither did the Government contract such an obligation by any express convention and with its own consent; nor did it practise any lawful act not agreed to, or commit any inexcusable indiscretion which may give rise to that obligation.

The facts alleged by Mr. Lindsay for this purpose do not produce the right to which he appeals.

Let us see:

The Government entered into the following contracts with the Company União Mercantil:—

1st. Of navigation to the Azores and to Africa, on the 5th of May 1858, authorised by the law of the 26th of July 1856.

2d. Of navigation to the Algarve, on the 31st of August 1858, authorised by the law of the 1st of March of the same year. (This contract was rescinded by a decree of the 26th of August 1859.)

3d. Of navigation to the Algarve, on the 12th of April 1860.

4th. The one of the 5th of January 1861, in addition to the previous ones, obliging the steamers of the Company União Mercantil to call at the port of Funchal; and, amongst other concessions, the Government guaranteeing to it the minimum of interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the capital produced by the payment of the shares which were issued. This contract was confirmed by the law of the 30th of March 1861.

5th. Finally, the one of the 24th of October 1861, for the loan of 450,000,000 reis, authorised authorised by the law of the 10th of September of the same year, which raised the minimum of interest to 7 per cent.

In these contracts the Government is a creditor for the duties and services to which the Company engaged itself, and is a debtor for the concessions which it made to the said Company. From the nature and stipulations in these contracts, the Government would only incur the duty of indemnifying, if it failed to comply on its part with the obligations which it took upon itself. This non-compliance is neither alleged nor proved, therefore the damages which Mr. Lindsay asserts that he has suffered cannot be proved to be legally grounded upon the contracts above mentioned. It is really difficult to believe that it should be sincerely maintained that the Government has injured Mr. Lindsay by the guarantee of the interest and by the loan. By the guarantee it endeavoured to attract shareholders, and to contribute in this manner towards the prosperity of the undertaking. By the loan it drew the Company out of financial embarrassments, and prevented its failure and dissolution. Both these results must have been useful to Mr. Lindsay: that of an increase of shareholders would realise the capital of the Company, by which the members would have the sure means of continuing the undertaking advantageously and diminishing the probability of their losing their shares; that of preventing the failure and dissolution did directly obviate the loss of the whole or of part of their shares which Mr. Lindsay and his associates might have suffered on that occasion.

Mr. Lindsay says, in his memorial, that he went into the undertaking at the request of the Minister of Public Works at the time, and confiding in the promises of protection which were given him. This correspondence, altogether officious and private, does not appear from any public acts; there is no authentic public instrument, there is no contract, by which the Government engaged to interfere directly in the undertaking, or to guarantee the capital of the English shareholders by means of the money, the revenue, and the property of the State.

The request to carry out an undertaking which would be productive of so many benefits to the country was both natural and lawful. The request made to Mr. Lindsay bore witness to the great hopes placed in his assistance, credit, knowledge, and influence. The promise made and inspired by the prosperity of this country was a legacy which the successors of that Minister generously paid.

What would Mr. Lindsay say if the Government had killed the Company at its birth, and had not held out to it its protecting hand in the days of its troubles? He would have presented a claim for the contrary reason to the one he now alleges, but always basing his opinion upon the request and promises of the Minister.

And whom did the Government protect and assist? Was it the Lisbon shareholders and the persons here? No; it was that moral person, the Company, of which Mr. Lindsay was the founder and a shareholder.

This powerful assistance, according to Mr. Lindsay's language and to the jurisprudence of his lawyers, is called losses and damages.

But, the memorial continues, "It was the Government which, by authorising and sanctioning the acts, both illegal and null, of the Direction, has chiefly offended and injured the rights and lawful interests of the petitioners, and deprived them of all the guarantees which they might have in the religious observance of the law."

This is not exactly true.

The Government approved the statutes and the modifications therein. It did so in virtue of the right which I have already proved, and its act has the nature and effects which I have also proved; it sanctioned the decisions of the members, adopted in the preparatory conferences, with the legality which I have shown above. It did not sanction any act of the Directors properly so called, nor could it interfere without committing an unjustifiable abuse of authority in the domestic administration of a private society. It did not possess the right to do as much either by the contracts or by the laws; if it did, its authority might be disregarded with impunity, and its orders ought to have been disobeyed; the Directors were not the mandatories of the Government, but of Mr. Lindsay and of the other shareholders. And as the Government could not prohibit those acts, it is neither guilty of nor responsible for them: "Culpa caret qui scit, sed prohibere non potest," lib. 55, ff. de Reg. Jur.

The Government had appointed commissioners to the Company; one in virtue of the 20th condition of the contract of the 5th of May 1858, to control the execution of that same contract, and the other in virtue of the 3d condition of the contract of the 5th of January 1861, to control the doings, book-keeping, and operations of the Company, and the compliance with the respective contracts. The object of this control, as may be seen, was to watch over the due compliance of the contracts with the Government, and it was the second alone that was also charged with the inspection of the accounts and operations of the Company on account of the concession of the minimum of interest, in order that the Government might know when there was a dividend or when there was one under 7 per cent., for the due payment then of the guaranteed interest. Neither of the commissioners was appointed to control the acts of an anonymous society. When royal commissioners are charged with this duty, the Government imposes this clause upon the founders, which is inserted in the statutes. In those of the Company União Mercantil there is no article which treats of commissioners; but in spite of this, in the instructions given to the first commissioner, he was enjoined to use all vigilance with respect to the compliance with the statutes. What follows from this? It follows that the Government was closely watching the acts of the Company, not as an interested party therein, but as the protector and defender of the public interests, in order that it might, when the latter should demand it, recall the royal sanction given to the statutes and force the Company to dissolution. This is the only right of the Government against anonymous societies, which by their acts, and by their infractions of the social compact, have placed themselves in a position to injure those interests which the law entrusted to the administrative guardianship of the public authorities. In the circular instructions of the 11th of July 1818, in answer to the 5th question, the French Minister expresses himself in these terms:—"Dans les sociétés anonymes auxquelles il aurait été attaché un commissaire du Gouvernement, sa mission est spécialement de faire connaître à l'autorité les contraventions aux statuts, qu'il serait dans le cas d'apercevoir;" whence it is known that in Portugal, as well as in France, the commissioners take no part in the acts and domestic operations of companies.

In all the decrees which authorise the establishment of companies, a clause is inserted to the effect that the royal sanction will be withdrawn should the statutes not be complied with, or should they be violated. This Act is of the same administrative nature as the decree itself which sanctioned it; it appertains to the acts of discretionary power in public administration, and the Government is the sole judge, the sovereign judge, as to the expediency and convenience of employing that extreme measure. It is the advice of all writers that a Government ought to be very prudent and parsimonious in the use of this right, since the unforeseen and precipitate dissolution of a company might seriously compromise some important interests.

But both in the above-quoted French circular of the 11th of July 1858, and in the treatises of jurists of great learning and of unquestionable authority, it is laid down and taught as a current doctrine that the Government act recalling the sanction allows full scope for any actions which private individuals may wish to bring before the courts of justice to obtain reparation for the damages caused by the violation of the statutes.

And, still further, it is to the ordinary courts of justice that the shareholders are to have recourse in order to be disengaged from the society, when their consent shall have been obtained by fraudulent means, when the statutes shall have been violated, and when the modifications made in the primitive compact shall have altered the conditions of their subscription and adherence.

This is a forced consequence from the distinction between the Government act and the statutes, and the capital principle in this matter, that the statutes always continue to possess the nature and character of a private contract, subject to the rules and precepts of common-law, and to the competency of the ordinary courts of justice. See Dalloz, "Répertoire de Legislation et Jurisprudence," on the word "société," No. 1472—1478.

The commissioners, therefore, which the Government appointed to the Company União Mercantil do not render it responsible for the infractions or non-compliance with the statutes; they are no proof that it wished to become acquainted with all the acts of the management and administration, for the purpose of regulating, directing, or prohibiting the same, being responsible for not having done so; they are no proof that it endeavoured to substitute the administrative control for that of the shareholders or of those interested, and that both of these ought to trust to the vigilance of the Government and neglect their own interests; they are no proof, in fine, that it wished to assume the supreme direction of the domestic affairs of the undertaking, to usurp unto itself the competency of the ordinary courts of justice in the execution of a private contract, and take the favourable issue of the operations of the Company upon itself, whilst it remained the surety and the principal payer of the entrance-money of the shareholders, and consequently of the credits of third parties. Shareholders are not lenders to a company, they are its members. They put in a part of their capital for the purpose of gaining as much in dividends as the undertaking may produce, and to lose only that part of the capital with which they entered it. The profits and losses are common to the members, and to them alone.

If Mr. Lindsay's claims had any grounds to rest upon, and if the doctrine of his lawyers were correct, it would follow that the contract of the 5th of May 1858, and all those into which the Government entered with the Company União Mercantil, would be legal impossibilities; since they would blend together in the Government the two contrary qualities of creditor and debtor, and they would be iniquitous in their very essence, punishing the undertaking for the faults which it might commit, having always its legal and conventional responsibility hanging over its head, whereas the Government was the responsible party; and it was, therefore, both its interest and duty to direct the affairs of the Company to the attainment of its greatest prosperity. The absurdity is palpable.

Mr. Lindsay lays great stress on the argument drawn from the existence of the commissioners, and from the instructions given to them by the Government, being ignorant as to what is the nature and the object of those entities; but Mr. Lindsay forgets that this argument is a two-edged weapon, and that if it wounded the Government it would wound still more Mr. Lindsay's reasoning through the heart, who declares in his memorial that he had authorised Edmund Ellicott to represent him, and to look after his interests with the directors. Now it is of the acts of the directors that Mr. Lindsay complains. I shall, therefore, use against him the very words of which he makes use against the Government:—

"Mr. Lindsay had therefore in his power, through his representative to the Company, the means of obtaining the knowledge of the legality or illegality of the acts of the directors, and more especially of those which were submitted by the latter to the approval of the Government.

"If the directors sought to deceive Mr. Lindsay, by assuming that they had the power to to do that for which, by the laws of the Company, the general assembly of the shareholders was alone competent, Mr. Lindsay might avail himself of the law, in order not to admit or sanction any illegal acts which were not proved to have been grounded upon a decision of the assembly, which was solely and exclusively competent for the same.

"If the directors sought to deceive Mr. Lindsay, by pretending that the act which they submitted to the sanction of the Government was the result of a decision of a general assembly, in the information which Mr. Lindsay might require from his representative he would have an easy means of knowing that such a decision could not exist.

"So that, in any case, Mr. Lindsay could not be ignorant that the alteration and reform in the statutes was the exclusive work of the directors, without the general assembly having been heard at all.

"Notwithstanding this Mr. Lindsay, by his silence, and by the vote of his representative, did authorise and sanction those acts of the directors.

"It was Mr. Lindsay, therefore, who by his approval and sanction of the acts, both illegal and null, of the directors, did chiefly offend and injure his own rights and lawful interests, and deprived himself of all the guarantees which he might have in the religious observance of the law," and placed himself "under the obligation of enduring the losses which he brought upon himself; and if the directors can have any excuse, it is only to be found in the authorisations and votes given by Mr. Lindsay and the other members.

"Although Mr. Lindsay might think that he ought to allow the illegality of these acts to pass, and to sanction them, in spite of their being null and injurious to his rights, owing to considerations of personal expediency, either well or ill-grounded, and also in attention to the same, to lay aside the rules of the law of the Company in order to consent and authorise their being violated and disregarded.

"The State, an entity altogether apart from the Company, under the shade of the law by which it ought to be ruled and managed, and trusting in Mr. Lindsay and in the directors appointed by him, and the other founders, contracted with the Company the very important public service of the navigation to Africa, to the Azores, and to the Algarve, granting unto it bonuses and subventions, and made a considerable loan in its favour, cannot for those reasons be forced to be bound by these acts, both illegal and null, and to submit to suffer the losses arising from the same."

Consequently these corollaries, drawn from the administrative control, prove nothing against the Government; they are all conclusive against Mr. Lindsay. It is not the Government but he and his associates who are responsible; unfortunately for the public interests it is limited to the amount of their shares.

From the whole of my statements in this part of my opinion it follows:

1st. That, even if all Mr. Lindsay's complaints were proved, the Government is not responsible for the illegal, null, and abusive acts of the directors of the Company Uniaõ Mercantil. 2d. That if the Government ought to pay Mr. Lindsay's shares, it ought to pay those of all the shareholders, not only of this anonymous society, but also of all those which already exist, as well as of those that may be established for the future. 3d. That if it pays the shares of the shareholders, with greater reason ought it to pay the credits of any third party. 4th, and finally, That, according to this system, anonymous societies would not be private associations, but administrative institutions, managed and administrated in the name of the State and on its account and risk.

Thus it is evident that the legal theory of Mr. Lindsay's lawyers is contrary to justice, to law, to commercial law, to civil law, to administrative law, to political economy, and to the jurisprudence laid down in all courts of justice, taught and defended by all writers in those countries where, as in our own, anonymous societies are dependent upon the sanction of the Government.

Whence, therefore, does the responsibility which Mr. Lindsay wishes to impose upon the Government arise?

Can it be from his capacity as a foreign subject?

It cannot be so. The 20th condition of the contract of the 5th of May 1861 says thus:

"The undertaking is to be considered national for all intents, and in this capacity subject only to the laws of the kingdom and of the Portuguese authorities."

William Schaw Lindsay formed a part of the undertaking, and agreed to the respective deed.

In addition to this express clause, the Portuguese Commercial Code legislates with regard to foreigners as follows, in the 33d Article:

"Any foreigner performing any commercial acts within the Portuguese territory is to be subject by that very fact to the Portuguese courts of justice, and to the laws which rule those acts, their consequences and incidents."

Mr. Lindsay agreed to the public deed of the 10th of May 1858, which founded the commercial company called Uniaõ Mercantil; he therefore performed a commercial act in Portuguese territory, and by that very fact he became subject to the laws which rule, and to the courts of justice which pass judgment upon, those acts, their consequences and incidents.

Consequently not only on account of the clause in that contract, but of the commercial act which he performed in Portugal, Mr. Lindsay cannot allege any special right from his capacity as a foreign subject.

In addition to all this the Company still exists, it was not yet dissolved, it has not liquidated its accounts yet; and Mr. Lindsay does not prove, nor even was it possible for him to prove, that he had lost, how much he had lost, and through whose fault he had lost. He grounds his opinion upon an apprehension; he fears that it will come to happen. And there is a great distance between apprehension and terror, and a real definite effective loss.

Let Mr. Lindsay wait for that misfortune to take place, and if it should come, let him have recourse to the Portuguese courts of justice in conformity to the Portuguese laws, in order that he may receive reparation from whomever is bound to afford it.

And should he wish to become free of the Company before that time, if he has a right to do so, let him have recourse to the Portuguese courts, and let him claim there the dissolution of his social bond.

The Government is a stranger to all these questions between Mr. Lindsay and his associates, arising from the compliance with the private contract into which they entered, and as to the validity and effects of the same. But if Mr. Lindsay insists upon making the Government responsible, let him convince it of that responsibility in the courts of justice, to which he has expressly subjected himself in accordance with the laws whose empire he has expressly accepted and acknowledged, and the Government will go and defend its rights there, and will comply with the judgment which may be pronounced.

In conclusion, it is my opinion that the Government sanctioned those acts of the Company Uniaõ Mercantil which, by the general law of the country, ought to have been submitted to its approval; that the Company, during the first years of its existence, was governed by the directors whom the founders appointed, and whom they invested with all powers, in virtue of the rule of the statutes which fixed the meeting of the general assembly for the month of February 1861; that all the acts sanctioned by the Government, being previous to this time, had been decided and proposed by those to whom it was lawful to decide and propose them; that some of these acts were decided in the presence and with Mr. Lindsay's affirmative vote, and that the others had the assent of those persons who were his representatives, and looked after his interests with the directors, and also his own subsequent acceptance; that the Government did not sanction, nor could it sanction or forbid, on account of the prohibition of the law, any acts of the internal management and administration of the Company, whether they were practised by the decision of the directors and manager, or by the wish of the general assembly; that, if those acts were a violation of the statutes, or were of such a nature as to threaten the public interests, the only right the Government has was to recall the royal sanction given to the statutes; that the Government is the sole judge as to the expediency, necessity, and convenience of making use of this right, because both the act which recalls as well as the one which grants the sanction are the acts of administrative guardianship of gratuitous administration; that the statutes of an anonymous society, although they are subject to the examination of the Government, and are dependent upon its sanction, still preserve the character and nature of a private contract, subject with regard to its validity, execution, and effects to the common law, and to the ordinary courts of justice; that the laws and Portuguese jurisprudence do not lay down any difference between the Uniaõ Mercantil and all other anonymous societies, nor do they give the foreign shareholders, who voluntarily subscribed to them, and form a part of the same, any more or less rights than those held and enjoyed by Portuguese subjects: in fine, that the Government is not responsible to William Schaw Lindsay for the amount of his shares, and the interest already due or to become due thereon, as he groundlessly and unjustly claims in the memorial which he addressed to the Government.

Such is my opinion, which I have given under the deep conviction that it is based upon justice and upon the laws.

As to the conduct which the Government ought to hold towards the Company Uniaõ Mercantil, I reserve what I have to say until the Committee of Inquiry shall have presented their report.

May God preserve your Excellency.

Office of the Attorney General to the Crown,
20 February 1863.

Most Illustrious and Excellent Sir,

WHEN, two days ago, I was called upon to give my opinion in the respectable presence of your Excellency, and of the worthy and enlightened the Solicitor General to the Treasury, and the Assistant Attorney General to the Crown in the Department of Public Works, as to the merits of the enclosed memorial presented to his Majesty's Government in October of last year, by W. S. Lindsay and other British subjects, shareholders in the Company Uniao Mercantil, I immediately said, frankly and in a few words, what follows:—

in

“That in the memorial alluded to the aforesaid foreign shareholders, after giving a long account of the facts imputed to the direction of that Company, which were described by them as illegalities and arbitrary proceedings, and to which they ascribed the origin of the deplorable state of insolvency and forthcoming bankruptcy in which they imagined the same Company to be, concluded by petitioning the Government to deliver unto them the amount of the capital of their shares and of the corresponding interest already due and to become hereafter due, for being aware of these abusive facts, and having unduly authorised them.

“That I did not know whether the assertions of facts contained in the said memorial were true or not, but, even if they were so, such a claim, although supported by the powerful vote of five eminent lawyers of this capital, ought not, in my weak opinion, to be attended to, inasmuch as it was not grounded upon any express law, and still less upon any stipulation in the contract.

“Not upon any law, because there existed none that made the Government responsible to the different shareholders of any commercial company on account of the damages which might accrue to them from the ill luck of the undertaking or from the bad management of its directors, although no company of this kind can be legally constituted, in accordance with the 546th Article of the Commercial Code, without the previous special authorisation of the Government and the approval of the statutes by which it is to be ruled; because this essential formality, peculiar to commercial companies or anonymous societies, is intended to prevent, for the general interest of the public good, any from being established except under the necessary conditions of security, order, and morality; but that it could not be inferred from the same that the Government had the slightest obligation of making good to the individuals entering those duly authorised companies by means of the property of the State, any eventual losses that their undertaking might on any principle whatever have experienced, and to which they had so freely and spontaneously exposed themselves.

“Not upon any stipulation of the contract, because in the one entered into on the 5th of May 1858, between the Government and the founders of the Company Uniao Mercantil, no condition or stipulation is to be found expressed therein, in virtue of which any of its future shareholders, either natives or foreigners, could infer the right to compel the said Government to make reparation for the damages which their capital might have suffered owing to misfortune or to the bad administration of their partners and managers.

“That by the 21st condition of the aforesaid contract, the undertaking Uniao Mercantil ought to be considered as a national one into all intents, and, as such, subject only to the laws of the kingdom and to the Portuguese authorities; and therefore, that since the members of the direction of the said Company were solely responsible for the arbitrary proceedings and illegalities of which the petitioners complained (supposing them to be true), in virtue of the express rule of the 535th Article of the Commercial Code, it is against those directors; that the petitioners, although subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, ought to proceed through the proper judicial means.”

On seeing, therefore, these fundamental ideas of mine above mentioned set forth in the enclosed minutes of opinion, so copiously and accurately composed by the very worthy magistrate, the Assistant Attorney General to the Crown in the Department of Public Works, I do now more firmly and resolutely confirm them in writing, in reply to the despatch from that department of the 18th instant, feeling extremely honoured and proud at the so flattering uniformity of opinions in an affair of such importance.

May God preserve your Excellency.

Office of the Solicitor General to the Treasury,
9 March 1863.

Most Illustrious and Excellent Sir,

In the enclosed memorial William Schaw Lindsay and other British subjects petition the Portuguese Government to pay them the full value of the shares which the petitioners hold in the Company Uniao Mercantil, together with the interest thereon, indemnifying them in this manner for the losses which are impending over them, owing to the non-compliance with the statutes of the Company, and to the alterations in the same, which were sanctioned by the Government. The opinion of the counsellor, the Assistant Attorney General to the Crown in the Department of Public Works, Commerce, and Industry, in opposition to the said memorial, is so soundly legal, so profound, and so well developed, that I fully agree with it, adopting all its conclusions and foundations.

The Government authorised the above-mentioned Company and sanctioned its statutes, because it was indispensable to do so, in conformity with the 546th Article of our Commercial Code, and of the principles of law which are generally admitted amongst all nations, but the reason for this necessity is known. As is stated by the commentators on the 37th Article of the French Commercial Code, which is the origin of our own Article 546 above quoted, its only object is to assure the public that the Company or anonymous society thus authorised is not a snare laid out for their credulity; that its purpose is lawful and real; that there is not a merely useless programme of it only, but that there also exist the deed of its contract, true and not fictitious shareholders, figuring merely for the purpose of attracting other real ones, and a fund which is a security for the undertaking; that the capital announced really exists, or, at least, that its entrance is sufficiently safe; that it is in proportion to the undertaking, and that the statutes which regulate its management offer its members a moral guarantee, or, at all events, the means of watching over and controlling, and also the exercising of those rights as to the employment of their money to which they are entitled. The only effect therefore produced by this authorisation and sanction is, in one word, the entity or legal individuality of the Company, but by no means the slightest responsibility for the Government. When once these legal formalities have been accomplished, after life has been, as it were, infused into this society, the Government neither is nor can be responsible for its management. Whoever enters into any contract with the same does so as if it was with any merchant whatever, with this difference only, that he knows all its means, and is aware that its responsibility is limited to the amount of its shares, and that he has the right of causing the authorisation and sanction of the Government to be recalled, should it depart from its ends or violate its statutes; and that its managers or directors, as it is expressly laid down in the 542d Article of our Commercial Code, are only answerable for the execution of the charge which they have received and accepted, and do not contract any obligations, individually or personally, with respect to the agreements of the Company. He ought therefore, before entering into it, or making any contract with the same, to see how far it deserves his confidence; afterwards there is no longer any remedy; he must necessarily suffer the whole of the consequences. The contrary would be absurd. This is the doctrine of all the French writers, and so reasonable and current that it does not certainly stand in need of any authorities; but Pardessus (Cours de Droit Commercial) and Paillet (Manuel de Droit Français, the 8th edition) are so clear, and comprise what other writers say so well, that I think it expedient to transcribe here a few of their paragraphs.

The former says, in the 4th volume (Part 4, title 2, chapter 3, No. 1,040), what follows, in these very words:

“Les ordonnances du Roi étant toujours révocables à sa volonté, il est évident que l'approbation peut être retirée, et la société interdite.”

And he adds, in No. 1041:

Paillet says, in his note to the 37th Article of the French Commercial Code above quoted, No. 6, what follows, and in these very words:

“Il résulte de ces principes, 1^{er}, que l'autorisation de Sa Majesté n'est point un privilège; qu'elle se donne à cause de la forme de la société anonyme, et non à raison de la branche d'industrie qu'on se propose d'exploiter; 2^e, qu'en vertu de la liberté commune plusieurs sociétés anonymes pourraient être concurremment autorisées pour un même commerce

merce; 3^e, que le but de l'autorisation est purement et simplement de certifier au public, d'abord la vérification des bases sociales, et l'existence des moyens annoncés, moyens reconnus être en rapport avec l'entreprise; en second lieu, qu'un examen attentif a été fait de la moralité et de la convenance de l'administration sociale; 4^e, qu'en conséquence le roi n'admet point ce simple projet, et n'autorise point un prospectus dans l'intérêt d'un inventeur ou d'un spéculateur qui recherche des actionnaires; il n'attache son approbation qu'à des sociétés réelles formées par des actes publics, et par lesquelles une masse suffisante de souscripteurs ont déjà engagé et assuré leurs mises."

* * * * *

"Il reste à rappeler qu'après l'approbation obtenue, rien ne peut être changé aux statuts; la société ne peut étendre des opérations à aucun objet qui n'y soit pas compris; elle serait dans le cas de l'interdiction, si elle s'écartait des limites dans lesquelles elle a été placée, sans avoir obtenu une nouvelle autorisation, dans la même forme qu'à son établissement."

And he adds in No. 11:

"Dans l'approbation des sociétés anonymes, proposée à Sa Majesté, il sera inséré une clause portant qu'en cas d'inexécution des statuts, ou de leur violation l'autorisation pourra être révoquée par le gouvernement, sauf les actions à exercer par les particuliers devant les tribunaux, a raison des infractions commises à leur préjudice."

Consequently, though it should be fully and clearly proved that there had been manifest and undeniable violations of the statutes of the Company Uniaõ Mercantil, and the losses caused by them to the petitioners, according to no principle of law would the Government be obliged to make them compensation. Those violations could only serve the petitioners as grounds for demanding and obtaining the withdrawal by the Government of the authorization granted by it to the Company, and thus obliging it to expire and to liquidate, and moreover (and this is the farthest limit of concession) for bringing any actions which they might think proper against those who should have committed them, and given rise thereby to those losses. But the petitioners never made such a petition, and previously to the one to which I am now answering, wherein they make a very different demand, they never complained to the Government either of the proceedings of the Company or of the management of the directors. And, moreover, the facts which they allege to have been violations of the said statutes were some of them practised with the votes of the petitioners themselves, and others received their sanction subsequently, as it is very amply and evidently proved by the aforesaid very worthy councillor the Assistant Attorney General to the Crown in his opinion referred to above; and no one can go against his own acts, or derive any advantage from the same against any third party. And, above all things, it has not yet been proved in any way whatever, and the only means of doing so is by the proper actions before the courts of justice, that losses have been caused by those violations, and what they amount to.

The opinion of some lawyers of this capital, which is adduced as an argument, far from dissuading me from my opinion, does, on the contrary, confirm it still more. It were to be wished that such distinguished jurists had, I will not say developed, but at least pointed out the reasons upon which they grounded their opinion, but they did not do so. They limited themselves to answer hypothetically, without descending to examine and ascertain the facts, that the Government is responsible to the petitioners for the losses which may have been caused to them from the sanction which it may have given with full knowledge of the case to those acts which shall be shown to have been practised by the directors of the Company in contravention of the rules of its statutes. It would be easy for me to prove here, and it may be seen that according to the principles of law, even had such a sanction taken place, it would nowise alter either the nature or the effects of those acts in order to impose any responsibility upon the Government on their account; but as the Government did not sanction any of them, and still less with full knowledge of the case, as it was most evidently proved in the legal opinion above alluded to, it is not needful for me to detain myself in proving this, and there is no doubt, by a necessary inference, that even according to the opinion of such clever lawyers, the Government is not in any way responsible to the petitioners.

The Government has not got commissioners appointed to all anonymous companies or societies, it has got them to those where there are private interests of its own to be looked after; but those commissioners are its own, and not of the shareholders. The latter watch over and look after their own interests as in any other society, through the legal ways and means. The Government has commissioners appointed to the Company Uniaõ Mercantil, but the reason is because it has granted it a subsidy, because it has guaranteed the interest on its shares, and because the latter has entered into several engagements with it, compliance with which it is necessary to control; but these commissioners, I repeat, are only the commissioners and the representatives of the Government, and not of the shareholders.

In fine, and as a summary, there are no grounds, and it is contrary to every principle to try to infer, either from the sanction or from the alteration of the statutes of the Company, or from the existence of the said commissioners, the responsibility of the Government to indemnify the petitioners for the losses which they imagine to have been incurred from the violations of those statutes, by paying them the value of their shares, and the interest thereon. If in anonymous societies the Government, either by authorising them or by sanctioning their statutes and any alterations made therein, or by having appointed a commissioner to the same, were to be responsible to the shareholders for the violations of those statutes, committed by themselves or by the directors, and were obliged on that account to pay them at least the capital of their shares, with the interest thereon, such societies would in its regard be completely leonine, inasmuch as it would often be a loser on their account without ever having a share in their profits, and therefore it would never do to allow them to exist; and it would consequently be necessary to strike them off the codes of all civilised nations.

Should the petitioners, however, not be convinced of these truths, and continue to consider themselves as possessing any rights against the Portuguese Government for so extraordinary a claim, they ought to bring the proper action against it before the courts of justice in Portugal, in consideration not only of the 33d Article of our Commercial Code, which expressly declares "that all foreigners performing any commercial acts in the Portuguese territory are to be subject by those very acts to the Portuguese courts of justice, and to the laws which regulate those acts, their consequences and incidents," but also of the 21st Condition of the Social Contract of the 5th May 1858, in which it was stipulated that the undertaking should be considered to be a national one unto all intents, and in that capacity subject only to the laws of the kingdom, and to the Portuguese authorities.

May God preserve your Excellency.

— No. 28. —

MEMORANDUM by Mr. Lindsay on the Opinion of the Law Officers to the Portuguese Government.

THE main portions of the memorial do not appear to me to have been answered, or even referred to, in the very lengthened opinions given by the legal advisers to the Portuguese Government. They introduce much irrelevant matter and are not sparing in personal abuse of myself, most of which is founded on error; I think they might have avoided all such remarks, when they considered, that, apart from the large amount of money at stake, I rendered, at great inconvenience to myself, and by the request of their Government, services which were considered very important to the Government of Portugal in the development of the resources of the Portuguese settlements in Africa.

All the statements in that memorial I offered to prove while at Lisbon, before the Committee which the Government had appointed, and which consisted entirely of its own employés, but they declined to hear me.

There is the report of that Committee; in regard to it, my correspondent at Lisbon, Mr. Pinto Basto, in a letter to me of the 13th ult. writes as follows:—
"Mr. Torres, one of the Committee of Enquiry, called yesterday on my father, and stated amongst other things, that every statement put forth in your memorial was quite correct, and he hoped that their report, which will soon appear, will show to you that they have done their duty, unbiassed, and will be perfectly satisfactory to you. He went further to state that this enquiry will bring the Government to consider the necessity of materially altering the law of joint stock companies, and to avoid the continuation and repetition of the abuses, and unheard of illegalities, which they have met with in the case of the Union Mercantile Company.

"He also mentioned a fact that I was unaware of, that is, as it actually stands, which is, that the Company in their contract with the Government, when raising the loan, have declared your debt to exist, and to be a privileged debt, and to have a preference over that of the Government.

"He also highly disapproved Government not entertaining your proposal to work the line with Government, and regretted that my father had no authority to treat with Government in that sense, as he himself, as one of the Committee, would strongly recommend such a course to Government as the only means to keep up a line which he acknowledged is of vital importance to the Colonies, and the only means of extricating Government from the present dilemma."

The

The five "eminent lawyers" referred to in these "opinions" not merely gave an unanimous opinion against their own Government, but confirmed, after the fullest examination, all the statements set forth in the memorial, and all the reasons why the Government of Portugal had rendered itself responsible to those shareholders who had protested.

I could not proceed for the recovery of my claims against the Government of Portugal in any court of law, because the laws of Portugal forbid any action against the Crown.

The principles set forth at great length, applicable to joint stock companies in Portugal and in France, are, I presume, correct, but I am not competent to offer an opinion on this matter; they do not however apply in this case.

I am well aware that under the ordinary circumstances referred to in these "opinions," I would have had no claim against the Government of Portugal, and that however hard my fate, and that of the other British subjects who invested their money in the undertaking, we would have been obliged "to be subject only to the laws of the country and to the Portuguese authorities."

Had the Government of Portugal kept within the laws, there was no course left to us but to fight our battles as best we could in the "courts of law of Portugal," either with the "directors" or with the "Portuguese authorities." But as the Government has infringed the law, and broken its guarantees, our claims, I am informed by competent authorities, have thereby become of an international character; and, when at Lisbon, my attention was called by the Portuguese lawyers to various somewhat similar cases, where the Government of Portugal had to make good the claims of British subjects.

Many of the statements set forth in the "opinions" of the legal advisers to the Government of Portugal are at variance with the facts. I was invited by various letters, now in my possession, from the then Minister of Public Works to advance my capital to aid, not merely a commercial, but, what was considered by him, a national undertaking, I at last did so on the express condition that guarantees would be given for my protection which were violated; and the Assistant Attorney General admits "that the Government sanctioned the acts of the Company," the, I presume, illegal acts on which I found my claims. The Government of Portugal did "acquire rights" and did "get advantages" by the formation of the Company.

To say that the Government of Portugal is not responsible for the interest upon the stock, which I "groundlessly and unjustly claim," is contrary to the express stipulation of their own Acts of Cortes and of the Royal Decree, which guarantees the interest upon the stock, and contrary to fact, for the Government has paid the interest, and, after the remonstrances made by Sir Arthur Magenis, offered to pay the interest, in January last, to me, upon the stock which I held, but with stipulations which would have rendered invalid my claims upon the Government for the principal; and, therefore, under the advice of Portuguese lawyers, I declined to receive it, except as a payment on account.

Mr. Ellicott had no authority to represent me in the manner set forth. He was not my "lawful and acknowledged representative," he had no powers of attorney from me. On the contrary my letters to him expressly prohibit the acts of which I complain. So far back as the 5th January 1860, I wrote to him as follows:—

"I have just been informed that the Company have not merely been negotiating, but have all but completed, through a firm in Liverpool, the purchase of two full-powered steamers at the high price of 45,000 £., for which they intend to give their acceptances at six, twelve, and eighteen months. I cannot believe this information to be correct, or suppose that if such was the case you would not have advised me of it. If it is so, they are about to take a step, which is, to say the least, a most imprudent and unwise one. As by far the largest shareholder in the Company and the only holder of its debentures, I desire you to protest in my name against any such purchase, and to give notice that I will hold the manager and directors jointly and severally responsible to me as a shareholder, and as a holder of debentures, for any loss I may directly or indirectly sustain by the step they are about to take. Besides, if taken, it will entirely shake my confidence in the Company, and I shall require my debentures to be taken up before any bills for the purchase of new ships are paid."

All the remarks about the proceedings of the Company or the Government previous to 1860, are irrelevant. My claims upon the Government are not founded upon any illegal acts, if there were any, previous to that period. It was subsequent to 1860, and whenever I heard of them, I protested against them in the most solemn manner to the Minister and to the Company in the presence of the representative of the Government; but no attention was paid to my protest, and in fact my letter to the Minister was not even acknowledged. That the Government did appoint commissioners of its own to control and superintend the affairs of the Company is clear, by their own instructions to their commissioners, copy of which is now before me. In these instructions they expressly state that the Government agents are "to see that when the general assemblies meet they deliberate with the legal number of members, stipulated in the statutes of which he receives a copy, and that their decision be given in legal terms, giving notice to Government of any infraction that may happen of these rules, and see that the Minutes which are written of the verbal process of the session shall contain all the necessary explanations, in order to be quite sure that none of the requisitions of the social law are omitted."

And further, the agents are to "give early and immediate notice of any omission which he may find in the Company, that Government may take advantage of its right, and take the resolution which may answer its purpose."

If I cannot say that my shares are "valueless" till the Company is wound up, and if I am wrong in supposing that they have been rendered so by the illegal acts of which I complain, my answer to the Government of Portugal is, "here are the shares which I took at your request, give me in exchange the money I paid for them, the interest you guaranteed, and the actual expenses I have incurred; I desire no gain and seek no compensation; my wish is to close my account, and to have no more to do with you, for you have broken your pledges, repudiated your promises, and by the showing of your most eminent and most independent lawyers, you have violated your own laws."

I would have answered many other statements in these "opinions," but the few hours they have been placed at my disposal have prevented me from doing so; I am, however, ready, at any time, to be examined, and to afford any information that may be required.

9 April 1863.

W. S. Lindsay.

THE directors did purchase these ships, contrary to the stipulations of the statutes, without the approval of a general assembly, or the sanction of the shareholders, and in opposition to my protest as by far the largest shareholder of the Company. The directors accepted bills in payment of these ships, for which they received and appropriated to their own use large sums of money under the head of "commissions." The directors were unable to meet their acceptances for these ships when they fell due, and the Government of Portugal provided the money in the shape of a loan to the Company, taking as security the whole of the assets of the Company, without the sanction of a general assembly of the shareholders, or the approval of any one of the English shareholders, which money the directors used for the payment of their own acceptances; and when the Government of Portugal made that loan they knew that it was for the purpose of meeting these bills. The Government further knew that at that time the interest which had been guaranteed by Royal Decree had not been paid; they also knew that previous to that time the bills, which had been given to English subjects in payment for the steam ships supplied at the request of the Minister of Public Works to form the Company, had been dishonoured, and that at that very time the debentures granted to the English subjects stood over dishonoured, and were in the hands of the public notary at Lisbon protested for non-payment, and are there still, unpaid.

COPY of DESPATCH from Sir A. C. Magenis to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

Lisbon, 24 April 1863.

IN my Despatch of the 24th ultimo, inclosing a translation of the opinion of the law officers of the Crown in the case of the claims of Mr. Lindsay against the Portuguese Government, I mentioned having submitted it to the law adviser of this Mission; and that I would forward to your Lordship his opinion as soon as I received it; and I have now the honour to transmit, for your Lordship's information, a translation of his opinion.

Your Lordship may recollect that I submitted the opinion which Mr. Lindsay had obtained from five lawyers of eminence here, stating that the Government was responsible to him for the full value of his claim, in consequence of having permitted gross irregularities on the part of the direction of the União Mercantil Company, to the same legal adviser of this Mission; and that in vague and general terms he agreed in that opinion, stating that if the Government had committed or permitted irregularities prejudicial to Mr. Lindsay's interests, they were responsible.

Your Lordship will perceive that the opinion which I now transmit, enters more fully into the question, after a careful examination, as it says, of Mr. Lindsay's Memorial, of the opinion of the five lawyers, and those of the Attorney and Solicitor General; and states that Mr. Lindsay can only have recourse to the courts of law of the country to obtain redress from the Government.

As Mr. Lindsay had always informed me that his lawyers had stated to him, that it was not competent for a Portuguese or foreign subject resident in this country to bring an action for damages against the Government, and that their only means of obtaining redress was by petition to the Cortes, which, Mr. Lindsay added, as a British subject, he was unable to have recourse to; and consequently, that his sole remaining means of action was through his own Government, I inquired from the law adviser of the Mission what course Mr. Lindsay was to pursue, as I believed he could not bring an action in a court of law against the Government.

To this inquiry it was replied that I was in error, that it was competent for any one to bring an action against the Government for pecuniary losses sustained in consequence of the proceedings of the Government; and he quoted the instance of an action brought, several years ago, by Count Farrabo against the Government for infringement of the stipulations of the contract he then held of the tobacco monopoly; and that it was only with regard to political matters that it was necessary to petition the Cortes.

Singularly enough, since obtaining the opinion above mentioned, the papers of yesterday announce that Count Farrabo had just obtained a verdict "En Premiere Instance," against the Government in this long-pending suit; and that his claim for compensation against the Government was for 2,000 "coutos" of reis, equal to very nearly 450,000 l. sterling.

(Translation.)

OPINION of the Law Adviser to Her Majesty's Mission with respect to the Opinions of the Law Officers of the Crown of Portugal on the subject of Mr. Lindsay's Claims.

Lisbon, 18 April 1863.

HAVING examined with the greatest attention the four printed documents which I have before me, namely, the memorial presented in October 1862 to his Most Faithful Majesty's Government, containing the claim made by W. S. Lindsay and other British subjects, subjects, shareholders in the Royal Uniaõ Mercantil Company, together with the opinion of five Portuguese lawyers, of the 20th December 1862, with respect to the responsibility of the Portuguese Government, the opinion of the Assistant Attorney General to the Crown of the 13th February 1863, that of the Attorney General to the Crown of the 20th of February 1863, and the one of the Solicitor General to the Treasury of the 6th of March 1863, it is my opinion that the said claim, wherein the claimants demand that the Portuguese Government should pay them the full value of their shares, together with the interest thereon already due, and to become hereafter due, thus indemnifying them for the losses which they have suffered owing to the arbitrary proceedings of the representatives and managers of the Company, and unduly sanctioned by the Government, is not based upon any grounds derived from the legislation of the country; and that in virtue of the social deed of the 8th of May 1858, the claimants cannot bring forward any special right in their capacity as British subjects, inasmuch as it was clearly stipulated in the 21st Condition of the aforesaid contract of the 5th of May 1858, to which Mr. W. S. Lindsay was an assenting party, that the undertaking was to be considered as a national one unto all intents, and in its capacity as such subject only to the laws of the kingdom and to the Portuguese authorities.

The claimants are shareholders in a commercial company which still exists, and which has not yet been dissolved, and is not under liquidation. I do not possess sufficient data to form a safe judgment upon all the facts alleged in the memorial addressed to his Most Faithful Majesty; for this purpose it would be necessary to hear the other side, the Company with respect to every one of them, and proceed to a more detailed examination, and to fuller investigations, as I declared in the opinion which I expressed on the 2d of January 1863, and to which I shall presently refer more minutely; nevertheless, for the case in question, neither is the present a fitting opportunity, nor is an inquiry into this matter necessary, in order to perceive that the petition of the claimants is devoid of legal grounds.

If the claimants think that the Company has been the cause of losses to them by violating the statutes, and practising illegal and arbitrary acts, which they allege in their memorial, they ought to bring an action against it in the courts of justice, as far as it may be in their power to do in virtue of the laws of the kingdom.

If they think that the Government has been the cause of those losses, inasmuch as it took upon itself the responsibility of the Company, by authorising and sanctioning with full knowledge of the case those acts whence it arises, they ought in the same manner to proceed against it, and bring an action or the proper actions against the public treasury for the losses and damages which they have suffered; but this in the courts of justice and in accordance with the legislation of the country. The only legal resource which the claimants possess, even should what they allege in their claim be correct, is the decision of the courts of justice of the country, petitioned for and obtained in accordance with the forms laid down in the laws of the kingdom.

On this point the doctrine expressed by the Assistant Attorney General to the Crown, which may be read at page 18 of his opinion, and which was also adopted by the Solicitor General to the Treasury, appears to me to be incontrovertible. The claimants, being shareholders in a company which is not yet under liquidation, but still continues to carry on the operations for which it was established, are not able to prove, except by an action before the courts, the loss of the capital in their shares, and the cause which gave rise to the same; previous to this it cannot be said that there is an effective, real, and definite loss. After the latter has been shown "let Mr. Lindsay have recourse (says the Assistant Attorney General to the Crown in the place above quoted) to the Portuguese courts of justice in conformity to Portuguese laws, in order that he may receive compensation from whomever is bound to give it, and should he wish to quit the Company immediately, if he has the right to do so, let him have recourse to the Portuguese courts, and let him petition the same to sever the social bond. The Government is a stranger to all these questions between Mr. Lindsay and his associates arising from the compliance with the contract into which they had entered, and as to the validity and effects of the same; but if Mr. Lindsay insists in making the Government responsible, let him convince it of this responsibility in the courts of justice to which he has expressly subjected himself, and in accordance with the laws whose empire he has expressly accepted and acknowledged, and the Government will go and defend its own rights there, and will comply with the judgment which may be pronounced."

I repeat it, I hold this doctrine to be correct, and to be in harmony with the law of the country, and with the stipulations of the contract. The opinion of the five lawyers of this city does neither destroy it, nor in any way modify it. The claimants have ascribed a much greater importance to this opinion than it really possesses. The five lawyers, on examining the claims of Mr. W. S. Lindsay and of other British subjects, were not of opinion that the Portuguese Government was bound to pay the claimants on account of the same, the capital of their shares together with the interest already due, or to become hereafter due, for which they made a demand therein; and no more did they declare that the claim in the whole of its form, and terms was well grounded, and still less did they find it to have been proved without further process. It was merely their opinion "that the Government is responsible towards the same claimants for the losses which may have accrued to them from the sanction which it (the Government) may have given with full knowledge of the case to those acts which shall be shown to have been practised by the directors in opposition to the rules of their statutes;" and this is essentially different.

They

They confined themselves to establish the responsibility of the Government in a certain case without descending into an examination of and inquiry into the facts alleged in the claim, nor did they declare what was the proper means for rendering that responsibility effective. I always understood it so; and this is the reason why on declaring, in my opinion of the 2d of January 1863, that I held the doctrine of the lawyers to be correct, for the reason which I stated that "as soon as a Government either practises any act whatever, or gives it its sanction when practised by another after due examination and with full knowledge of the matter, it is undeniable that it becomes responsible for the said act and liable to the consequences which may ensue from it" (which is an axiom), I added:

"With respect to the justice or injustice of the claim, I have not got as yet any sufficient grounds to form a judgment; and, moreover, the opinion did not treat of this point. What in my opinion is beyond a doubt is, that the right of the claimants against the Government, on account of the illegality of those acts of which it assumed the responsibility by sanctioning the same, is certain, provided that illegality, the origin and source of the damages upon which the claim is grounded, be really proved to exist."

Such is still my opinion, as I think that the claimants have no other resource except in the courts of justice, and in the ordinary means which are allowed by the laws of the country, if they consider their rights to have been violated either by the Company or by the Government.

Such is my opinion, a better judgment thereon always excepted.

COPY of DESPATCH from the Right Hon. Earl Russell to Sir A. C. Magenis.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 14 May 1863.

I HAVE consulted the proper law adviser of the Crown regarding the course which can properly be pursued in Mr. Lindsay's case.

The whole correspondence connected with the case, including your Despatch of the 24th ultimo, has been considered with the greatest care, and I have now to state to you the position in which Her Majesty's Government stand, as I am advised, in reference to Mr. Lindsay's case. Copy to Mr. Lindsay, 14 May 1863

I need not enter into the details of the case, with which you are already acquainted, and in regard to which you appear to have carried into effect my instructions in giving to Mr. Lindsay every assistance which you could properly afford. But I have to state to you that I am advised that the Government of Portugal was no party in the outset to the contract between Mr. Lindsay and the União Mercantil Company, and that it does not appear to be denied that neither in the instrument which contained the foundation, so to speak, of the Company, nor in the statutes, was any mention made of the Portuguese Government.

It seems also clear that the kind of sanction or approval required by the law as a necessary condition precedent to the establishment, did not of itself make the Government either a party to, or responsible for, the acts of the Company.

Such appears to be the fair result of the provisions contained in the Commercial Code of Portugal, and in the codes of other States, founded upon similar principles, with respect to "Anonymous Societies."

That the directors of the Company did act irregularly, that Mr. Lindsay did complain, that the Portuguese Government did nevertheless not withhold their approval or sanction, may be at least assumed on behalf of Mr. Lindsay; but I am advised that the step taken by the Portuguese Government cannot be treated as judicial in its character rather than as administrative, and if the act was not judicial, there is no legal responsibility attaching to the Portuguese Government.

But, in any case, the Portuguese Government do in effect say, "the law is open to you, and both the general law and the particular conditions of the Company are express upon the point that all matters relating to it are to be considered as questions of Portuguese law, to be decided by Portuguese tribunals."

This position is most important, and appears to be well founded.

The 33d Article of the Portuguese Code states that "any foreigner performing any commercial acts within the Portuguese territory is to be subject by that very fact to the Portuguese courts of justice, and to the laws which rule those acts, their consequents and antecedents."

And the 21st Condition of the Contract of the Company states that "the undertaking is to be considered national for all intents, and in this capacity subject only to the laws of the kingdom and of the Portuguese authorities."

It appears also from your Despatch, that besides an appeal to the Portuguese courts, it is open to Mr. Lindsay to proceed by action against the Portuguese Government for pecuniary losses sustained in consequence of the proceedings of that Government.

The conclusion from what has been stated above is clear, that Mr. Lindsay's case is not one in which, upon principles of international law, Her Majesty's Government are called upon to interfere officially, as in a matter between one Government and the other.

Mr. Lindsay's case is one which calls for the sympathy of Her Majesty's Government, and as such you have been authorised to give it the benefit of your good offices. There is too much reason to believe that his complaints against Portuguese courts of justice are well founded. But, so far as the União Mercantil Company and the interests growing out of it are concerned, it cannot be denied that Mr. Lindsay voluntarily entered into a Portuguese contract, clothed himself with a Portuguese character, and submitted himself to Portuguese law as administered in their courts; and so far as the facts are known to Her Majesty's Government, it does not appear that the Portuguese Government has so conducted itself with reference to this Company as to have become officially responsible for the conduct of the directors, even if that conduct had been, as it has not been, pronounced guilty by the courts of Portugal.

Her Majesty's Government are thus restricted from official interference on behalf of Mr. Lindsay; but, considering all the circumstances of the case, I should learn with the greatest satisfaction that any unofficial steps on your part, or any advice which you may be enabled to offer to Mr. Lindsay or his agents, was calculated to promote his interests and place the matter on a more favourable footing.

Sir A. Magenis.

COPY of LETTER from Mr. Lindsay, M. P., to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

8, Austin Friars, City, 19 May 1863.

AMIDST the mass of papers connected with my claims, and those of other English subjects upon the Portuguese Government, the leading facts may have been overlooked, or I may have neglected to bring them under your Lordship's notice.

The following statement will, I think, show that the Government of Portugal was a party from the outset to the investment of our capital in the Union Mercantile Company.

Towards the end of 1857, various merchants resident at Lisbon, requested, by letter, my aid in the formation of the above undertaking. They were very urgent. They informed me that the Government of Portugal was most anxious about it, would give the Company its support, and gave me to understand that my capital would be protected by the Government. I accordingly addressed the then Minister of Public Works of Portugal on the subject, and I enclose herewith copies of his letter to me, all written by himself. On the faith of these and other representations I was induced to visit Lisbon. I did so, and had numerous interviews with him and other members of the Cabinet. I agreed with these Ministers the terms of the statutes in which clauses for my protection were to be inserted; and it was not until those conditions were confirmed that I despatched the first steam ship to start the undertaking, about which the Minister of Public Works was very urgent, as your Lordship will see by his letters to me.

The

The statutes were duly confirmed by the Legislature. In course of time, an Act was passed guaranteeing interest upon the stock of the Company, and the special instructions from the Government to the Commissioner they appointed to superintend the affairs of the undertaking, expressly state that the first duty of the Commissioner is to see that the conditions of the statutes are fulfilled.

On the faith of all these, I supplied the necessary capital, or rather the steam ships required for the undertaking. So far as contracts, bonds, and Acts of the Legislature could afford security, I could not require more than they gave; but no sooner had they got possession of our capital than they ceased to pay any respect to these documents. The directors dishonoured their acceptances to me when they reached maturity; and they repudiated their debentures. The statutes were openly violated. The commissioner failed to carry out his instructions, and the Government has not paid me one sixpence of the interest they guaranteed. I did not believe it possible that, in any country, such things could happen. And at great inconvenience to myself I again visited Lisbon, in January 1862; but the then Minister would hardly see me, and Senhor Carlos Bento, who addressed me so urgently in 1858, did not even answer the letter I then addressed to him, copy of which I enclose; nor did the then Minister of Public Works condescend to give an answer to the letter from my attorney, of which I send herewith a translation.

Actions were then raised in the courts of law against the Company for the payment of its debentures; but, though the terms of these documents are clear and specific (upon which judgment would at once be given in our favour in this country), the Courts of Lisbon decided against us; and though Mr. Herries pronounced, in his letter to your Lordship, the decision of the Lower Court to be "manifestly absurd," the Upper Court confirmed it, and I cannot hope for any more favourable decision from the Supreme Court, to which the case is now slowly proceeding.

In regard to my own claims and those of other English subjects upon the Government for the value of our shares (for which alone we at present seek the interference of Her Majesty's Government), it would be vain to hope that we would get a decision in our favour as against the Government; but the leading lawyers of Lisbon advised me when I was there, three months ago, that an action could not be raised against the Crown.

I understand that Sir Arthur Magenis has already forwarded to your Lordship the opinion of the legal advisers to the Legation in regard to the international character of our claims upon the Portuguese Government; and also a copy of the opinion of five of the leading counsel of that place who, for the reasons set forth, consider that, upon the principles of international law, our Government should interfere officially as in a matter between one Government and another; and without such interference, I see no hope of recovering the large amount of capital we invested in the manner I have stated to your Lordship.

Had the Government of Portugal kept within the law, we would, by the 21st condition of the contract of the Company, have had no recourse against the Government, except through the Portuguese Courts, had these courts been open to us; but by the enclosed letter from an eminent lawyer at Lisbon (which I received just before I left in January last that place), who had thoroughly investigated all the facts, your Lordship will see that, while he agrees with the legal opinions to which I have referred, he states that our only recourse now is through our own Government, and gives his reasons for holding that opinion.

I am, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 31.

COPIES of LETTERS from the Minister of Public Works, at Lisbon, to Mr. Lindsay, 1858.

(1.)

Lisbon, 8 January 1858.

I HAVE not replied to your former letter, on account of a ministerial crisis, which has kept me from fulfilling my engagements. Now that the position of things has changed completely, I hasten to reply to what you have written. It is useless for me to tell you that I have used every means to arrange the affairs of the Company in the best possible manner. I have even taken on myself the responsibility of hastening the decision of the affair, without its again requiring to pass before the House. It is quite true I have tried to alter a little the spirit of the other propositions made to Government, but I do not the less wish well to the enterprise. I think the undertaking will be advantageous to those engaged in it, and the modifications I have lastly proposed are not to be considered as really changing your conditions, but are indispensable for the Government to justify its conduct. There is one, for example, necessary for the Azores line; the law required three ships to perform the voyages, but I think to fix the number of voyages will give greater regularity of communication; and it is well to fix the number of voyages to be made each month, otherwise 12 or 13 voyages will be made in summer, thus debarring the isles from a regular communication.

Seeing what I have judged of the affair, I think it will be advantageous for the Government, but no less so for those concerned in it; and I shall be glad when you, seeing the justice of the intentions of the Government, will give me, with your friends, the opportunity of concluding the contracts of the African and Azores lines.

W. S. Lindsay, Esq., M.P.,
London.

I am, &c.

Dear Sir,

Lisbon, 30 January 1858.

I HAVE received yours of 24th ultimo, in reply to which I beg to say that I have seen Messrs. Candido de Abreu and Fadisso, regarding the approval of the last basis proposed for the establishment of the Steam Navigation Company; I believe that every objection is now removed, and that you will hasten to ratify the contract, and despatch immediately the steamer "Lindsay," at least, which has been ready some time. I believe that the African navigation will be a good business for all parties, and that the line to the Azores will not injure the Company in anything; on the contrary, I expect that the speedy realisation of the contract will now make the same more acceptable to the public, inasmuch as the delay that has hitherto occurred in the formation of the Companies has given rise to some incredulity.

To W. S. Lindsay, Esq., M.P.,
London.

Yours, &c.

(3.)

Dear Sir,

Lisbon, 28 February 1858.

I HAVE received your letter of the 16th instant. I see with much pleasure that you have agreed with what I wrote to you, and I flatter myself soon to set on foot an undertaking which will prove of so much benefit to the State and the shareholders. I have used every means to get together the members of the Portuguese Direction of the Company, but the illness of some, and also of Mr. Abreu, has prevented my doing so. However, there will be a meeting to-morrow. Mr. Abreu had a conference with me to-day, and will advise you by to-morrow's packet. It is necessary for you, also, to send an official authority, signed also by Mr. Perey, agreeing to the modifications, of which they have sent you a copy. As for the rest of the contract, I have already the necessary documents in the proposition you have made. To-morrow I shall endeavour to make these gentlemen adopt the resolution of considering the Company as formed, seeing we have your adhesion, merely waiting that you will make it formal by sending the document of which I have spoken. We shall telegraph to you the result, in order that you may send the "Lindsay," and, as soon as possible, the steamer for the Azores line.

W. S. Lindsay, Esq., M.P.,
London.

I am, &c.

Dear Sir,

Lisbon, 28 March 1863.

THE contract and the statutes of the Navigation Company are ready to be signed to-morrow, or the day after to-morrow. We will let you know by telegraph of the verification of this fact, and I rely that you will give your orders respecting the ship which ought to commence the voyage to the Azores, and which ought not to be retarded.

W. S. Lindsay, Esq., M.P.,
London.

Enclosure 2, in No. 31.

Sir,

Braganza Hotel, Lisbon, 18 January 1862.

IN the months of January, and February and March, 1858, when you filled the office of Minister of Public Works, you did me the honour to address me to London on the part of your Government. You expressed yourself anxious to develop the great natural resources of the Portuguese settlements in Africa, and to give to the subjects of this country resident there the facilities which steam communication between the parent country and its colonies would afford. The object you, as the Minister, had in view was most laudable; and in your various letters now before me you express an urgent wish "to set on foot an undertaking which will prove of so much benefit to the State and to the shareholders." As your Excellency had been unable to obtain in this country the means of setting on foot the line of steamers you had long been anxious to establish, and as you were very desirous that I should send ships to do so, I at last consented to place three of my steam vessels at the disposal of the gentlemen resident here, who, with your Excellency, felt that the undertaking would be one of much national importance, and were prepared to form themselves into a company for the purpose of carrying into effect the object which the Government had in view. On the arrival of my steamers in the Tagus the Company was formed, and still carries on its business under the name of the "Union Mercantile Steam Navigation Company."

The shares, however, of the Company were not taken up by the public as was anticipated, and the directors found that they were consequently unable to make the payments stipulated for my ships. I then visited this place for the first time, and, as I considered the object in view a very commendable one, I did not hesitate, partly on the representations which your Excellency was pleased to make to me, to receive in payment for the vessels I had consented to supply, not merely one-half in the shares of the Company, but the other half in bills extending over three years, so that the directors might have ample time to dispose of the shares. A portion of these bills were paid at maturity; but as all the efforts of the directors had failed to place the shares in the market, they had not the means of meeting the remainder, and they required a still further extension of time. I consequently again visited this place in December 1859, and accepted, in exchange for the bills, debentures of the Company, payable in instalments in eight years from that time, the redemption of which was faithfully promised when they fell due. The first has been met, and paid; but it appears that the Company have, even yet, not been able to emit the shares, and have consequently been unable to pay the instalment, with interest, which fell due on the 30th ultimo. I have, therefore, at great inconvenience to myself (for, as your Excellency may be aware, my time is very fully occupied with my public and private duties in England) been again obliged to visit Lisbon. The whole of the stock in the Company, which I originally accepted in part payment of the vessels I supplied, amounting to 37,000 £ sterling, I still hold, and I am willing to continue to hold it if arrangements are made by the Government for the efficient working of the Company; but I cannot be expected to exercise further forbearance in regard to my debentures, amounting to 14,100 £ sterling. These I now require the directors to pay, and if arrangements are not promptly made for their liquidation I will be obliged to put in force the bond and powers which I hold, and recover the amount by the sale of the effects of the Company. I will take this step with great reluctance and much pain, for it will destroy a Company which has now overcome most of the difficulties incidental to all new undertakings, and which bids fair to prove of great value to this country, and, with the necessary changes in the management of its affairs, can be made profitable to all who are connected with it.

In the event of the Company being wound up, I trust your Excellency will be of opinion that, as I invested 37,000 £ stock in it, in a great degree on the faith of the representations you were pleased to make to me, I would be entitled in equity to look to the Government for any loss I might thereby sustain; and I cannot but feel that the Government of Portugal would, under the circumstances I have named, and with its high sense of honour, readily meet me. The Government inviting me, as a British subject, to aid with my capital, an object which it was most anxious to carry into effect, could not hesitate to protect capital thus invested. But I can hardly anticipate any such crisis. The Government has, I find, advanced by loan, on the security of the unissued shares of the Company, much the largest amount of capital now invested in it, and has further guaranteed 7 per cent. interest on its shares. They and I, I may add, now hold nearly the whole of the stock of the undertaking in our own hands. The ships are in complete working order, and are represented to be of greater value than the amount of the Government advances and all the shares held by me and others in the undertaking; and it appears, so far as I can at present judge, to be in a wholesome and sound state. That being so, would it not be much better for all parties that the Government took the affairs of the Company solely into its own hands? Under these circumstances I would be happy to leave my stock in it, or take in exchange the stock of the Government, and I would be prepared to make arrangements, under the directions of the Government, for the efficient and economical working of the undertaking. Should you feel disposed to entertain some such proposal, I would with pleasure wait upon your Excellency if it was convenient for you to see me on an early day, as I must return to England by the 26th instant at the latest.

To His Excellency

Enclosure 3, in No. 31.

LETTER addressed by the Attorney of the undersigned at Lisbon to the Minister of Public Works, in January 1862, to which no reply was sent.

Most Illustrious and Excellent Sir,

IN the course of the months of January, February and March of 1858 I had the honour to receive various letters from his Excellency Senhor Carlos Bento da Silva, at that time Minister of Public Works and now of the Marine, whereby his Excellency invited, and even urged me on the part of the Portuguese Government, to give my assistance in the formation of the Company called the "União Mercantil," which various merchants of the capital, in unison with the Government, and backed by it, were endeavouring to set on foot an object impossible of attainment through the sole agency of the capital of this country, inasmuch as the holders of such capital would not come forward and subscribe for the Company's shares. That which his Excellency the Minister asked of me most pressing was, that I should furnish the necessary steamers to set going at once the service of the mails, that being the object of the Company's undertaking.

I acceded to this application, and lost no time in placing the steamers required at the disposal of those gentlemen who, in common accord with the Government, proposed the formation of the Company, an intention they carried out immediately on the arrival of the vessels at the port of this capital.

The assurance that his Excellency the Minister gave me, on the part of the Portuguese Government, that the undertaking of the Company and the establishing thereof, while it was of great advantage to this country, would be also highly advantageous and profitable to the shareholders; and, above all, the guarantee afforded to myself by the intervention of the Portuguese Government, were my inducements to aid in the foundation of the Company, and to supply the vessels, whereby I embarked capital to a very considerable extent.

The direction of the Company had engaged to settle with me, by means of loans, for the amount of the vessels; but, as they were unable to succeed in issuing the shares, they found it impossible to raise such loans.

That was the occasion of my first visit to this capital; when, trusting in what was told me by his Excellency the Minister, and continuing to confide in the Government guarantee towards myself, I did not hesitate to accept shares of the Company in payment of one-half the price of the vessels, and the other half in bills of one and three years' date, so that the direction might have a longer time wherein to effect the issue of the shares.

The direction paid some of those bills, but the difficulty concerning the issue of the shares still continuing, they begged me to allow them a longer period wherein to pay the remainder.

This circumstance caused me to come over for the second time to this capital, viz., in December 1859, when, moved by the desire to assist the Company, and supported by the confidence which I reposed in the guarantee of the Portuguese Government, I acceded to the request of the direction by agreeing to accept, in exchange for the bills, bonds of the Company (apolicies) to the extent of 14,000*l.*, for which I was creditor, to be amortized or redeemed in eight years, by half-yearly instalments of 6% paid during the last days of June and December of each year, with interest respectively, in the form declared in the bonds, and laid down by the contract which I made with the direction, dated the 28th of the said month and year.

The first half-yearly instalment due at the end of June of the following year was paid me. But having, in conformity with the stipulations of the said last contract, drawn upon the direction two bills for the instalment which had to be paid at the end of the December following, the direction refused to accept them, on the plea which may be styled audacious, as being so evidently inexact, that they had no funds of mine in their hands, and were not authorised to make advances.

This unexpected, strange and unheard-of proceeding on the part of the direction towards me, compelled me for a third time to come over to this capital, to my very great sacrifice and injury, as, in order to do so, I was compelled to forsake much public and private business that required my attendance in London.

In fact, it must appear to you both astounding and inexplicable that the direction should have have the audacity to declare in their protests of the bills that they did not accept them, because they had not in their possession funds of the drawer who was the creditor of the Company, whereof they the declarants were directors, for something more than 14,000 £; and who drew those very bills by virtue of, and in conformity with, one of the clauses of the contract alluded to, passed between them.

I cannot help discovering in this conduct of the direction a plan hit upon by them to do me an injury, and perhaps cause me to lose the very considerable capital which, at the request and on the guarantee of the Portuguese Government, I entrusted to the Company.

Your Excellency will not fail to perceive that as in my capacity of a British subject, I have been instigated by the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty to entrust to the company so large a capital, on the strength of the assurance given me by the Government that the undertaking of the Company was of great advantage to this country, and of even greater to the shareholders, and that the reimbursement of my capital should be secured to me; it is with clear and well-grounded reason that I consider I have a manifest and incontestable right to claim of the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty, either that it should protect me, and compel payment to me of the capital for which I am the Company's creditor, and which the direction in so improper a manner refuses to repay me, without my being compelled to suffer the delays, inconvenience and expense of judicial suits, which would oblige me to neglect my business in London in order to be present in this city, and remain here for the purpose of pushing on the proceedings; thus causing me prejudice and loss, the sacrifice of lucrative business and prospective damages, which I at once protest to claim; or that it should assume my claims for its own account, on my transferring to the proper authorities my right of action against the Company in return for my capital.

The Government of his Most Faithful Majesty, in Article 20 of the conditions of the contract which was made with the founders of the company for the adjudication of the undertaking thereof, reserved to itself power to appoint a Commissioner of its own, to appear at the meetings in order to watch the proceedings thereof—an arrangement which was more expressly and positively established in condition 3 of the contract made and passed with the direction on the 5th of January 1861, it being determined therein that the Government agent should superintend all the acts of the direction and the fulfilment of the contracts.

Through the intervention of its Commissioner, the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty must have entire knowledge of the contracts I have made with the direction and their mode of proceeding towards myself, entailing the non-fulfilment of those contracts.

And, moreover, the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty by so intervening, superintending, and controlling the acts of the direction, cannot shirk the responsibility which I claim to throw upon it, inasmuch as, by allowing the direction so to proceed, it has concurred in prejudicing my interests.

I must not omit to mention to your Excellency the strange pretext which I learn the direction has put forward, in order to explain their refusal to accept the bills; viz., that the steamers which I sold to the Company were badly built, badly stored, and badly manned, facts which compelled the direction to incur serious expense in the way of repairs, amounting to some twenty and odd million reis.

Even were such a pretext not ill-founded, as it undoubtedly is, such imaginary claim could not authorise the direction to declare that they did not accept my bills, because they had no funds of mine in their possession.

But, in order to appreciate at once the emptiness of such pretext, it will be sufficient to call to mind that the direction, before receiving the vessels, caused them to be most carefully examined by an agent of their own, expressly commissioned for the purpose; that after receiving them and giving them a trial, they thanked me for the good quality and condition of the vessels, and desired me to let them have another one; and that such claim invented by the direction, and which they thought of having recourse to after the vessels had been a long time in their service, and then only when they found it was impossible to pay the bills, so far from being admitted by me, was always rejected as unfounded and incorrect; and that finally, the direction, when making with me the contracts of the 20th December 1858 and 28th December 1859, made no mention whatsoever therein of such claim, but engaged purely and simply to pay me the purchase-money of the vessels.

It is, therefore, by direct infringement of their contracts, and by throwing discredit on their own bonds, that the direction refused to accept the bills, and made the unheard-of declaration which is to be found in the protests thereof.

Again, touching another point of not less importance, I beg permission to ask the most serious attention of your Excellency.

It was, as I have observed, in consequence of the solicitations made on the part of the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty, and through confiding in the security and guarantee which I understood it granted my capital, that I came forward to assist in the formation of the Company, and consented to take shares in payment of one-half the price of the vessels, viz. to the extent of 37,000 £.

These circumstances should have induced the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty not only to superintend and insist upon the entire and scrupulous observance of the statutes of the Company, inasmuch as by such vigilance of the Government, the good faith of the shareholders was supported and made easy; but they should more particularly cularly have induced the authorities not to authorise, and much less to make with the direction contracts for which the acts and formalities prescribed by the statutes, in order to render them legal and valid did not provide, and whose nature must tend to prejudice the interests of the shareholders.

Unhappily it was not so; and I regret to find myself compelled to observe to your Excellency, that the contracts lately passed between the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty and the direction of the Company, were in direct violation of the statutes of the Company, and were ruinous for the shareholders.

In the attributes conferred by Chapter 3 of the Statutes upon the direction was not comprised, nor could rationally be comprised the power to contract loans, or specially mortgage the property and securities of the Company. On the contrary, the disposition thereof in No. 5 of Article 18, clearly establishes the necessity that, for such acts the direction shall be specially authorised by a deliberation of the general meeting, which the direction must convoke for that purpose.

The legal convoking of the meeting must, by the terms of Article 35 of the statutes, be effected by means of advertisements, inserted 60 days in advance in the chief country papers, and in the principal journals of those countries where the Company have shareholders.

Yet, I have never been able to learn that such advertisements convoking a general meeting have ever been inserted, or that such meeting actually did assemble, giving authority to the direction to contract with the Government, and on the terms in which they have contracted.

And as I am the principal shareholder, and by the terms of Article 33 of the statutes, in order to take the resolution it was indispensable to obtain my votes, equivalent to one vote for each two shares (it seems strange), that I should be neither called upon nor heard in reference to these contracts.

These contracts, and more especially the one that was authorised by the law of the 10th September 1861, so depreciated the shares that they remained valueless upon the market.

And the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty, by contracting with the direction, without previously demanding the performance of the formalities and authorisation which are indispensable for the kind of contract, manifestly assumed a responsibility towards the shareholders, whose rights were thus set aside.

I cannot be compelled to suffer the prejudice occasioned me by the contract which the Government has thus passed with the direction, without my being heard as a shareholder, and advised to appear at the general meeting, and give my vote.

This prejudice consists in the valuelessness to which, by virtue of the contract referred to, the shares I possess have been reduced, the value and amount thereof being no longer the same.

I therefore see myself under the necessity of claiming of the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty payment of the 37,000 £., the amount of the shares of which I am the holder, and which I received as part payment of the vessels that, at the request of your Government I sold to the Company, I being ready to deliver over the said shares in consideration of such sum.

I feel confident that the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty will not hesitate to acknowledge the justice of my claims; and in such confidence I forego the having recourse to the protection and intervention of my own Government.

But in case, which I do not expect, they should not be attended to and satisfied, your Excellency must permit me to protest for the same, as well as for all prejudice and losses, stoppage of business, and damages accruing to me in consequence.

I likewise protest that these my claims shall not be, or shall not be understood to be prejudiced or suspended in their decision, by reason of the legal proceedings I intend taking against the direction, and my demand for payment of my entire credit by virtue of the clause of the contract so disposing, inasmuch as they are founded on my private rights as against the Government.

I am, &c.

My Lord,

8, Austin Friars, London, 23 July 1863.

I REGRET to advise your Lordship that all my efforts to obtain justice from the Portuguese Government, in regard to my claims, and those of other British subjects have failed.

Your Lordship was pleased in the course of last year to order a special inquiry to be made respecting the legal proceedings we had been obliged to institute in the Portuguese Courts; and Mr. Herries, in his report from Lisbon, stated that though though the decision of the judge in the first Court was "manifestly absurd," we had an appeal to "the Commercial Court of the Second Instance." We have since, at great expense, made that appeal; but the second Court confirmed the decision of the first. We then appealed to the Supreme Court, and to-day I have received the following telegram from my correspondents at Lisbon:

"As I expected, sentence was confirmed against you in the Supreme Court. You have now no appeal." Thus every effort to obtain justice from the Portuguese Government, to obtain even the execution of its own laws, has entirely failed, and we have now no course left but to throw ourselves upon Her Majesty's Government, and, as English subjects, pray your Lordship to protect us from the loss we sustain by the violation of contracts, the abuse of law, and the perpetration of great wrong.

COPY of LETTER from Mr. Lindsay, M.P., to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

8, Austin Friars, City, 24 July 1863.

I VENTURED to address your Lordship yesterday on the subject of my claims, and those of other English subjects against the Portuguese Government; and I am sure your Lordship will feel that I need not offer any excuse for again troubling you with the enclosed copy of letter received from Lisbon this morning. The writer of the letter is a Portuguese subject, and a member of one of the oldest and most respectable commercial firms in that country. He appears to be much ashamed (and well he may be) of the acts of his own Government and the decisions of their courts of law, which, in this case at least, appears to be entirely under their control.

When Sir Arthur Magenis in November last, expressed to the chairman of the Union Mercantile Company, his great surprise at the claims made for alleged detention by the embargo of the steam ship "Don Pedro," he was informed by that person, on the part of the Company, that it was a mere matter of form, but immediately I left Lisbon in December last, the Company commenced legal proceedings; and in this instance, as in all others, the Courts appear to decide in whatever way it suits the interests either of the Government of Portugal, or of the Union Mercantile Company, which are practically one and the same. Apart altogether from the claim itself (which has really no existence except as an account made up by the Company) the embargo was laid on the steam ship "Don Pedro," in accordance, not merely with the express conditions of the debentures of which I am a holder, but by an order from one of the judges of the Courts of Portugal.

My letter of yesterday informed your Lordship of the result of my last appeal for the recovery of the debenture stock. That stock is payable "to bearer," and judgment, I am informed, in the Courts of every country where such stock is dishonoured, would be given in favour of the holder of it, the same as in the case of bills of exchange noted and protested for non-payment. But though such is also the law in Portugal, all the courts of law of that country have now decided, while admitting the perfect validity of the debentures, that the company which issues these debentures, are not bound to pay either principal or interest upon them.

Your Lordship has hitherto been pleased to express the sympathy of Her Majesty's Government for the unfortunate holders of this stock, and to request Her Majesty's Minister at the Court of Portugal to render his good offices on their behalf, and I know he has done so. But as all his unofficial remonstrances have been made in vain, and have I believe not been treated by the Government of Portugal in a manner you had a right to expect, I trust your Lordship will not now hesitate to request your Minister to officially call the attention of the Portuguese Government to the facts I have brought under your Lordship's notice.

Enclosure in No. 33.

Dear Sir,

Lisbon, 16 July 1863.

It is again my painful duty to inform you that finally judgment was given yesterday in the action brought against you by the Union Mercantile Company for damages for alleged detention by embargo of the "Don Pedro." After three weeks' consideration, the judge sentences you to pay the demand of the Company, 17,583,821 reis, or 4,000 l. about. I will send you a copy of the sentence in a day or two.

Abranches has appealed. The day is fixed for judgment in the Supreme Court the 21st Monday; this is for the debenture case.

This state of things is positively worse than being amongst the blacks or red Indians, or any other wild tribe, for at least they do not profess to justice, or courts of law; but here these courts by what we have seen, are the cloaks to the greatest public act of swindling I ever heard of, and I am sure any impartial person will say the same.

COPY of DESPATCH from Sir A. C. Magenis to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

Lisbon, 18 August 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt, by private ship, on the 7th instant, of your Lordship's Despatch of the 29th ultimo, enclosing an extract from the City Article of "The Times" regarding Mr. Lindsay's claims against the Portuguese Government; and, in obedience to your instructions, I proceed to report "on the several statements contained in this letter."

It is correct, as stated in the letter signed "A Portuguese," that the Government of this country did not invite English capitalists to take part in the projected "União Mercantil" by the guarantee of 7 per cent. interest. The Company was formed without any guarantee, though the Government, at a subsequent period, as stated, guaranteed 6 and afterwards 7 per cent. on the whole capital. The Government did, however, invite, and in a very pressing manner, Mr. Lindsay to take part in the enterprise, as can be clearly established by letters which I have seen addressed to him by Mr. Carlos Bento, then Minister of Public Works. In fact, without Mr. Lindsay's participation as an owner of steamships, it is doubtful (and I believe the Minister said so in his letters) whether the Company could have been formed when it was.

That gentleman sold to the Company three steamers, namely, first the "Lindsay" (now "D. Estephania"), and subsequently the "Clarendon" (now "Africa"), and the "Ireland" (now "D. Pedro").

The price for the former was	-	-	-	19,000
And for the two others respectively	-	-	-	25,000
And	-	-	-	30,000
				£. 74,000
And he was paid for the "Lindsay," in cash	-	£.	9,500
And for the two others	-	-	11,400
Together	-	-	-	20,900
And took shares for the first to the amount of	-	9,500
And for the two last	-	-	27,500
				37,000
With debentures for the latter to the amount of	-	-		16,100
Making the total of	-	-	-	£. 74,000

This varies from the statement in the letter, that the "total consideration amounted to 77,691*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*;" and I have been informed by one of the Directors that the Company "know nothing of this sum, or to what it refers."

With regard to the statement that "his vessels proved to be entirely unfit for the service, and far below the standard agreed upon in the purchase," I must observe that the Company, before purchasing, had them examined in England by competent surveyors of their own selection, who declared they fulfilled the stipulated conditions; and I have seen a regular receipt respecting the two latter steamers which he had sold (about the first there is no dispute), signed by all the Directors, to that effect, which Mr. Lindsay produced in my presence to Mr. Medicott (one of that body), who did not and could not deny his own signature. I must further observe that these three vessels had, as I am informed by a Director of the Company, performed six voyages each to Loanda before Mr. Lindsay brought his action against the Company, against which the latter made a claim of 28,442,572 reis (about 6,300 l.) for repairs.

It is, of course, impossible for me to say whether the steamers in question were or were not in an effective and serviceable state. Both parties in the suit maintain their own opinion; but there is the patent fact that the Company, after due examination of the vessels in question before purchase, declared the contrary of what they now maintain. Mr. Lindsay has, moreover, frequently declared to the Company, and also to the Duke de Loulé, the Minister of Public Works, in my presence, that notwithstanding the discharge in full which he had, if it could be shown that there were repairs which he was bound in equity, though not legally, to make—that, as a man of honour and as a British merchant, he was willing to make them. In short, as far as I am aware, nothing could be fairer or more straightforward than that gentleman's conduct; and, far from wishing to break up the Company, he has always declared his willingness to leave his money in it, if reformed and carried on on sound commercial principles—believing that, if that were effected, the enterprise would prove remunerative.

It is not for me to enter into the merits of the decisions of the Portuguese courts of law in this case, widely as they differ from the ordinary-received ideas of justice in our own country.

It is perfectly true, as the letter states, that the Government has never repudiated the guaranteed interest, though I believe the payment of it is in arrear. Before Mr. Lindsay's departure from Lisbon in January last, the Government paid an instalment of interest; but as that gentleman, by the advice of his legal adviser here, maintained that the Government was responsible to the English shareholders for the repayment of the whole of their capital and interest, he refused to accept from the Company this proposed interest, though he was willing to accept it from the Government on account—which, of course, the latter declined.

The subsidy hitherto granted to the Company was 79,000,000 reis, or upwards of 16,000 l. per annum, thus divided:—

					Reis.
African line	-	-	-	-	58,000,000
Azores line	-	-	-	-	11,400,000
Algarve line	-	-	-	-	9,600,000

But in the last Session the Government was authorised to grant an annual subsidy of 160 contos, or upwards of 35,000 l., to any company capable of undertaking the lines in question; and though the Mercantile Union Company was not mentioned specifically, yet there is no doubt that Company regards the Act in question as increasing their former subsidy to the higher amount.

In conclusion, I may observe that I cannot, and do not, suppose that the Portuguese Government ever contemplated inflicting any injury on the shareholders. All their interest lay in the prosperity and maintenance of the Company; but, by their very negligent supervision, they allowed the Directors to proceed in a manner which Mr. Lindsay declares has seriously injured the British shareholders, while the Company is indebted to the Government in considerably more than 100,000 l.

After writing the above statement, I find that the official journal of this day has published a long article on Mr. Lindsay's claims, together with the legal opinions of the Law Officers of the Crown on this case.

The latter have been already transmitted to your Lordship, and I now enclose a translation of the article itself.

I have, &c.

(Translation.)

(From the Non-Official part of the "Diário de Lisboa," the Official Journal, of 18 August 1862.)

THE LINDSAY QUESTION.

SEVERAL newspapers have reported the question put to the British Government in the House of Commons, with respect to the claims brought forward by a few British subjects, shareholders in the "União Mercantil" Company, against the Portuguese Government, under the persuasion that the latter was bound to restore unto them the capital with which they had taken part in that undertaking, inasmuch as the results derived from it had been unfavourable to their interests.

That the Portuguese Government is not in the slightest degree, either morally or legally, responsible for the non-success of the undertaking (which is altogether a Portuguese one, and has renounced any right it might have had to international protection), is fully shown even to satiety by the documents which we publish below. These documents are the opinions given by the Counsellors, the Attorney General to the Crown, the Solicitor General to the Treasury, and the Assistant Attorney General to the Crown in the Department of Public Works, on a Memorial of Complaints and Claims, which the said British shareholders submitted to the Portuguese Government, through the Department of Public Works, in September 1862, and which they afterwards published in print, and which they caused to be circulated in January of this year.

The publication of the Memorial, and what occurred in the British Parliament, render now necessary the publication of the Portuguese documents, in order that the public may know that the Government does not deny, as it never has done, its moral and legal obligations; and that if the claims of the British shareholders are not satisfied, they ought to ascribe this to their own acts or negligence, and not to the Portuguese Government, which, from the very nature of its functions and attributes, is utterly unconcerned in the success or failure of commercial companies or anonymous societies such as the "União Mercantil."

However, as the terms in which the question was put and answered in the British Parliament have been essentially altered, and are at variance with the truth of the facts, and as the course of reasoning there pursued and the conclusions drawn from it are void of foundation, inasmuch as things took place in another manner, we now make, by means of the numerous proofs which we have before us, the corrections which those mistakes call for, in order that the honour and dignity of the Portuguese Government may, as it deserves, remain intact.

There are no grounds for what is stated, that the shareholders and claimants only entered into the undertaking after they had been induced to do so by the Portuguese Government; and after the latter had guaranteed to them a minimum of interest on their capital, as well as the appointment of agents or commissioners on the part of the Government to control the management of the undertaking.

In this dates have been altered, and the reasoning is deceptive. If the Portuguese Government wished the undertaking to be organised, and made unofficial solicitations for this purpose, it made use of a right which it possessed, which did no harm to anyone, and which would not have met with any result had not the founders of and the subscribers to the undertaking (the British claimants) subsequently come and studiously submitted formal proposals for that purpose to the Government. Then it was that the mutual rights and obligations inserted in the contracts were defined and agreed upon. There are no other guarantees beyond those stipulated therein by both parties, and it does not appear from the same that the Government guaranteed the capital of the shareholders.

The guarantee of a minimum of interest was only granted to the undertaking two years after its foundation, and even then as an equitable mode of saving it from the crisis which threatened it (30th of March 1861); and the appointment of Government agents to watch over the management of the Company was a right which the Government reserved to itself, and not a duty agreed to by it in the contracts; and it was a long while after the primitive contract had been entered into that the aforesaid appointment was made, rather with the view of watching over the compliance of the engagements made by the undertaking to the Government than for the purpose of influencing or interfering (which the Government was forbidden to do) in the relations and rights of the shareholders towards the managers of the Company.

Those relations and rights were regulated by the Statutes, and the Government could only take cognisance of the want of harmony in the same on the claim of any of the interested parties. It was this which it afterwards did, when the Memorial abovementioned was presented by the British claimants, which was the cause of an inquiry being instituted, the result of which will be that justice will be done to those who may be entitled to it, the administration of which has already commenced, and will be a proof at all times and to all persons of the prudence and wisdom with which the Government acts.

If the British claimants charge the managers of the Company with an extravagant expenditure—with remunerating the Directors, convoking illusory general meetings, and altering the votes given in general meetings, why did they tolerate all this up to September 1862, and not endeavour to put a stop to it by means of the (special) right which the claimants possessed, of having for one of the Directors a member of their own choice and appointment—a right of which they either never made use, or of which at least they never fully availed themselves? Why did they not make use of this special and direct means of exercising a daily control over the acts of the undertaking; and, if this were not sufficient, why not have recourse to the Portuguese Government as soon as they had the first motive for complaint, which they only did in the fifth year of the existence of the Company?

It was the claiming shareholders themselves who neglected the right, which they had obtained in 1858, of being specially represented in the Direction; who did not watch over their own interests as they ought to have done; who did not call for general meetings; who did not appeal from them to the Government, and who only made a complaint at the end of 1862, not to demand the only legal satisfaction which the Government could give them, but to claim the restitution of the capital with which they had entered into the undertaking; and if their capital was in danger of being lost, it was to their own acts and negligence that they ought chiefly to ascribe the fact.

There are no grounds for what is said, that the losses of the British subjects were caused by the acts of the Portuguese Government. To these acts it is that they are indebted for their not having lost, a long time ago (since 1861 at least), both de facto and legally, the whole capital of their shares, as would have happened in the event of the bankruptcy, which was then impending over the undertaking. If the State guaranteed a loan made by the Company, it was for the purpose of relieving it from not over-complacent creditors, and sparing both the country and the undertaking the consequences of its bankruptcy and unlucky liquidation. Had it not acted thus, where would the undertaking have been two years ago; where would the British subscribers of London have been, who now complain and bring forward claims grounded upon the favours they had received; and where would the British subscribers of other places have been, who are endowed with more sense, who complain of nothing, and do not claim anything from the Portuguese Government, and who only ascribe their commercial misfortunes to the empire of circumstances, which, independently of the will of anybody, have been unfavourable to them?

There cannot possibly be any claim on the part of any shareholder in the Company "União Mercantil," either native or foreign, against the Portuguese Government; because, in the contract, the foreign shareholders gave up their capacity as such, and were considered as natives. What is the meaning, therefore, of the outcry raised by a few British subjects in a foreign tribunal? What is meant by altering the truth, and thus endeavouring to fix upon the Portuguese Government a responsibility which does not belong to it, and an animosity by which it was never moved, and with which it can hardly be charged; inasmuch as it has lately obtained from the Legislative Body, for the purpose of saving the lines of navigation granted to the Company "União Mercantil," a vote for a great increase of the subsidy for the same, together with the possibility of the new subvention being granted to the same Company, should it succeed in carrying out its reorganization under such conditions as may with justice entitle it to the advantages proffered by the new law?

If anybody has acted wrongly in all this, it is not the Portuguese Government, who have complied with their own engagements, who have already paid the guaranteed interest due for one year (of which the British claimants alone refused to receive their share, which is still kept in deposit), who are preparing the payment of that same interest due for another year, and who, in fine, have rendered and will render justice to everything and to all, in due conformity with equity.

After these few and indispensable considerations, the following documents will be a clear and conclusive answer to all possible claims and questions which may be grounded, like those of which we have been treating, upon arguments so devoid of plausibility.

COPY of LETTER from Mr. Lindsay, M.P., to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

8, Austin Friars, City, 2 September 1863.

IN December last the Portuguese Government appointed a Committee of its own officers to inquire into the affairs of the Royal Union Mercantile Company, and into the claims of those British subjects about which I have so often been obliged to trouble your Lordship. Though I wished the Committee to be more impartially constituted, I nevertheless offered to give evidence before it, not merely as a large claimant, but as much the largest holder of stock in the Company. But the Committee either could not at the time receive my evidence, or did not consider it necessary, and therefore I am less interested in their report (which I understand was made in March last) than I might otherwise have been. I still, however, expected to be furnished with a copy of it; but as the application of my agent to obtain one has failed, might I ask your Lordship to request Sir Arthur Magenis to see if he can obtain a copy. Your Lordship will, no doubt, consider consider it desirable that that Report should appear with the Papers which, with the permission of Her Majesty's Government, have been ordered by the House of Commons to be printed.

As there appears, by a letter which I have just received from my agent at Lisbon, to be now some disposition on the part of the Portuguese Government and the Company to settle amicably those long-pending claims, might I further ask your Lordship to advise Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon that, though I feel I have been greatly wronged, I am as ready now as I have been from the first to meet the Government of Portugal and the Company in all that is reasonable and just. Indeed, I am most anxious to avoid the necessity of adopting any measures likely to prejudice the credit of Portugal, or lead to any misunderstanding between the two countries. I am, therefore, prepared to leave the whole question either to arbitration, or to consider, with the desire to settle, whatever equitable proposals may be made to me, or to meet any person they may name in this country to adjust those claims.

I am, &c.

I AM directed by Lord Russell to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2d instant, requesting that Her Majesty's Minister in Lisbon should be desired to state that you are prepared to submit your claims to arbitration, or to consider any fair proposals that may be made to you for their settlement; and I am, in reply, to suggest that it would be better that such overtures should come from yourself.

COPY of LETTER from Mr. Lindsay, M.P., to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

8, Austin Friars, City, 30 September 1863.

RESPECTING my claims and those of other English subjects against the Government of Portugal and the Royal Mercantile Company of Lisbon, to which your Lordship has been pleased to pay marked attention, I may state, for your Lordship's information, that a communication has just been made by the Managing Director of the Company, expressing a desire and (as I learn by the letter of my Lisbon correspondent) a wish on the part of the Government that these long-pending claims may now be amicably settled. From the very outset I have endeavoured, but in vain, to come to a just and amicable settlement. With that object in view I have, at great inconvenience, repeatedly visited Lisbon, and generally returned to England no further advanced than when I left. Every conceivable excuse for delay has always been raised, and every form of procrastination adopted. At last I was driven, in despair of any amicable settlement, to seek justice in the Portuguese courts of law.

The laws of that country appeared to be similar to our own, but I found by experience, and to my cost, that the execution of them was very different. I have exhausted all the courts, and got more than enough of their law, but, I regret to say, no justice, for the decisions of their judges have overruled all agreements and bonds, and been, in fact, alike an outrage of justice and common sense.

Last winter I spent nearly three months in Lisbon, endeavouring to effect an amicable settlement, but between the Duke of Loulé, who seldom answered Her Majesty's Minister's letters in less than a fortnight or three weeks, and the constant shuffling and prevarication of the "Directors," who would neither say aye or no to arbitration or to anything else, I got nothing done.

The letter now received from the Manager of the Company (of which I enclose copy) contains conditions, though vague, which I might be disposed to accept, if I could have some pledge from the Government of Portugal that the interest they have guaranteed by the Acts of their Legislature would in future be paid, and that the conditions of any agreement, subject to their approval, I might enter into with the Directors of the Company (in which they have in various ways so much interest) would be honestly fulfilled.

But unless I have some pledge that they really desire to settle amicably and equitably, that they will enter into the matter with that spirit on my arrival in Lisbon, and that if the larger portion of my capital is left in the undertaking, as they desire, that it shall not be dealt with as it has hitherto been, I feel it would be a mere waste of time to again visit Portugal as they request.

Might I, under these circumstances, venture to ask your Lordship to forward a copy of this letter to Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon, and ask him to advise your Lordship (I hope by telegram, as time is now of importance) if he thinks I can now get these claims promptly and equitably settled. If he is of that opinion I shall put aside all other engagements, and leave by the first steamer for Lisbon, for I am anxious to avoid, if possible, the publication of the correspondence ordered by the House of Commons, which would injure the credit of Portugal (and, consequently, many innocent persons), especially at the present moment, when I understand the Government of that country is about to seek another loan of 3,000,000 £. in this market.

In seeking justice for myself and those who are associated with me, I have always endeavoured to avoid any course which might inflict injury upon others, and I desire to follow the same course to the end; but my determination to adhere to it has, in the course of the last three years, been often put to the test by the Government of Portugal and the Directors of that Company which they created with our capital.

I am, &c.

Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Enclosure in No. 41.

Dear Sir,

Lisbon, 22 September 1863.

In consequence of the conversations we have had as to the means by which the Union Mercantile Company could enter into an arrangement with Mr. W. S. Lindsay, and thereby terminate the legal questions now pending, in order that Mr. Lindsay should be in a position to co-operate with the Board as to the means to be adopted for the reorganization of the Company, it is my individual opinion that the adoption of the following points might bring about this desirable result:—

1st. That Mr. Lindsay should receive his guaranteed interest of the last year, ending the 31st March 1862, and now in deposit, and also that of this year, ending 31st March 1863.

2d. That all the legal proceedings, accounts, &c. be put a stop to, and be settled by an amicable and equitable arrangement, and whatever sum might be liquidated be settled by Mr. Lindsay in shares at their nominal value.

3d. That Mr. Lindsay be paid the amount of his debentures, either by the proceeds of the new shares about to be issued or by the cash of the Company, which can easily be effected, on account of the increase of the subsidy.

4th. That the Statutes of the Company be reformed and remodelled in such a way that Mr. Lindsay can always be represented at the Board as long as he remains a shareholder.

5th. That these bases may be altered or modified, as may be shown convenient at the time of being discussed; but for this it is necessary that Mr. Lindsay (if convenient) should come to Lisbon, or name any person he should think proper, to treat upon this matter, which, if concluded, would not only be mutually advantageous, but would greatly facilitate the reorganization of Company.

Having nothing further to communicate,

I remain, &c.

Edward F. Pinto Basto, Lisbon.

COPY of DESPATCH from the Right Hon. Earl Russell to Sir A. C. Magenis.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 2 October 1863.

I TRANSMIT to you copies of a letter and its enclosure from Mr. Lindsay, showing that certain proposals have been made to him by the Managing Director of the "Union Mercantile Company" for the settlement of his claims, and stating the conditions upon which he is willing to entertain them.

I have to inform you that I am prepared so far to comply with Mr. Lindsay's wishes as to authorise you, if you think proper to do so, to give your personal opinion, for communication to Mr. Lindsay, on the point stated—namely, whether he can now get his claims promptly and equitably settled. Mr. Lindsay will, however, be informed that neither you nor Her Majesty's Government are to be held in any way responsible if the result should not coincide with the opinion you may express.

But you will not take any official step in the matter with the view of ascertaining whether the Government of Portugal are prepared to give a pledge that the guaranteed interest would in future be paid to Mr. Lindsay, or that the conditions of any agreement, subject to their approval, which Mr. Lindsay might enter into with the Directors of the Company would be fulfilled.

COPY of LETTER from Mr. Lindsay, M.P., to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

8, Austin Friars, City, 16 June 1864.

WHEN I addressed your Lordship on the 6th October last I was under the impression, from the advices I received, that I would not again require to trouble you on the subject of the Portuguese claims.

In accordance with the invitation I received from the directors of the Union Mercantile Company, forwarded to me by the request of the Government of Portugal, I proceeded to Lisbon, and spent the greater portion of the month of November at that place.

What then took place is explained in a letter I addressed to Sir Arthur Magenis, on the 26th November, copy of which I send herewith. Finding it impossible to effect any arrangement with the directors of the above Company, I had various interviews with His Excellency the Duke of Loulé, and other members of the Portuguese Government, when arrangements were entered into which I understood would be satisfactory to the Government of Portugal, and which met the approval of the English holders of the stock guaranteed by that Government. I accordingly came back to this country to complete these arrangements, and returned to Lisbon in January of the present year, with models and specifications for the new line of steamships, to which our stock was to be transferred, and thus our claims were to be finally settled.

But on my arrival I found matters in much the same state as when I left in November, and the result of my second visit will be found described in a letter I addressed to Sir A. Magenis, on the 27th January; copy herewith.

Though the delay was very great, I nevertheless felt, after having been sent for, and after the repeated pledges of the Duke of Loulé, that these claims would be "amicably arranged," that all would be settled. I have, however, been grievously disappointed. Within the last week I have been advised that, without any communication with the English shareholders, the Portuguese Government has ordered the Union Mercantile Company to be wound up, and fresh arrangements entered into for the future conduct of the mail service, without making any provision whatever for the security of the guaranteed stock of the English shareholders, or the settlement of their claims. In fact, ignoring them altogether.

As every effort has now failed to obtain a friendly settlement of these long pending claims, I trust your Lordship may be pleased to instruct Sir Arthur Magenis to request, officially, the repayment of the money we invested by the request of the Minister of Commerce, and under the guarantee of the Portuguese Government, with interest from the 31st March 1863 (when it was last paid) to the date of settlement. If this request is officially made, I am informed that the matter will at once be settled. If not, I have too much reason to fear that not one sixpence of the capital we thus invested will ever be repaid.

September 30.

I am, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 43.

My dear Sir Arthur,

Lisbon, Bragança Hotel, 26 Nov. 1863.

ABOUT the end of September last I received in London, from the managing director of the Royal Union Mercantile Steam Navigation Company of Lisbon, a somewhat indefinite proposal, dated 22d of that month, for an "amicable settlement" of my claims and those of the other shareholders in England against the above Company and the Government of Portugal. A copy of this document I at once forwarded to Earl Russell, expressing my readiness to settle these long pending claims on the basis proposed. His Lordship, I believe, forwarded a copy of my letter to him to you with a request that you would see his Excellency the Duke of Loulé, and ascertain from him if the proposal named by the Company met the approval of the Government of Portugal, and if the Government would assist in carrying it into effect. On the 22d October last I received a telegram from my agent here, which I am informed was drawn out by you, and approved by the Duke of Loulé, to the effect that you had seen his Excellency, who informed you that if I would suspend my claims against the Government of Portugal, the Government would use its best endeavours to see any arrangements carried out which might be entered into between the Company and the English shareholders. In reply to that communication, I at once telegraphed that I would suspend the claims against the Government, if the debentures and the overdue interest were paid, and if the Portuguese Government agreed to see the proposal made by the Company carried into effect, I would visit Lisbon as requested. This telegram was also brought by my agent under the notice of his Excellency the Duke of Loulé, and on the 23d October last my agent telegraphed to me confirming the telegram of the 22d, and adding that if I came here "all would be satisfactorily settled." Accordingly at very great inconvenience I left London on the 9th instant, accompanied by two English shareholders in the Company. We arrived here on the 13th, and on the following morning we had an interview with the managing director and secretary to the Company. After what has already come under your notice, you may not be surprised to hear that M. Alren, the managing director, expressed great regret that my claims had not long since been settled: gave it as his opinion, and that of the Company he represented, that the debentures were clearly due and must be paid, and volunteered the information that the pleas set up by the Company against the payment of these claims were subterfuges to obtain delay, and that consequently the decisions of the various courts of law against me and in favour of the Company were manifestly as unjust as they were absurd. I heard these admissions, meant, no doubt, to smooth the way for the "amicable settlement," with feelings which I cannot well describe, making no remark, however, beyond stating that I was desirous to avoid all discussions in regard to the past, and that my anxious wish was to have my claims settled, if possible, on the conditions and in the friendly spirit he, on the part of the Company, had proposed. With that object, and on the distinct understanding that I and the other English shareholders were at once to receive our guaranteed interest without prejudice, and as a preliminary to any discussion as to the above proposal, it was agreed that we should attend at the office of the Company on the 16th instant, when the directors would be present, and that we should inspect the books, and discuss in detail the proposal of the Company. We did attend, but before many minutes had elapsed it became apparent that the object the directors had in view was not so much the settlement of our claims as the advancement of their own interests to our prejudice, as I will presently show you. On entering the office the document (of which I enclose copy) was, by way, it appears to me, of intimidation, placed in our hands. It is entirely different to the proposal sent to me; the first clause of that proposal being, on the faith of which we came here, that we should receive our "guaranteed interest." To this, however, though we agreed to a letter prepared by the Company's own solicitor, we could not procure the signature of the president, Mr. Medicott, or of any of the directors. They all declined to sign this letter until we had agreed to everything else (of which we then knew little or nothing) that was proposed by them, whether we considered it prudent or not as regarded our own interests, fair towards the Government of Portugal, or to those who might embark capital in the Company thus reorganised. This seemed so absurd and unreasonable that we of course declined to do so, and the meeting was accordingly dissolved.

From a perusal of the documents then and since handed to me, it appears that the Government of Portugal are anxious to maintain the postal communication with its colonies, and that they have recently passed a law offering a subsidy to any person or company willing to perform that service, in a manner satisfactory to the Government, stipulating, however, that the Union Mercantile Steam Navigation Company would not be allowed to tender for the subsidy until the claims of the English shareholders were settled, and unless the Company agreed to a thorough re-organization of its affairs (which, of course, involved a considerable increase of capital) and also refunded all sums of money which the directors had improperly taken from the coffers of the Company. Pending my arrival here, the directors had prepared a scheme for re-organisation, which had been carefully printed, signed by the Portuguese shareholders, and delivered to the Government of Portugal, a translation of which they presented to me at the office of the Company. On a perusal of this document, it is clear to me that the sole object the directors had in inviting me to Lisbon was to join them in inducing the Government to accept this scheme, without any definite reference to the payment of the interest or debentures, which were the first conditions of their own proposal. Setting, however, these questions aside, the scheme was of such a nature that as a man of business, and as a matter of honour to the Government of Portugal, I could not be a party to it. Wilful representations were made as to the losses the Company had sustained, and as to the capital of the Company. For instance, in the capital account, a small and useless steamer called the "Tejo," which one of the directors had sold to the Company, was valued at 8,000 £, whereas she was not worth 1,000 £, and has been lying in the Tagus utterly unfit for service ever since the Company purchased her, three or four years ago. This account, on which the scheme was based, further set forth the "Don Pedro" as being worth 36,000 £, whereas the Company purchased her from me more than five years ago, when she was comparatively new, for 30,000 £, and for which to this day they have not paid me, and in respect of which the bills handed to me were dishonoured at maturity. Many other statements and calculations in their scheme are equally fallacious and untrue, and though the directors attempted to induce me to become a party to it by agreeing to pay at some indefinite period the value of my debentures out of the proposed new subsidy they hoped to get from the Government, and to do so without making any deduction for the counter claims, which they admitted were unjust. I frankly told them that I would not be a party to such a disgraceful, and at the same time, silly attempt to deceive, and, I must add, to defraud their own Government. In this course my colleagues, who accompanied me to the meeting, concurred. The directors also utterly failed, though pressed on the point, to furnish the name of a single capitalist who was ready to provide the means necessary to carry out the proposed scheme for re-organisation. They talked of a "gentleman in France," and "a party in Italy," who were ready to find the capital, but they would not, I may say could not, furnish their names. Our only course, therefore, was to take our leave, with feelings of regret that we had been asked to visit Portugal solely to aid the furtherance of a scheme as impracticable, and as absurd as it was disreputable. On the following day, through your kind offices, I had a meeting with the Duke of Loulé, accompanied by my agent, Mr. Edward Pinto Basto, as interpreter, when I reminded his Excellency that the English shareholders had to a very great extent invested their capital in the Union Mercantile Company, on the written representations made to them by his predecessor in office, Senhor Carlos Beutos, the then Minister of Public Works, that the stipulations agreed upon had not been fulfilled, and that the interest guaranteed by Act of Cortes upon our stock had not been paid. I, however, avoided saying one word as to the course Earl Russell had adopted, or what he might do, neither did I make any reference to the order of Parliament that the correspondence relating to the claims of the English shareholders against the Government and the Company should forthwith be laid on the table of the House of Commons, feeling that as a private individual it would ill become me to do so. But I stated fully what had taken place between the directors of the Company and myself and colleagues at the meeting to which I have just referred, and my opinion of the scheme they had proposed, adding, in conclusion, that I saw no way out of the difficulty except to take into my own hands, in connection with two or three capitalists in London, the formation of an entire new Company, on the terms of the Act of Cortes of the 13th July last.

His Excellency received me very graciously, listened with much attention to my remarks, and at once decided that M. Palha, of the Public Works, should on the following day meet me to examine and consider my proposals.

On the 17th my colleagues and I met M. Palha and Mr. Avelino, the Law Officer of the Crown, when we discussed very fully the various questions at issue, and the proposals I had made. The result of our interview was a letter which, at M. Palha's suggestion, I addressed to his Excellency the Duke of Loulé, of which I enclose a copy herewith. In it you will find the proposals I have made, and though you may be of opinion that I am about to incur a risk, and undertake considerable responsibility, I, nevertheless, am prepared to incur that risk, so as to be relieved from any further connexion with men who have done me so much wrong; and I am not without hope that under wise and prudent management, I may thus be enabled in time to place my own and other English shareholders' interests that have been confided to me on a fair and proper footing.

After another interview which I had with his Excellency the Duke of Loulé, and daily meetings with M. Palha and M. Avelino, the only result has been the payment of the interest upon our stock up to the 31st March last. This has been received on the written condition that our claims against the Government for our stock are not prejudiced, and, on the other hand, that the Government does not thereby acknowledge its liability in respect thereof.

As to the debentures, the Government admitted that they are a first charge on the assets of the Company, and have offered to pay them within six months, but without relieving us from the claims which the Company have made against us, and on the condition that we surrender all our claims against the Portuguese Government for our 37,000 l. stock.

However, anxious to settle these long pending claims in a liberal spirit, I felt this proposal to be so unreasonable that I really could not entertain it; but I yesterday addressed a letter to the Duke of Loulé, with further concessions (of which I enclose copy) in the hope that his Excellency might be thus induced to meet me in the spirit I had been led to anticipate by the letters and telegrams which brought me here. In reply thereto I have this morning received a letter, of which I also enclose copy.

The Brazilian packet has now arrived, and as she will probably sail this evening I have no time to write; but before I embarke I shall call upon Mr. Palho, and inform him that if the Government cannot admit any condition which implies a legal claim against them, I am ready to waive it, provided they acknowledge an equitable or moral claim; and as we, through favour, expressed in the letters of M. Carlos Beutos, invested our capital and thereby opened out the postal communication to their colonies, would they, out of favour to us, give us a chance to recover that capital by the thorough re-organization of the Company, or grant to us the concessions for a new undertaking, on the conditions they have named. If the Government is disposed to entertain the above, I will again, if necessary, visit Lisbon by the packet of the 9th January.

Allow me to thank you for the interest and trouble you have taken in this matter.

To his Excellency Sir A. Mageniz,
&c. &c. &c.

I remain, &c.
(signed) W. S. Lindsay.

Enclosure 2, in No. 43.

My dear Sir Arthur,

Bragança Hotel, Lisbon, 27 January 1864.

IN my letter to you of the 26th November last, I stated that, with the approval of his Excellency the Duke of Loulé was returning to London to complete my arrangements for undertaking the mail service between this country and its colonies, solely with the view of thus amicably adjusting, if possible, my long pending claims against the Portuguese Government. In accordance with previous arrangements, I returned here on the 13th instant with powers to close, and with models and specifications of the ships for the new undertaking, which I had prepared at considerable trouble and expense.

I was given to understand that when I returned here the Government would be prepared to treat with me; but on my arrival I found, with surprise and regret, that matters remained the same as when I left in November; the Government was not prepared to give any definite answer to my proposals. Day by day I have, since my arrival here, attended at the office of Public Works, and it was only yesterday afternoon that M. Palho informed me, when I called, that the minister had requested him to say, that as he had given the directors of the Union Mercantile Company till the end of February to see if they could raise the capital necessary for the re-organisation of the Company, he was not in a position to entertain the offers I had made, and that therefore there was no necessity for me to see him again. M. Palho added, that he expected other persons would offer for the conveyance of the mails if the existing Company failed to raise the requisite capital. It is, therefore, useless for me to remain any longer here, and I return to England by the Brazilian packet now due.

Frustrated in every attempt to secure the capital invested here at the request of the Minister of Commerce six years ago, by unjust decisions in their courts of law, and by other means I need not here repeat, and at last invited to this city to arrange an "amicable settlement," I have been equally baffled in all my efforts to do so; and it would appear that the greater the anxiety I displayed to settle in a liberal and friendly spirit, the less have the ministers and their subordinates been disposed to listen to my claims, or to my appeals for justice.

In regard to the conduct of the directors of the Union Mercantile Company, who invited me here in November "to amicably adjust my claims," they seem to have resolved upon measures the very reverse of what they professed, for yesterday they summoned me for the amount of some accounts they had recently made up against me, and passed to my debit without my consent, and even without my knowledge. I enclose copy of the summons. And not satisfied with the adoption of a measure alike unfriendly and unjust, they also yesterday served me with a notice, copy of which I also enclose, whereby I am summoned to show cause why they should not confiscate 6,400 l., or thereabouts, of the 25,000 l. stock in shares belonging to me in the Company.

When yesterday afternoon I brought this extraordinary document under the notice of M. Palho (to whom the minister refers all my affairs), I learned with surprise from him that the directors had informed the Government that they intended to serve me with this notice, and, as I understood, no one else, so as to test the question whether they could or could not legally confiscate my stock. It, therefore, appears that I am, with the approval of the Government, to be dragged into another lawsuit, for, I suppose, if I do not defend it, judgment will be given against me in default. On consulting my lawyer here, he at once told me what he conceived the result would be. He said, "the course the Company is adopting against you is alike illegal and unjust, and I shall protest, in your name, against it; but I need need not do anything more, for the courts will decide in favour of the Company, and against you, as they have done, on all the other trials."

I enclose, for your information, the letters I have this time addressed, since my arrival, to the Minister of Commerce. To these I have had no written answers, and the verbal answers have, till yesterday, perhaps necessarily so, been very evasive.

To day I had a meeting alone with his Excellency the Duke of Loulé; he received me with much courtesy. I explained to him all that had taken place. I told him the substance of the letter I have just addressed to the Minister of Commerce. I expressed to him my feelings of the manner in which I had been treated by the Directors of the Union Mercantile Company, and that it was impossible for me to have any further transactions with such men, with which he fully coincided. I did not hesitate to say that I had not received justice in the courts of law. I told him about the summonses which had just been served upon me, at which he expressed surprise. And I concluded by saying, that though I had suffered much I was still ready to make many concessions, and incur even fresh responsibility as a means of settling the unhappy differences which had arisen, and which I felt never would have arisen had I been from the first in direct communication with his Excellency. My meeting with the Duke has, therefore, been a satisfactory one; the more so, because it was frank and open on both sides; and on parting, he said that all would be amicably settled, or rather, to use his own words (for his English, though not good, is better than my French), "I shall make it all right."

I sincerely trust it may be so.

Enclosure in No. 44.

From the Official Journal "Diario de Lisboa," of 2 June 1864.

CONSIDERING that the Company which entered into the engagement of establishing a regular line of steamers between Lisbon, the Azores, the Algarve, and the West Coast of Africa, in virtue of the contracts of 5th May 1858, of 12th April 1860, and of 5th January 1861, formed itself into an anonymous society, named the "União Mercantil" Company, in accordance with the statutes, which were approved by the Decree of 14th May 1858:

Considering that it was stipulated in the 5th article of the aforesaid statutes, that the capital of the Company should be of 450,000,000 reis (100,000 L.), represented by 5,000 shares of 90,000 reis (20 L.) each, and that this article was subsequently altered, by raising the capital to 900,000,000 reis (200,000 L.), represented by 10,000 shares of the same amount, which alteration was approved by a decree of 23d May 1859:

Considering that, in the decree of the 28th of September 1859, permission was granted to the Company to issue debentures to bearer of 450,000 reis (100 L.) each, bearing 6 per cent. interest, and with an annual redemption of 12 per cent:

Considering that, in order to facilitate the issue of shares, a minimum of interest at the rate of 6 per cent. was guaranteed to the Company by the law of 30th March 1861, and that this guarantee was raised to 7 per cent. by the law of 10th September 1861:

Considering that out of the 10,000 shares representing the social fund of the Company, the latter has never been able to issue more than 4,002, amounting to 360,180,000 reis (80,040 L.), which is less than the amount of capital which was originally fixed:

Considering that the Company issued 161 debentures, amounting to 72,450,000 reis (16,100 L.), for the payment of a part of the cost of their steamers:

Considering that this want of real or paid up capital has been the cause of the abnormal existence of the Company, it having been compelled,— 1stly. To have recourse to credit, by raising considerable sums in the "Bank of Portugal," in the "Mercantile," and in the "Commercial" Banks, and in the "Public Utility" Company, under the responsibility and personal guarantee of some of the Directors.

2dly. To solicit a considerable amount of pecuniary assistance from the Government, receiving a loan of 450,000,000 reis (100,000 l.), by the contract of 24th October 1861, and other extraordinary supplies, amounting to more than 200,000,000 reis (44,444 l.).

Considering that the want of capital was also the cause of the Company not having been able to employ more than one steamer on the line to the Algarve, whereas, in virtue of the 2d article of the law of 30th March 1861, it was bound to employ two; and also, of its not having been able to perform on the African line, ever since 1860, 12 regular voyages out and home, as required by the 13th condition of the contract, of the 5th of May 1858:

Considering that the accounts of the Company in the years 1861 to 1862, and 1862 to 1863, showed a deficit; and that, in consequence, the Government was obliged to pay the minimum of interest as guaranteed by the laws of the 30th of March, and of the 10th of September 1861:

Considering that the Company not only did not realise the capital required by the statutes, but also did not succeed in raising it, by means of the late subscription, to the sum of 1,350,000,000 reis (300,000 l.), for the purpose of effecting its re-organisation under such conditions as might render the law of 13th July 1863 applicable to it.

Considering that the result of that subscription is still more worthy of remark, when we take into account that, in virtue of the said law of July 13th, the amount of subsidy is fixed at 160,000,000 reis (35,555 l.), an interest of 6 per cent. is guaranteed to the shareholders, and that, in case the Company should be re-organised, the Government would be the largest shareholder in the same:

Considering that capital is absolutely indispensable to enable the Company to fulfil its engagements:

Considering that, in all anonymous societies, capital is the only real and effective guarantee for the public interests, which the law has intrusted to the supreme guardianship of the Government:

Considering that the Government has exhausted all means of protection, assistance, and condescension, and ought no longer to authorise the existence of an anonymous society, which does not possess the first and essential condition required for its legal existence:

I am pleased to withdraw the Royal approval of the Statutes of the “União Mercantil” Company, as set forth in the Decrees of 14th May 1858, of 28th September 1859, and of 23d May 1860; and the same Company shall only continue to exist as an anonymous society, in order to carry out such acts as may be indispensable for the liquidation of the same, in accordance with its social compact, and with the laws of the kingdom.

The Minister and Secretary of State for the Department of Public Works, Commerce, and Industry shall thus understand it, and cause it to be put into execution.

At the Palace, on the 25th of May 1864.

COPY of LETTER from Mr. Lindsay, M.P., to the Right Hon. Earl Russell.

My Lord,

8 Austin Friars, City, 20 July 1864.

ON the 15th ultimo I advised your Lordship that all hopes of an amicable adjustment of my claims on the Portuguese Government were at an end. I consequently placed the papers connected with these claims before Dr. Travers Twiss, who, I was informed, is one of our leading authorities on International Law, for his opinion. Dr. Twiss has evidently given great attention to the case, and I forward herewith, for your Lordship's consideration, the papers which were laid before him, and his opinion, which not merely confirms the opinion given by the five Portuguese Counsel, but gives his reasons why the Portuguese Government are legally responsible to the English claimants.

I am, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 45.

CASE for the Opinion of Dr. Travers Twiss.Mr. W. S. Lindsay and the Portuguese Government.

CASE.

THE main question for your consideration in this case is whether Mr. Lindsay has any claim against the Portuguese Government, such as to call for the interference of the British Government; and more particularly with reference to the injustice done him by the Courts of Law at Lisbon, in certain proceedings there instituted by him against the Company, in order to enforce payment of debentures which they had issued to him for full value.

The following are the Facts of the Case:—

For many years the Government of Portugal were very anxious to develop the resources of its possessions in Western Africa, and with that object in view granted various privileges to a number of merchants resident at Lisbon, on the conditions that they would run lines of steamers between that port and the above possessions.

Towards the end of 1857 those merchants addressed Mr. W. S. Lindsay, of London, with the view of obtaining his aid in carrying out this undertaking, as they found that without some such assistance it was impossible to carry into effect the object they had in view. They represented to him, in substance, that it was to be a Government undertaking. Mr. Lindsay consequently addressed the then Minister of Public Works of Portugal (M. Carlos Bento da Silva), and from him he received various letters, now in his possession, of which the following are translations:—

“ It is useless for me to tell you that I have used every means to arrange the affairs of the company in the best possible manner. I have even taken upon myself the responsibility of hastening the decision of the affair without its again requiring to pass before the House; it is quite true that I have tried to alter a little the spirit of the other proposition made to Government, but I do not the less wish well to the enterprise. I think the undertaking will be advantageous to those engaged in it, and the modifications which I have lastly proposed are not to be considered as really changing your conditions, but are indispensable for the Government to justify its conduct. There is one, for example, necessary to the Azores line. The law required three ships to perform the voyages, but I think that to fix the number of voyages will give greater regularity of communication; and it is well to fix the number of voyages to be made each month, otherwise 12 or 13 voyages will be made in summer, thus debarring the Isles from a regular communication.

“ Seeing what I have judged of the affair, I think it will be advantageous for the Government, but no less so for those concerned in it; and I shall be glad when you, seeing the justice of the intentions of the Government, will give me, with your friends, the opportunity of concluding the contracts of the African and Azores lines.

“ I am, &c.

“ W. S. Lindsay, Esq.(signed) “ Carlos Bento da Silva.”

“ I HAVE received yours of 24th ultimo, in reply to which I beg to say that I have seen Messrs. Candido, Abreu, and Tradesso, regarding the approval of the last basis proposed for the establishment of the Steam Navigation Company. I believe that every objection is now removed, and that you will hasten to ratify the contract, and despatch immediately the steamer ‘Lindsay,’ at least, which has been ready some time.

“ I believe that the African navigation will be a very good business for all parties, and that the line to the Azores will not injure the company in anything; on the contrary, I expect that the speedy realisation of the contract will now make the same more acceptable to the public, inasmuch as the delay that has hitherto occurred in the formation of the company has given rise to some incredulity.

“ Yours, &c.

“ W. S. Lindsay, Esq.(signed) “ Carlos Bento da Silva.”

" 28 February 1858.

" I HAVE received your letter of 16th instant. I see with much pleasure that you have agreed with what I wrote to you, and I flatter myself soon to set on foot an undertaking which will prove of so much benefit to the State and the shareholders. I have used every means to get together the members of the Portuguese Direction of the Company, but the illness of some, and also of M. d'Abreu, has prevented my doing so. However, there will be a meeting to-morrow. M. d'Abreu had even a conference with me to-day; he will advise you by to-morrow's packet. It is necessary for you to send an official authority, signed also by Mr. Perez, agreeing to the modifications of which they have sent you a copy. As for the rest of the contract, I have already the necessary documents in the proposition you have made. To-morrow I shall endeavour to make these gentlemen adopt the resolution of considering the Company as formed, seeing we have your adhesion merely waiting that you will make it formal by sending the document of which I have spoken. We shall telegraph to you the result, in order that you may send the 'Lindsay' and, as soon as possible, the steamers for the African service.

" W. S. Lindsay, Esq.

" I have, &c.
(signed) " Carlos Bento da Silva."

" 28 March 1858.

" THE contract and the statutes of the Navigation Company are ready to be signed to-morrow or the day after to-morrow. We will let you know by telegraph of the verification of this fact; and I rely that you will give your orders respecting the ship which ought to commence the voyages for the Azores, and which ought not to be retarded.

" W. S. Lindsay, Esq.

" Yours, &c.
(signed) " Carlos Bento da Silva."

MR. LINDSAY, after receipt of these letters, visited Lisbon, for the first time, and made arrangements so that he might be fully protected before despatching his steamers.

The statutes of the Company, by which it was regulated, and in which clauses for his protection were inserted, were approved, sanctioned, and confirmed by a decree of the Portuguese Government, and it was not until these statutes were so confirmed that Mr. Lindsay despatched the first steamer to commence the undertaking.

The Company was consequently formed under the special directions and with the special protection of the Portuguese Government, and the statutes on the faith of which, and on the representations of the minister, Mr. Lindsay and other British subjects were induced to invest their capital, contained numerous clauses for their protection, the more important of which were as follows:

Article 10. In case of nonpayment of any calls within 30 days from the date fixed, the directors will request payment by advertisement in the principal journals, and write to the party in default, requiring payment within 30 days. Should the latter still neglect to pay, he will lose his right to the shares and the calls he may have already paid. The directors will sell the shares so forfeited by public auction, having given notice 30 days previously, and the purchaser will have the same rights as the original holder.

Article 13. A tenth part of the net profits of the company shall be deducted every year, to form a reserve fund, which is not to exceed 14,000,000 reis.

Article 18. It will be the duty of the directors,—

1st. To take cognisance of the business and accounts of the company, and of all the transactions of the manager, and to see that he performs his duty;

2d. To present at the general meeting the yearly balance of the company, and to give their opinion thereon, and to produce, also, a report of their transactions during the year;

5th. To call a general meeting when they may think it necessary to purchase new steamers, establish new lines, or increase the capital;

6th. To draw up a report of each of their meetings, in which they will clearly specify the subjects discussed and the determinations taken, giving separately the vote of the manager, or any of the directors who may disagree with the general resolution. The reports must be signed by the directors who may be present, and by the manager.

Article 19. The meetings of the Board of Directors will not be valid if there be not present at least three directors, and their determinations will be decided by a majority of votes.

Article 22. Each director must keep deposited in the company's safe 20 shares entered in his own name, which cannot be transferred while he continues in office. The manager must also deposit to the order of the directors 40 shares, which will be likewise not transferable during his management.

Article 24.

Article 24. The directors will not receive any salary until the general meeting should determine thereon according to the results of the undertaking. The manager will receive a commission not exceeding 4 per cent. on the amount of freights engaged in Lisbon, and 2 per cent. of the freights received.

Article 26. The general meeting must consist of at least 30 shareholders who represent one-fourth of the capital.

Article 27. The absent shareholders may be represented by proxy, be he or not a shareholder.

Article 28. No proxy can represent more than one shareholder, and should he be himself a shareholder his votes shall be counted in addition to those of the person he may represent.

Article 29. The deliberations of the general meeting are to be decided by absolute majority of votes of the shareholders present, which will be binding on the whole number.

Article 33. No resolution as to increasing the company's capital, or modifying the present statutes, can be carried by a general meeting unless the shareholders present represent at least one-half the capital of the company. No alterations or modifications can be made in these statutes without having received the approval of the Government.

Article 34. The ordinary general meetings will take place every year in the month of February, on the day fixed by the president, and extraordinary ones at any time the directors or manager, or so many of the shareholders who represent one-fifth of the capital, may require it.

Article 35. The first ordinary general meeting will be called by the directors in the month of February which shall first follow a year of the company's existence.

Article 37. It will be the duty of the president of the meeting,—

1st. To appoint the day for the general meeting;

2d. To superintend the management of the meeting;

3d. To order the manager to publish in the journals the advertisements relative to the meetings;

4th. To convoke the extraordinary meetings when necessary, in conformity with Article 31.

Article 40. The Board being constituted, the directors will issue a report of all the operations of the company, with the respective balance-sheet, accompanied by their opinion and report. All these papers shall be printed and distributed to all the shareholders who may require them a fortnight before the day of general meeting, and during all this time all the books of the company shall be laid open to examination by all the shareholders who may wish to see them.

Article 41. The general meeting shall deliberate upon the accounts and balance, and upon any proposals made by the directors or shareholders for the benefit of the company, such decision being duly inserted in the books.

Article 42. Should the balance not be approved of, the general meeting shall appoint by ballot, and by an absolute majority of votes from the shareholders present, a commission of five members to examine the accounts of the company, and report to the said meeting their opinion thereon, which meeting shall again reassemble to deliberate on the opinion presented within a month from the day in which the meeting was appointed.

Article 43. The balance being approved of, the general meeting shall resolve upon the dividend to be paid to the shareholders.

Article 45. The general meeting shall be called by means of advertisements, inserted 60 days beforehand, in the principal journals, national and foreign, in the countries where the company have shareholders.

But before Mr. Lindsay agreed to supply the steamships for the undertaking, he required that the Government of Portugal should take upon itself the responsibility of seeing that the statutes were duly enforced, and in all cases adhered to; as the condition of his sale of the three steamships to the Royal Union Mercantile Company then and thus formed was, that he should take in payment for three vessels a large portion of the stock, consisting of 1,850 paid-up shares of this Company, amounting to 37,000*l*. With that mode of payment he was satisfied, on the condition that the statutes were strictly adhered to.

The Government of Portugal consequently appointed commissioners of their own to control and superintend the affairs of the Royal Union Mercantile Company: and in their instructions to these commissioners they expressly state, "that they are to see when the general assemblies meet; that they deliberate with the legal number of members stipulated in the statutes, of which he receives a copy; and that their decisions be given in legal terms, giving notice to Government of any infraction that may happen of these rules, and see that the minutes which are written of the verbal process of the session shall contain all the necessary explanations, in order to be quite sure that none of the requisitions of the social law are omitted."

The Government of Portugal, in these instructions, further order their commissioners "to give early and immediate notice of any omission that they may find on the part of the Company."

As a further inducement to persons to invest their capital in the undertaking, the Government of Portugal subsequently, by royal decree, and by an Act of their legislature, guaranteed interest at 7 per cent. per annum on all the shares of the Company.

In process of time, however, the directors and managers greatly violated their trusts. For instance, the president, Edward Medlicott, and José Antonio Serzidello, one of the directors, with another person not connected with the Company, received 2,000 l. as their commission on the sale of a steamship called the "Hope," which they, as directors, had purchased for the Company; and they and others of the directors took large sums from the coffers of the Company for their own use, which they charge in the accounts of the Company under the head of "bonus," "gratifications," and so forth. For their own use, and without the sanction of the shareholders, they took 21,026,429 reis (4,672 l. 10 s. 9 d.) for accepting the bills of the Company, and for "guarantees" to persons who had supplied the Company with stores; and under the head of "interest, discount, and difference of exchange," no less a sum than 73,734,429 reis (16,385 l. 8 s. 6 d.) is charged, the greater portion of which is presumed to have been received by the directors themselves.

In regard to the statutes, every one of the articles quoted have been violated. No "general meeting" of the shareholders was called, nor was any meeting held in conformity with the express conditions of the public statutes. In the former case, the requisite notices were not given to the shareholders, and in the latter the number of shareholders required to constitute a general assembly were not present at any one of these meetings; consequently it is presumed that the proceedings of all such meetings were both irregular and illegal, and that Mr. Lindsay and the other English shareholders, who had no notice of them, cannot be considered as consenting parties to any of the resolutions which were passed.

Nethertheless, at these meetings resolutions were passed to increase the capital of the Company, which however was not acted upon, as the shares were not taken; and powers were granted to borrow money, which were acted upon, and to do other acts not contemplated when the Company was formed, and in direct violation of the contract into which the shareholders had entered. In accordance with these resolutions, the directors, without authority from the shareholders, and contrary to the express conditions of the statutes, purchased large quantities of stores and various steamships, granting bills upon the Company for their payment, and otherwise pledging its credit; and when the directors found themselves unable to meet these payments, they borrowed from the Portuguese Government 450,000,000 reis (or 100,000 l.), and pledged the whole of the stock of the Company and its assets as security to the Government for the repayment of that sum, without the authority of Mr. Lindsay and the other English shareholders, and without even their knowledge.

The directors also, without the sanction or knowledge of the English shareholders, passed resolutions altering the public statutes, voting considerable sums of money for their own services, and providing that the dividends they declared upon what they represented as profits should be paid by the Company's shares.

At not one of these meetings, when such acts were done, were the conditions of the statutes attended to which rendered these meetings legal. At not one of them were the shareholders summoned by advertisement or by the stipulated notice. At none of them were the legal number of shareholders present; at none of them were the provisions of the 28 articles observed, which precludes an attorney from representing more than one shareholder. At none of them was Article 38, requiring the qualifications of the shareholder (or his representative), to be proved, attended to; and at one of these meetings the president, Edward Medlicott, without any authority, took upon himself to vote for Mr. Lindsay, as also for another shareholder, from whom it also appears he had no authority.

In January 1862, the Company having repudiated a contract into which they had entered with Mr. Lindsay, dated 28th December 1859, and under which he obtained certain debentures, as afterwards mentioned, that gentleman found it necessary to visit Lisbon, and it was then that the full extent of these proceedings became known to him. Mr. Lindsay then requested from the directors an explanation of various items in the accounts of the Company, made up to the 31st March 1861, but not sent to him till November of that year. The directors, however, declined to afford any information, on the plea that a general meeting would shortly be held, and that at that meeting the requisite information would be afforded. This was the first general meeting called in conformity with the conditions of the statutes. It was held on the 15th April 1862, and Mr. Lindsay and other English shareholders were represented at it by their attorneys. The directors were evidently most anxious to have these previous proceedings confirmed at this meeting, for they appear to have qualified as voters their relations, friends, and clerks with the shares. It also appears that they made false entries in the books of the Company as to the dates of these transfers and the qualifications of the voters. They also dispensed with the provisions of the 41st Article of the statutes, which required them to have the balance-sheet and their report printed and sent to the shareholders 15 days before the date of the meeting; nor would they allow the books of the Company to be inspected, as provided by the statutes; and at this meeting it appears that the president gave 35 votes in the name of the company with 355 unissued shares, which he stated were the property of the company. Thus though the actual votes were 197 against the directors to 177 in their favour, made up in the manner described, the president added these 35 votes which he had recorded in the name of the company, and declared that the resolutions of the directors had been carried by 212 against 197.

The representatives of the Portuguese Government were present at this meeting, and during the whole of these proceedings, and were fully aware of all the acts of the directors, and did not raise any objection thereto.

They knew that the directors had appropriated the money of the company for their own use, and had paid debts due to themselves and to their friends, which had been contracted long after the debts due to others remained unpaid; and at the time, when the debentures of the company held by British subjects were protested for nonpayment and still remain unpaid.

They knew that the balance-sheet which the directors had rendered was not correct, that it contained many false entries, that it represented the property of the company much above its value, and that the "profits" were declared out of stock. These and many other matters were known to the commissioners appointed by the Government of Portugal, and must have been known to the members of the Government when they granted the loan to the company.

Against these acts the English shareholders protested verbally and in writing, handing a copy of their protest to the representatives of the Portuguese Government; and immediately afterwards they brought the whole of the proceedings at great length before his Most Faithful Majesty the King of Portugal, in a memorial in accordance with the usual forms adopted in that country.

The result of these proceedings, thus briefly set forth, has been the depreciation of the stock of the company to so great an extent that it is now unmarketable, and has been reduced practically of no value, which would not have been the case had the undertaking been carried on in conformity with the conditions of the statutes. The Government of Portugal does not deny that they were aware of these proceedings; on the contrary, they, to some extent, confirmed them in an Act of the Legislature, granting the loan of 450,000,000 reis to the company.

Mr. Lindsay laid the papers and accounts of the proceedings, including the most minute details and all the facts, before the leading lawyers of Lisbon, to ascertain their opinion in regard to responsibility of the Portuguese Government to him and to the other shareholders who had protested against the proceedings of the directors and their acts. These gentlemen paid great attention to the whole case, and devoted many days to its consideration; and they have given the following opinion:—

(Translation.)

"The undersigned Manoel Maria Terceira da Silva Beirao, Counsel in the Law Courts of this City of Lisbon, and before the Tribunal of the Administrative Council of State, and President of the Lawyers' Association; Francisco Jeronimo da Silva, Counsel in the Law Courts of the same City, and Vice-President of the aforesaid Association; Antonio Joaquim da Silva Abranches, Counsel in the Law Courts of the same City, and before the above-mentioned Tribunal, and Perpetual Secretary of the aforesaid Association; José Luiz Gancalpus Terceira da Cunha, Counsel in the Law Courts of this City, and before the aforesaid Tribunal; and José Antonio Luiz Gallo, Counsel in the Law Courts of this City, and before the said Tribunal.

"Having examined in conference the claim that William Schaw Lindsay and other British subjects, as shareholders of the Royal Union Mercantile Company, brought before the Government of his Most Faithful Majesty, are of opinion that the said Government is responsible (answerable) to the said claimants for the losses sustained by them, resulting from the approval that the Government, with complete knowledge, gave to the acts that are shown to have been practised by the Board of the said Company against the express conditions of its statute."

Lisbon, 20 December 1862.

As has been already stated, Mr. Lindsay was in Lisbon in January 1862, and he was then compelled to institute proceedings there against the company in the Lower Court of the Tribunal of Commerce, for the recovery of 14,100*l.* due to him upon debentures issued to him by the company for full value, and for the recovery of 97*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.*, due to him for expenses paid in London upon such debentures and otherwise. Full particulars of these proceedings will be found in the accompanying document, to which your particular attention is requested. As far as this document is intelligible, it is obvious that gross injustice has been done Mr. Lindsay by the Lisbon law courts; for although it was admitted by the company that the debentures had been issued by them bonâ fide to Mr. Lindsay, and for full value, and that they were unpaid, and although the finding of the jury is to this effect, and although no defence is offered by the company to Mr. Lindsay's claim, still the judge of the Lower Court nonsuits Mr. Lindsay, and orders him to pay the costs of the suit. It is impossible to understand the reasons given by the judge for this decision, and it appears to be opposed to all principles of law and equity. Nevertheless, this unjust judgment was confirmed by two higher courts, to which Mr. Lindsay appealed.

On the 25th May 1864 the statutes of the Union Mercantile Company were withdrawn by a Royal Decree, dated that day, and the company now exists for the purpose of liquidation only. A copy of this decree is sent herewith.

Under the foregoing circumstances your Opinion is requested :

1st. Had the directors power to mortgage to the Portuguese Government the property of the company, as security for the loan of 100,000*l.*, except in accordance with the statutes of the company?

2d. Is the Government of Portugal responsible to Mr. Lindsay, in consequence of the acts of omission or default of the Government Commissioners in not seeing that the directors properly discharged the duties of their office?

3d. Taking all the facts of the case into consideration, has the Government of Portugal made itself responsible to Mr. Lindsay (in accordance with the opinions given by the Portuguese counsel) for the losses sustained by him, resulting "from the approval which the Portuguese Government, with complete knowledge, gave to the acts practised by the Board of the Company, against the express conditions of its statutes"?

4th. If so, are these claims upon the Portuguese Government such that, upon principles of international law, Her Majesty's Government can interfere officially, as in a matter between one Government and another; and, more particularly, cannot Her Majesty's Government interfere on the ground of Mr. Lindsay having been denied justice in the Lisbon courts of law?

1. I am of opinion that the directors had no legal power to mortgage the property of the company, except by proceedings strictly in accordance with the statutes, which they have not observed.

2. I think the Portuguese Government is responsible for the default of its commissioners, whose duty it was to enforce the observance of the statutes.

3. I agree with the Portuguese counsel in their opinion that the Portuguese Government is responsible for the losses sustained by Mr. Lindsay, as the result of their approving, with full knowledge, the acts practised by the Board of the Company, against the express conditions of the statutes.

4. As I am not aware of any means of redress against the Government of Portugal of which Mr. Lindsay can avail himself, in accordance with the law of that country, I am of opinion that Mr. Lindsay, as a British subject, is entitled to claim the official intervention of the British Government with the Portuguese Government, in order to obtain compensation for the losses which he has incurred by the systematic violation of the statutes of the company, to the maintenance of which the good faith of the Portuguese Government was pledged, and by the clear denial of justice which Mr. Lindsay has experienced in the proceedings before the Portuguese courts of law.

Enclosure 2, in No. 45.

W. S. Lindsay, Esq., and the Portuguese Government.

A True EXTRACT of the Proceedings instituted by W. S. Lindsay against the Union Mercantile Company, in the Lower Court of the Tribunal of Commerce, and removed by appeal to the Superior Court of said Tribunal of Commerce, whence a motion was moved in the Supreme Tribunal of Justice in Arrest of Judgment; copies of the Judgments given by such Courts; copy of the essential Documents in this cause; Legal Considerations on said Judgments.

On the 29th January 1862, W. S. Lindsay prayed the presiding judge of the Lower Court of the Tribunal of Justice to summon the directors and manager of the Union Mercantile Company to offer defence to a suit wherein he (W. S. Lindsay) required that they, as representatives of said company, should be condemned to pay to him the sum of 14,100 l., and 6 per cent. interest thereon, from the 1st July 1861, then due, and such terest as might accrue till final payment of this capital; and the further sum of 97*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.*, with its interest, which amount he had paid on account of the Company, and was the balance of an account-current he then presented; and that they should be further condemned in the losses and damages finally proved, and in the interest thereon; and that the sterling money should be reduced to reis Portuguese money, at the exchange proved by a certificate of a billbroker of the Lisbon market.

The grounds for this condemnation required by W. S. Lindsay were (as far as to the capital of 14,100*l.* and interests, and condemnation in the losses and damages) the private writing drawn up on the 28th December 1859, between him and the directors and manager of the company (Copy No. 1.)

“ As you have acceded to the substitution and reforming of the contracts the Union Mercantile Company effected with you by public deeds of the 4th November and 20th December 1858, in the notes of the notary public of this city, Antonio d'Abranches Caeltho, for the payment of 27,500*l.*, one half of the price of the steamers ‘Africa’ and ‘Don Pedro,’ divided into six bills, with the competent interests, and whereof only the first was paid, and the second fallen due and not paid, and therefore all the remaining ones held as already due, and protested in accordance with said deed of the 20th December 1858, should you agree receiving on this day the sum of 8,000*l.* on account of your credit, and the remainder in debentures of said company in the value of 16,100*l.*, with interest at 6 per cent., payable every six months on the last day of the months of June and December of each year, to commence in the next future year, and an amortisation of 12 per cent. on said debentures payable on the last day of December of each year, to commence in the next future year, and combining and accepting all the other conditions and securities of this new contract, so that they may be reduced to writing in the present form, we declare and we oblige ourselves in the name of the Union Mercantile Company, and in the quality of its representative directors and manager, faithfully to fulfil the following conditions :—

“ 1st. That you having now received the sum of 8,000*l.* in two bills (one for 4,000*l.* at eight days’ sight, and another for 4,000*l.* at thirty days’ sight), drawn by Mr. Fortunato Chamico, junior, on Messrs. Bruno, Silva & Son, of London, and the sum of 16,100*l.* in debentures or obligations of the Company in exchange of the bills and private security which were in your hands, and which you have already delivered, the said Company obliges itself to pay to you said interest of 6 per cent., and said amortisation of 12 per cent., at the aforesaid periods stipulated above, on the aforesaid value of the debentures (16,100*l.*); and you may draw, for the amount of the interests and amortisation, a bill or bills on the company before said periods, should the directors not have remitted to you before the days 1st of June and 1st of December in each and every year of the above said years.

“ 2d. That the Company, through its directors and manager who represent it, obliges itself not to transfer or hypothecate its steam-vessels or any other property either wholly or in part, nor issue debentures, nor by any other form raise funds which be not precisely for the acquisition and purchase of vessels or material for the service and increase of the capital of said company, without previously consulting you by writing, and shall not hypothecate as security of the vessels or material it may purchase beyond the value of such vessels or material required.

“ 3d. That the company grants you the power of examining the books of its accounts and documents relating thereto when you may deem fit, or to require a flying balance signed and attested by its directors and manager.

“ 4th. That it having been resolved in a general meeting not to insure, after the present insurances of the company’s vessels shall have elapsed, the same vessels in more than one-fourth part of their value and in not less than 20,000*l.*, the Board of Directors shall make or order to be made said insurances in Portugal or in England, distributing said value of 20,000*l.* amongst the present vessels, as they may best think fit, depositing in your hands the respective policies of insurance.

“ 5th. That in case on nonpayment of the stipulated interests and amortisation, or on the non-acceptance or nonpayment of the bills you may draw, or on the noncompliance of the abovesaid conditions, you may at once sue the company for the amount of the whole of your credit, and make use of every right such debentures grant to you, and for the exact fulfilment of all and each of the abovesaid conditions, demanding besides the losses and damages that may accrue to you from want of punctuality; the amount of your credit being considered for all legal effects as having the privilege of preference to all other creditors, except the bearers of the debentures newly issued by the company on the value of the steamers of said company, and what else forms its assets, as by the present commercial obligation with force of a public deed.

“ 6th. That in the not expected case of the two bills drawn by said Mr. Fortunato Chamico, junior, on said Messrs. Bruno, Silva & Son, not being accepted nor paid, the previous agreements of 4th November and 20th December 1858 shall stand in their full vigour, and be in force for all effects, and the deed for raising and annulling the special hypothecation of the steamers 'Africa' and 'Don Pedro' shall be null and void.

"We declare to you that, as by the enumeration of the debentures we now deliver to you, they are the first ones we have issued, 1 to 161.

"We are, &c.

"The Manager Non-can, Candidodi F. Abreu."

W. S. Lindsay, based on such private writing, alleged that this paper-writing, substituting the former agreements as far as to the payment by means of six bills of one half of the price (27,500*l.*) of the steamers "Clarendon" (Africa) and "Ireland" (Don Pedro), of which bills he had only received the amount of the first one, and that having received on that same day the sum of 8,000 l., he was a creditor of the company for 16,100 l.

That the company acknowledged that they were owing him that sum, and that they obliged themselves to pay same to him within the term of eight years, by annual instalments of 12 per cent. on the last day of December in every year from the following one (1860), and six per cent. interest every six months on the last day in the months of June and December, to begin from said following year, delivering to him 161 debentures or bonds of the company, of 100 l. each, and in which was established the same form of payment and recovery of said interests and amortisation, as also the privilege of W. S. Lindsay's credit, likewise acknowledged and declared in said writing or private agreement (Copy No. 2).

That according to the first condition of the agreement, he (Lindsay) could draw a bill or bills on the Company for the amount of the amortisation and interests due, should the Directors not remit him funds for that effect before the days 1st of June and December in each and every year.

That the Company having paid the amortisation (12 per cent.) and the interests of six per cent., as established up to June 1861, but having neglected remitting funds up to the 1st December for payment of the amortisation and interest due in that month, W. S. Lindsay drew on the Company in accordance to the power granted to him by said Condition the 1st, but that the directors refused accepting his drafts on the false pretext that they had no funds of the drawer, nor were they authorised to make advancements, as proved by the respective protest.—(Copy No. 3.)

(No. 3.)

"Martinho Bartholomew Rodrigues, Recorder of the Court of First Instance, in the Tribunal of Commerce of this City of Lisbon, make known that on this day, 17th of December, in the year of the Birth of our Lord Jesus Christ, 1861, and on behalf of Duarte Carvalho & Co., a Bill was presented to me for protest for non-acceptance, the true copy whereof is as follows:—

"BILL.

"Exchange for 1,227 l. 2 s. 2 d. sterling. London, 3d December 1861. At 90 days after date, pay this my first of exchange, second and third not being paid, to the order of Messrs. W. S. Lindsay & Co., 1,227 pounds 2 shillings and 2 pence sterling, at the exchange on the endorsement, value received in account, which carry to W. S. Lindsay's account. To the Union Mercantile Company, Lisbon. Pay to the order of Messrs. Duarte Carvalho & Co., at the exchange of 51½ per milreas in gold or silver, and no paper value of Knowles & Foster. London, 6th December 1861. W. S. Lindsay & Co. Paid 2 milreas stamp. Lisbon, 14th December 1861. No. 129, Vinha, Lobo. To which letter I refer myself, and having summoned the drawees (said Company) to accept, or to give me their reason for not accepting this in the person of the Directors, Duarte Medicott and José Antonio Pereira Serzedello, I was told by them that they did not accept because they had no funds of the drawer, nor were authorised to make advances.

"And signed, the Directors,

"Duarte Medicott.

"José Antonio Pereira Serzedello."

That by Condition the 5th of said argument, it was expressly fixed that, on the Company neglecting to pay the interests and amortisation agreed to, or on non-accepting the bills drawn in accordance to Condition the 1st, or on neglecting to fulfil any of the conditions, he (Lindsay) might, immediately any such case might happen, sue the Company for the total amount there should then be owing to him, besides claiming such losses and damages as he should suffer therefrom.

That the foreseen case having happened of the non-acceptance of the bills, he (Lindsay) had the right of demanding the payment in full of his credit, which, deducting the instalments and interest paid, was of 14,100 l., with interest due from the 1st of July 1861, and such interest as may become due until full payment be done.

That furthermore the Company had failed in the fulfilment of the second Condition of the agreement, because, having obliged themselves then not to transfer or hypothecate the vessels, or any other property of the Company's, either the whole or part thereof, without previously consulting W. S. Lindsay by writing, they had contracted a loan of 450,000,000 reis, hypothecating all their property and vessels without said previous consultation.

That not only by the infringement of the aforesaid conditions, first and second, had he the right guaranteed by the Condition the fifth, of demanding the payment in full of his credit, the form of payment by instalments having ceased, but also had the right of demanding from the Company the losses and damages that might accrue to him from such neglect of fulfilling the agreement.

That he, in fact, did suffer losses and damages in being forced to come to Lisbon, abandoning doing his business, making personal expenses, and expenses in the voyages, expenses in litigations, expenses with solicitors, agents, and lawyers, and expenses with an English lawyer that accompanied him to Lisbon, and whom he left here to represent him, and to keep him informed of what might occur; as also to obtain and offer the necessary informations for instituting and prosecuting the lawsuits against the Company, resulting from the infringement of the conditions of this agreement.

Mr. Lindsay protested, at the end of above-said allegations and inference we have copied in the beginning of this extract, that he would deliver up the 161 debentures he had received from the Company in the act, when they should pay to him the amount still due to him on same, and likewise protested for the personal testimony of the Directors and Manager.

The Directors and Manager having been summoned on the 31st January in said year 1862, their attorney appeared in the sitting of the court of the 3d February, and acknowledged as genuine the signatures on the document joined to the petition; that is to say, the private writing (Copy No. 1), but acknowledged them with the declaration that the Company owed nothing by that document.

The documents with which the action was drawn up were said private writing (Copy No 1); a true copy of the debenture No. 1, or the first of the 161 delivered by the Company; a true copy of the bills for 1,227 l. 2 s. 2 d., drawn at London on the 2d and 3d December 1861, at 60 and 90 days, the original protests for non-acceptance and for non-payment, and an account current, showing a balance equivalent to said amount of the bills.

On the 13th February, the Company lodged their plea or defence in court, limiting it to a pure and simple negation of what was alleged and prayed for in W. S. Lindsay's petition.

The process being thus prepared, the 5th day of June was appointed for its discussion and judgment.

At this act Mr. Lindsay's attorney presented sundry documents of small influence on the question. It is the correspondence that had taken place between him and E. Ellicott, the original bills, and the protests referred to above—the first contract of the 20th December 1858 done with the Company on the sale of the vessels "Clarendon" and "Ireland," and on the form of payment, and the deed or agreement of annulment of the special security W. S. Lindsay had in the said vessels effected by that contract of the 20th December 1858, and which was annulled by said posterior private agreement of the 28th December 1859.

This last document, drawn up between the Directors of the Company and Mr. Lindsay, on the same day of said private agreement, may serve to show what were the intentions of the contracting Directors, and therefore it is copied.—(Copy No. 4.)

(No. 4.)

"Know all men to whom this public instrument of release of special hypothecation and obligation shall come, that on the 28th day of the month of December, in the year of the birth of our Lord Jesus Christ, 1859, in the city of Lisbon, and Caes do Sodre, No. 12, at the offices of the Union Mercantile Company, whither I, notary, came, and there found present on the one part, W. S. Lindsay, esq., English subject, merchant capitalist, and proprietor, resident in the city of London, and at present in this city of Lisbon, to treat of his business, accompanied by his interpreter, Raimond Ellicott, employé in aforesaid offices; and, on the other part, Messrs. Duarte Medlicott, Fortunato Chamigo, jun., José Antonio Pereira Serzedello, Manoel José Ribeiro, Merchants and Directors of the Union Mercantile Company, and the Manager of said Company, Candido de Freitas Abreu, all persons known to me, and whom I bear witness to be the true ones; and by W. S. Lindsay it was said, through his interpreter, in my presence, and in that of the witnesses hereinafter named, that having on that same day entered into a new agreement and convention with the Directors, the second parties hereto, in the name of and as the representatives of the Union Mercantile Company, on the form of payment of the remainder of the one-half of the price for which he had sold to them his vessels "Clarendon" and "Ireland," now named "Africa" and "Don Pedro," covenanting new conditions and securities, and to which the seconds agreed and signed in a private writing; he, Lindsay, by this present instrument, and in the best form of right declares extinct and of no effect the special hypothecation made on said vessels by deeds of 4th November and 20th December 1858, and drawn up in my notes as security of the bills of exchange drawn on the 1st of said month of November by him, Lindsay, and accepted by the Directors of the Company, and which bills likewise remained of no effect by virtue of that new obligation, and therefore he, W. S. Lindsay, raises and releases, and has raised and released the special hypothecation that laid on above said vessels by the aforesaid deeds, where these presents shall be noted that at all times this release may be known. And they, the Directors, in presence of this instrument, may pray for the annulling of the respective register when they may think fit. And by the Directors it was said that they accepted this instrument of release in the form drawn up. In witness of the truth they thus granted, asked, and accepted, same being witnesses present, José Joaquim de Mendouca and Nuno Mairoa do Patraunio Tavares, employés in the company's offices, who set their hands on this note with the parties thereto, after having been interpreted into the English language, and read by me, Antonio de

d'Abranches Coelho, notary public, who wrote same. For this deed and my coming, gratis. W. S. Lindsay; as interpreter, Raimund Ellicott; Fortunato Chamigo, jun.; Duarte Medlicott, José Antonio Pereira Serzedello, Manoel Jose Ribeiro; the manager, Candido de F. Alren; Jose Joaquim de Mendouça, Nuno Mairia do Patrocinia Tavares. And I, Antonio d'Abranches Coelho, notary public, of this city of Lisbon, and its district, caused this instrument of my notes, and to which I refer, to be copied and subscribed, and do sign in due form of law.

Collated by me, notary,

Lisbon, 7 January 1862.

Antonio d'Abranches Coelho.

The same Advocate prayed that the 161 debentures should be joined to the process, and which he presented, and to which the agreement, grounds for the action, referred to.

The presiding Judge of the Court overruled this petition, on the ground that, as they were passed to bearer, they were equal to money.

Thereupon, the Advocate prayed that they should remain deposited in the Court; prayed, which was also overruled, the Judge nevertheless declaring that he would allow Mr. Lindsay to deposit them at the Bank of Portugal on his responsibility, joining to the process such document as should prove such deposit.

The Company's Advocate opposed himself to this deposit of the debentures, as he understood that they should have been joined to the petition (action); and this opposition not having been attended to by the Judge, said Company's Advocate appealed in the proceedings of the trial for infringement of Article 257 of the "Novis suina Reforma Judiciana" (Code of Civil Process), which runs as follows:—

"The petition shall be at once instituted, with all the documents on which it is based, or of which mention is made; and, if not, they shall not be admitted during the course of the proceedings, and the Judge shall therefore absolve defendant of the process of the suit when he may pray for same."

On the same occasion evidence was given by the two Directors of the Company, Duarte Medlicott and José Antonio Pereira Serzedello, who acknowledged their signatures on the letter or private writing of the 28th December 1859; confessed the fact of the non-acceptance of the bills, further declaring that the Company did not accept them, because Mr. Lindsay owed them a larger amount, and that they had credited the interest and the amortisation of the debentures in the said Mr. Lindsay's account.

The pleadings being terminated, and the Court being composed of the presiding Judge and 12 jurymen, to whom appertains exclusively the decisions of questions of fact, said Judge proposed to them the following queries, to which they answered, as seen after each query:—

1st. Is it or not proved that the Company obliged themselves to the plaintiff (Lindsay) in the terms of the letter of the 28th December 1859? (Private writing No. 1).

Answer of the Jury—It is proved.

2d. Is it or not proved that the defendant (Company) refused to accept and to pay the bills drawn on them by plaintiff for payment of the amortisation and interests of the second six months of 1861?

Answer—It is proved.

3d. Is it or not proved that the defendant (Company) contracted a loan for 450,000,000 reis, with special hypothecation of all the vessels and property she held?

Answer—It is proved.

4th. Is it or not proved that, from the want of punctual compliance of the conditions of the contract, losses and damages accrued to the plaintiff (Lindsay)?

Answer—It is not proved.

5th. Is it or not proved that the defendant is owing to plaintiff the sum of 97 l. 3 s. 7 d., resulting from payments the latter made at London on account and by order of said defendant, as alleged in Article 5 of the Petition?

Answer—It is not proved.

[Here follow the signatures of the Jurors.]

With these answers, the process was closed for the Judge presiding to pronounce judgment; and before it was pronounced and published at the sitting of the 16th June, Mr. Lindsay prayed said Judge that a writ be given for the deposit of the 161 debentures at the Bank of Portugal.

The Judge granted same; and on the 6th the deposit was made, the deed of such deposit being joined to the proceedings.—(Copy No. 5.)

The judgment of the Court is shown in the Copy No. 6.

Mr. Lindsay appealed from this judgment to the Superior Court of the Tribunal of Commerce, which is formed of four Judges and one President, all Judges in Equity, and who, according to Article 1,106 of the Commercial Code, cannot take cognizance of questions of fact decided by a jury of the lower Court, and only annul judgments when not pronounced in conformity to the answers of the jury, or when they are against equity. They also annul processes when some essential solemnity is wanting in them, as the first summons, the petition, the defence, examination of proofs, and the want of publicity in all the acts, or when the queries of fact proposed to the jury are impertinent, or when their answers are impertinent, or obscure and confused.

The same Court likewise takes cognizance of appeals made by the parties, and determines whether they be heard or not.

In the process there were two appeals—one on the part of Mr. Lindsay, and another on the part of the Company.

The appeal on the part of Mr. Lindsay was for the infringement of the Articles 1,086 and 1,087 of the Commercial Code, which mark a special form of process for the actions based on writings of commercial obligation signed by the defendant, who, having been summoned and acknowledging his signature, although he may deny the obligation of payment, is immediately condemned provisionally, and he is not allowed defence without depositing or giving security for the amount demanded.

Mr. Lindsay's advocate understood that, the action being based on a commercial writing, as was the one of the 28th December 1859, and that the Directors acknowledging their signatures at the sitting when the summons was accused (3d February), the Judge should apply to them provisions of said Articles 1,086 and 1,087 of the Code, not admitting defence without a previous deposit or security; and as this his prayer was not attended to, he appealed.

The appeal on the part of the Company was for the infringement of the Article 257 of the Code for civil proceedings, which was hereinbefore copied, forasmuch as the 161 debentures not having been filed with the petition or action, the Company should, in conformity with that law, be absolved of the process of the suit.

The process having been carried up to the Superior Court (Second Instant), it did not attend to any of the said appeals, and confirmed the judgment, as seen from the decision of the 14th March 1863.—(Copy No. 6.)

No. 6.

"On reviewing the process, &c.,

"The plaintiff, W. S. Lindsay, deduces in the petition (folio 2) that, by a private writing of the 28th December 1859, the Directors and Manager of the Union Mercantile Company confessed that at that date, after deducting the amount of the bills therein mentioned, the Company was owing to the plaintiff the sum of 16,100*L.*, rest of the price for which they had bought him in the year 1858 the steam-vessels 'Clarendon' and 'Ireland,' now 'Africa' and 'D. Pedro,' that defendants obliged themselves to pay him said amount in the term of eight years, in annual instalments of 12 per cent., payable every six months, on the last days of the months of June and December of each year, satisfying, along with said instalments, the interests of six per cent. that was to be due on the capital: and they delivered to plaintiff 161 debentures of the Company of 100*L.*, in which it was likewise established the above said form of payment and interests to be due, as also the privilege of the credit likewise acknowledged in the contract; that in the first condition thereof it was covenanted that, on the Board of Directors not remitting funds funds to plaintiff for the satisfaction of the instalment and respective interests for each six months before the day, 1st of June and December in each year, plaintiff might, before maturity, draw bills on the Company for the amount of the instalment and interests; that the Company paid the instalments and interests up to June 1861, but, having neglected remitting funds up to the 1st December of that year, the plaintiff drew two bills for the amount of the instalment and interests, and further for 97 l. 3 s. 7 d., amount of payments he had made in London on account and by order of the Company, including also the expenses of the bills, which were not satisfied, under the false pretext of not having any of plaintiff's funds in their hands; that the Company likewise failed in complying with the second condition of the contract, because, without previously consulting plaintiff, they had contracted a loan of 450,000,000 reis, especially hypothecating all their vessels and property; that, therefore, and in conformity with the fifth condition, he may sue them for the total amount of his credit—to wit, 14,100 l.—after deducting the three instalments paid up to June 1861, the interests from the 1st July 1861 forwards, and the losses and damages that may accrue to him from the non-execution of the obligations undertaken; and, in conclusion, prays that defendants be condemned to pay over to him said sum of 14,100 l. and respective interest, the expenses of the protest of the bills, the amount of the losses and damages that may be liquidated in the issue, the commercial interests on that amount from the time it be judged liquidated until its payment, and the further sum of 97 l. 3 s. 7 d., with commercial interest from the dates of the payments declared in the account (folio 18).

“The Company (defendants) defended with a denial at folio 24. The process continued its course, and in the sittings for the pleadings two of the Directors deposed: the parties filed the documents (ex-folio 29). Plaintiff rectified a mistake in the petition with regard to the payment of the instalments, which, in the form of the contract, should be yearly, and the incidents took place, as seen from the respective record at folio 68.

“All which, and the rest of the process being considered, taking in view that the commercial obligation contracted by the private writing at folio 8, annulled by substitution the previous contracts on the purchase and sale of said vessels and the form of payment of their price, in the terms of the Articles 867, 884, and 885 of the Commercial Code.

“Whereas, with respect to the demand for 14,100 l., and respective interest at 6 per cent. from the 1st July 1861, the petition is in evident contradiction with the above said writing, on which it is based, from which it is proved that the Company paid to plaintiff his credit with 8,000 l., in two bills, which he virtually confesses having been satisfied; and the remainder, with 16,100 l. in debentures, to bearer, of 100 l. each, stipulating the form of the payment of the 6 per cent. interest, and 12 per cent. amortisation on the value of the said debentures, which, as seen from them, have said interest and amortisation due on them.

“Whereas, the debt having been thus paid, and there being no responsibility on the part of the Company, except for the interests and amortisation in the terms of the debentures, and of the contract, which is law between the parties, it is beyond doubt that the words of the fifth condition, ‘in case of non-payment of the stipulated interests and amortisation, or on the non-acceptance or non-payment of the bills you may draw, or on the non-compliance of the above said conditions, you may at once sue the Company for the amount of the whole of your credit, and make use of every right such debentures grant to you,’ can have no reference to a debt already paid, and which thereof could not constitute a credit; but only to the interests and amortisation of the debentures he might present, as likewise to the losses and damages whereof said condition speaks, if perchance verified.

“Whereas, that from the contradiction in which the petition, as far as to the demand for the 14,100 l. and respective interests stands, with the very obligation on which it is based and forms part, it results that its matter is such that by it plaintiff can have no right to sue for what he demands; and, consequently, the defendants should be absolved of the process of the suit, in conformity with the ‘Ordinacão,’ book 3d, title 20, paragraph 16, and Article 1st of the Commercial Code.

“Whereas, that in regard to the debt of 97 l. 3 s. 7 d., the jury declared it not proved, in answer to the fifth query. Whereas, that as it is now shown, the answers to the queries two, three, and four, are prejudiced, and, taking into consideration the Articles 1,030 and 1,103 of the Commercial Code, I absolve the defendants of the process of the suit as regards the demand for the 14,100 l., respective interest, expenses of protest of the bills, and losses, and damages. I absolve them of the suit as regards the demand for 97 l. 3 s. 7 d. and interests. I condemn plaintiff in the costs, and only in the fine corresponding to this last demand.

Mr. Lindsay appealed in arrest of judgment to the Supreme Court of Justice, which Court is common both for the judgments of commercial tribunals, and for sentences of civil and criminal courts, yet this Court negatived same by its decision of 21st July of said current year, one of the five judges who took part in the proceedings signing non con.

From the Supreme Court the process came down to the Commercial Superior Court (Second Instancia), which, in compliance with a prayer of the Company, condemned W. S. Lindsay in the costs by decision of 29th August last.

This is the true narration and actual state of the cause.

Legal Considerations.

Although the judgment did not deprive Mr. Lindsay of his right, who may renew his suit against the Company, yet it postponed the question, and restricted and limited that right, giving to the private writing of the 28th December an interpretation contrary to its wording, and to the good faith that should be the base of all agreements, and especially of agreements between merchants.

The Company did not oblige itself solely to the delivery of the debentures, and to pay the annual 12 per cent. of amortisation, and the six-monthly interest at 6 per cent. If their obligation were limited to this, the simple delivery of the debentures would be sufficient, as these gave a right to the payment of such amortisation and interests.

But the Company wished to warrant Mr. Lindsay the punctuality of such payment, obliging themselves not only to remit funds to London, and accept him the bills he might draw for payment of the amount of the amortisation and interest on the debentures, but also not to hypothecate their vessels, nor issue debentures, or raise funds without his consent by writing.

They also obliged themselves to deposit in his hands the policies of insurance of the vessels, and granted him the right of examining the books of the Company.

And, finally, in Condition the fifth, it was agreed that, on neglect of paying the interests and amortisation stipulated, or on the non-acceptance or payment of the bills, or on neglect of the other conditions, Mr. Lindsay might at once, by means of that commercial obligation which should have the force of a public deed, sue the Company for the amount of all his credit and demand, losses, and damages.

This is the literal and obvious meaning of the fifth Condition.

On the same day, in the deed for annulling the hypothecation, the Company declared that that private writing was a new agreement and convention on the form of payment of the remainder of half the price for which Mr. Lindsay had sold to them his vessels, "Clarendon" and "Ireland," stipulating new conditions and securities.

Therefore, the facts of not remitting funds, of not accepting and not paying the bills, and of having hypothecated their vessels and property to the Government for a large loan without consulting Mr. Lindsay, having taken place and having been proved, he (Lindsay) had the right of demanding from the Company the whole of the debt, based on said fifth Condition, and proving, as he did prove, that he had in his power the 161 debentures.

Mr. Lindsay declared that he had them, and showed them in Court, and were ordered to be deposited in the Bank of Portugal.

Deducting from 16,100 £ the instalments paid up, he was still a creditor for 14,100 £, and, therefore, how could the right of demanding this amount, and losses and damages that might be proved, be denied to him?

If his right was limited to the one the debentures gave him, that is, to the interests and amortisation of the debentures he might present, it was and is useless to have written and signed the paper writing of the 28th December, agreeing in it the form of payment, and stipulating new conditions and securities.

The 161 debentures were so many other obligations or bills of the Company, whereby they obliged themselves to pay the bearer 12 per cent. of amortisation every year; and, as in the previous agreement of the 28th December 1858, by which the Company gave bills in payment, it was agreed that on non-payment of any of said bills it should be understood that they were all due; and Mr. Lindsay, with the right of demanding the whole amount of them, it was also agreed in the private writing of the 28th December 1859, that Mr. Lindsay was to receive the 161 debentures in payment of the remainder of his credit, and which had a fixed amount of capital and interest due on each, with the condition that, failing in the payment stipulated on them and secured, with the remittance of funds and acceptance of bills, Mr. Lindsay had the right of demanding the whole of the capital they represented.

The action having been moved and carried in the literal and logic meaning of this new agreement, it is unjustifiable the evasion or expedient adopted by the Court of classifying the petition (action) of non-ability, so as to absolve the Company of the process of the suit, and and much more unjustifiable still, as limiting Mr. Lindsay's right, as though said agreement did not exist, the only case in which such absolution could be justified and based in equity.

The very Company never, not even by word or by writing, moved for or defended the restriction of Mr. Lindsay's right.

Their defence or their opposition consisted in the fact of Mr. Lindsay not having, as soon as he moved his action, showed the debentures, which, being to bearer, might be in the hands of a third party, and concluded from this fact that they should be absolved of the process of the suit by virtue of Article 257 of the Code for the Civil Process (Code do Processo Civil). Yet the Lower Court (First Instancia) of the Tribunal of Commerce, or rather its presiding judge, went still further, as we have just seen.

It should not be wondered at that the judgment should not have been annulled in the Superior Courts, and that therefore they should all labour under the same error, as the Superior Court (Second Instancia) of the Tribunal of Commerce left undefined the true notion it formed of the justice or injustice of the judgment, declaring that it left to the appellant (Mr. Lindsay) the right saved for the actions he might think were competent; and the Supreme Court of Justice negatived the motion in arrest of judgment, perhaps, because it understood it should only grant it in the case of direct and literal offence of the general law of the kingdom, and not in the case of offence of conditions of private contracts.

Be it as it may, it is our opinion that the judgment was unjust, even considered in the face of the rigour of civil right, and much more unjust being pronounced, as it was, in commercial tribunals, which are essentially judges of equity, which should respect and cause to be respected the mercantile agreements maintained, the good faith which is the foundation of commerce, and decide the questions simply, and summarily, and openly, and on the known truth, without the observation of formula.

To suppose, as the judgment supposed, that in Condition the fifth of the Agreement there was not the conventional penalty the Company imposed on themselves of paying the whole of the debt, should they fail in the partial payments, in the form and at the periods fixed in the debentures and in the very Agreement, is denying the known truth, thereby to absolve the Company of a written and solemn obligation attributing to them the reserved intention of illuding and defrauding their creditor, with manifest deceit and abuse of confidence.

Judgments of such a nature may show the acuteness of ingenuity of judges, but scare away those who contract honestly, and very often, far from protecting, destroy and ruin the credit of the very parties in whose favour they are pronounced.

Enclosure 3, in No. 45.

Mr. W. S. Lindsay and the Portuguese Government.

FURTHER STATEMENT by Mr. Lindsay.

THE first that Mr. Lindsay heard of the proposed undertaking was in July 1857, when he was invited by various gentlemen in Lisbon, through Messrs. Pinto, Perez, & Co., of this city, to aid in furnishing the capital, as the undertaking was to be under the care and support of the Government of Portugal; and was so anxiously desired by the Government of that country for many reasons then given, that it was to be, to a great extent, a Government undertaking. On this understanding Mr. Lindsay, accompanied by Mr. Perez, visited Lisbon for the first time, early in September of that year (1857), and had various meetings, not merely with the gentlemen who were forming the Company, but with the Minister of Public Works of Portugal, who urged him to aid the undertaking, and to furnish the necessary steamers to start it. And the first letter Mr. Lindsay wrote to the gentleman in Lisbon, who was to be the managing director of the Company, commenced as follows:—

" Candido de Freitas Abreu, Esq., Lisbon.

" Dear Sir,

" London, 6 October 1857.

" Mr. Perez, on his return yesterday, called upon me and stated the substance of what had taken place since I left Lisbon. So far the substance seems to be in accordance with the conditions named; but about this I may have more to say when he furnishes me with a translation of the various documents which were drawn up, and when I have examined the details.

" The first and main point now required to complete is, the official confirmation by the Government of the terms of the contract. When this is received, and the statutes are agreed upon, the Company should be legally constituted on the basis named, and the shares issued to the extent required for the purchase of the ships. These are matters in the hands of yourself and the other gentlemen at Lisbon, and no time should be lost."

The next letter Mr. Lindsay addressed to Mr. Abreu was on the 16th October, and in it distinct reference is made to the statutes, rough draft of which had been sent by the order of the Minister for his approval. He makes various remarks upon them; requires certain alterations, and concludes, "The greater the delay with the Directors and the Government, the greater will be the delay in sending my ship, and you must obtain the consent of the Government to that delay." So that no step was taken without the sanction, knowledge, and consent of the Portuguese Government.

Again, in Mr. Lindsay's letter to Mr. Abreu, of the 6th November, he says, "I have your favours of the 17th and 28th ultimo. As they do not, however, bear upon the points named in my letters to you of the 6th and 16th ultimo, I have little to say in the present, as I cannot make any further move until I have definite answers to these letters, and receive advice from you that the Government have officially confirmed all the statutes, and that the shares are ready to be issued. Ere this the epidemic which has been so fatal will, I trust, have abated, and enabled the Directors and the Government to have completed the necessary documents for commencing operations."

By the above it clearly appears that Mr. Lindsay would not make any move, or supply the first steamer, till the Government had officially confirmed all the statutes.

Again, on the 25th November 1857, Mr. Lindsay writes as follows to Mr. Abreu:—

"I am favoured with your letter of the 5th, the contents of which I have noted with care.

"My former letters to you, to which I beg reference, have so fully explained my views on all matters, that I have little left to say in the present. Till the Company is duly formed, as I have already advised, and the shares issued, we cannot commence business. The 'W. S. Lindsay' has been all ready for some time, and lies here at considerable expense to me, and consequently I am anxious to dispatch her to Lisbon to commence work, but this, of course, I cannot do until the Company is constituted, and the conditions named in my letter to you of the 6th ultimo, and referred to in my recent letters, are complied with. Whenever these are to hand, I shall not merely dispatch the 'Lindsay,' but make preparations to have all the ships ready which are required for the whole service. I quite approve of the confirmation of Articles 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, and also of Article 26, with the slight modification named in my letter to you of the 16th ultimo; and, as the Government has been pleased to approve of them, I see no reason why that portion of the contract cannot be carried into effect, and the trade with the Azores commenced in a proper manner, and without further delay. The Company would, therefore, better be constituted at once (with the understanding from the Government that, whenever the Cortes meet, the remainder of the statutes will be officially confirmed, and the requisite shares issued, and credits opened, to cover the price of the 'Lindsay'); and when these are received here she will be dispatched.

"Understand, however, that, as I have a far higher opinion of the value of the African trade than of that of the Azores, the latter is to be commenced with our own ships, on the clear understanding that the Cortes, when they meet, will confirm all the statutes.

"I am sure it will be for the interest of all parties (and I have considerable experience in these matters) if the alterations are made which I pointed out in my letter of the 16th ultimo, bearing upon Articles 26, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 45. As they merely bear upon matters of detail, and as the statutes are not yet officially signed by the Government, these alterations, which are really requisite, can be made without causing any delay or any trouble, for the Ministers I know would agree to them at once. You may depend upon it that it is much better to have them made now than after they are in operation, more especially as all that is requisite is an alteration in the wording, and you must only print proof sheets till the statutes are officially confirmed. Our mutual friend, Mr. Fradesso, will at once see the force of this. In fact, no large capitalist would hold his money in the undertaking, unless the wording of the clauses I have named was altered. Say to the Ministers, with my respectful compliments, that I am ready at any moment not merely for the Azores, but for the African service also, which I feel will do much for Portugal, and that the delay rests with the gentlemen at Lisbon; they, on the other hand, being delayed from not having the official confirmation by the Government."

The whole transaction, therefore, was on the clear understanding that the statutes were to be agreed to and adopted by Government, and passed by the Cortes. This was ultimately done, though after much delay, but done before Mr. Lindsay would deliver the first ship to commence the service.

As there was great delay, Mr. Lindsay then addressed the Minister of Public Works, and copies of these letters are annexed.

When the statutes were officially confirmed, and other matters arranged, he then dispatched the first ship, and the undertaking was commenced. Nothing could be clearer than that the statutes entered into by the Government, and officially confirmed by them, formed the basis of the agreement with Mr. Lindsay; and it was their duty (but no part of Mr. Lindsay's duty to require it) that they, the Government, should appoint representatives, which they did, to see their statutes properly carried into effect.

On the faith of these also, the other two steamships were afterwards supplied by Mr. Lindsay to the Company.

When, in 1862, the Company dishonoured their drafts for the payment of the debentures, Mr. Lindsay instituted proceedings, and inquired minutely how the affairs of the undertaking had been conducted, and, after much research and labour, he found that the statutes had been grossly violated, and the whole affair managed in the most illegal and extraordinary manner; Mr. Lindsay then claimed from the Government to be held free from the loss he would sustain through the illegal acts of the manager and directors to which the Government had clearly been consenting parties. Against these acts he formally protested, and when at Lisbon, in January 1863, he brought the matter fully under the notice of, and addressed a letter to, the British Minister on the subject, of which a copy is annexed. That letter was at once forwarded by Sir Arthur Magenis to the Duke of Loulé, the then Prime Minister, who was also Minister of Public Works. The Government of Portugal then appointed a Committee of Inquiry; the report of that committee has just appeared in the official gazette of Portugal, copies of which are sent herewith; and that report confirms all that Mr. Lindsay asserts in his letter to Sir Arthur Magenis, of the 1st January 1863, and reports upon a great many more illegal acts; so that it is not easy to see how the Government of Portugal can even attempt to escape from its legal responsibility to Mr. Lindsay, as their own committee have affirmed all that he has alleged.

COPY LETTERS written by Mr. W. S. Lindsay to His Excellency Carlos Bento.

Sir,

London, 24 December 1857.

As far back as August last I was invited, as your Excellency is aware, to visit Lisbon to aid in the formation of a steam shipping company, for the development of the important trade of Western Africa, and for the conveyance of mails between Lisbon and the ports on that coast.

At considerable inconvenience, I visited Lisbon early in September. After numerous interviews with the gentlemen above referred to, I agreed with them all the plans necessary to be adopted, and the conditions on which I would enter upon this very important and I might add promising undertaking, if properly and faithfully conducted. These plans and conditions were laid before your Excellency, and at the last meeting which I had the honour of having with you, I understood that our proposals had met with your approval, and that nothing more was necessary beyond the formal consent of the Government of which your Excellency is so distinguished a member. On my return to London I gave orders to have the first ship equipped and put in superior order; she has now been waiting for two months in the dock, at considerable expense to me, ready to commence this important service. On the 12th of this month I received with considerable surprise a telegraphic message, advising me that the Government had agreed to all the conditions except the usual bonus of 60 contos, and inquiring if I would give up my right, so far as the shareholders were concerned, to any portion of the same. My answer was in the negative, and I further informed the gentlemen who had telegraphed to me, that as they could not expect me to keep my valuable property here lying doing nothing, I could not delay longer, and that the business so far as they were concerned, had not advanced one step since I left Lisbon in September last. I had agreed to provide one-half of the capital, and to accept no part of the bonus for my own use, and receive no remuneration for my trouble, and that out of the 60 contos, the directors were to receive 35 for their trouble and responsibility in the formation of the company, and that the remaining 25 contos were to be for the benefit of all the shareholders. My conditions with them, as your Excellency will not fail to note, were liberal in the extreme, and as they are apparently not prepared to carry out these conditions, and have not sent a telegraphic reply to my letter to them of the 16th inst., I consider it my duty to address your Excellency direct. I know that your Excellency is most anxious to see the trade of Western Africa properly developed, and, therefore, if it be your pleasure, I will undertake, on my own responsibility, the whole of the conditions named in the proposals which were laid before you in September last, so far as that trade is concerned, for the annual payments and bonus therein specified, and immediately on receipt of your Excellency's answer to this letter, the first steamer will be dispatched to Lisbon to commence the service. The position which I have long held connected with the shipping of this country will, I trust, be a guarantee to you that the service will be faithfully performed when once undertaken; but if required I shall deposit the usual security in Government stock, and I may add that there are in Portugal and in this country, other parties deeply interested in the development of the African trade, who will be ready to join me should I desire it. The small service of the Azores is, I understand, already occupied; but as I have no connection with these islands, I feel I could not do it justice, and therefore would not undertake the mail service there.

Considering the great delay which has already taken place, may I request the favour of an early answer.

I am, &c.

To His Excellency Carlos Bento,
Ministro das Obras Publicas, Lisbon.

Sir,

London, 25 January 1858.

I HAD the pleasure of addressing your Excellency upon the 24th ult., but as yet I have not had the honour of a reply.

The letters which I receive from Lisbon are of so conflicting a nature, that I can hardly be expected to detain my ships longer for the proposed African service, but as it is one in which your Excellency takes a very deep interest, I am anxious to receive a reply to the above before I decide otherwise with them.

To His Excellency Carlos Bento,
Ministro das Obras Publicas, Lisbon.

I have, &c.

Sir,

London, 16 February 1858.

I HAVE this day received your Excellency's much-esteemed favours, and I cannot but admire the deep interest you take in an undertaking which, while it can hardly fail to yield a fair return under proper management to those who invest their capital in it, must prove of great advantage to Portugal in the development of her important colonial trade. The African trade is destined to be very valuable to Portugal, and I am confirmed in this opinion by Dr. Livingstone, with whom I have had various communications on the subject. As a proof of the good opinion I have of it, I have kept my steamer "Lindsay" here for months waiting the orders of the company; she is ready to start at a day's notice, whenever the company has duly constituted the shares issued, and the necessary documents sent home for the company to take possession, so that the matter now rests entirely in their hands. I could have wished much that no alteration had been made in the conditions named when I was in Lisbon; but as I had great confidence in your Excellency, and as I was anxious to see the undertaking fairly commenced, I wrote to M. Candido de Abreu on the 5th instant, giving him full power to agree to the alterations you had made, provided you felt that you could not consistently with your duty to the public confirm the conditions as they before stood, so that so far as I am concerned, there is no obstacle in the way. I daily expect a telegram from him advising me that all is complete, the contract signed, and the shares issued. After the great delay which has taken place, I trust that the company will complete their arrangements, and place me in a position to order from India the other two steamers necessary for the African service. As your Excellency is aware, I cannot send for them until the company is fully constituted and the capital subscribed. When, therefore, they take possession of the steamer "Lindsay," I shall at once write to India, and order the other two home, and have them fitted with promptitude for the service.

There will be no unnecessary delay on my part.

To His Excellency Carlos Bento da Silva,
Ministro das Obras Publicas, R. and C., Lisbon.

I remain, &c.
(signed) W. S. Lindsay.

Sir,

London, 16 March 1858.

ON the 9th instant (the day after the departure of the last mail for Lisbon), I received your esteemed favour of the 28th ult. I did not consider a power of attorney necessary; but as your Excellency has been pleased to recommend that one should be sent, I have forwarded jointly with my friends Messrs. Pinto, Perez & Co. a power to M. Perez, senior, who I expect is in Lisbon at present, and in his absence to M. Flores, either of whom have now full and legal power to act for us, so that so far as I am concerned there is no obstacle to the completion of the company. As the ship "Lindsay" has now waited here so very long, and at so very great an expense to me, and as I have refused other remunerative employment for her, your Excellency must feel that this continued delay is not merely a source of considerable annoyance to me but also of heavy loss. I know that there has been no delay on your part consistent with your duty to the public, but if there is likely to be any further delay on the part of the directors (as there appears to be as I have no telegraph) I am perfectly willing and ready to commence with my ships, and on my own responsibility, the African service, as per my letter to your Excellency of the 24th December last. In fact after all the procrastination and wearisome delay, I would prefer undertaking the whole of the service myself, instead of being longer hampered by others; if, therefore, the Government of Portugal is willing to concede to me the terms named in my letter of the 24th December with some slight modifications as you may consider due to the public, your Excellency has merely to advise me accordingly, and I shall at once commence the African service, and I trust perform it to your entire satisfaction. Should I desire it, my friends Messrs. Pinto, Perez & Co., as well as others interested in the trade of Portugal and her settlements, will be quite ready to join me.

To His Excellency Carlos Bento da Silva,
Ministro das Obras Publicas, Lisbon.

I am, &c.

Sir,

London, 5 April 1858.

I HAVE this morning received your much esteemed note of the 28th ultimo, but as yet I have no telegraph announcing the facts that the statutes of the company are signed. My power of attorney and of M. Perez have been at Lisbon these last 14 days, so that, so far as we are concerned, there is no obstacle in the way.

The first ship, the "Lindsay," is here all ready, and has been complete these last four months, to start at a day's notice to commence the Azores service, and she will be dispatched the moment the company send to me the payments for her, as arranged: one-half in cash or credits bearing interest, at their option, and one-half in shares; and there will not be one hour's delay on my part. Whenever this is completed, I shall give orders for the other two ships to return to this country, to be fitted for the African service.

Allow me again to thank your Excellency for the great courtesy and attention you have shown in writing to me, and for the interest you take in the undertaking.

His Excellency Carlos Bento da Silva,

(Confidential.)

Dear Sir,

London, 26 May 1858.

I THINK it right to bring confidentially under your Excellency's notice the main features of the correspondence which has passed on the subject of the Steam Company, since last I had the pleasure of addressing you, and for that purpose I enclose it herewith, as it may be useful for your guidance.

Your Excellency will at once see that I could not agree to the very unreasonable conditions proposed to me on the 28th April, and you will note that my reasons are fully given in my reply to M. Perez. May I also call your attention in particular to my reply by this mail to the letter from M. Abreu. I am anxious that when the undertaking is commenced, there should be no obstacles in the way to its proper and efficient working, so that the service may be performed to the entire satisfaction of the Portuguese Government. As a guarantee that this will be done, the whole capital must be subscribed and paid up in the manner set forth in my letter to M. Abreu. Unless this is done, there is really no guarantee that the service can be carried out fully. I felt this from the very first, and therefore I made it a clear condition in my agreement with those who are to act as directors at Lisbon, that in consideration of their risk and trouble in doing this, they were to receive one-half of the bonus, and that they were not to receive it until this was done. I think it right and proper that your Excellency should have those facts brought under your notice. If these gentlemen are not prepared to carry out this important condition, then I am quite ready to carry out the whole of the African service myself. The delay has been very great, and I have kept my ship here for many months, at a great expense to myself. And your Excellency will see that I, as a prudent man, cannot order home the other two steamers and fit them for the service till the company is fully constituted and the capital paid up, and if that is not or cannot be done till the contract is placed solely in my hands. I trust that this matter, after so great a delay, if it has not been so already, will be brought to the point on receipt of this.

To His Excellency Carlos Bento da Silva,
&c. &c. &c.

I am, &c.
(signed) W. S. Lindsay.

P.S.—As all is complete so far as your Government is concerned, and as the public will naturally expect that the service should be commenced forthwith, your Excellency will perhaps, on receipt of this, inquire and see if the company is prepared to carry out the conditions named in the enclosed letters, and if not, adopt such steps as you may deem best. I may merely add, for your Excellency's guidance, that unless those conditions to which I have referred are fully carried out, I cannot transfer the "Lindsay" to the company, nor order home the other two ships; and the company, after the very great delay, can hardly expect me to wait much longer for their convenience.

COPY of LETTERS written by Mr. W. S. Lindsay to His Excellency Sir Arthur C. Magenis, K.C.B.

My dear Sir Arthur,

Bregança Hotel, Lisbon, 1 January 1863.

I AM much obliged to you for allowing me to read the letter of the 30th ultimo, which the Duke of Loulé addressed to you on the subject of my claims upon the Government of Portugal; but by that letter it would appear that the whole of the facts have not been brought under the notice of his Excellency.

I have made no legal claim upon the Government of Portugal for the value of the debenture of which I am a holder; but if I have not a legal, I have at least a moral claim for the following reasons:—

1st. Because I was invited by the Minister of Public Works to promote the undertaking, which he informed me in his letters “would prove of much benefit to the State and the shareholders;” and,

2dly. Because although the undertaking was started mainly through my capital, and has proved of much benefit to the State, it has proved a serious loss to me, for I have not received any interest on the large amount of money I invested on the invitation and recommendation of the Minister of Public Works.

I have also much reason to feel aggrieved with the conduct of the directors and the decisions of the Portuguese courts of law in regard to the debentures:—

1st. Because as an excuse for not paying the stipulated interest and reduction of these debentures, the company raised frivolous counter-claims against me. I say “frivolous,” because, when in your presence in the course of last month, I produced to the president the numerous letters which he and the other directors had addressed to me, and the certificates and deeds which they and their agents had signed, expressing the fullest satisfaction with the ships I had supplied to the company, he had not one word to say in reply.

2dly. Because I was driven into a court of law to recover the value of the debentures, and though the bond which the directors signed expressly states, and the debentures distinctly stipulate that I am to have “a preference right over all the assets of the company,” the embargo under that power which I placed upon one of the ships of the company was withdrawn, and I was thus, contrary to the express stipulations of these documents, and I believe to the statute laws of Portugal, deprived of that right, and have no appeal.

And 3d. Because in the action which I was compelled to bring against the company, though the jury gave a verdict in my favour, it is true the judge pronounced a sentence against me, from which I have no appeal, and which Mr. Herries, in his report to Lord Russell, states was “manifestly absurd.”

In regard to the question of the shares, I admit I would have had no legal claim upon the Government of Portugal, had the Government not been a consenting party to numerous illegal acts, and to the violation of the statutes of the company, on the faith of which I and other British subjects invested their capital. Against these illegal acts, we solemnly protested. We did so in writing, and we handed our protest to the president of the company in the presence of the Commissioner appointed by Her Majesty’s Government to attend the meetings of the company, and to watch over its affairs as specially provided by the 20th Article of the contract of concession, and by the contract which the Government made on the 5th January 1861.

These illegal acts are set forth at great length in a memorial to His Most Faithful Majesty the King of Portugal. We hold the Government responsible to us, because by its own acts it has taken upon itself the responsibility:—

1st. By sanctioning the repudiation of the conditions of Articles 10, 13, 18, 22, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 33, 34, 35, 36, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, and 45 of the statutes, all of which illegal acts are confirmed by the recorded minutes and proceedings of the company, and in the presence of the commissioner and fiscal appointed by the Portuguese Government to attend these meetings.

2dly. By allowing the directors to create votes contrary to law, and the president to vote in the name of the company with unissued shares in violation of law and justice.

3dly. By confirming by the law of the 30th March, and by the Royal Decree of the 10th September 1861 (to which his Excellency refers) the illegal acts of the directors.

4thly. By granting a loan contrary to the conditions of the statutes, and without the approval of a general assembly of the shareholders of the company.

5thly. By allowing the proceeds of that loan to be used for purposes not sanctioned by the general assembly.

6thly. By delivering the money to persons illegally elected, and not authorised by a general assembly to receive it for the company; and,

7thly. By requiring and accepting as security for the loan the property of the company, and the subvention granted to it for the conveyance of the mails, neither of which the directors had any power to alienate, except in conformity with the statutes, and with the approval of the general assembly. And I must protest against the Government attempting to touch the property of the company, or to withhold the subvention for the purpose of repaying to itself this so-called debt, which it has contracted with the persons who received it, and not with the Royal Union Mercantile Company.

The Government of Portugal, therefore, by authorising and approving numerous illegal acts, and thereby injuring the rights and legitimate interests of those persons who protested against these acts, and depriving them of the guarantees which the observance of the laws would have given them, has rendered itself responsible to those shareholders.

This is not merely my opinion, but it is the opinion also of every person familiar with the facts with whom I have conversed on the subject. It is confirmed by five of the leading lawyers of Portugal, who have in the most minute manner gone into the whole case, knowing that their written opinions would be handed to you to be forwarded to Earl Russell. And I am informed that no impartial person, can, with the facts before him, arrive at any other conclusion.

I am, however, still quite ready on my own part and on the part of the English shareholders, whom I represent, to settle our claims with the Government in an amicable and liberal spirit. I am also quite prepared to allow my capital to remain in the undertaking, provided the company is re-organised. With that object in view, I shall remain here a week longer from this date, ready to meet any person or persons the Government may authorise to negotiate with me, with, of course, the understanding that whatever we decide upon, subject to the confirmation of the Cortes, is to be adopted by the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty. But if this offer to come to an amicable settlement be not accepted within the stipulated time, my present offer is in no respect to prejudice my full and valid rights.

But in any re-organization of the company there would require to be an entire change of persons now connected with it:—

1stly. Because those persons do not now represent the majority of the shareholders.

2dly. Because they hold their office as directors illegally.

3dly. Because they have abused the trusts confided to them.

4thly. Because besides the bonus which the directors appropriated to themselves they have expended up to the 31st March last under the head of "interests discounts and difference of exchange," no less a sum than 73,734,429 reis.

5thly. Because they have up to that date taken for their own use, without the sanction of the general assembly 21,026,429 reis under the name of "guarantees."

6thly. Because they have also taken for their own use under the head of "bonus," "gratifications," and so forth, large sums from the coffers of the company.

7thly. Because two of them, Edward Medlicott the president, and José Antonio Serzedillo, one of the directors, with another person not connected with the Company, did in my opinion most wrongfully accept for their alleged services the sum of 2,000 £, on the sale to the company, for which they were acting in trust of the steam ship "Hope," and lastly;—

Because for numerous other reasons I have and can have no confidence in them.

If the Government of Portugal is not willing to meet me, then I have no course left but to return to England and take steps to have the facts and all the correspondence brought under the notice of Parliament. The case is one, or rather by the acts of the directors, approved and confirmed by the Government of Portugal has been made one of an international character.

Lord Russell, as you are aware, has already ordered an inquiry into the case, and when all the facts are before his Lordship, I think he will not hesitate to step forward and protect English subjects from manifest wrong and from the injury which they have sustained through the illegal acts to which I have referred, and also claim compensation on their behalf.

To His Excellency
Sir Arthur C. Magenis, K.C.B.

I am, &c.

COPY of LETTER from M. Pinto Basto to Mr. W. S. Lindsay, enclosing Report of Committee.

Dear Sir,

46, Upper Baker-street, 9 July 1864.

I HEREBY beg to hand you four Diarios do Lisbon (Portuguese official papers), Nos. 140 to 143, which contain the opinion of the committee, named by the Portuguese Government on the 14th January 1863, to inquire into the proceedings of the directors, &c. of the Union Mercantile Company.

I have read them myself, and as far as it goes (for it is not concluded in these four numbers), I plainly see that the whole proceedings of the directors, managers, &c. have been illegal from the very beginning.

It is the opinion of the committee that there never was, except on the 15th April 1862, a general meeting legally convoked, and in that meeting the president having voted with 35 votes, to which he had no right, and thus electing the Board with 212 votes against 197, caused all the acts of the said Board to be illegal, because deducting from this 212 the 35, remain 177, and this would have changed the election altogether.

The director, Silveria, never paid for a single share, but notwithstanding voted with 218 shares, which the directors took on themselves to deliver to him against the express laws of the company before they were paid for.

I must note here that it being one of the conditions that each director should deposit in the coffers of the company 20 shares, the committee find in the register book that shares were deposited before the company had had the shares printed, and one of the directors deposited shares, which numbers were only sold more than a year after; also all the minutes, with a few exceptions of the Board, have one signature less than the necessary ones to make them legal.

In the cash they find that after a certain date, a proposal was made and carried in a meeting of the Board by one of the directors, that payments might be made without any document; they also find many documents, of those few that do exist, one made by the cash-keeper himself, and sometimes mention private expenses of directors or clerks.

It would be useless for me to try in a letter to give you even an idea of the opinion the Committee form of the whole proceedings; in one word, they do not find a single book in order.

I will only add that if I had been in the place of one of the directors, I certainly, after this publication, would not appear in Lisbon.

I will not try to say more on this subject, for without the whole being translated it is impossible for you to form an idea of how many truths the opinion of the committee contains.

W. S. Lindsay, Esq.

I remain, &c.

Enclosure 4, in No. 45.

MINISTRY of PUBLIC WORKS.

Commerce and Industry Department of the Board of Trade.—1st Section.

WHEREAS the undertaking that bound itself by the contracts of the 5th May 1858, 12th April 1860, and 5th January 1861, to perform the regular steam services between Lisbon, the Azores, Algarve, and Western Africa, formed itself into a limited liability company under the denomination of "Union Mercantile Company," by virtue of statutes approved by decree after 14th May 1858.

Whereas, by Article 5th of these statutes, it was stipulated that the capital of the company would be 450,000,000 reis, represented by 5,000 shares 90,000 reis each, and that subsequently this article was altered, raising the capital to 900,000,000 reis, represented by 10,000 shares of the same value, which alteration was approved by the decree of the 23d May 1859.

Whereas, by the decree of the 28th September 1859, the company was allowed to issue debentures payable to bearer of 450,000 reis each, bearing interest at the rate of 6% per annum, and amortisation at the rate of 12% annually.

Whereas, in order to facilitate the issue of the shares, the law of the 30th March 1861 was passed, guaranteeing a minimum interest to the company of 6% per annum, and the law of the 10th September 1861 raised this interest to 7%.

Whereas, of these 10,000 shares representing the social fund, the company only succeeded in issuing 4,002, representing 360,180,000 reis, a sum inferior even to the primitive capital.

Whereas the company issued 161 debentures, amounting to 72,450,000 reis, for part payment of the price of their steamers.

Whereas this deficiency of paid-up capital placed the company in peculiar circumstances, and was forced,—

1st. To have recourse to credit by raising large sums in the Bank of Portugal, the Mercantile Commercial and Utilidade Publica Banks, under the personal liability of some of their directors.

2dly. To solicit from Government important pecuniary assistance, obtaining a loan of 450,000,000 reis by contract of the 24th October 1861, and sundry other supplies to the amount of more than 200,000,000 reis.

3dly. To petition Government, sometimes to take the remaining number of shares so as to complete the raising of the capital, and at other times soliciting the subsidy to be raised, without which the company could not exist, and would be obliged to liquidate.

Whereas, owing to the deficiency of capital, they also were unable to employ on the Algarve line more than one steamer; whereas by Article 2d of the law of the 30th March 1861 they are bound to have two; and also were not able on the African line since 1860 to perform the 12 round voyages required by condition 13th of the contract of the 5th May 1858.

Whereas the company, in the years 1861 to 1862 and from 1862 to 1863, closed their balances with a deficit, and Government was obliged to pay the minimum interest guaranteed by the laws of the 30th March and 10th September 1861.

Whereas the company was not only incapable of raising the capital named in the statutes, statutes, which it did not do, but they were not able in the last subscription opened to raise it to the sum of 1,350,000,000 reis, in order to re-organise itself in such conditions as to avail itself of the benefit of the law of the 13th July 1863.

Whereas the results of this subscription are so much more to be noticed, insomuch, as by the aforesaid law of the 13th July, the subsidy was raised to 160,000,000 reis, 6 per cent. interest is guaranteed to the shareholders, and when re-organized Government would be the largest shareholder.

Whereas the capital is absolutely indispensable to enable the undertaking to meet its engagements.

Whereas the capital in all limited liability companies, is the only real and effective guarantee of the public interests, which the law confided to the supreme supervision of the Government.

Whereas the Government exhausted all means of protection, help and indulgence, and ought not to authorise any longer the limited liability company that requires the first and fundamental condition for its legal existence.

I hereby withdraw the royal assent granted to the statutes of the "Union Mercantile Company" by the decrees of the 14th May 1858, 28th September 1859 and 23d May 1860, the said company only subsisting as a limited liability company for the purpose of performing the indispensable acts for its liquidation, on the terms of its social laws and the laws of the kingdom, &c. &c.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 11 August 1864.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of the 16th of June and 20th of July, informing him of the failure of the arrangements which you had hoped to make for the settlement of your claims upon the Uniaõ Mercantil Company, and inclosing Dr. Twiss' opinion upon the merits of your case.

I am to acquaint you, in reply, that these papers have been most carefully considered by the law officers of the Crown, who have had the advantage of personal communication with Dr. Twiss, and that they adhere to the opinion which they have throughout maintained, that there are no circumstances in this case which can justify the official interference of Her Majesty's Government on your behalf with the Government of Portugal.

Lord Russell, however, considers that you have a fair claim upon the liberality of the Portuguese Government for their favourable consideration of any new arrangements which you may wish to propose to them, and by which your position can be improved; and any such proposals shall be unofficially supported by the good offices of Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon.

CONVENTION between Her Majesty and the King of Prussia, for the Mutual Surrender of Criminals.

Signed at London, March 5, 1864.

[Ratifications exchanged at London, April 11, 1864.]

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and His Majesty the King of Prussia, having judged it expedient, with a view to the better administration of justice, and to the prevention of crime within their respective territories and jurisdictions, that persons charged with or convicted of the crimes hereinafter enumerated, and being fugitives from justice, should, under certain circumstances, be reciprocally delivered up; their said Majesties have named as their Plenipotentiaries to conclude a Convention for this purpose, that is to say:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Right Honourable John Earl Russell, Viscount Amberley of Amberley and Ardsalla, a Peer of the United Kingdom, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, a Member of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, Her Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs;

And His Majesty the King of Prussia, His Excellency the Minister of State, Albert Count of Bernstorff-Stintenburg, Grand Cross of the Order of the Red Eagle with oak leaves, and Grand Commander of the Royal Order of the House of Hohenzollern in diamonds, &c., &c., His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Her Britannic Majesty;

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

It is agreed that the High Contracting Parties shall, on requisition made in their name through the medium of their respective Diplomatic Agents, deliver up to justice

Nachdem Ihre Majestät die Königin des Vereinigten Königreichs von Großbritannien und Irland, und Seine Majestät der König von Preußen, Behufs besserer Verwaltung der Rechtspflege und zur Verhütung von Verbrechen, innerhalb Ihrer gegenseitigen Gebiete und Gerichtsbarkeiten es für zweckmäßig befunden haben, daß Personen, welche der in diesem Vertrage aufgeführten Verbrechen beschuldigt, oder wegen solcher verurtheilt und vor der Justiz flüchtig geworden sind, unter bestimmten Umständen gegenseitig ausgeliefert werden sollen; so haben Ihre eben gedachten Majestäten Behufs Abschließung einer desfalligen Uebereinkunft zu Ihren Bevollmächtigten ernannt und zwar:

Ihre Majestät die Königin des Vereinigten Königreichs von Großbritannien und Irland, den sehr ehrenwerthen Johann Grafen Russell, Viscount Amberley von Amberley und Ardsalla, Pair des Vereinigten Königreichs, Ritter des höchst edlen Ordens vom Hosenbande, Mitglied Ihrer Majestät höchst ehrenwerthen Geheimen Raths, Allerhöchstihren Haupt-Staats-Secretair für die auswärtigen Angelegenheiten;

Und Seine Majestät der König von Preußen, Seine Excellenz den Staatsminister Albrecht Grafen von Bernstorff-Stintenburg, Großkreuz des Rothen Adler-Ordens mit Eichenlaub und Groß-Komthur des Königlichen Haus-Ordens von Hohenzollern in Brillanten, etc., etc., Allerhöchstihren außerordentlichen und bevollmächtigten Botschafter bei Ihrer Großbritannischen Majestät; Artikel I.

Die hohen contrahirenden Theile verpflichten sich, auf Requisitionen, welche in Ihrem Namen durch Ihre diplomatischen Agenten erlassen werden, der Justiz diejenigen Personen auszuliefern,

2. Attempt to commit murder;

3. Forgery, comprehending the counterfeiting of bank-notes, or public securities, or money; committed within the jurisdiction of the requiring Party, shall be found within the territories of the other, provided that such persons are not subjects of the Party upon whom the requisition is made. Provided also, that in the case of a person accused, the surrender shall be made only when the commission of the crime shall be so established, as that the laws of the country where the fugitive or person so accused shall be found would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial, if the crime had been there committed; and that in the case of a person convicted, the surrender shall be made only on the production of an authenticated copy of his conviction, and on proof of his identity.

Consequently, on the part of the Prussian Government, the surrender shall be made only by the consent of the Minister to whose Department appertains the administration of justice, and after the production, in the case of a person accused, of a warrant of arrest or other equivalent judicial document, issued by a Judge or other competent authority in the United Kingdom, clearly setting forth the acts for which the fugitive shall have rendered himself accountable; or, in the case of a person convicted, on the production of an authenticated copy of his conviction, and on proof of his identity.

On the part of the British Government, the surrender, in the case of a person accused, shall be made only on the warrant or other equivalent judicial document for the arrest of a fugitive, issued by a Judge or Magistrate duly authorized to take cognizance of the acts charged against the fugitive in Prussia, and on duly authenticated depositions or statements on oath before such Judge or Magistrate, clearly setting forth the said acts, or on such other evidence thereof as, accordwenn dergleichen strafbare Handlungen innerhalb der Gerichtsbarkeit des requirirenden Theiles begangen sind, und die Beschuldigten oder verurtheilten Personen in dem Gebiete des anderen Theiles betroffen werden. Unterthanen des requirirten Theiles werden jedoch nicht ausgeliefert. Auch soll die Auslieferung eines Beschuldigten nur erfolgen, wenn die Verübung des Verbrechens in so weit bewiesen ist, daß nach den Gesetzen des Landes, wo der Flüchtling oder das so beschuldigte Individuum betroffen wird, dessen Verhaftung und Stellung vor Gericht gerechtfertigt sein würde, im Falle das Verbrechen dort verübt wäre.

Die Auslieferung eines Verurtheilten soll nur nach erfolgter Vorlegung einer beglaubigten Abschrift des Urtheils und nach Feststellung seiner Identität erfolgen.

Die Auslieferung soll daher Preussischer Seits nur mit Zustimmung des Justiz-Ministers erfolgen, und zwar: wenn es sich um einen Beschuldigten handelt, nach Vorbringung eines von einem Richter oder einer anderen zuständigen Behörde des Vereinigten Königreichs erlassenen Haftbefehls, oder eines anderen demselben gleich zu achtenden richterlichen Dokuments, welches die strafbaren Handlungen, deren sich der Flüchtling schuldig gemacht haben soll, genau bezeichnet.

Großbritannischer Seits erfolgt die Auslieferung eines Beschuldigten nur auf Grund eines gerichtlichen Haftbefehls, oder eines anderen, dem gleich zu achtenden, die Verhaftung eines Flüchtlings anordnenden Dokuments, wenn dasselbe von einem Richter oder obrigkeitlichen Beamten ausgefertigt ist, welcher in Preussen die dem Beschuldigten zur Last gelegten strafbaren Handlungen zu verfolgen gesetzlich berufen ist. Zugleich müssen gehörig beglaubigte, vor einem solchen Richter oder obrigkeitlichen Beamten ing to the laws of England, would warrant the apprehension of the said fugitive, and his committal for trial for the said acts, if they had been therein committed; or, in the case of a person convicted, on the production of an authenticated copy of his conviction, and on proof of his identity.

ARTICLE II.

The expenses of any detention and surrender made in virtue of the preceding Article shall be borne and defrayed by the Government in whose name the requisition shall have been made.

ARTICLE III.

The present Convention shall come into operation as soon as the necessary Legislative Acts shall have been passed. Either of the High Contracting Parties shall be at liberty to give notice to the other at any time for its termination; and in such case it shall altogether cease and determine at the expiration of six months from the date of such notice.

ARTICLE IV.

The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at London in one month, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

eidlich erhärtete Zeugen-Aussagen beigebracht werden, welche die gedachten strafbaren Handlungen genau feststellen, oder es müssen für die letzteren solche Beweismittel beigebracht werden, welche nach Englischen Gesetzen erforderlich sein würden, um den Flüchtling, wenn er die That in England begangen hätte, zu verhaften und vor Gericht zu stellen.

Die Auslieferung eines Verurtheilten erfolgt nur nach Beibringung einer beglaubigten Abschrift des Urtheils und nach Feststellung seiner Identität.

Artikel II.

CORRESPONDENCE

WITH

BRITISH COMMISSIONERS.

SIERRA LEONE.

No. 1.

Earl Russell to Her Majesty's Judge.

Sir,

Foreign Office, January 8, 1863.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 23rd ultimo, I transmit to you, for your information, a copy of a further despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Rotterdam,* containing further information relating to the Dutch barque "Jane," captured by Her Majesty's ship "Espoir" on suspicion of being engaged in the Slave Trade.

I am, &c.
(Signed) RUSSELL.

No. 2.

Her Majesty's Judge to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13, 1863.)

My Lord,

Sierra Leone, December 20, 1862.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 3rd ultimo, reporting that the Netherlands barque "Jane" had been brought before the British and Netherlands Mixed Court of Justice on a charge of being equipped for the Slave Trade, I have now the honour to report that that vessel was condemned in this Court on the 10th instant, and to transmit to your Lordship copies of the proceedings in the case.

It appears from the ship's papers, and from the evidence, that the "Jane," a barque of 270 tons burdens was the property of a Dutch subject named Michael Gorsira, resident at Curaçoa, who procured for her at that island a Colonial register dated the 25th of March last, by which she was authorized to trade as a national vessel in all parts of the world, with the exception of the West Coast of Africa, the Straits of Gibraltar, and the Mediterranean. It then appears that the owner chartered his vessel for an indefinite period to James Robert Mellen, a native of the Confederate States of America, who was supercargo on board when she was detained.

Mellen took the "Jane" from Curaçoa to St. Jago de Cuba, from which port he then proceeded to Havre, according to his statement, with a cargo of sugar: at Havre he shipped what is stated in the manifest from that port to be cargo for St. Thomas and the West Coast of Africa, consisting, besides twenty barrels of flour, entirely of ship's stores, preserved meats, soups, and vegetables in tins, French wine, and a small quantity of brandy, the whole of which articles were evidently intended for consumption on the voyage, and were altogether unsuited for trade on the coast of Africa. The total value of this pretended cargo amounted to 7,500 francs, or 300*l.* English money.

From Havre, Mellen proceeded with the "Jane" to Rotterdam, where he procured from the proper authorities an extension of the vessel's Colonial register to those parts of the world which were originally excepted, viz., the West Coast of Africa and the Levant.

At Rotterdam he shipped 20,000 bricks as cargo, and according to his statement some gin also, but we have no account of the quantity or value, and in fact no proof that it really was shipped, as he has produced no manifest from Rotterdam, and no gin was found on board when the vessel was captured. From Rotterdam, as appears from a Custom-house certificate dated the 23rd of August last, endorsed on the register, he cleared out for the Island of St. Thomas.

It appears that from Rotterdam the "Jane" proceeded in the first instance to Elmina, on the Gold Coast, and thence to Quinsembo, to the south of the River Congo. On her way from Quinsembo to the Congo she was detained by Her Majesty's ship "Zebra," and taken to Point Padrone, in the mouth of that river; she was, however, subsequently released by the "Zebra," and immediately afterwards detained by Her Majesty's ship "Espoir" on the present charge.

It appears from the surveyor's report that the "Jane" had on board casks capable of containing 5,363 gallons of water, besides loose staves capable of being set up into casks sufficient to contain 8,700 gallons more, forming a total of 14,063 gallons; she also had a ledge or stringer running round the hold, suitable for the laying of a slave-deck.

As will be seen from the evidence, and from the Judgment delivered in this case, the master and the supercargo made no attempt to explain the presence on board of the excessive number of water-casks, and they failed to give any satisfactory explanation of the presence of the immense quantity of loose staves.

Under these circumstances it remained for the Court to consider whether, notwithstanding the manifest violation of the Equipment Article of the Treaty, the master and the supercargo could prove, from the incidents of the voyage and from the ship's papers, that the detained vessel was actually engaged in lawful trade.

Here all the evidence points the other way. No explanation is offered of the fact that the detained vessel, being bound to St. Thomas, proceeded straight to the Congo, six degrees of latitude south of that island, nor does the supercargo give any satisfactory account of the nature of the commercial transactions in which he was engaged at the places where he touched on the coast: his statement is that he landed some of the cargo at Elmina, some more at Quinsembo, and that he was going to the Congo to land the rest when he was captured; he was to ship return cargo at the Congo, afterwards to touch at St. Thomas, and then to proceed to Elmina to take on board cargo in return for the goods which he had left there on his outward voyage; from Elmina he was to sail either for Curaçoa, or for some port in Europe; he produced, however, no bills of lading, no receipts, nor any documentary evidence whatever touching the merchandise he alleged that he had landed at Elmina and at Quinsembo. In answer to questions put on behalf of the captors, he stated that he had possessed such papers, and he invented a false statement to account for their absence.

But the whole proceedings of the "Jane" on the coast were inconsistent with a lawful voyage: as I have already stated, she really had no cargo on board; but assuming all the articles entered on the manifest at Havre to be cargo, and including the bricks shipped at Rotterdam, the aggregate value of the whole amounted to less than 400*l.*

It is manifestly impossible that a vessel of 270 tons, with a crew of fourteen persons, could have paid expenses, much less have made a profitable voyage to the West Indies, with African produce shipped in return for cargo of such small value, and her voyage can only be satisfactorily accounted for by the supposition that she was bound to the Congo for the purpose of taking on board a cargo of slaves in accordance with a preconcerted arrangement.

Having taken all these circumstances into due consideration, the Court were of opinion that it was clearly established that the detained vessel was at the time of her capture equipped for and engaged in the Slave Trade; and accordingly by Decree of the 10th of December pronounced the barque "Jane" good prize to the Crowns of Great Britain and of the Netherlands.

I have, &c.
(Signed) G. SKELTON.

Inclosure 1 in No. 2.

Judgment given in the case of the Netherlands barque "Jane," B. A. Prince, Master.

THE case upon which the Court has now met for the purpose of pronouncing judgment is that of the Netherlands barque "Jane," B. A. Prince, master, which was detained on the 15th of October last, off Point Padrone, in the River Congo, by Her Majesty's steamer "Espoir," on the charge of being equipped for and engaged in the Slave Trade, in contravention of the Treaty of the 4th of May, 1818, between Great Britain and the Netherlands, and of the Additional Articles thereto, dated respectively the 31st of December, 1822, the 25th of January, 1823, the 7th of February, 1837, and the 31st of August, 1848.

It appears from the ship's papers, and from the evidence which has been adduced in this case, that the "Jane," a barque of 270 tons burden, is the property of a Netherland subject named Gorsira, a resident of Curaçoa, who procured for her a Colonial Register at that island, dated the 25th of March last. It is, however, stated in the body of that document that the ship is not authorized by such register to trade as a national vessel on the West Coast of Africa, or in the Straits of Gibraltar, or the Mediterranean Sea.

It then appears that the owner chartered the vessel to James Robert Mellen, a subject of the Confederate States of North America, who now appears as one of the claimants in this case, as the supercargo of the "Jane," and the sole owner and consignee of the cargo on board. It further appears that Mellen first proceeded with the vessel from Curaçoa to St. Jago de Cuba, from which port he took her on a voyage to Havre. At Havre he decided upon making a voyage to the West Coast of Africa; and after shipping cargo he proceeded to Rotterdam, where he procured from the proper authorities an extension of the Colonial Register of Curaçoa to those parts of the world which were excepted in that paper, viz., the West Coast of Africa and the Levant. Endorsements to that effect, properly signed and attested, appear on the back of the register.

At Rotterdam, according to a Custom-house certificate dated Helvoetsluys, the 23rd August last, which forms the last endorsement on the register, he cleared the vessel for St. Thomas on the West Coast of Africa. And here we come to the first point of importance which has been raised in this case. The master, the supercargo, and the mate declare in their several depositions that the "Jane" was bound to St. Thomas and the Coast of Guinea, by which they mean the West Coast of Africa; and the learned Advocate for the claimants has urged that the vessel was therefore not out of her proper course when detained in the Congo. It is true that in the ship's muster-roll dated the 21st of August, 1862, the words "and on the coast of Guinea" are inserted after St. Thomas; but the only document by which a ship's destination is legally defined is her clearance from the port of departure, and in the certificate of clearance endorsed on the register of the "Jane," she is distinctly stated to have cleared from Rotterdam for St. Thomas. After leaving Rotterdam it is stated by the master and the supercargo that the course of the "Jane" was not shaped for St. Thomas, but that she proceeded, in the first instance, to Elmina on the Gold coast, where a portion of the cargo was landed; and that from Elmina she proceeded down the coast, leaving St. Thomas behind her, but not going near that island, to Quinsembo, south of the Congo, where some more of the cargo was landed; and whilst on her way from Quinsembo to the River Congo she was fallen in with by Her Majesty's ship "Zebra," and taken to Point Padrone, in the Congo, where, shortly after having been released by the "Zebra," she was detained by Her Majesty's ship "Espoir" on the present charge.

We will now proceed to examine the evidence relating to the equipment of the detained vessel, which has been urged on behalf of the captor as affording proof of her being engaged in the Slave Trade:—The Commissioners of Survey in their Report state that there is a stringer or ledge running round the side of the hold, and well adapted for the purpose of laying a slave-deck. In opposition to this statement we have the evidence of two ship-masters who inspected the vessel on behalf of the claimant, to the effect that, in their opinion, a slave-deck could not be laid on the ledge in question; one of them stating that the vessel which he now commands was recently fitted in a very similar manner. To rebut this evidence we have further depositions sworn to by Mr. Thomas Pike, one of the surveyors, and by Lieutenant Murray, the Prize Officer, to the effect that the ledge round the hold of the detained vessel is, according to the usual mode of constructing slave-decks, perfectly suitable for that purpose; Lieutenant Murray further stating that he had himself taken a slaver to St. Helena with a ledge similar to that of the detained barque, and a slave-deck fitted on the principle which he described. We are bound, therefore, to come to the conclusion that the ledge round the hold of the detained vessel is, for whatever purpose it may have been originally constructed, actually adapted for the laying of a slave-deck; but we do not attach much importance to this point taken by itself, as it would appear that the ledge might have formed part of the structure of the ship without any unlawful purpose.

We now come to the question of the unreasonable number of water-casks stated to have been found on board the detained vessel, and we will here advert to the argument urged upon the Court by the learned Advocate for the claimant touching an extra quantity of water found on board a Dutch vessel being considered as an article of slave equipment. The learned gentlemen argued that the Court is precluded from looking upon an extra quantity of water, and consequently of vessels for containing water, as a proof of slave equipment at all, by the first of the Additional Articles to the Treaty of 1818 which were signed at the Hague on the 31st of August, 1848, which Article stipulates that "if there should be found on board a merchant-vessel of either nation a greater quantity of water in casks, or in tanks, or in any other receptacles than is necessary for the use of the crew, that circumstance alone shall not be considered as sufficient reason for authorizing the detention of the said vessel provided that the ship's papers with which she is furnished are in order, so as to prove that she is not engaged in Slave Trade." The Court cannot concur in that opinion; it appears to us clear that the sole object of the Article above referred to was to prevent vessels engaged in lawful pursuits requiring an extraordinary quantity of water from being detained on suspicion of Slave Trade; and that the plain meaning of the foregoing stipulation is that a vessel shall not be liable to detention on the ground of having on board a larger quantity of water than necessary for her crew as a merchant-vessel, provided her papers prove that she is engaged in some lawful calling for which such extra quantity of water is required.

The Commissioners of Survey state that they found on board the detained vessel forty-one casks, some with water in, others empty, the whole capable of containing 5,363 gallons. But it is urged on behalf of the claimants that a number of these casks are not water-casks, but old bread casks, and are not capable of holding water; and we have the depositions of two ship-masters to the effect that they saw on the deck of the detained vessel a number of wooden-bound casks which were damaged in various ways, and incapable of containing water,—one of the deponents, Robert Paterson, master of the “Nereid,” stating that he thinks they were about eighteen in number. Now it is quite clear that after these casks had been hoisted out of the hold on to the deck of the vessel, and had been left there empty for some time, they may have been in a damaged state; in fact the deponents state that the hoops were off and the heads knocked out; but if these casks were not intended to carry water, for what possible purpose were they shipped on board the detained vessel? It is not to be supposed that the master or supercargo of any ship would lumber up his hold with a number of empty and useless water-casks. But we have the positive evidence of the claimants themselves that these casks were intended to carry water, and for no other purpose.

The master, in answer to the seventh standing special interrogatory says,—“There are twenty-three water-casks on board for the use of the vessel, besides twenty casks belonging to the supercargo; had no other means of conveying water.” And further on, “The whole of the casks are capable of containing 4,730 gallons.” The supercargo, in answer to the seventh standing special interrogatory, says, “There are about forty-two water-casks on board for the use of the vessel. These casks are capable of containing about 4,000 gallons of water.” Again the supercargo, in his affidavit dated the 27th of November, says,—“That the twenty-one other casks referred to in the said Report of Survey are his property, and are old bread-casks, and were shipped at Havre, and filled with fresh and salt water, and stowed in the bottom of the ship for ballast.” We must come to the conclusion, therefore, that the detained vessel had on board casks capable of containing 5,363 gallons of water, a quantity so enormously in excess of what would be required for the consumption of the crew of the vessel on a voyage from Rotterdam to St. Thomas that it is unnecessary to dwell upon the question as to the exact quantity of water per man required by Netherlands law; though the Court is of opinion that $4\frac{3}{4}$ rans, Dutch measure, of water is the quantity prescribed by Dutch law for each seaman per day, and $4\frac{3}{4}$ rans amount, as nearly as possible, to 4 quarts and 1 gill English measure. Besides the water-casks, there were found on board the detained vessel 1,920 loose staves of casks, which the surveyors state in their Report to be sufficient to be set up into 87 puncheons, capable of containing 8,700 gallons; and it is a point of the greatest importance whether casks found on board a vessel in the shape of staves are or are not to be considered as receptacles for containing water within the meaning of the Equipment Article of the Treaty. The master and the supercargo, indeed, in their answers to the special interrogatories, make very light of these staves; they speak of them as “a few old staves for gunnage.” Had they been so, no importance would have attached to them; but these few old staves are subsequently magnified into a number sufficient to make 87 puncheons with a capacity of 8,700 gallons, a considerably larger quantity than contained in the casks on board the vessel. Now it is well known that, given the presence of a sufficient number of staves, heads and hoops for any number of casks may be supplied at any place on the West Coast of Africa, but the staves themselves cannot be supplied unless they are already stored in some dépôt. Keeping this in view, it appears to us that if this Court were to lay down the principle that staves in any quantity carried by a vessel coming to the West Coast of Africa shall not be considered as an article of equipment, any slave-vessel might come to the coast with impunity, with just sufficient water for her crew, and her full complement of casks for her slave-voyage in the shape of loose staves ready to be set up at the first convenient opportunity. We feel bound, therefore, to decide that the 1,920 loose staves found on board the detained vessel, and not entered as cargo, must be considered in the same light as casks capable of holding 8,700 gallons of water. Adding these to the forty-one casks measured by the surveyors, and found by them to be capable of containing 5,363 gallons, we find that the detained vessel had on board at the time of capture receptacles for water capable of containing, in the aggregate, 14,063 gallons, a quantity amply sufficient to carry a full cargo of slaves across the Atlantic.

It being thus established to the satisfaction of the Court that the detained vessel had on board a sufficient quantity of vessels for holding water to constitute a breach of the Equipment Article of the Treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands, it remains for the supercargo to show that notwithstanding the suspicious circumstances against the vessel, he was at the time of detention engaged on a lawful voyage. We will now proceed to take into consideration the circumstances of the voyage from Havre to the Congo as set forth from the ship's papers and the supercargo's own evidence. It appears from the ship's manifest dated Havre, the 17th of July, 1862, that the supercargo shipped on board a cargo consisting, besides twenty barrels of flour, chiefly of preserved provisions, wine, and brandy, which appear to be rather adapted for cabin use on board the vessel than to be intended as cargo for trade; however, taking the whole as cargo, the aggregate value amounted to 7,500 francs, or as nearly as possible 300*l.* English money. After leaving Havre documentary evidence fails us, but the supercargo states that he took on board at Rotterdam 20,000 bricks and some gin. Now, placing the high valuation of 3*l.* per 1,000 on the bricks, the ascertained value of the cargo would be raised to 360*l.* As to the value or the quantity of the gin shipped we have no evidence; the supercargo states that he did not bring a manifest from Rotterdam because no manifest is given to vessels proceeding to the West Coast of Africa. We are at a loss to understand how the Court can be expected to reconcile that statement with the 9th Section of the Additional Article to the Treaty of 1818 dated the 25th January, 1823, which stipulates as follows, “having on board an unreasonable quantity of rice, &c.,” such rice, &c., not being entitled on the “manifest as part of the cargo for trade.” It appears, therefore, that the supercargo took a vessel of 270 tons, with a crew of fourteen persons, on a trading voyage to the West Coast of Africa with a cargo, supposing even that the whole of it was intended for trade, of less than 400*l.* in value. He states that he landed some of this cargo at Elmina, afterwards some more at Quinsembo, and that he was on his way to the Congo to land the rest when capture took place; he was, after taking on board return cargo at the Congo, to touch at St. Thomas, and then proceed to Elmina, to take on board cargo in return for the goods he had landed at that place, whence he was to proceed to Curaçoa; he omits, however, altogether to state how he was to obtain a return for cargo landed at Quinsembo. Now, what cargo, and to what value, did he land at Elmina and at Quinsembo he gives no account, and he produces no receipt and no scrap of documentary evidence from either place to prove that he was engaged in any commercial transaction whatever; his allegation that he had such papers, but that they were taken away by mistake in the passengers' luggage, is disposed of by the declaration of the Prize Officer that the papers of the detained barque were delivered up before the passengers left the vessel, and further that their luggage was strictly searched after they were taken on board the “Espoir,” and that the papers found therein have been produced before this Court. But what cargo could the supercargo have landed either at Elmina, Quinsembo, or the Congo, to make it worth his while to touch at those places either on his outward or homeward voyage? Are we to believe that a vessel of 270 tons could make a profitable voyage from the Coast of Africa to the West Indies with African produce shipped in return for a cargo from Europe of less than 400*l.* in value, or are we to believe that the supercargo took the detained vessel from Rotterdam on a voyage down the whole West Coast of Africa without any definite object, but on the chance of picking up freight somewhere for Curaçoa? Neither supposition is in the slightest degree consistent with probability. But suppose, on the other hand, that the detained vessel, instead of being bound to St. Thomas, was really bound to the River Congo for the purpose, in pursuance of a preconcerted arrangement, of taking a cargo of slaves to Cuba, and every circumstance of her voyage from St. Jago de Cuba to the place where she was captured, is at once clearly accounted for. Recapitulating, then, the main points in this case which have been established to our satisfaction; bearing in view that the detained vessel, having cleared from Rotterdam for St. Thomas, was detained near the Congo, six degrees of latitude to the south of her port of destination; that she had on board at the time of capture casks, or staves fit for being set up into casks, capable of containing a total of 14,063 gallons of water; that in the face of these suspicious circumstances the master and supercargo have failed to prove either by the ship's papers, or by any other evidence, that the vessel was at the time of her detention engaged in a lawful voyage; that, on the contrary, all the circumstances of her voyage are inconsistent with the supposition that she is engaged in legal trade, and consistent with the supposition that she is engaged in a slave-trading voyage, the Court can come to no other conclusion than that the detained barque was at the time of her detention by Her Majesty's ship "Espoir" equipped for and engaged in the illicit Traffic in Slaves, in contravention of the Treaty of the 4th of May, 1818, between Great Britain and the Netherlands, and of the Additional Articles thereto. We therefore condemn the barque "Jane," together with her cargo, equipment, and stores, as good prize to the Crowns of Great Britain and of the Netherlands.

Inclosure 2 in No. 2.

Evidence in the case of the Netherlands barque "Jane."

Affidavit of Seizure.

In the British and Netherlands Mixed Court of Justice. Colony of Sierra Leone.

I, PATRICK JAMES MURRAY, Lieutenant of Her Majesty's steam-ship "Espoir," Sholto Douglas, Esquire, Commander, being duly sworn, make oath and say as follows, that is to say:—

1. That the said Commander is duly authorized and empowered, according to the Treaty entered into between Great Britain and the Netherlands, signed at the Hague on the 4th day of May, 1818, by a warrant from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to make seizures of Netherlands' vessels engaged in and equipped for the Slave Trade, a true copy of which is hereunto annexed, marked A.

2. That on the 15th day of October, 1862, they fell in with a suspicious-looking vessel at anchor off Point Padrone, in the River Congo, and I was ordered by the said Commander to proceed on board and ascertain her character and occupation; and upon inquiry I found that she was the Netherlands barque "Jane," commanded by one B. A. Prince, with a crew of thirteen persons, two passengers, and a supercargo; and upon searching the said vessel she was found to have on board the following articles of Slave Trade equipment, namely, a ledge around the hold suitable for receiving a slave deck; 42 water-casks in the hold supposed capable of containing about 80 gallons each, and 1 large cask containing upwards of 200 gallons, and 2 casks on deck capable of containing about 80 gallons each; and a very large quantity of loose shooks and staves in the hold capable of forming about 30 more casks. No certificate having been produced by the master from the Custom-house at the place from which he cleared outwards, stating that security had been given by the owners of such vessel that such quantity of casks should only be used for the reception of palm oil, or for other purposes of lawful commerce. About 9 casks of farinha, 13 casks of flour, 22 casks of biscuit, each cask supposed to contain 250 lbs., and 18 casks of salt meat, and being a much larger quantity of provisions than was requisite for the use of her crew.

3. That upon ascertaining these facts I returned on board the said steamer, and reported the same to the said Commander, who immediately caused the said barque to be seized by reason of her being equipped for and engaged in the Slave Trade, contrary to the provisions of the before-mentioned Treaty entered into between Great Britain and the Netherlands.

4. That the undermentioned papers and documents now produced were given or delivered up to the said Commander by the said master in my presence, viz.:—

No. 1. Muster-roll, dated Curaçao, 26th March, 1862.

No. 2. Muster-roll, dated Rotterdam, 21st August, 1862.

No. 3. Register, dated Curaçao, 26th March, 1862.

No. 4. Register, dated Rotterdam, 15th August, 1862; and Receipt for harbour dues, dated 15th August, 1862.

That the following papers also now produced were found by the said Commander in the baggage of the two passengers who were removed on board the said steamer to be landed at the Congo, at their own request, viz.:—

A, No. 1. Copy of charter-party of ship "Nightingale."

A, No. 2. List of cargo.

A, No. 3. Permit, dated Havana, 30th September, 1861.

And that the paper writing also now produced, marked A, No. 4, was given or delivered up by the supercargo, James R. Mellen, to the said Commander, from whom I received the whole of the said papers and documents; and that they are now in the same plight and condition as when received by me, without any fraud, addition, subtraction, alteration, or embezzlement whatever save the numbering and marking thereof.

5. That I was, after the seizure of the said vessel, placed on board, as prize officer, to navigate her to this port for adjudication, where I arrived on the 29th October.

6. That the several documents relating to the seizure also hereunto annexed, marked B and C, namely, a declaration of the seizure, and a certificate of the papers found on board, are, to the best of my knowledge and belief, true and genuine.

7. That no change has taken place in the said barque since the time of seizure, save and except the use of fuel and water on the passage up, the removal of the two passengers as aforesaid, and the burning of 120 shooks and staves for firewood, not knowing at that time that there was any on board; but upon subsequently removing some of the staves in the hold a very large quantity was found.

(Signed) P. J. MURRAY.

On the 1st day of November, 1862, the said deponent, Lieutenant Patrick James Murray, was duly sworn to the truth of this affidavit.

Before me,

Examination of the Master of the said Vessel on Standing and Standing Special Interrogatories.

In the case of the Netherlands barque "Jane," B. A. Prince Master. Monday, November 3, 1862.

B. A. Prince, master of the said vessel, being produced, sworn, and examined on standing and standing special interrogatories, depose and saith as follows, viz.:—He was born in Curaçao, and has always lived there. Is a Netherlands subject, and has never been the subject of any other State. Is married, and his family reside in Curaçao. That Michael Brown Gorsira appointed witness to the command of the vessel. He lives at Curaçao, and is a subject of the King of the Netherlands. Witness took possession of the detained vessel at Curaçao on the 25th March, 1862. Has known the detained vessel since 1861. First saw her at Curaçao. She is American-built. Witness was present when the vessel was seized. Does not know why she was detained. Sailed under the Netherlands flag, and had no others. The name of the detained vessel is "Jane." Has always borne that name to witness' knowledge. Does not know whether she has been called by any other name. She is 270 tons burden. There were 14 officers and mariners on board, exclusive of witness. There were 5 Germans, 2 French, 1 Spaniard, 2 Dutch, 1 Norwegian, 1 Danish, 1 North American, 1 South American. Seven were shipped at Curaçao by witness on the 26th March last, and seven at Rotterdam by the shipping master on the 21st August, 1862. Neither witness nor any of the officers or mariners had any interest in the vessel or her cargo. Was master on board. There were two passengers shipped at Rotterdam for River Congo. The said passengers were not secreted at the time of capture. One of them was called Dubois, a Belgian, and the other a Spaniard, by the name of Cabias, who was a clerk to Dubois. Witness does not know on what business the said passengers were going to the Congo. By their own will they were taken from the "Jane" by the Commander of the "Espoir" to be landed at the Congo. The said passengers had no concern or authority, directly or indirectly, regarding the detained vessel and cargo. There was a supercargo on board, an American, by the name of Mellen, who owned the cargo. That the present voyage began at Rotterdam, and was to have ended at St. Thomas, on the African coast. The last clearing port was Rotterdam. From thence the detained vessel went direct to Elmina, where she discharged some cargo. The destination of the vessel was altered to Elmina by the direction of the supercargo. After leaving Elmina the "Jane" went to a place called Quinsembo, to the south of River Congo, where some more cargo was discharged. That Her Majesty's ship "Espoir" was first seen on the morning of the 14th October last, standing for Point Padrone, where the detained vessel was at anchor, and capture took place on the morning of the 15th. That on the 10th of October, while the vessel was on her way to the River Congo, she was detained by Her Majesty's ship "Zebra," Commander Hoskins, who sent an officer with eight armed men on board, and with instructions to anchor the vessel off Point Padrone, while the "Zebra" went to the southward. She returned on the morning of the 14th, and released the "Jane;" when witness was told, at the same time, to go where he liked. The vessel was not, however, released above eight hours when she was captured by the "Espoir," which was at anchor about a mile and a-half from the "Jane." The detained vessel was bound to the River Congo when she was first captured by the "Zebra," and afterwards by the "Espoir." That there are no guns mounted on board, nor are there any arms or ammunition. No resistance was made at the time of capture. Had no instructions to destroy or conceal any of the ship's papers. Witness, however, refused, in the first instance, to deliver up the papers of the vessel to the searching officer, but was afterwards forced to give them up to the Commander of the "Espoir," who gave him a receipt for them. That Michael Brown Gorsira is the owner of the detained vessel. Witness knows it because it is so stated in the register. He is a subject of the Netherlands, and has always resided with his wife and family in Curaçao. That he does not know whether there was any bill of sale, nor when, where, or in whose presence it was executed, nor the price paid for the vessel. The detained vessel, if restored, will belong to the owner, Michael Brown Gorsira before-mentioned. That James R. Mellen, the supercargo, is the lader and owner of the cargo on board. He is an American, and witness believes he lives in New York. Witness first saw him in Curaçao, in the month of April last, when he chartered the vessel. The cargo was consigned to the supercargo, who was the owner, and if restored it will belong to him. The lading of the vessel on her last voyage was sugar, which was shipped at St. Jago de Cuba for Havre. From Havre the vessel went to Rotterdam to get permission to visit the coast of Africa; and which permission is endorsed on the register, and signed by both the Colonial and Exterior Ministers. The outward cargo consisted of provisions, which was shipped at Havre by the supercargo previous to the vessel visiting Rotterdam, at which last place bricks and gin were taken on board. Nearly all the outward cargo has been landed at Elmina and Quinsembo. Witness is certain that all the papers found on board the detained vessel are true and fair. Knows nothing to affect their credit. That no papers or other writings which were on board the vessel have been torn, thrown overboard, destroyed, or concealed, excepting the log-book, which is in witness' possession. That there are no papers or writings relative to the vessel and cargo in any other country to witness' knowledge. Believes that there was a charter-party between the supercargo and the owner of the ship, but witness has never seen it, nor knows its contents. Witness was told by the owner that the ship was chartered by the month to Mellen, and that he was to be under Mellen's orders. Witness knows that the ship is insured, but cannot say at what premium the insurance was effected. The vessel and cargo was under the direction of the supercargo with respect to her employment in trade. That bulk was broken at Elmina and Quinsembo, where nearly all the outward cargo was landed. That no slave or slaves have been shipped on board for the purpose of the Traffic in Slaves during the voyage. That no stores, sails, or any other articles whatever were taken out of the detained vessel at the time of capture. That no articles have been taken out of the detained vessel since her arrival at this port. The search of the detained vessel was conducted by Lieutenant Murray, of the "Espoir." Has been well treated.

Standing Special Interrogatories.

The hatches of the vessels are not fitted with open gratings. That the combings of the hatchways are not bored, nor are there any iron bars on board to fit them. That there are no divisions in the hold of the vessel. The cabin and forecabin are on deck. That there are about 12 or 13 planks on board for the use of the vessel; they are not numbered or fitted to any part of the vessel. There is no slave-deck laid. There were only two pairs of handcuffs on board for the sailors if they proved refractory. There are 23 water-casks on board for the use of the vessel, besides 20 casks belonging to the supercargo. Had no other means of conveying water. There are a few old staves which were used for dunnage when she carried sugar to Havre, and have been allowed to remain on board since. Some of these staves have been used for firewood. The whole of the casks are capable of containing 4,730 gallons. There were 15 casks of fresh water on board at the time of capture; the vessel was supplied with these casks in consequence of the length of the voyage, in which each seaman has to receive $1\frac{1}{2}$ gallon of water daily according to Dutch law. That there are no mess-tubs or kids on board. There are no iron or copper boilers on board, excepting a few saucepans for the use of the crew. To witness's knowledge there is a half-barrel of flour, a few barrels of biscuits, pork, beef and mackerel, also some codfish for the use of the vessel; likewise the under-mentioned articles which belong to the supercargo, viz:—

- | | |
|--|------------------------------------|
| L.—1 case, containing 100 tins soup à la Julienne. | 16 half-barrels family beef. |
| 2 ditto, containing 100 tins petit pois. | 4 jars containing 200 lbs. butter. |

Examination of the Supercargo on Standing and Standing Special Interrogatories.

In the case of the Netherlands barque "Jane," B. A. Prince Master. Monday, November 3, 1862.

James Robert Mellen, supercargo of the said vessel, being produced, sworn, and examined on standing and standing special interrogatories, deposed, and saith as follows, viz: That the name of the master of the detained vessel in Bernadus A. Prince; has known him since March last. He was born in Curaçao where he resides with his family. The owner, Michael B. Gorsira, appointed the master to the command of the vessel. Gorsira resides in Curaçao with his family. The vessel was taken possession of by the master at Curaçao in March last. Witness has known the detained vessel about the latter part of February last. Believes she is American built. Was present at the detention of the vessel. He does not know why she was detained. She sailed under Netherlands flag, and had no others on board. The name of the detained vessel is "Jane." Does not know how long she has borne that name, nor whether she has been called by any other name. She is 270 tons burthen. There were 14 officers and mariners on board, exclusive of the master: they were mostly Dutchmen. Some of them were shipped at Havre by the Dutch Consul, and others at Rotterdam by the shipping master. Witness has interest both in the vessel and cargo. Does not know whether any of the officers or mariners had. Was supercargo on board. There were two passengers on board, one by the name of William Dubois, a Belgian, and Theodore, who is a native of France. The said passengers were taken on board at Rotterdam for River Congo, where they have a factory at a place called Landana. At their own request the passengers were taken from the "Jane" by the Commander of the "Espoir," to be landed at Landana. The voyage commenced at Havre, and was to have ended either at Curaçao or at a port of discharge in Europe. Rotterdam was the last clearing port whence she sailed for St. Thomas and the coast of Guinea. The detained vessel went direct from Rotterdam to Elmina, where she discharged some cargo; afterwards she went to Quinsembo, about three miles from Ambriz, where some more cargo was also landed. The vessel touched at the above places for trading purposes. The detained vessel was in the first instance seized by Her Majesty's ship "Zebra," Commander Hoskins, about twenty-five miles south of Point Padrone on the 9th or 10th October last, when an officer and crew were put on board of her. She was then anchored about five or six miles off Point Padrone for five or six days, when she was released by the "Zebra," and on the following day she was captured by the "Espoir" while at anchor in company with Her Majesty's ships "Antelope," "Torch," and "Zebra." The vessel being bound to St. Thomas and the coast of Guinea, her course was always in that direction when the weather permitted. Witness does not consider that the vessel was sailing beyond her destination at the time of capture. There are no guns on board, nor are there any arms or ammunition, excepting one pistol. No resistance was made at the time of capture, nor were there any instructions to destroy or refuse to deliver up any of the ship's papers. Michael B. Gorsira is the owner of the detained vessel. Knows it from his acquaintance with Mr. Gorsira. He is a Dutchman and resides with his family at Curaçao, of which place he is a native. Witness believes that there must have been a bill of sale made to the owner of the vessel, but cannot tell when, where, and in whose presence it was executed, nor the price paid for the vessel. The vessel, if restored, will belong to Gorsira. Witness is the lader, owner, and consignee of the cargo on board the "Jane." He is a native of the Confederate States of America, where he and his family have resided for some years. The cargo was to be disposed of at the ports on the coast of Africa for the benefit of witness, and if restored will belong to him. The lading of the vessel on her last voyage was sugar, which was shipped at St. Jago de Cuba for Havre. The present cargo was a general one, part of which was shipped at Havre in transit for St. Thomas and the coast of Guinea, and part at Rotterdam, to be disposed of at the best advantage. There are about 2,000 dollars worth of cargo on board, but the rest has been landed at Elmina and Quinsembo for trade. That all the papers found on board the detained vessel are entirely true and fair. Knows of nothing to affect their credit. That no bills of lading, letters, or other writings which were on board at the time she took her departure from the last clearing port have been burnt, torn, thrown overboard, destroyed, cancelled, or concealed, except the manifest of some of the cargo shipped at Havre, which is in possession of witness. That there are some bills of lading relative to the cargo left at Elmina and Quinsembo. There was no charter-party signed for the voyage, but witness had a written agreement with the owner on shares of 75 per cent. to himself from the earnings of the ship, and 25 per cent. to the owner. From witness' share he is to pay the wages of the officers and crew, and all port charges and expenses. This agreement was signed some time in March last, and was left at the Custom-house at Curaçao. The vessel was insured in Holland at $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. premium. The cargo was not insured. The vessel was under the management of the master, but the cargo was under witness's control. Bulk was broken at Elmina and Quinsembo. That no slave or slaves have been put on board for the purpose of the Traffic in Slaves during the voyage. That no stores or any other articles were taken out of the detained vessel at the time of capture. That nothing has been removed from her since her arrival in this port. That Lieutenant Murray and the Paymaster conducted the search of the vessel. He has been well treated.

Standing Special Interrogatories.

That the hatches of the vessel are not fitted with open gratings. The combings of the hatches are not bored or otherwise fitted to receive iron bars or bolts, nor are there any iron bars on board. There is a little store-room abaft the cabin, which is on deck together with the fore-castle. There are about 10 or 12 boards on board for the ship's use; they are not numbered nor fitted to any part of the vessel. That there is a slave-deck laid. There are no shackles, bolts, nor handcuffs on board. That there are about 42 water-casks on board for the use of the vessel. These casks are capable of containing about 4,000 gallons of water. She had no other means of conveying water. There are a few staves which were used for dunnage and firewood. That there are no mess kids nor tubs on board. There are no copper or iron boilers on board, except a few saucepans used in the galley for the officers and crew. There are about 15 barrels of flour, 21 casks of bread, 8 or 10 barrels of beef and pork, and small cabin stores; the bread was for sale, but the rest of the provisions was for the use of the vessel.

In the case of the Netherlands barque "Jane," B. A. Prince Master. Tuesday, November 4, 1862.

William Kierulf, mate of the said vessel, being produced, sworn, and examined on standing and special interrogatories, deposes, and saith as follows, viz:—That the name of the master of the detained vessel is B. A. Prince. Has known him about six months ago. To witness' knowledge the said master was born at Curaçao, where he lives with his wife and family. Witness believes that the master was appointed to the command of the vessel by the owner, who resides in Curaçao. Possession was given to the said master in March last, when witness saw the detained vessel for the first time. He does not know where she was built. He was present at the seizure of the vessel. Does not know why she was detained. She sailed under Netherlands flag, and had no others on board. That the name of the detained vessel is "Jane." She has borne that name since witness joined her. He does not know whether she has been called by any other name. She is 270 tons burthen. There were 14 officers and mariners on board, exclusive of the muster and supercargo; 2 were West Indians, 2 French, and the remainder Dutch and Danes. The supercargo belongs to the Southern States of North America. Some were shipped in Curaçao by the master, and some at Havre by the shipping master, but they were all re-shipped at Rotterdam. That neither he nor any of the officers or mariners had any interest in the vessel or cargo to his knowledge. Was chief mate on board. There were two passengers who joined the vessel at Rotterdam, and were bound to the coast; but witness does not know to what particular part. One of the passengers was called Dubois, and the other Cabias. They were either Belgians or Frenchmen. He does not know whether the said passengers had any interest in the vessel or cargo. The present voyage began at Rotterdam, and was to have ended either at Curaçao or some port in Europe. The detained vessel cleared from Rotterdam for the coast of Guinea, and proceeded direct to Elmina and Quinsembo, at which places some of the cargo was landed. That the vessel was in the first instance seized by Her Majesty's ship "Zebra," Commander Hoskins, about 25 miles off the mouth of the River Congo, who ordered her to be anchored off Point Padrone, and detained her for five or six days. After overhauling the ship she was released. The next morning she was again detained by Her Majesty's ship "Espoir," which was lying at anchor about two miles from the "Jane." Witness does not consider that at the time of capture the vessel was sailing beyond her destination, because she was bound to the coast. That there are no guns mounted on board, neither were there any arms or ammunition. No resistance was made at the time of capture, nor were there any instructions to destroy, conceal, or refuse to deliver up any of the ship's papers. Mr. Gorsira is the owner of the detained vessel. Witness heard in Curaçao that he was the owner. Gorsira is a Dutchman, and lives in Curaçao with his wife. Witness does not know whether any bill of sale was made to the aforesaid owner, nor does he know the amount paid for the vessel. Believes that the vessel, if restored, will belong to Gorsira. The supercargo is the lader of the cargo shipped on board the vessel, who has the entire control over it, but he does not know to whom it belongs. Does not know to whom the cargo will belong if restored. The lading of the vessel on her last voyage was sugar, which was shipped at St. Jago de Cuba for Havre. The present cargo is a general one, shipped partly in Havre, and partly in Rotterdam by the supercargo. To witness' knowledge all the papers found on board the detained vessel are entirely true and fair; knows of nothing to affect their credit. No papers belonging to the vessel have been destroyed, concealed, or made away with, to witness' knowledge. He does not know whether there are any papers belonging to the detained vessel in any other country. That he does not know whether there was any charter-party signed for the voyage. He does not know whether the vessel and cargo are insured. The management of the vessel in regard to her trade was between the supercargo and the master. Bulk was broken at Elmina and Quinsembo, at which places a good deal of the cargo was landed. That no slaves or slave have been put on board for the purpose of the Traffic in Slaves during the voyage. That no stores or any other articles were taken out of the detained vessel at the time of capture. That nothing has been removed from her since her arrival here. That the rank of the officer who conducted the search was a lieutenant. He has been well treated.

Standing Special Interrogatories.

That the hatches of the vessel are not fitted with open gratings. That the combings of the hatchways are not bored, nor are there any iron bars on board to fit them. That there are no divisions in the hold of the vessel. The cabin and fore-castle are on deck. There are about 14 planks on board for the carpenter's use, but they are not numbered nor fitted to any part of the vessel. There is no slave-deck laid. That there are two or three pairs of handcuffs on board for the sailors. There are about 45 water-casks on board. Had no other means of conveying water. There are no tanks, but some staves which were used for dunnage when she had cargo, and afterwards for firewood. The 45 casks are capable of containing about 3,000 gallons of water. There are no mess kids or tubs on board. There is no copper or iron boiler on board, except what is used in the galley for the officers and crew. There are about 10 barrels of flour, about 12 barrels of pork and beef, 21 barrels of bread, 1 box codfish and preserved meats; all (except the bread, which is for sale) are for the use of the officers and crew.

And he further maketh oath that Michael Brown Gorsira, of Curaçao, a subject of His said Most Faithful Majesty, was at the time of the said capture, and now is, the true, lawful, and sole owner and proprietor of the said barque, her tackle, apparel, and furniture. And that James Robert Mellen, an inhabitant of the Confederate States of America, native of Savannah, Georgia, is the sole owner and proprietor of her said cargo. And the deponent further maketh oath that he verily believes the said barque and cargo are protected by the Treaty and Convention between His said Britannic Majesty and His said Most Faithful Majesty, and he further maketh oath that no person or persons other than the persons before-mentioned have any right, title, or interest in the said barque, her tackle, apparel and furniture, goods, wares, and merchandize on board the same at the time of capture and seizure thereof, and that he is duly authorized to make the claim hereunto annexed, and that the same is a true and just claim, and that he shall be able to make due proof and specification thereof.

Examination of the Master on Special Interrogatories.

In the case of the Netherlands barque "Jane," B. A. Prince Master. Thursday, November 13, 1862.

The master of the said vessel, being produced, sworn, and examined on special interrogatories put on behalf of the captors by permission of the Judges of the said Court, deposeth, and saith as follows, viz:—That he produces the log-book which he kept on the passage. It was asked for by the captors whilst inspecting the papers of the detained vessel; but they did not take it from him, nor did he refuse to deliver it up. That after touching at St. Thomas, which was the port of destination, the detained vessel was to have come to the Coast of Africa by directions of the supercargo. But while at sea the supercargo changed his mind, and ordered the vessel to be taken to Elmina. That the manifest of the cargo shipped at Havre for St. Thomas in transit for Rotterdam was signed by witness, for the supercargo, to whom it was delivered; it was not therefore in his possession to give it up to the captors at the time of seizure. There was no manifest of the bricks and gin shipped at Rotterdam. That the clearance of the barque from Rotterdam for St. Thomas was, according to law, lodged at the Custom-house at Helvoetsluys, where an endorsement to that effect was made on the register of the vessel on the 23rd of August last, and signed by the Chief Officer of the Customs. There was no clearance from Elmina.

This examination was taken, and the truth thereof sworn to.

Examination of the Supercargo on Special Interrogatories.

In the case of the Netherlands barque "Jane," B. A. Prince Master. Friday, November 14, 1862,

The supercargo of the said vessel, being produced, sworn, and examined on special interrogatories put on behalf of the captors by permission of the Judges of the said Court, deposes, and saith as follows, viz.:—That wines, brandy, and provisions were landed at Elmina and Quinsembo. At the former port the cargo was left for sale under the care of William Ames, an American, who resides there; and at the latter place it was also left for sale under the care of John R. Lovitt. He was to receive money and produce in exchange for it. The detained vessel was to have gone from Congo to St. Thomas, and the payment of the cargo was to be received on the return voyage up the coast. There was no bill of lading, but he left invoices of such cargo as was landed at Elmina and Quinsembo with the parties already mentioned. He received receipts for the cargo landed, and will produce them.* That he will produce the manifest of the cargo shipped at Havre. There was no manifest of the cargo shipped at Rotterdam. At the time of seizure witness was asked for the manifest of the cargo shipped at Rotterdam, but not for that shipped at Havre. That he has not a copy of the agreement entered into with the owner of the "Jane," but it was therein stipulated that witness was to have the entire use of the vessel on a trading voyage to go where he liked for twelve months, during which time if witness chartered the vessel to any one, the owner was to receive 25 per cent. of her freight money, he (witness) paying all the expenses of the ship; but if the vessel was loaded by witness he was to pay the owner 800 dollars per month, the owner paying the expenses. There was no other condition of any importance to witness' recollection. That the clearance of the barque from Rotterdam is on the register of the ship. There was a clearance from Elmina on a small slip of paper which is somewhere on board the vessel, and which he will look for and deliver into Court.* That the vessel having cleared for St. Thomas and the Coast, it was optional as to which she first touched at. That the vessel went to the River Congo to dispose of the remaining cargo, as well as to look for freight. That the bricks on board were for sale.

This examination was taken, and the truth thereof sworn to.

Surveyors' Report.

Mixed Court of Justice, Colony of Sierra Leone.

In the case of the Netherlands barque "Jane," whereof B. A. Prince was Master.

To their Honour's the Judges of the said Court.

In pursuance of a Commission of Survey and Inspection to us directed, dated 4th day of November, 1862, we proceeded on board the said vessel "Jane" on the 6th day of November, and found her fitted with the usual fore, main, and after-hatchways, also a small circular scuttle abaft the cabin house leading down into a store room. On opening the hatches and going down into the hold, we found the fore-hold encumbered with a quantity of bricks, which prevented our getting to the floor or ceiling of the vessel; these we requested might be shifted into the fore-peak, which being occupied by a small quantity of shooks or staves, we examined. In the main-hold we found several tons of flint for ballast, at the fore part of which was stowed a number of water-casks of various sizes; some were filled with fresh and some with salt water, for ballast. We found a stringer running fore and aft the hold, forming part of the permanent structure of the vessel, as also four beams; the height between the upper part of which and the lower part of the upper deck beams measured 3 feet 9½ inches, being well adapted to the purpose of laying a slave-deck. We found no bulkhead of partition in the hold; the hatchways were fitted with close hatches as usual in merchant-ships. We found no gratings, nor any appearance in the combings of the hatches of their having been fitted to receive gratings.

November 7th. We again proceeded on board the "Jane," and examined the main-hold down to the floor, lifting limber boards on both sides the keelson, the flint ballast having been cleared away as recommended yesterday. Gauged 20 water-casks varying from 105 to 184½ gallons, which we found capable of containing in all 2,601 gallons.

November 8th. We again proceeded on board the "Jane," and found on deck 18 casks capable of containing water which had been hoisted out of the after hold; these we gauged and found they would contain 126 gallons each, or a total of 2,268 gallons. We also found three casks full of fresh water in the after-hold, which on gauging we found to contain respectively 122½, 126½, 245 gallons. We also found and counted 1,920 loose staves of casks, average length 46 inches, which if set up, and allowing 22 to the puncheon, would furnish 87 puncheons.

Recapitulation.

	Gallons.
20 casks various sizes	2,601
18 empty and three full	2,762
87 puncheons, not set up	8,700
Total	14,063

* No such papers were produced.

November 10th. Again proceeded on board the "Jane," and hoisted on deck 21 casks of biscuits, which we weighed, and found to vary from 533 lbs. to 700 lbs. gross. Finding the weights differ so much without a corresponding difference in the size of the casks to account for it, we deemed it necessary to open and empty some of the casks.

November 14th. Proceeded on board the "Jane." Opened, and weighed and emptied five casks of biscuit; taking the lightest, the heaviest, and three intermediate weights, they proved to contain nothing but biscuit. The empty casks we weighed to obtain tare, which proved 104 lbs. each cask; this tare allowed on 21 casks gives 2,184 lbs., which, deducted from the gross weight, 12,345 lbs., leaves the net weight of biscuit 10,161 lbs. This quantity of bread would furnish a crew of sixteen men, at the rate of 1 lb. per man per diem, with bread for 635 days. We also found on board the following articles of provisions:—

	No.
Flour in barrels	8
Ditto $\frac{1}{2}$ barrels	9
Biscuit in barrels	5
Beef in $\frac{1}{2}$ barrels	17
Pork in barrels	6

This terminates the survey, and we do hereby declare that we have made this inspection and survey fairly, minutely, and conscientiously, to which we are prepared to make affidavit.

Given under our hands in Freetown, in the Colony aforesaid, this 17th day of November, 1862.

Affidavit of William Paterson in support of the Claim.

In the case of the Netherlands barque "Jane," Bernadus Antony Prince Master.

Appeared, personally, William Paterson, captain of the barque "Nereid," who maketh oath and saith:—That in the morning of the 25th instant, together with Captain Robert Smith, of the barque "Bangalore," he went on board the Netherlands barque "Jane," Bernadus Antony Prince Master, and carefully examined the four beams in the hold of the said vessel. That they are necessary for the proper security of the masts; he believes they were built with the ship. The top of them is about $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet from the deck, and there are 31 feet 3 inches between the after beam at the foremast and the forebeam at the mainmast. He has been twelve years at sea. In his opinion they are not suitable to lay a slave-deck on. The foremast and mainmast of every vessel of that size requires wedging between decks, and it is necessary to have such beams for that purpose. These masts are secured in the usual way with wedges. There is a second lining in the vessel that runs up from the sister kelson to the bottom of these beams for the purpose of preserving the cargo dry. It is made of inch pine boards; the ceiling comes up as high as the bottom of the said beams. The top of this second lining is not suitable to lay a deck on. In his opinion it would be impossible to lay a deck on this ledge. He surveyed some wooden-bound casks that were on the deck and were pointed out to him by the supercargo of the said vessel; he did not count them—he thinks there were about 18; they were damaged; the heads were out; the hoops damaged; every one more or less damaged; they were empty. They were not capable of holding water, they could not be made capable of holding water they are so far damaged.

(Signed) WILLIAM PATERSON.

On the 25th day of November, 1862, the said William Paterson was duly sworn to the truth of this affidavit.

Affidavit of Robert Smith in support of the Claim.

In the case of the Netherlands barque "Jane," Bernadus Antony Prince Master.

Appeared, personally, Robert Smith, captain of the barque "Bangalore," who maketh oath and saith:—That on the morning of the 25th instant he, together with Captain Paterson, of the barque "Nereid," went on board the Netherlands barque "Jane," Bernadus Antony Prince Master, and carefully examined the four beams in the hold of the said vessel, two of which are placed to secure the foremast, and two to secure the mainmast. That such beams are absolutely necessary, and are in every vessel to secure the mast. That from the top of the said beams to the deck is 4 feet 6 inches, and from the afterbeam of the foremast to the forebeam of the mainmast is 31 feet 3 inches. The beams are about 9 inches in depth. There is a second lining in the said vessel which runs from the sister kelson up to the bottom of the said beams. The lining is made of inch pine boards; this lining is put on for the purpose of preserving the cargo dry. The top of the ledge of the ceiling is just the width of the plank, about an inch. To lay a deck on the beams would require planks 36 feet long and other beams. If a deck was laid on the beams, and deck also on the ledge of the ceiling, this latter deck would only have 9 inches in height. He does not think the ledge suitable to lay a deck on. Last August twelve months he left Montreal with a cargo of grain in bulk in the vessel he now commands, and she was lined in a similar manner, but from the keel up to the deck all over. He saw on the deck of the said vessel a lot of wooden-bound casks. The supercargo of the said vessel pointed them out to him. None of them are capable of holding water. They are all damaged more or less. They are not water-casks. They are what he should call bread-casks. They were all standing on their heads,—they had no water in. He has been twenty-five years at sea. He would not, under any circumstances, purchase such casks for holding water not for his ship.

On the 25th day of November, 1862, the said Robert Smith was duly sworn to the truth of this affidavit.

Before me,
(Signed) WM. SMITH, Registrar.

Affidavit of the Master in support of the Claim.

In the case of the Netherlands barque "Jane," B. A. Prince Master.

Appeared, personally, Bernadus Antony Prince, master of the said vessel, who maketh oath and saith :—

1. That he has been engaged on the sea for twenty-one years, and has been master of several vessels for the last thirteen years sailing under the Netherlands flag.

2. That it is customary in Netherlands vessels to allow to the crew and people on board (and this deponent in the said vessels that he has commanded has always done so) such quantity of water to each person as he may require, without regard to measurement.

3. That by law a Netherlands vessel is required to ship sufficient quantity of water to allow to each person on board two gallons per day during the voyage.

4. That he believes that the majority of the vessels from Rotterdam to St. Thomas are more than eighty days on the voyage, and that it would be proper on such a voyage to have on board sufficient water for ninety days; and that it is customary for Netherlands vessels on such a voyage to have sufficient water for ninety days or more.

5. That when the said vessel, the "Jane," left Rotterdam the water for the use of the crew was contained in 23 iron-bound water-casks, which he estimates as containing 2,800 gallons, being about the quantity required by law for a voyage of ninety days for the persons on board the said vessel.

6. That the said vessel had a very quick passage from Rotterdam to the place where she was seized by Her Majesty's vessel "Espoir," and that at that time she had remaining six casks of water only.

7. That on the 21st of this present month of November, which is about ninety days from the day of her leaving Rotterdam, she had about half a cask of water remaining.

8. That the ledge or stringer round the hold of the said vessel referred to by the evidence in this case is part of the permanent structure of the vessel, and is the top of an extra ceiling which is in the said vessel, and which is very common in vessels. That he has often seen the same sort of lining in other vessels, which is placed in for the purpose of keeping the cargo dry, and preserving the lining and the bottom of the ship from being injured. That the said lining was not put in the said vessel for the purpose of laying a slave-deck, and he believes it could not be used for that purpose, and would be perfectly useless for any slave-deck that might be laid on the beams.

9. That he has seen the four beams referred to in the report of survey in this case, and that these beams were not put in the vessel for the purpose of laying a slave-deck, but for better securing the fore and mainmasts. That two of the said beams are placed one before and the other aft the foremast close to the mast, and heavy knees are bolted fast to the beams forming a socket or hole through which the mast runs, and the other two beams, in the same way, secure the mainmast. That the greater number of ships about the same tonnage of the "Jane" have beams of similar description. That he believes that there is about 40 feet between the foremast and the mainmast.

10. That he shipped on board the said vessel on the 25th March last, at Curaçao, at which time there was no salt taken on board, and he found the staves referred to in the Report of Survey in this case, with others which have been used for fuel, in the hold of the said vessel; and he believes they had been used for dunnage in some former voyage and left there.

11. That he began loading her cargo of salt on the 27th of March last, and he caused the said staves to be laid on the bottom of the vessel for dunnage for the salt to be stowed on.

12. That after the salt was discharged they remained in the vessel, and were used also for dunnage in stowing the cargo of sugar at St. Jago. That after the said cargo of sugar was discharged they remained in the said vessel, and were used for dunnage, and many were used for fuel. That the greater part of the said staves are old staves; there are some good among them, and it would require as many as thirty to make a ton butt. That the said staves are not the property of J. R. Mellen, the supercargo, and were not shipped on board by him or taken or kept on board for any illegal purpose whatsoever, but solely in the manner and for the purpose above stated.

13. That he was unable at Havre to get any other ballast than sand, which is very bad ballast, and liable to get through the planking and injure the bottom of the vessel and stop the limbers. That this deponent obtained from another vessel discharging ballast at Havre the flint stone ballast found in the said vessel and referred to in the evidence of this case; and this deponent finding that the said flint stones were not sufficient ballast for the said vessel, and being unable to obtain other ballast than sand, the remaining quantity of ballast required was placed in the said twenty-one casks wooden-bound referred to in the said evidence. That the said twenty-one casks were shipped on board for that purpose, and for no other purpose, and that they were not fit to carry water, the water having leaked out from the majority of them. That the said last-mentioned casks are common bread casks, the staves and hoops being slight, and he believes it would be impossible to make them capable of holding palm oil. That in the present state they are not capable of holding water, the greater part of them fell into pieces when they were taken out of the hold of the said vessel; and this deponent believes that none of the said last-mentioned twenty-one casks were capable of holding water when the said vessel was seized by Patrick James Murray, Lieutenant of the "Espoir," on the 15th of October last.

14. That there was no manifest given at Rotterdam, and no other clearance than that endorsed on the register of the said ship, which is filed in the office of this Honourable Court. That the receipts and permits and accounts of and relating to the goods shipped at Rotterdam were delivered up to the Chief Officer of the Customs at Helvoetsluys, in accordance with the customs and law at that place.

15. That there is no farinha on board the said vessel, and never has been during the said voyage.

16. That in answer to the 8th standing special interrogatory this deponent stated "that the present voyage began at Rotterdam, and was to have ended at St. Thomas, on the African coast;" and in answer to the 2nd special interrogatory on the 13th of November, 1862, this deponent saith, "that after touching at St. Thomas, which was the port of destination, the detained vessel was to have come to the coast of Africa." And this deponent saith that, upon reading the said two answers and the interrogatories to which they are respectively answered he finds that he misunderstood the interrogatories. That the voyage began at Curaçao under an agreement with J. R. Mellen, supercargo and hirer of the said vessel. That when she sailed with salt from Curaçao to St. Jago this deponent did not know where she would go from St. Jago, that was to be determined by the said J. R. Mellen; in like manner when she left St. Jago this deponent did not know where she would go; and in like manner when she left Rotterdam it was impossible for this deponent to know, and in fact he did not know at what place the said voyage would have ended, because that depended on the determination of the said J. R. Mellen.

17. That although the clearance of the said ship states that the vessel is bound to St. Thomas and the coast of Africa, yet this deponent believes that it was at the option of the said J. R. Mellen to take the vessel to any port on the coast of Africa, there to load her and to return to Europe.

18. That it is not correct to say therefore that the voyage was to have ended at St. Thomas, or that after touching at St. Thomas, which was the port of destination, the said vessel was to have come to the coast of Africa; her destination was any port that the said J. R. Mellen might have thought proper to have entered without touching at St. Thomas. Her voyage commenced at Curaçao, and would have ended at Curaçao or at any Dutch port.

19. That this deponent was not on shore at Elmina; that J. R. Mellen, the supercargo of the said vessel, did not tell him he had a clearance, and he never asked the said supercargo if he had obtained a clearance from Elmina; and when this deponent on the 13th of November instant said, in answer to the special interrogatories filed in this cause, that there was no clearance from Elmina, he should have said instead of that answer, not to his (this deponent's) knowledge, there was no clearance.

20. That this deponent believes that if the "Jane" was engaged in the Slave Trade she could have taken a cargo of 800 slaves; that the average length of a voyage from Guinea to Cuba is forty-five days; that each slave would have required at least one gallon of water per day; that it would have been necessary to have 36,000 gallons of water for the slaves alone, which would have required from 275 to 300 casks, in addition to the water that would have been required for the use of the crew, viz., about 1,350 gallons, or say 2,000 gallons, which would have required about fifteen casks additional, making a total of 315 casks required.

21. That the water-casks found in the hold of the said vessel, and at the fore part of the flint-stone ballast, and referred to in the report of the surveyors in this case, dated 17th November, 1862, as having been there found by them, some filled with fresh and some with salt water, for ballast, were seventeen of the iron-bound water-casks mentioned in the evidence of this case which were filled with salt water, having been so filled after the fresh water had been used out of the said casks, and also thirty of the said wooden-bound casks referred to in the evidence of this cause, which this deponent believes were empty, and this deponent does not believe that any of the said twenty casks contained fresh water.

(Signed) B. A. PRINCE.

On the 27th day of November, 1862, the said Bernadus Antony Prince was duly sworn to the truth of this affidavit.

Before me,
(Signed) WM. SMITH, Registrar.

Affidavit of the Supercargo in support of the Claim.

Appeared personally James Robert Mellen, supercargo of the said vessel, and maketh oath and saith:—

1. That the ledge around the hold of the said vessel, referred to in the affidavit of seizure of Patrick James Murray, Lieutenant of Her Majesty's steam-ship "Espoir," is the same as the stringer running fore and aft the hold of the said vessel, and referred to in the Report of the Surveyors dated 17th November, 1862, and is the top of an extra ceiling, so called by shipwrights, and is made of planks running from the keel up the sides of the ship, forming a second lining, for the purpose of keeping the cargo dry, and further from the water, and also for the purpose of preserving the first lining and the bottom of the ship from being injured by the cargo, and is built in and forms part of the permanent structure of the vessel. That for fifteen years past he has had considerable experience amongst shipping; every ship has not such second casing, but a large proportion of them have, and there is nothing in the second casing of this vessel different from what he has repeatedly seen in other vessels.

2. That he has seen the four beams referred to in the said Report of Survey; that they form part of the permanent structure of the vessel, and are heavy beams put in the ship for the purpose of securing the ship; that two of the said beams are placed one before and the other aft the foremast close to the mast, and heavy knees are bolted fast to the beams, forming a socket or hold through which the mast runs, and the other two of the said beams are in like manner placed close to the mainmast of the said vessel. That such beams are so placed and for the same purpose, viz., for securing the masts in single-decked vessels, such as the "Jane," and in vessels of larger and smaller tonnage; that they are usual, and he has repeatedly seen them in such vessels. That the said beams were not put in the vessel for the purpose of forming a slave-deck; that he believes there is full forty feet between the foremast and mainmast of the said vessel, and that if planks were to be laid from one beam to the other for the purpose of a slave-deck, the said ledge or stringer could be of no use whatever in laying the said deck. That the said ledge cannot be correctly called a stringer, and is nothing but the top of the said ceiling. That the depth of the hold of the said vessel is 12 feet.

3. That the twenty iron-bound casks on board the said vessel belong to the said ship, and were on board the said vessel when he shipped at Curaçao, and were filled with fresh water for the use of the vessel, and he believes they contained no more than the necessary and usual quantity of water supplied to vessels on a voyage from the West Indies to Europe.

4. When the said vessel left Curaçao she was loaded with salt on freight, which was consigned to merchants at St. Jago de Cuba and there discharged, and the cargo of sugar was then shipped. That the staves found on board the said vessel were used as dunnage for the said cargo of salt as well as for the said cargo of sugar, and were no more than necessary for that purpose. That the said cargo of salt was stored in bulk and laid on mats, which mats were laid on the said staves. That the said cargo of sugar was in hogsheads, and the said staves having been left in the said vessel when the said cargo of salt was discharged were used as dunnage for the said sugar; and when the said cargo of sugar was discharged at Havre they were left in the said ship, together with many others that during the last six weeks of the voyage were used as fuel. That the said staves are not his property, and belonged to the ship, and were on board the said ship when he shipped at Curaçao, and he believes they have been formerly used as dunnage.

5. That the twenty-one other casks referred to in the said Report of Survey are his property, and are old bread casks, and were shipped at Havre, and filled with fresh and salt water, and stowed in the bottom of the ship for ballast. That the flint-stone found on board the said vessel as ballast was put on board the said vessel at Havre, and taken out of a vessel there discharging ballast. That he took all the flint he could obtain out of the said vessel, and there was no other ballast than sand to be obtained at Havre. That sand is bad ballast, and runs between the timbers of a ship and chokes the limbers, and, therefore, the twenty-one casks of water were shipped as ballast with water. That the said twenty-one casks are unfit to carry water, are not water-casks, and are not capable of holding water. That when they were taken out of the hold in the harbour of Freetown a great many of them fell to pieces; the water was out with the exception of a few gallons remaining in some of them. That the said casks are bound with wooden hoops, and could not be set up without new hoops, the staves being thin and unsuitable for water-casks. That the said twenty-one casks were so shipped on board and filled with water for no other purpose whatever. That twenty-two of the said staves would not make a puncheon, it would require from twenty-eight to thirty. That, in their present state, they are not capable of holding water, the greater part of them fell into pieces when they were taken out of the hold of the said vessel; and this deponent states that he believes that none of the said last-mentioned twenty-one casks were capable of holding water when the said vessel was seized by Patrick James Murray, Lieutenant of the "Espoir," on the 15th October last. That it would be impossible to make any such twenty-one bread-casks capable of holding palm-oil. That when the said twenty-one casks were so shipped by him at Havre he did not obtain from the Custom-house at Rotterdam, the place from which the said vessel cleared outwards, a certificate that such casks were only to be used for the reception of palm-oil, because, as stated above, it would be impossible to make any such casks capable of holding palm-oil, and for the same reason he did not suggest or advise the master of the said vessel to obtain such certificate.

6. That after discharging the said cargo of sugar at Havre, he endeavoured to obtain freight from Havre to the West Indies or other place. That there was no freight at Havre that would pay, and he then determined to take merchandize on his own account to trade, and look for freight on the Western Coast of Africa. That in consequence of such determination he purchased cargo for such trade at Havre (and the said vessel having a Colonial register upon which was an endorsement to the effect that she was not allowed on the Coast of Guinea, or through the Straits of Gibraltar), he proceeded with the said vessel to Rotterdam, to obtain permission from the King of the Netherlands to proceed with such vessel on the said voyage, which consent is endorsed on the register now filed in this Honourable Court, duly signed by the Foreign and Colonial Ministers.

7. That there is no farinha on board the said vessel, and he conceives that the said Patrick James Murray must have made a mistake in his said affidavit of seizure, in which he swears that he found nine casks of farinha on board the said vessel, such being impossible, as there was no farinha in casks, or in any other receptacle on board the said vessel.

8. That he purchased and shipped at Rotterdam with other cargo, 20,000 bricks, and also some gin. That the said bricks are still in the said vessel, and were purchased solely for trade. That he had not sold any when the said vessel was seized, as he had found no person who wanted to buy them. That he received for the passage money from Rotterdam of the two passengers, the one named Dubois, and the other named Cabias, from Bernadus Antony Prince, the Master of the said vessel to whom it was paid, the sum of 750 guilders, the said persons having taken their passages at Rotterdam, and being otherwise than as passengers entirely unconnected with him, the said vessel, or the said voyage.

9. An Officer of Customs, as is the practice at Rotterdam, was put on board the vessel when she first went into the canal, and he remained on board until the ship passed out of the canal again, and as the ship was loading he kept an account of the goods taken on board, and as the duties were paid, permits and receipts were given by the broker to the master, and a paper of clearance from Rotterdam to Helvoetsluys, and all these documents were given up at Helvoetsluys to the Chief Officer of Customs, who endorsed on the register the clearance for sea. That vessels coming out from Rotterdam with cargo to the West Coast of Africa do not obtain a manifest from the Custom-house; there was accordingly no manifest of the cargo shipped at Rotterdam, obtained at Rotterdam or Helvoetsluys.

10. That when he left Rotterdam it was his wish to clear the vessel in such form as would enable him to enter any place on the Coast of Africa that he might consider most desirable for trading purposes, and he considers that under the clearance obtained he was at liberty to proceed, before touching at St. Thomas, to any place he might have desired. That he took the vessel to Quinsembo, considering that place was likely to have afforded the best market, and for the same reason he was proceeding to the River Congo, and intended from thence to have gone to St. Thomas, when the said vessel was seized as aforesaid.

11. That in answer to the 7th special interrogatory, he stated that he had an interest in the cargo and vessel, and this deponent states that he has no interest whatever in the vessel further than under his agreement with the owner of the said vessel, for the use of the said vessel during the present voyage. That he is not the owner, nor has any part or share as owner of the said vessel, nor is there any agreement between himself and the owner that he is to purchase the vessel.

12. That the substance of the agreement between himself and the owner is, that if the vessel was to be loaded by him he is to pay the owner 800 dollars per month, the owner paying the ship's expenses, and that if the vessel was employed in taking freight he, this deponent, was to pay the ship's expenses, and 75 per cent. on the freight, and the owner 25 per cent.

13. That by the ship's articles filed in this Honourable Court, to which this deponent begs leave to refer, the seamen were to be discharged either at Curaçao or a port of discharge in Europe, upon the determination of the voyage.

14. That by the clearance of the said ship at Rotterdam, the said voyage was not to have ended at St. Thomas or at any particular port on the Coast of Africa, and this deponent believes that he was at liberty to have taken the ship, as best suited his mercantile interest, to any place on the Coast of Africa.

15. That B. A. Prince, the Master of the said ship, was not on shore at Elmina; that the clearance from Elmina was upon a small piece of paper, and was with the receipts of the cargo of the said vessel in a small portfolio, which was usually kept in this deponent's trunk in his cabin, and was there when the said vessel was seized as aforesaid by the said P. J. Murray. That the day after the said seizure he left the said portfolio on the cabin table where this deponent was writing, and he has been informed by the steward of the said vessel that he put the said portfolio and its contents in the trunk of one of the said passengers believing it was his property, and the same trunk together with the portfolio was taken on board of the "Espoir."

16. This deponent believes that such a vessel as the "Jane" would, if engaged in the Slave Trade, have carried as many as 800 slaves. That estimating that each slave was to have 1 gallon of water a day, and that the voyage lasted 45 days, it would have been necessary to have had 36,000 gallons of water on board, which would have required from 275 to 300 casks, each containing 120 gallons.

17. That estimating the length of voyage to enable a ship to take in sufficient provisions and water, this deponent believes that the voyage from Rotterdam to St. Thomas on the Coast of Africa was to be reckoned at 80 days, and from St. Thomas to Curaçao or a port in Europe at 50 days. That allowing 2 gallons a day for a crew of 15 men for 80 days, 2,500 gallons would be required, and that the 23 iron-bound water casks on board the said vessel, would not have taken more than necessary for such a voyage.

18. That on the 25th instant he showed the said wooden-bound bread casks on board the said barque "Jane" to Robert Smith, Captain of the barque "Bangalore," and William Paterson, Captain of the barque "Nereid," before they surveyed the said casks.

19. That the water-casks found in the hold of the said vessel and at the fore part of the flint-stone ballast, and referred to in the Report of the Surveyors in this case dated 17th November, 1862, as having been there found by them, some filled with fresh and some with salt water for ballast, were 17 of the iron-bound water-casks mentioned in the evidence in this case which were filled with salt water, having been so filled after the fresh water had been used out of the said casks, and also three of the said wooden-bound casks referred to in the evidence in this case which this deponent believes were empty, and this deponent does not believe that any of the said 20 casks contained fresh water.

20. That this deponent saw four factories at Quinsembo, two owned by Englishmen, one by a Dutchman, and the other by an American, John R. Lovitt, and that the said factories do not trade in slaves, but in ivory, gum, and copper ore, and other African produce.

21. That when this deponent was at Havre and endeavouring to get freight for the said vessel, all the ports in the Confederate States of America with the exception of New Orleans were under blockade, and no remunerating freight was offering at Havre for the Southern States or elsewhere.

(Signed) JAMES R. MELLEN.

On the 27th day of November, 1862, the said James Robert Mellen was duly sworn to the truth of this affidavit.

Affidavit of the Steward in support of the Claim.

In the case of the Netherlands barque "Jane," Bernadus Antony Prince, Master.

Appeared personally, Rafael Gonzalez, steward of the said vessel, who maketh oath and saith:—

1. That the said vessel was seized on 15th October last, by Her Majesty's ship "Espoir."
2. That on the 16th October last he saw lying on the cabin table a portfolio; he did not open it. At that time he was packing up the passengers' trunks who were going on board the "Espoir;" and, believing the portfolio to be the property of one of the said passengers, M. Dubois, he put the portfolio in this trunk, and it was taken on board the "Espoir," when M. Dubois went on board the "Espoir," about 10 o'clock in the morning.
3. That the water that was brought in the said vessel in the twenty-three iron-bound casks from Rotterdam was all finished on the 22nd instant, on which day we were obliged to procure water for the use of the said vessel.

(Signed) RAFAEL GONZALEZ.

On the 27th day of November, 1862, the said Rafael Gonzalez was duly sworn to the truth of this affidavit.

Affidavit of Mr. Thomas Pike in reply to Evidence on behalf of the Claimant.

In the case of the barque "Jane," Bernadus A. Prince Master.

I, Thomas Pike, of Freetown, in the Colony of Sierra Leone, Harbour Master, being duly sworn, make oath and say as follows, that is to say:—

1. That I have read and perused the affidavits of the master of the said barque, filed on the 27th of November last, also of William Paterson, master of the barque "Nereid," and Robert Smith, master of the barque "Bangalore," filed in this cause on the 25th November last, and of Robert Mellen, supercargo of the said barque filed on the 27th November last, and I now reply to the said affidavits in the manner following:—

1. That the top of the lining or ledge which runs fore and aft the hold of the said barque is suitable for laying down a second deck; and it is perfectly possible to do so, inasmuch as the temporary beams of a slave-deck are laid from the ledge to a beam running fore and aft in the centre of the vessel, or in some cases the beams are laid across the hold from ledge to ledge, which would be placed there in the event of a second deck being laid; and that if a deck was laid on beams 9 inches deep, the height from the deck to the beams would be 3 feet 9½ inches, and not 9 inches in height as stated by the master of the "Bangalore."

2. That many of the twenty-one wooden-bound casks, at the time I was making the Report of Survey, were full of fresh water, which was pumped out of them by the directions of myself and the other surveyor for the purpose of being hoisted on deck and correctly gauged, and two leaguers which were on deck were partially filled with fresh water from the said casks; and one of the said casks with water was left in the hold for the use of the said ship, and was gauged there.

(Signed) THOS. PIKE.

On the 3rd day of December, 1862, the said deponent, Thomas Pike, was duly sworn to the truth of this affidavit.

Before me,
(Signed) WM. SMITH, Registrar.

Affidavit of the Prize Officer in reply to Evidence on behalf of the Claimant.

In the case of the barque "Jane," B. A. Prince Master.

I, Patrick James Murray, Lieutenant of Her Majesty's steam-ship "Espoir," and Prize Officer of the said barque, being duly sworn make oath and say as follows, that is to say:—

1. That I have perused the affidavits of the master of the said barque filed on the 27th day of November last, also of William Paterson, master of the barque "Nereid," and Robert Smith, master of the barque "Bangalore," filed in this cause on the 25th of November last, and of Rafael Gonzalez, steward of the said barque, and Robert Mellen, supercargo, filed on the 27th November last; and I now reply to the said affidavits in manner following:—

That the top of the lining or ledge which runs fore and aft the hold of the said barque is suitable for laying down a second deck, and it is perfectly possible to do so, inasmuch as the temporary beams of a slave-deck are laid from the ledge to a beam running fore and aft in the centre of the vessel, which would be placed there in the event of a second deck being laid. And that if a deck was laid on beams 9 inches deep, the height from the deck to the beams would be 3 feet 9½ inches, and not 9 inches in height as stated by the master of the "Bangalore."

2. Some few months since I conveyed the slave-vessel "Traviata," after seizure by Her Majesty's ship "Espoir," to the Island of St. Helena for adjudication. She was intended, as the captain and crew informed me, to carry 800 slaves, and she had then on board 150 old wine-casks bound with wooden hoops, and they were not capable of holding 100 gallons each. Her slave-deck was fitted precisely on the principle named above, and she had also a similar lining or ledge running fore and aft the hold, and she was about the size of the said barque.

3. That many of the twenty-one wooden-bound casks at the time the Report of Survey was taken, were full of fresh water, which was pumped out of them by the directions of the Surveyors, for the purpose of being hoisted on deck and correctly gauged, and two leaguers which were on deck were partially filled with fresh water from the said casks, and one of the said casks with water was left in the hold for the use of the said ship, and was gauged there.

4. That on my boarding the said vessel at the time of seizure, I asked for and demanded from the master all the papers belonging to the said barque, and I particularly asked him in the presence of the supercargo for his clearance from Elmina, as he informed me that he had landed cargo there, but he answered that he had none. The portfolio the supercargo refers to, could not have left the ship when I demanded the papers, because the two passengers did not leave with their luggage to go on board the "Espoir" until the following morning, and their luggage was very strictly searched, when there, by the Commander's orders, and the only papers found in the said passengers' luggage were the papers produced by me with the affidavit of seizure filed in this Honourable Court, marked A 1 to A 3.

(Signed) P. J. MURRAY.

On the 3rd day of November, 1862, the said deponent, Patrick James Murray, was duly sworn to the truth of this affidavit.

Before me,

Inclosure 2 in No. 10.

Receipt.

British and Netherlands Mixed Court of Justice, Sierra Leone.

IN the case of the Netherlands vessel “Jane,” whereof B. A. Prince was master, seized and taken by Her Britannic Majesty’s steam-sloop “Espoir,” Sholto Douglas, Esq., Commander, for illicit Traffic in Slaves.

Received the 14th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1863, out of the Registry of the said Court, the sum of four hundred and seventy-eight pounds, sixteen shillings, and seven pence sterling, said to be the proceeds arising from the sale of the said vessel and cargo, for which I have signed three receipts, of the same tenor and date, to serve as one.

(Signed) JOHN M. LINDSEY.

No. 11.

Her Majesty’s Judge to Earl Russell.—(Received May 13.)

My Lord,

Sierra Leone, April 20, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship’s despatch of the 6th ultimo, with its inclosures, informing me that the Netherlands Government are desirous of bringing to justice the parties concerned in the case of the slaver “Jane,” and instructing me to communicate to Her Majesty’s Government any information I may obtain which will facilitate that purpose.

In obedience to your Lordship’s instructions I have inquired at the Secretary’s office in this Colony whether any record exists of the movements of the master and crew of the “Jane” subsequent to the condemnation of that vessel; and I have the honour to report that it appears that the master, Bernardus Antony Prince, took out a passport on the 19th of December last, as passenger on board the British barque “Venus,” bound hence for Antigua. No trace is discoverable of the proceedings of the crew, but it is probable that they may have shipped to work their passage on board of vessels leaving this port.

I have the honour to transmit herewith the muster-roll of the “Jane,” in case your Lordship should think it useful to communicate that document to the Netherlands Government. It would appear from it that only three of the crew, besides the master, were Netherlands subjects, viz., G. Volbers, carpenter, A. de Wit, cook, and C. Hummelman, sailor.

I have, &c.

These Regulations you will see differ, in some important points, from those by which you have hitherto been guided in adjudicating the cases brought before the Mixed Commission Courts at Sierra Leone; but they have been carefully prepared, and are framed in accordance with the course of proceeding now observed in the High Court of Admiralty in this country, and they will be found much more simple and complete.

No. 26.

Her Majesty's Judge to Earl Russell.—(Received November 10.)

My Lord,

Sierra Leone, September 30, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to lay before your Lordship my Report on the Slave Trade for the year ending this day.

During the above period one case has been adjudicated by the British and Foreign Mixed Courts of Justice established in this Colony, that of the Netherlands barque "Jane," which vessel was condemned by the British and Netherlands Court on the 10th of December, 1862, on the ground of being equipped for and engaged in the Slave Trade.

There can be little doubt, however, in the case of this vessel, that her Dutch nationality was merely nominal, and assumed for the purposes of fraud; she was originally an American vessel, and had already been known on this coast as a successful slaver under the name of the "Fleet Eagle," it is most probable that her supercargo, an American, who described himself as a native of the Southern or Confederate States of America, was the real owner of the ship as well as of the cargo.

The total number of cases adjudicated by the Mixed Courts up to the present date amounts to 534, and the number of slaves emancipated and registered by these Courts remains the same as at the date of my last Annual Report, namely, 56,935.

During the year one vessel only has been condemned in the Vice-Admiralty Court of this Colony under the Act of the 2nd and 3rd Vict., cap. 73. This vessel, a schooner, name unknown, was captured on the South Coast in the neighbourhood of Cape Lopez with 368 slaves on board; of these 120 died before adjudication, and the remainder, 248 in number, have been emancipated and registered in this Colony.

Five native canoes have also been condemned in the Vice-Admiralty Court under the Act 5 Geo. IV, cap. 113; these canoes, having amongst them thirty-five domestic slaves on board, were captured in a batch in the River Sherbro under the Governor's Deputation of Vice-Admiralty, and the whole of the slaves were emancipated and registered.

With regard to the coast north of the Bight of Benin, I may say with certainty that there has been no Slave Trade during the past year, nor do I think, with the possible exception of the Rivers Nunez and Pongas, that there is any probability of its being ever revived on that part of the coast.

I have no information enabling me to give any accurate particulars respecting the state of the Slave Trade in the Bights of Benin and Biafra and on the South Coast, but it is certain that the trade on the whole West Coast has been during the past year reduced to an extremely low ebb.

I have, &c.

Her Majesty's Acting Commissary Judge to Earl Russell.—(Received October 29.)

My Lord, Havana, September 30, 1863.
 ON reviewing the state of the Slave Trade between Cuba and the coast of Africa during the twelve months ending this day, it is with no ordinary pleasure that I have the honour of reporting to your Lordship that a most decided decrease has taken place in that shameful Traffic.
 The accompanying statement, which I beg leave to lay before your Lordship, shows that the number of slaves landed in this island since the 30th of September last amounts to 5,630, and with the usual addition of one-third for those introduced without the knowledge of the authorities, the total is 7,507, of which about 11 per cent. were captured after landing.
 The number of vessels which are positively known to have sailed from this port for Africa, and which are suspected of being intended for the Slave Trade, amounts only to two, as per statement herewith, showing a very marked improvement in the vigilance of the Spanish authorities; in fact, it is a rare thing for a slave-vessel to start from this side, there being much greater facilities for fitting out adventures of this nature from Peninsular and French ports, especially Bordeaux and Marseilles.
 The arrival of Captain-General Don Domingo Dulce was hailed at first with pleasure on the part of the slave-traders, who are chiefly Catalans, and it was thought that the popular ex-Governor-General of their native Province would shut his eyes to the Slave Trade, as most of his predecessors had done, and that the Camarilla at the Government House would be composed of persons addicted to that infamous Traffic.
 A short time sufficed to dispel the illusion. General Dulce at once gave out his fixed determination to put down the Slave Trade, and to maintain the dignity of Spain by adhering strictly to the stipulations of the Treaty with Great Britain for the abolition of that disgraceful Traffic.
 His Excellency seized the first opportunity of showing that he was in earnest, by sending Messrs. Tuero and Durañona, two noted slave-traders, out of the island, and he has removed to the Peninsula every Lieutenant-Governor or other officer whom he has had reason to suspect of collusion with the slave-traders.

In July last General Dulce took a still stronger measure, by removing Don Pedro Navascues, the Political Governor of Havana, and of sending him to Spain, for alleged acceptance of bribes for the sale of slave-passes.

Notwithstanding these examples, and the notorious determination of the Captain-General to act summarily with all those who are caught infringing the law in this respect, such is the great temptation, and such are the inducements to introduce African slaves here, that the Slave Trade cannot be entirely put an end to, unless very strong measures are sanctioned by Spain, such as declaring it piracy, or by revoking the 9th Article of the Penal Law, which in its present state is only a protection to the slave-trader.

I have the pleasure of reporting to your Lordship, that from the most reliable information I have been able to obtain on the subject, there is no doubt that the slaves in this island are treated very much better than they were even a few years ago. There is certainly vast room for improvement yet, but every amelioration of the condition of this wretched class must be welcomed with joy by every well-wisher of humanity.

The night system during crop time is being gradually, although indeed very gradually, abolished.

Those enlightened planters who have adopted the plan of allowing their negroes their natural rest from 10 P.M. until 6 A.M. have found that they have much less sickness upon their plantations, that their negroes can perform with ease all the work which is required of them, and that the advantages of good treatment and of rational hours have been clearly shown by larger returns, a more perfect economy, and by the cheerfulness of their slaves, which was a thing formerly unknown in this island.

What effect the war in America will have upon the slave question in this island it is difficult to foresee. There is no reason why the slave population in Cuba should not increase by natural means as it has done in the Southern States of the neighbouring continent; and the present Captain-General is perfectly satisfied that further importation from Africa is quite unnecessary.

I understand that all ideas of emancipation have been abandoned, but that the Spanish Government is, at last, in earnest in putting an end to the Slave Trade.

Such a result can only be attained by strengthening the powers of the present honourable-minded and determined Captain-General of Cuba.

I have, &c.

No. 30.

Her Majesty's Commissary Judge to Earl Russell.—(Received November 30.)

(Extract.)

Havana, November 6, 1863.

SINCE my return to my post at this place I have had an interview with the Captain-General on the subject of the Slave Trade, and I am satisfied of the sincerity of his intention to put an end to the introduction of negroes from Africa. of which he has given some proofs.

His Excellency is at present very much perplexed about two landings of Bozals which, it is said, have recently been effected,—one of 1,000 and the other of 1,200,—brought by steamers, but respecting which he has been unable to discover any traces. My belief is that one of those cargoes, if not both, have been run with impunity; and that the slaves were brought by steamers from Africa.

Rumour says that these cargoes belong to Don Julian Zulueta.

No. 31.

Her Majesty's Commissary Judge to Earl Russell.—(Received December 14.)

(Extract.)

Havana, November 16, 1863.

IN the despatch which I did myself the honour of addressing to your Lordship on the 6th instant, I stated my belief that the rumours which were then in circulation as to the landing of a large cargo of Bozals, were true, and that one, if not two expeditions had been successfully run from steamers; but it appears that I was premature in saying that this had been done with impunity, since I have now the pleasure and satisfaction of reporting to your Lordship that, by the untiring efforts and dispositions of the Captain-General, the considerable number of 1,105 of these have been captured near Colon, a place nearly in the centre of this island, and a certain Don José Bergara, a Spaniard, who has usually been employed in such affairs by Don Julian Zulueta, has been taken with them, and brought prisoner to Havana.

At one time his Excellency almost despaired of discovering these newly landed Africans, and, I feared, was almost satisfied, by the results which he obtained, that the rumours were unfounded.

But, fortunately, I was able to assure him that a slaver had communicated at Trinidad, was unable to make arrangements for landing there and had proceeded to the westward, where she doubtless had been more successful; and thus encouraged, his Excellency was induced to continue his investigations, which have ended so signally to the discomfiture of the parties who are interested in this extensive violation of the law and of the existing Treaty.

I understand that the captured Bozals and their custodier Bergara have been brought on to this place from Colon, and that the latter is a close prisoner, pending the proceedings which have been commenced with a view to the discovery, if possible, of all concerned.

I lost no time in conveying to General Dulce, through the Colonial Secretary, my hearty congratulations on this occasion of his Excellency's successful perseverance, and I have received a very cordial acknowledgment.

The Captain-General has thus shown his determination to put an end to the abominable traffic, but it would not surprise me, if after some time has gone by, and especially if his Excellency were to be removed, that under a Governor Captain-General less scrupulous, the Royal Audiencia, on application of some claimant, should decree the restitution of the captured slaves, under the 9th Article of the Penal Law, upon the plea of their having been arrested and taken from a plantation some days after they were landed.

I would most respectfully impress upon your Lordship the necessity of having the Penal Law altered, so that it may operate against rather than, as it is at present, as a protection to the slave-traders. If possible, slave-trading should be made piracy by Spain, and almost unlimited gubernative authority conferred upon the Captain-General, so as to enable him to deal summarily with the infractors.

These requisites to strengthen General Dulce's hands, and a thorough registration of the slaves now existing, according to the mode which would be ordered by General Dulce, so as that it would be easy afterwards to detect subsequent introductions, would most assuredly put an end, during this officer's rule, to African slave-trading.

But it would behove Her Catholic Majesty's Government to consider and concert measures for the gradual emancipation of all the slaves, preparatory to the final abolition of slavery here and throughout the Spanish dominions.

It must be evident to the Spaniards, as it is to all the world, that the lamented struggle which has for some time past been going on and is still continued in America, whatever may be its result as to the separation of the North and South, must put an end to the institution of slavery, which must be abolished, and that slavery cannot continue to be an institution of the Spanish Colonies after its abolition in the United States and the rest of the civilized world.

Report of the Judicial Proceedings of the Mixed Commission for the year 1862.

THE "Flor da Cabaceira," detained by Her Majesty's ship "Penguin," Lieutenant Mc Hardy, on the 24th of June, 1861, in latitude 12° 32' south, and longitude 40° 48' east, on suspicion of being engaged in the Slave Trade.

The reasons given by the captor for the seizure were :—

1st. The chase.

2ndly. That 11 negroes (8 men and 3 children) found on board were slaves.

3rdly. Fittings, viz., a temporary slave-deck laid, a number of slave-mats, two pair of slave-irons, a large copper boiler, and a number of smaller pots on board, altogether capable of cooking for forty or fifty people, and some brass rings.

4thly. That she had only a small cargo, but no master or crew.

After the negroes were removed on board Her Majesty's ship "Penguin," the dhow was destroyed as being unseaworthy, having been first surveyed and found to be of the burthen of 29½ tons English.

Lieutenant Mc Hardy then proceeded to Ravooma Bay, where 10 of the negroes were landed to assist the boat's crew in getting wood, when 9 availed themselves of an opportunity to escape, and were not recaptured. The 2 remaining boys were brought to Simon's Bay.

The case was brought before the Mixed Commission on the 30th December, 1861. The 2 negro boys, the flag, the two pair of irons, the brass rings, and the ship's papers, were produced; the rest of the cargo, slave-deck, mats, &c., having been destroyed with the vessel.

Upon examination of the ship's papers and other documents bearing upon the proceedings of the vessel, it appeared to the Court that she belonged to a Banian named Xatoborge Dolabo, who had a small mercantile establishment at Arimba, and that previous to the capture she had been employed in lawful trade. From the evidence of the 2 negro boys it appeared that no one had left the ship previous to the capture, and the Court was satisfied that the 11 negroes were the same persons as were shipped as her crew at Mozambique.

On the 4th January, the Commissioners pronounced that the presence of irons on board was sufficient to justify the detention, and therefore no compensation for losses, damages, or expenses could be awarded; but that the evidence adduced would not warrant a sentence of condemnation, when weighed against the proof afforded by the ship's papers that the vessel was on a legal voyage, and by the testimony of the negro boys as to the identity of the men on board at the time of capture with the crew shipped at Mozambique.

The negro boys having declined to return to Mozambique, were handed over to the care of the Curator of Liberated Africans.

After the decision of the Court, a question arose as to the liability of the captor to pay in the first instance the amount of the fees and disbursements of the Marshal to the Mixed Commission; the captor and his legal adviser being of opinion that the captor was not called upon to liquidate these costs. A correspondence passed between the Registrar and the captor, and the Registrar and the captor's proctor, which resulted in a refusal to comply with the orders of the Commissioners.

On the 8th of April, the Commissioners decreed a monition calling upon the captor to pay the amount in question.

On the 14th April, these costs were paid into the Registry by the captor's proctor.

Annual Report of the Mixed Commission.

IN pursuance of Article XI of Annex B, to the Treaty concluded on the 3rd of July, 1842, between Great Britain and Portugal for the suppression of the Traffic in Slaves, the Undersigned Members of the Mixed Commission established at the Cape of Good Hope under that Treaty have the honour to lay before the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty their annual Report, relating—

1. To the cases which have been brought before the Mixed Commission for adjudication.

During the year 1862 one case, that of the Portuguese dhow "Flor da Cabaceira," was adjudicated.

The papers belonging to the "Flor da Cabaceira," Assuadi, Master, were brought into Court on the 30th of December 1861, by the captor, Lieutenant J. G. G. Mc Hardy, commanding Her Britannic Majesty's steam gun-vessel "Penguin."

From the captor's affidavit it appears that the "Flor da Cabaceira" was detained under the following circumstances. On the 24th of June, 1861, the "Penguin" was cruising off Querimba Island; and the captor having observed a dhow standing to the southward, made sail after her for the purpose of ascertaining her character. The dhow stood towards the land, and did not heave-to when a blank gun was fired, but hoisted Portuguese colours, and paid no further attention to the signal. Three several shotted guns were then fired from the "Penguin;" at the third gun the chase shortened sail. When boarded by the captor, 11 negroes (8 men and 3 children) were found on board.

The reasons given by Lieutenant Mc Hardy for the detention of the vessel were—

1. That he learned through one of the "Penguin's" crew who spoke a little Portuguese, and could converse with one of the negroes, that the master and crew had taken to their boat previously to the dhow shortening sail, and had probably escaped to the land.
2. That he considered the 11 negroes found on board to be slaves.
3. That he found the "Flor da Cabaceira" had a temporary slave-deck laid, constructed of rattans.
4. That she had a great number of coarse slave-mats.
5. That two pair of slave-irons were discovered concealed under the cooking galley.
6. That she had a good-sized copper boiler, and a number of smaller pots; together capable of cooking for forty or fifty people.

The only cargo found on board consisted of two boxes of common print goods, two kegs of gunpowder, one bale of cotton wool, and $\frac{1}{2}$ cwt. of brass rings. The food consisted of three bags of paddy and two of millet.

The dhow having been surveyed, and found to be unable to encounter a voyage to the port of adjudication was measured, and according to that measurement was of the burden of 29 $\frac{1}{2}$ tons. She was then scuttled and sunk.

The "Penguin" proceeded to Rovooma Bay, where 10 of the negroes were landed for the benefit of their health, and to assist the boat's crew in taking wood on board. Nine availed themselves of the opportunity to escape, and were not re-captured. The remaining 2 negroes (children) were produced to the Mixed Commission on December 30, 1861, and at the same time the papers found on board, the flag, the two pair of irons, and the brass rings were brought into the Registry; the remainder of the cargo, rattan-deck, mats, &c., having been destroyed with the vessel.

Upon examining the ship's papers, and sundry memoranda bearing upon the proceedings of the owner of the vessel, the Court was satisfied that the 11 negroes found on board were the actual 11 persons enumerated on the muster-roll as forming the crew of the vessel; and that the "Flor da Cabaceira," which was the property of one Xatorborge Dolabo, a Portuguese subject, and was duly registered as being of the burden of 7-21 tons, had her passport, muster-roll, and the manifest of her trifling cargo shipped for a voyage from Ibo to Arimba, and dated Ibo, June 17, 1861, all in due form and order.

From the evidence of the two negro boys, the Court came to the conclusion that they were shipped with the other negroes as sailors on board; and that none of the crew so shipped at Mozambique had left the vessel before the capture; and the papers brought into Court showed that Xatorborge Dolabo had been for some time employed in lawful trade, and possessed a small mercantile establishment at Arimba, near Ibo.

On the 4th of January, 1862, the Commissioners delivered their Judgment. The Court held that the evidence produced by the captor was insufficient to show that the "Flor da Cabaceira" was guilty of an infraction of the Treaty of July 3, 1842, when weighed against the proof afforded by the ship's papers and by the evidence of the two negro boys that the vessel, when captured, was prosecuting a lawful voyage; the Commissioners therefore pronounced the said vessel to have been at the time of the capture and seizure thereof engaged in licit traffic, and as such not subject and liable to condemnation; but that shackles having been found on board, no compensation for losses, damages, and expenses consequent upon the detention could be awarded.

The 2 negro boys having declined to return to Mozambique, were handed over to the care of the Curator of Liberated Africans.

Subsequently to the decision of the Court, a question arose as to the liability of the captor to pay, in the first instance, the amount of the taxed fees and disbursements of the Marshal to the Mixed Commission; the captor and his legal adviser being of opinion that the captor was not called upon to liquidate these costs. Upon the point at issue, some correspondence passed between the Registrar and the captor, and the Registrar and the captor's proctor, who, in Lieutenant Mc Hardy's absence, represented him before the Court, which terminated in a refusal to comply with the orders of the Commissioners. Thereupon their Honours, on the 8th of April, decreed a monition, calling upon Lieutenant Mc Hardy forthwith to pay the amount in question; which monition was duly served, and eventually, on the day of its return into Court, April 14, 1862, the amount of the Marshal's fees and disbursements was paid into the Registry by the captor's proctor.

With respect to the state of the liberated negroes, and their progress in religious and mechanical education, the Undersigned have only to report that as yet no negroes have been emancipated by Decree of this Mixed Commission.

Her Majesty's Commissioners to Earl Russell.—(Received April 29.)

My Lord

Cape Town, March 10, 1863.

WE have the honour to report to your Lordship the following particulars relating to the case of a dhow adjudicated in the Vice-Admiralty Court of this Colony.

From the affidavit filed in the case, it appears that on the 16th of July, 1862, while Her Majesty's ship "Narcissus" was cruising off Melinda, Captain Bickford dispatched Lieutenant Price in the second cutter to ascertain the character of certain dhows lying at anchor in the harbour; and that about 9-30 A.M. Lieutenant Price boarded a large dhow which had been beached.

Upon examination she was found to have been deserted by her crew ; and on searching her neither flag nor papers could be discovered, but there were on board part of a slave-deck laid, two large tanks holding two tons and a-half of water, two earthenware pots fit to cook for 100 persons, two slave privies, and great quantities of coarse slave-matting.

On shore there was a third tank, equal to the others in size, but stove in and useless, and the remaining part of the slave-deck was discovered concealed in the bush.

Being unfit for a voyage to a port of adjudication, she was burned, after being measured, and found to be of the burden of 175 $\frac{6}{94}$ tons.

Upon this evidence the Court, on the 2nd instant, pronounced a sentence condemning this vessel as good prize to Her Majesty's ship "Narcissus," Captain J. G. Bickford.

Inclosure in No. 44.

Report of the cases of Seven Dhows condemned in the Vice-Admiralty Court as Prizes to Her Majesty's ship "Gorgon."

No. 1. A DHOW $81\frac{3}{4}$ tons, name and master unknown, captured by Lieutenant Keppel on the 10th of November, 1862, while in command of the cutter and second gig of Her Majesty's ship "Gorgon." This vessel was first seen running to the southward of Wasseen; and as soon as she perceived the boats made for the land, and after three hours' chase ran on shore. As the boats approached a cargo of slaves, about 70 in number, were seen to be discharged and carried into the bush.

Upon being searched no papers or colours were found, but she had the usual appearance of having just held a cargo of slaves. She had a large quantity of farinha and coarse rice, and a number of slave-mats and cooking utensils capable of cooking for 100 slaves.

No. 2. A dhow $91\frac{5}{8}$ tons, name and master unknown, captured by Lieutenant Keppel on the 19th of January, 1863, while in command of two boats of Her Majesty's ship "Gorgon." This vessel was observed shortly before daylight running out of Kiswara harbour, and was intercepted at about 5 A.M. Upon being searched she was found fully equipped for the Slave Trade, with a large quantity of slave food, farinha, and rice, with no colours or papers, and a crew of fourteen Arabs, some of whom stated that her destination was the Lindy River, where she intended to complete her watering and take in a cargo of slaves. After capture the crew were landed.

No. 3. A dhow $122\frac{3}{4}$ tons, name and master unknown, captured by Lieutenant Keppel on the 20th of January, 1863, while in command of two boats of Her Majesty's ship "Gorgon," off Mangulho River. She was observed at 11 A.M. standing out to sea, whereupon Lieutenant Keppel intercepted her to ascertain her character. Upon being boarded she was found fully equipped for the Slave Trade, with no colours or papers, and a crew of sixteen Arabs, who deserted in the night.

No. 4. A dhow $65\frac{5}{8}$ tons, name and master unknown, captured on the 22nd of January, 1863, by Lieutenant Keppel, while in command of two boats of Her Majesty's ship "Gorgon," cruising off Milkenday Bay. This dhow was observed at noon standing in between the reefs and the land. Upon being chased she ran into a narrow channel amongst the reefs communicating with the open sea at high water; and as Lieutenant Keppel approached he found the tide had fallen so that he could not get at her, but observed that the crew were busily engaged in landing her cargo of slaves, about 60 in number. At about 3 P.M., the tide rising, Lieutenant Keppel was enabled to approach and board her, and he found her wholly deserted and stranded. Upon searching her she was found fully equipped for the Slave Trade, with a quantity of slave food, but no colours or papers.

No. 5. A dhow $80\frac{1}{2}$ tons, name and master unknown, captured on the 20th of February, 1863, off Lamoo Roads, by Richard Jones, Boatswain, while in command of two boats of Her Majesty's ship "Gorgon." This vessel was observed at 1 P.M. standing in for Lamoo, and after a chase of an hour and a-half ran on shore on a point of Lamoo Island. Upon being boarded she was found deserted, with no colours or papers, and fully equipped for the Slave Trade.

No. 6. A dhow $111\frac{5}{8}$ tons, name and master unknown, captured on the 27th of February, 1863, by Richard Jones, Boatswain, while in command of two boats of Her Majesty's ship "Gorgon," cruising off Kwyhoo. This vessel was observed about 7 A.M. standing to the southward, and although she altered her course the captors succeeded in boarding her at mid-day, eight miles eastward of Kwyhoo. The captors during the chase observed the crew of the dhow in the act of throwing six or eight pairs of shackles overboard. Upon being searched no colours or papers were found. She had a crew of thirty men, apparently Northern Arabs; was fully equipped for the Slave Trade, and two more sets of shackles were found, and 350 dollars. The crew were landed on the mainland.

No. 7. A dhow $124\frac{3}{4}$ tons, name and master unknown, captured on the 6th of March, 1863, by Richard Jones, Boatswain, while in command of two boats of Her Majesty's ship "Gorgon," cruising off Lamoo. This vessel was intercepted standing in for Lamoo. Upon attempting to board her the crew, twenty-five in number, resisted with swords and daggers, but ultimately yielded. Upon being searched she was found without colours or papers, fully equipped for the Slave Trade, and a large supply of slave food, viz., farinha, coarse rice, salted shark, cassada, &c. The crew, who were all Somalis, were landed.

The tonnage of these vessels was ascertained by measurement; after which, with the exception of No. 5, which sank from injuries received when she was run ashore, they were destroyed as being unfit for a voyage to a port of adjudication.

WE have the honour to inform your Lordship that Mr. Benjamin Pringle, Judge in this Mixed Court of Justice on the part of the United States of America, arrived in this Colony on the 14th instant; and at a sitting of the Mixed Court, held on the 15th instant, presented his credentials, which were found to be in good and proper order.

Mr. Pringle has this day taken the oath of office before his Excellency the Governor of the Colony, in the form prescribed by the Act 25 & 26 Vict., cap. 90; and a record of these transactions has been duly entered upon the Minutes of the Mixed Court.

We are glad to be able to state that Mr. Pringle has signified his approval of the proceedings taken with regard to the opening of the Court previous to his arrival.

No. 47.

Her Majesty's Commissioners to Earl Russell.—(Received October 21.)

My Lord,

Cape Town, September 1, 1863.

WE have the honour to report to your Lordship that, on the 19th ultimo, two dhows were condemned in the Vice-Admiralty Court of this Colony as good prizes to Her Majesty's ship "Penguin." The following are the particulars:—

No. 1. A dhow $62\frac{1}{2}$ tons was discovered by Mr. Snell, Master's Assistant of Her Majesty's ship "Penguin," on the 7th of July, 1862, at anchor in a creek in the Moyamba River, about four miles from the mouth. Upon being searched she was found deserted, with no colours or papers, but two slave-irons were discovered stowed away in the bilge connected by a chain of upwards of 30 fathoms in length, sufficient to secure 100 slaves. A bamboo slave-deck was ready laid, and the vessel was in other respects fitted for the Slave Trade. Upon Lieutenant McHardy, the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Penguin," receiving Mr. Snell's report, he proceeded to examine her himself; and on further search she was found fitted with bulkheads, but the chain referred to by Mr. Snell was gone: whereupon Lieutenant McHardy seized her, after making several inquiries, but in vain, to ascertain from the negroes on shore as to what had become of her crew and cargo. Being unfit for a voyage to a port of adjudication, she was destroyed after being measured.

No. 2. A dhow of from 80 to 100 tons was observed by Lieutenant McHardy on the 6th of October last, to the southward of Brava; and on being chased she changed her course and ran on shore in the surf, which prevented the captors from getting alongside: but they observed the crew engaged in landing slaves, about 100 in number. They therefore remained by the dhow all night to prevent any attempt at escape, but at daylight they found she had completely broken up, and that nothing was to be seen of her but a tank washed up on the beach.

Her Majesty's Commissioners to Earl Russell.—(Received October 21.)

My Lord,

Cape Town, September 12, 1863.

WE have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 25th of July last, with its inclosures, informing us that the United States' Government had approved the Regulations prepared by Her Majesty's Government for the guidance, in the technical part of their duties, of the Judges and Arbitrators appointed for carrying into effect the provisions of the Treaty of the 7th of April, 1862.

These Regulations had been taken into consideration, and had been adopted, at a meeting of the Mixed Court held on the 1st instant, with the addition of a few words to paragraph 26, which seemed to our United States' colleague desirable, in order to allow the Court to exercise its discretion as to taking the evidence of a witness who might, by inadvertence, have been present while other witnesses in the same cause were under examination.

We have the honour to inclose a copy of the Minute recording the adoption of the Regulations with this addition.

We take this occasion to report to your Lordship that Thomas Tinley, Esq., whose appointment as Marshal of the Mixed British and Portuguese Commission has already been approved of by your Lordship, has been appointed to the office of Marshal of the Mixed British and United States' Court of Justice.

*Mixed British and United States' Court of Justice,
Cape Town, September 1, 1863.*

Present:

Geo. Frere, Esq.
E. L. Layard, Esq.

Benjamin Pringle, Esq.

Wm. Tasker Smith, Esq, Registrar.

THE Regulations for the guidance of the Mixed Courts of Justice, inclosed to Her Britannic Majesty's Judge and Arbitrator in Earl Russell's despatch of June 5, 1863, were taken into consideration.

It was ordered,—

That paragraph No. 26 be amended by the addition of the words, "except at the discretion of the Court," to be inserted after the words, "before having been himself examined."

The following Regulations were adopted.

No. 50.

Her Majesty's Commissioners to Earl Russell.—(Received November 23.)

(Extract.)

Cape Town, October 1, 1863.

IN compliance with your Lordship's instructions, we have the honour to lay before your Lordship our Report upon the Slave Trade on the East Coast of Africa during the year ending the 30th ultimo.

We have heard of only one case in which slaves have been shipped from the Portuguese possessions for Cuba; this is said to have been effected by a Spanish brig early in January last, a little to the north of Pomba Bay, the slaves being shipped from Ibo. Upon this statement, we must however remark, that we have reason to suppose that our information is very imperfect, and most probably falls far short of the actual facts; thus, for instance, in our Annual Report last year, we stated the number of these vessels at three, whereas we have now learned, from a source upon which we can rely, that at least six vessels succeeded in carrying off cargoes for the West Indies during the year 1861-62.

The exportation from places within the Portuguese dominions is still continued in Arab dhows, to Madagascar and the Comoro Islands, for the supply of Mayotta and Nosbeh; but it is with much pleasure that we have learned, that although some thousands are still taken, this branch of the trade has declined very much during the last two years, and that the falling off may principally be attributed to the exertions of the Governor-General of Mozambique, Senhor Tavaréz d'Almeida, who has taken pains to induce the slave-dealers to turn their attention to legitimate commerce. But it should be remembered that, beyond the immediate neighbourhood of the seat of Government, this officer has but little power. The Portuguese, except in the towns, are hardly under the control of the Governor-General, and for some years to come, any serious diminution in the trade must only be looked for from the cessation of the demand for slaves in other countries.

In the trade to the northward of Cape Delgado, we regret to say we can report no diminution. It is carried on as briskly as heretofore. The number of dhows taken up to the date of the latest advices from the coast was twelve: of these ten have already been condemned, seven as good prizes to Her Majesty's ship "Gorgon," one to Her Majesty's ship "Narcissus," and two to Her Majesty's ship "Penguin;" the remaining two, which have not yet been brought before the Court, were taken by Her Majesty's ship "Rapid." All the vessels condemned were equipped for the Slave Trade; but from two of them, slaves estimated by the witnesses at 160 in number were seen to be landed before the captors could succeed in boarding the dhows. Forty-two slaves are reported as taken in one of the "Rapid's" prizes.

We venture again to call the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the insufficiency of the cruisers sent to this station to deal with the Slave Trade carried on in the Arab dhows. These vessels are from 100 to 200 tons burthen, of light draught of water, well suited to run in and out of the numerous small ports open to them on the coast, and in many cases well manned and armed. In the absence of any accurate survey of the coast, cruisers of the large class now employed cannot act with efficiency near the shore, and the service is therefore carried on by means of their boats, which have neither the speed nor the force requisite to cope with vessels of the class above mentioned. The revolution in Madagascar also rendered it necessary to withdraw the vessels to which the watching of the enormous extent of coast is entrusted, so that during the present year the work will have been much interfered with, and for some time the slave-dealers will have carried on their trade almost without interruption. The Commissioners have in former Reports recommended that the number of cruisers should be increased, and we see reason now to repeat the recommendation, and to represent to Her Majesty's Government, that an addition of at least five vessels of the class of gun-boats, which we believe will be found best suited for the service, should be made to the force now at the disposal of the Admiral Commanding-in-chief.

LOANDA.

No. 51.

Her Majesty's Commissioner to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13, 1863.)

My Lord,

Loanda, October 18, 1862.

I HAVE the satisfaction of reporting to your Lordship that the slave-dealers in this quarter have just sustained another loss, which must prove the more serious at the present moment as they have lately been much pressed for shipping, and the barracoons have been for some time past filled with slaves, the cost of maintaining whom for a length of time must doubtless reduce the profits of their trade.

2. A large barque, flying Spanish colours, was observed by Her Majesty's ship "Zebra," Commander Hoskins, lying-to off Mangue Grande on the 3rd instant. Her colours were hauled down on the approach of the "Zebra's" boat, and on examination she was found to have on board every article requisite for the immediate reception of slaves, 200 of whom were actually in launches near the beach ready to be sent alongside, and the rest being embarked with the utmost expedition. In a few hours this vessel would doubtless have sailed with a cargo of not less than 600 slaves, but the timely appearance of the "Zebra" happily frustrated her iniquitous intentions. Great care had been taken by the captain and crew to destroy every clue to her name and nationality; and Commander Hoskins forthwith dispatched her to St. Helena, for adjudication in the Vice-Admiralty Court there under the provisions of the Act 2 and 3 Vict., cap. 73.

No. 52.

Her Majesty's Commissioner to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13, 1863.)

My Lord,

Loanda, October 20, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 23rd July last, transmitting to me a copy of a despatch which you had addressed to Mr. Herries, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon, relative to the course pursued by the Governor-General of this province in declining to correspond with me, as Her Majesty's Commissioner, upon subjects connected with the Slave Trade, and acquainting me that Her Majesty's Government is about to take further steps in this matter, as well as respecting the removal of slaves to St. Thomas, of which I shall be duly informed.

2. I beg leave to tender to your Lordship my warmest thanks and acknowledgments for this communication.

I have, &c.

(Signed) EDMUND GABRIEL.

No. 53.

Her Majesty's Commissioner to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13, 1863.)

My Lord,

Loanda, October 30, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that Her Majesty's ship "Espoir," Commander Douglas, detained on the 15th instant, off the River Congo, a barque called the "Jane," of about 290 tons, sailing under Dutch colours, and having on board, besides a much larger quantity of provisions than was requisite for the use of her crew, an unreasonable number of water-casks, which, with various irregularities in the ship's papers and other circumstances relating to her proceedings, led to a strong suspicion that she was engaged in the Traffic in Slaves.

2. As the "June" was sent to Sierra Leone for adjudication before the British and Netherlands Mixed Commission established there under the Treaty of the 4th May, 1818, your Lordship will be made duly cognizant of the whole of the circumstances connected with the case of this vessel from the Reports of Her Majesty's Commissioners at that place, and I only take the liberty of adding the expression of my sincere hope that this apparent attempt on the part of the slave-dealers to shelter their nefarious proceedings under Dutch colours, presenting as it does so novel a feature in the Slave Trade on this coast, may be signally defeated by the energetic proceedings of Commander Douglas.

I have, &c.

No. 54.

Mr. Hewett to Earl Russell.—(Received February 4, 1863.)

My Lord,

Loanda, December 20, 1862.

IT is my very melancholy duty to have to acquaint your Lordship with the death, which occurred on the 14th instant, of Mr. Edmund Gabriel, Her Majesty's Commissioner in the Mixed British and Portuguese Commission established in this city.

2. Of how valuable a servant Her Majesty has been thus deprived, your Lordship too well knows. All who are engaged in the noble and humane cause, the Suppression of the Slave Trade, must lament the loss of his vigilance and assiduity; while how much beloved he was in private life, the mourning of a very large circle of friends will testify.

3. The cause of Mr. Gabriel's death was dysentery; a copy of a certificate to that effect I have the honour to hand to your Lordship.

4. About two months ago he was recommended to take a cruise, and after much persuasion, at the end of October, having then been ill for upwards of six weeks, he embarked on board Her Majesty's ship "Zebra;" but about two days after he had left, Her Majesty's ship "Espoir" was seen making for Loanda with a prize in tow—the Portuguese launch "E." Mr. Gabriel at once returned to his post, notwithstanding the state of his health, and worked nearly all day and all night. This, of course, added to his going out in the mid-day heat, and getting only broken rest at night, increased the virulence of his disease. On the 9th instant, upon medical advice and the earnest entreaties of his friends here, he left Loanda in Her Majesty's ship "Torch," on board of which vessel he expired at 5.20 P.M. on the 14th instant, when about 100 miles from this place.

5. The "Torch" returned to Loanda on the morning of the 15th, and preparations having been hastily made, the corpse was landed in the afternoon. Officers, seamen, and marines of both Her Majesty's ships in port at the time, "Torch" and "Wrangler," attended the mournful procession. A very large number of friends of the deceased, and a great part of the population of Loanda, proved their respect for the much lamented gentleman by following the coffin from the place where it was landed to the grave where it was deposited. By order of his Excellency the Governor-General of this province, who was represented in the cortège by both his aides-de-camp, the honours due to the highest judicial authority here were paid to the remains of Mr. Gabriel. The funeral service was read by Commanders Smith and Beamish.

6. On the following day I accompanied the two officers above-mentioned to the palace, in order to tender our thanks and acknowledgments to his Excellency the Governor-General for the honours which had been so graciously and respectfully accorded to the remains of our much-esteemed countryman.

I have, &c.

My Lord,

Loanda, January 12, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch dated the 28th of August, 1862, addressed to Her Majesty's Commissioner at this place, inclosing copy of a despatch from Mr. Herries, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon, by which it appears that, in consequence of the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty not approving the line of conduct adopted by the Governor-General with regard to his refusal to correspond with Her Majesty's Commissioners on Slave Trade matters, instructions in conformity with the views of the Cabinet of Lisbon would without delay be sent to the Governor-General.

2. By the same despatch your Lordship signifies your entire approval of the conduct and proceedings of Her Majesty's Commissioners in the communications which had passed between them and the Governor-General of Angola on that matter.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch dated the 23rd of September, 1862, addressed to Her Majesty's Commissioners, transmitting, for his information, a copy of a despatch from Mr. Herries, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon, stating that he had been informed by the Marquis de Loulé that the Portuguese Government had taken effectual measures to put a stop to the practice of exporting slaves from Loanda to the Island of St. Thomas, and that both the Governor-General and the Provincial Secretary of Angola had been recalled.

No. 58.

Her Majesty's Acting Vice-Consul to Earl Russell.—(Received May 6.)

My Lord,

Loanda, January 19, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to lay before your Lordship the particulars of an occurrence which took place in this harbour, an account of which has, I understand, been transmitted by the Governor-General of Angola to Lisbon, and is likely to be brought to your Lordship's knowledge by the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty.

2. On the 16th December, while returning to the ship under his command, Commander Smith observed the Portuguese brigantine "Paquete de Mossamedes" steering directly for the bows of that vessel, and had not Lieutenant Martin, who was at the time the senior officer on board, very promptly slipped the "Torch's" cable, a collision must inevitably have taken place.

3. Commander Smith, arrived on board, manned his boats and ordered the crews to bring the brigantine to an anchor, in order to obtain either an explanation or apology from the master, who, however, together with the crew of the "Paquete de Mossamedes," seeing that their vessel was being boarded, immediately deserted her.

4. When Commander Smith found the brigantine had been anchored, he hoisted the signal recalling his boats, and fired two guns, I believe to draw the attention of the absent party to the signal.

5. Early on the following morning Commander Smith received a despatch from the Governor-General of this Province, complaining of the gratuitous insult offered in this port by Her Majesty's ship "Torch" to the Portuguese flag. He immediately came ashore, and waited upon his Excellency to give him a full explanation of the affair, taking with him a despatch to the same effect in answer to the one he that morning received, in which after saying that by the early receipt of his Excellency's despatch he had been anticipated making his complaint, he repudiated the charge of insulting the flag of so faithful and so old an ally as Portugal. The despatch of the Governor-General appeared in the "Boletim Official," together with a translation of that of Commander Smith; a copy of the "Boletim" containing these I have the honour to inclose with translations of the correspondence.

6. Commander Smith had the honour of being for some time the senior officer of the South Division of the squadron on this coast, and while in that responsible position it was ever his policy to maintain and strengthen the amicable relations which must exist between Great Britain and Portugal to bring to a successful issue their labours in co-operating for the suppression of the Slave Trade.

7. After his audience with the Governor-General, Commander Smith returned to my house, and informed me that his Excellency had appeared perfectly satisfied with the explanation offered, and had attributed the mismanagement of the "Paquete de Mossamedes" to the native pilot on board at the time.

8. Her Majesty's ship "Torch" left for her cruising-ground on the 17th of December, and the "Paquete de Mossamedes" for the River Congo on the 20th, under convoy of His Most Faithful Majesty's palhabote of war "San Thomé."

9. Upon the arrival in this port of Her Majesty's ship "Narcissus," being asked by the Commander-in-chief, I gave him the above particulars, and he considering, as indeed Commander Smith and I did, that the affair had been settled, did not deem it necessary to reopen the subject.

10. After the departure, however, from this port of the "Narcissus," I heard that the Governor-General had sent to Lisbon an account of the affair, and also the despatch which Commander Smith had left with his Excellency.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 1 in No. 58.

The Governor-General of the Province of Angola to Commander Smith.

(Translation.)

Sir,

Palace of Government, Loanda, December 17, 1862.

YESTERDAY, late in the evening, I received an official letter stating that a great insult had been offered by Her Majesty's ship "Torch," under your command: the brigantine "Paquete de Mossamedes," at the time she was getting under weigh, having been cleared by the proper authorities, being boarded by three boats belonging to that ship at 5.15 P.M.

CLASS A.

H

I can hardly believe an attempt of such a nature committed by British forces against all rights of the nation which boasts of being so old and faithful an ally of Great Britain, and which has ever maintained the strictest good faith in the fulfilment of her Treaties, even when so doing she felt obliged to involve herself with the most powerful nations.

I am therefore compelled to protest, as I solemnly do, against such a daring affront to the Portuguese flag, and I trust that my Government will obtain from the rectitude and impartial justice of yours due satisfaction, not only in regard to the dignity and national independence thus insulted, as in respect to the injury caused to commerce, in consequence of a vessel being forced to anchor when proceeding on a voyage for which she had been legally cleared.

God preserve, &c.

(Signed) JOSE BAPTISTA D'ANDRADE.

Inclosure 2 in No. 58.

Commander Smith to the Governor-General of the Province of Angola.

Most Excellent Sir,

"Torch," St. Paul de Loanda, December 17, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's despatch of this date, complaining of an insult made to the Portuguese flag in this port by the boats of Her Majesty's ship under my command, which yesterday evening boarded the brigantine "Paquete de Mossamedes."

In reply, I have to offer to your Excellency the following explanation:—

On my return to the "Torch" yesterday, at 5:30 P.M., in company with Commander Beamish of Her Majesty's ship "Wrangler," when about 500 yards from the "Torch," it appeared to me that the "Paquete de Mossamedes" was steering directly for the bows of the vessel under my command. On board the "Torch" sails were set and the cable slipped, which prevented the collision which must inevitably have occurred had this not been done.

Having by this time arrived on board the "Torch," and considering that the circumstances of this case required an explanation, I ordered my Lieutenant to take to the boats and bring the brigantine to anchor, which he did.

When I saw that the vessel was anchored, I immediately recalled the boats by signal, and to call attention to the signal a gun was fired. The Lieutenant then returned with the boats under his orders, and I can assure you that he did not remain on board the brigantine more than a quarter of an hour.

I cannot, nor do I wish to, impute the conduct of the master of the "Paquete de Mossamedes" to malice; I can therefore only suppose that it was due to extreme incapability or gross neglect.

From what is stated, your Excellency will perceive that what I did on this occasion was not without reason; and as the brigantine was about leaving the harbour with a favourable wind, it was indispensable, in order to obtain the necessary explanations, that she should forthwith be brought to an anchor, and this I took upon myself, as there was not time to communicate with the authorities of the port.

The early receipt of your Excellency's letter anticipated the complaint which I was about to address to your Excellency to-day.

I must express my deep regret that your Excellency could suppose that a British officer would at any time attempt to insult the Portuguese flag, more particularly when so many proofs of friendship towards our country have so lately been given on the occasion of the melancholy event which has just taken place.

In conclusion, I assure your Excellency that it has always been, and will ever be, my sincere wish to cultivate that friendly intercourse which for so many years has existed between the two nations.

I have, &c.
(Signed) F. H. SMITH.

Her Majesty's Acting Vice-Consul to Earl Russell.—(Received May 6.)

My Lord,

Loanda, January 31, 1863.

I HAVE much satisfaction in being able to report to your Lordship the capture of the "Island Queen" on the 28th December last, by Her Majesty's ship "Wrangler," Commander Beamish, 180 miles due west of Elephant Bay. The case was taken before the Vice-Admiralty Court at St. Helena for adjudication.

2. The captain of this vessel said he was to have shipped his slaves at Equimina, a little to the north of Elephant Bay where he expected about 1,000, but he would have gone off had he been able to obtain 800. He was told in Lisbon, when asked to take charge of the "Island Queen," that to the southward of Loanda there was not the least danger of being captured, as the English cruisers were seldom or never sent there.

3. There is, my Lord, a great deal of truth in this; indeed, the few cruisers on this division of the station should always be on their cruising-ground, to effectually blockade the coast against the Traffic in Slaves. But Her Majesty's ships here being small must come frequently to Loanda for coals, or having taken a full prize and the vessel reported to be unseaworthy, they are obliged, having burnt her, to take the negroes over to St. Helena.

4. The principal points of this coast for the Slave Trade are no doubt to the north of Ambriz, and these places are carefully watched by Her Majesty's cruisers on this division; nor can they well be spared off their respective cruising-grounds:

therefore, except upon good information or when going to Ascension or St. Helena, the coast south of Loanda remains unvisited. The facilities for obtaining the victims of this infamous traffic are not so great there as at the north; but I fear, my Lord, they are far greater than they should be, considering that it is the territory of a Power bound by the honour of a Treaty, summoned by the calls of humanity, and, for the real welfare of this its largest Colony, so often counselled to use its every endeavour to exterminate this abominable barter for human flesh.

I have, &c.

My Lord,

Loanda, February 1, 1863.

THROUGH the courtesy of Lieutenant Allingham, commanding Her Majesty's ship "Antelope," I am enabled to acquaint your Lordship with the capture of the "Lola Montes" by Her Majesty's ship under his command.

2. The capture of this prize was effected on the 25th November last off Cabenda, and she was said to be going to fill up with slaves at Moanda. When taken she had no name, claimed no nationality, nor did anybody on board appear as master of her. Her name, however, was voluntarily given by the captain of the "Island Queen," the seizure of which is reported to your Lordship in my despatch of the 31st ultimo.

3. She was a Spanish schooner of 100 tons register, and sailed from Cadiz in August 1862.

4. One of the passengers or crew acknowledged to have been taken in a slave-ship before.

5. The "Lola Montes" was sent to be adjudicated upon in the Vice-Admiralty Court at St. Helena.

6. I beg respectfully to draw your Lordship's attention to the fact that this vessel, as well as the "Island Queen," came from the port of Cadiz.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch, dated 24th November, 1862, addressed to Her Majesty's Commissioner here, in which your Lordship approves of the note addressed by Mr. Gabriel to the Governor-General of Angola, requesting that inquiry might be made with the view to proceedings being adopted against the parties concerned in the Portuguese brigantine "Paquete de Loanda."

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch dated 24th November, 1862, addressed to Her Majesty's Commissioner here, approving of his proceedings in regard to the Portuguese brigantine "Paquete de Mossamedes," suspected of being destined to be employed in the Slave Trade.

2. I have the further honour to acquaint your Lordship that this vessel did not leave the port of Loanda until the middle of December, when she went to the River Congo for firewood, and that, in conformity with the bonds exacted before her departure, she returned to Loanda during the course of the present month.

3. I beg to assure your Lordship that I will note with care the movements of this vessel; and should anything of a suspicious nature take place, I will as soon as possible apprize your Lordship of the same, and place the information at the service of the officers commanding Her Majesty's cruizers on this coast.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that Her Majesty's ship "Brisk," Captain Luce, while on her way down from the Bights Division to Loanda, captured on the 10th instant, off the Island of Anno Bom, a slaver without colours or papers, of less than 100 tons, with 360 slaves on board.

2. It appears that this vessel was the "Bella Augusta," that she had shipped 500 slaves between Red Point and Cabenda seventeen days before, and that 140 had died in that short space of time, principally from the dearth of water; it having been discovered after the shipment of the negroes that there were only two casks full on board: from the others, it was said, the remainder of the water originally taken in had run out. The "Bella Augusta" was on her way to Anno Bom for a fresh supply.

3. The full report of the case your Lordship will, no doubt, obtain from another quarter, as the "Bella Augusta," with the necessary evidence, was sent for adjudication before the Vice-Admiralty Court at Sierra Leone.

My Lord,

Loanda, February 28, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that Her Majesty's ship "Zebra," captured in the River Congo, on the 20th November last, the brigantine "Liberdade."

2. Your Lordship may remember that Her Majesty's late Commissioners in the course of last year complained strongly to Governor Calheiros of the system of allowing vessels to clear hence for the Island of St. Thomas with libertos, a system which so suddenly sprung up and flourished so well under his administration, but which, through your Lordship's intervention, has so quickly been extinguished. This brigantine "Liberdade" was one of the vessels which was permitted to proceed on this illegal speculation, for such it no doubt was.

3. Not being able to communicate with the Governor-General as Acting Vice-Consul, I took advantage of his Excellency being Acting British Commissioner, and in my character of Clerk to Her Majesty's Commissioners, proceeded to the palace with the letter from the late Governor, General Calheiros, to Her Majesty's Commissioners, dated April 7, 1862, in paragraph 9 of which he acknowledges that the "Liberdade" was about to leave this port in conformity with the law of the country. By this I inferred that the necessary bonds had been entered into.

4. I likewise took with me the letter from Commander Hoskins, commanding Her Majesty's ship "Zebra," to Her Majesty's Commissioner, informing him of the capture. I explained to the Governor-General that these documents were from the archives of the Commission, of which he was the sole representative here, and that these letters I had the honour of placing before him as such, leaving him to act as he thought fit in his other capacity—that of Chief of the Government of this Province.

5. His Excellency informed me that he was aware of the capture of the "Liberdade," and that he had already communicated with the Government of the Island of St. Thomas, where the "Liberdade" went after leaving this, and where it appears she was sold to other parties, thereby relieving the bonds in this city of responsibility in the voyage she was destined to attempt, but which she has been happily frustrated in accomplishing. His Excellency expressed a hope that the bonds which it was necessary for her to obtain at the Island of St. Thomas previous to her departure would be exacted, and that it was with that object that he had requested the Governor of that island at once to put the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty in possession of all the information he possibly could on the subject.

6. The promptitude and spontaneity on the part of the present Governor-General in thus taking action with regard to this matter will, I feel assured, be fully appreciated by your Lordship.

Loanda, March 3, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that Her Majesty's ship "Antelope" arrived in this port with the Portuguese brigantine "Venus" in tow, in the month of January last.

The case was tried before the Mixed Commission established in this city, his Excellency the Governor-General acting as Commissioner on the part of Great Britain, in accordance with the provision of Article X of Annex B of the Treaty between Great Britain and Portugal, dated 3rd July, 1842.

The "Venus"* was on the 25th of February adjudicated a bad prize, but the captor was not cast in damages for the detention of the brigantine.

The judgment of the Commissioners will be found in the official "Boletim," a translation of which I beg to inclose.

Inclosure in No. 66.

Extract from the "Official Boletim" of February 25, 1863.

(Translation.)

IT has been adjudged by the Portuguese and British Mixed Commission established in this city, in virtue of the Treaty concluded between Great Britain and Portugal for the Suppression of the Slave Trade, signed in Lisbon on the 3rd July, 1842,—

That these proceedings, and the documents hereunto annexed, being seen and examined, it results from the communication (folio 5), from the report of capture (folio 7), and certificate (folio 9), rectified by the sworn declaration (folios 15 to 19), that C. O'D. Allingham, Lieutenant Royal Navy, commanding Her Majesty's ship "Antelope," sighted on the 2nd instant, off Cabenda, the brigantine "Venus," steering towards the land, and that the steamer having immediately made for her, as soon as she was concealed from the brigantine, this vessel tacked to sea, and setting port studding-sails, made every effort to escape her, with the land wind then blowing light from the northern quadrant, but for the little breeze soon came up to her after a short chase, when she hoisted Portuguese colours:

That the said Commander of the steamer then boarding her, upon the appearance of her master he was recognized to be the same man met with before on board an American notorious slaver, named the "Ilha da Cuba," at that time pretending to be an American, and now appearing as a Portuguese subject:

That proceeding on the search, and finding her with a full cargo, the said officer could not ascertain if there were on board any of the articles pointed out in Article IX of the Treaty of 3rd July, 1842, but that astern of the mainmast a flying deck was found, separated by a partition, which appeared to him, the captor, to be the usual place on board slave-vessels to keep the women apart from the men :

That upon examination of the ship's papers, they did not seem to be in good order, in consequence of discrepancy in the captain's name, and because a greater number of passengers being mentioned in the articles than there were actually on board ; and that all these circumstances, added to that of the brigantine ascending the River Congo at the time she was discovered by the steamer—Loanda being the port of her destination, likewise the efforts made by that vessel to escape her, besides the master's rude reception of the boarding officer, gave rise to the suspicion that the brigantine might be engaged in the Slave Traffic, and let him to detain her, and to bring her before this Court.

The master, mate, and supercargo of the said brigantine concur in their depositions (from folios 22 to 31) ; they deny the vessel's having altered her course, setting any more sails on the appearance of the steamer, or endeavouring to escape her ; but the captain does not deny having been met with on board the "Ilha de Cuba" when she was detained by this same officer. He declares that he was second mate, and not first mate, but he denies having said to be an American.

In the survey (folio 34) it is asserted by the Surveying Officers that they found nothing, either in the vessel or her cargo, to give the slightest cause of suspicion of her being engaged in the Slave Trade, and consequently that they did not find the slave-deck mentioned by the captor, but only a partition forming a store for provisions, which could never be turned into a slave-deck with the few old boards found in the vessel.

From the Report (folio 43) it is stated by the same Surveying Officers that the vessel's log was correct, and in good order.

The whole being seen and well-examined, and considering that the said brigantine "Venus" has all her papers in legal form, and that she was thus carrying a cargo for licit commerce, as shown by the documents annexed to these proceedings ; considering that, from the strict search performed upon the said vessel and her cargo, as from the survey effected on her log, no cause whatever of suspicion of her being engaged in the Slave Trade was obtained ; considering that there is some confusion or inexactitude on the part of the captor when he says that the brigantine "Venus" was ascending the River Congo, contradictory to his Declaration (folio 7), where he states having detained the said vessel off Cabenda, concluding that she was going up the river, his Certificate (folio 9) being dated off Cabenda ; and that this Court, so as to obtain correct information, having presented to him at the time of his declaration (folios 15 to 19) a chart of the coast for him to determine the point where he sighted the brigantine, he made it at a medium distance between Cabenda and the Congo ; considering that there is no probability of the detained vessel endeavouring to avoid the steamer, as with a light wind from the north-east and port studding-sails, the cruiser standing south-east, according to Declaration (folio 17) she could never have escaped : we do adjudge the said brigantine "Venus" a bad prize, and as such free and clear her for not being implicated in any of the items of Article IX of the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1842, and order that all her crew be restored to liberty, and the vessel and cargo returned in her actual condition to the respective master. Considering, moreover, that the captor was led into error by fault of the master of the said brigantine that caused him to engender well-founded suspicion against the same, not only from the difference of three passengers being short from those set down in the Articles, but because the name of the master was not alike in the several ship's papers, the signatures likewise differing in regard to the name "Pinto,"—irregularities which the master should have been more cautious about, to avoid troubles of this nature ; added to which, the master was particularly suspicious to the captor, having been formerly met by him on board an American vessel which he understood subsequently shipped slaves, and that the confidential denouncements respecting this vessel gave the captor good grounds to detain her. Having in view the disposition of Article VII, in fine, of Annex B to the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1842, the Commissioners in the Mixed Commission adjudge the said Lieutenant Constantine O'Donnell Allingham, commanding Her Majesty's ship "Antelope," free and exempt of payment of indemnities of any kind for losses and damages caused to the said brigantine, her cargo, passengers, or crew by such detention, and consequently her owner, shipper, master, crew, and passengers, with no right to claim any such indemnities from the captor or the British Government. And order it to be thus executed, for which purpose they interpose their legal authority.

Given and published in session of the Mixed Commission Court at St. Paul de Loanda, on the 25th February, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that I arrived in this city on the 7th instant, and on the 9th I presented my respects to his Excellency the Governor-General, and showed him my warrant as Her Majesty's Commissioner. The Portuguese Commissioner was dangerously ill, and unable to receive my visit: he died on the Sunday following.

On the 14th instant I took the oaths as Her Majesty's Commissioner, and also as a member of the Board of Superintendence, before the principal Magistrate of the place. On the same day I attended a session of the Mixed Commission, the Governor-General acting as Portuguese Commissioner.

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship that the "Mariquita," an American-built fore-and-aft schooner, with Custom-house clearances from London, was on the 17th March captured off Point Padrone by Commander Hoskins, of Her Majesty's ship "Zebra," with 471 slaves on board. The "Mariquita" had been watched since the beginning of March by the cruizer stationed off the River Congo. She was sent to St. Helena for adjudication.

The Captain of the "Mariquita" was the notorious Captain Bowen, formerly of the "Nightingale." He was sent to St. Helena in the captured vessel, Commander Hoskins most judiciously thinking it desirable to rid the coast of so bold and skilful a slave captain.

My Lord,

Loanda, May 20, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship that on the 1st of this month a launch arrived at this port with 79 blacks on board. She had been captured by the Chief (Chefe) of Novo Redondo, cruising along the coast, with the intention, as he supposed, of conveying the negroes on board of some vessel in the offing. The Governor-General informed me that such was also his opinion, and that he had sent down orders to ascertain by whom they had been shipped; and his Excellency has since told me that two white men have been apprehended and are in custody. The launch has been sent down to be tried in the Prize Court at Benguella, within which Province the capture was made.

I fear, my Lord, that more slave-trading has been carried on to the southward of this port than we have hitherto been aware of, and I think it would be desirable that that part of the coast should be more frequently visited by Her Majesty's cruizers.

I am happy to inform your Lordship that, from frequent conversations that I have had with the Governor-General, I feel satisfied that he will use all the means in his power to put an end to the Slave Trade.

My Lord,

Loanda, July 29, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith a Report of the case of the Portuguese brigantine "Laura," condemned on the 17th March by the Mixed Commission holding its sitting in this city, with a translation of the Judgment delivered by the Court.

Among the papers found on board was a bond ("termo di responsabilidade") signed on the 16th of last September, before the Portuguese Consul at Havana, by José Lucas the master of the "Laura" and Ygnacio Unanue as his surety, subjecting themselves to the usual penalties should the "Laura" be employed for slave-trading purposes. The Governor-General has at my request called the attention of the Portuguese Government to this circumstance, that they may take steps to enforce the penalties.

Inclosure 1 in No. 73.

Report of the case of the Portuguese brigantine "Laura."

THE Judgment given in this case enters so fully into all the particulars, and recapitulates so clearly and minutely the evidence taken, that little is left on which to report.

The "Laura" had been an American vessel, owned by W. W. Huffington, of Baltimore, and was sold at the Havana on the 5th of September, 1862, to José Lucas, a Portuguese subject. She sailed from Havana on the 28th October with a provisional register granted by the Portuguese Consul at that port, having cleared out for the Island of San Thomé (St. Thomas) and a market, her cargo consisting principally of rum, with some other articles of small value. She arrived in the Congo towards the end of January without having touched at San Thomé, although she had cleared out at Havana for that island, and had passed within 200 miles to windward of it. She was visited by a boat of Her Majesty's ship "Zebra," on the 11th February, captured by that vessel on the 13th, and brought to this port on the 21st of that month. Proceedings were commenced in Court of Mixed Commission before the Portuguese Commissioners, in the absence of the British Commissioners, on the 24th; the monition issued, and the following papers found on board filed in the cause:—

Copy of List of Papers.

1. Provisional register granted by the Portuguese Consul at Havana.
2. Power of attorney from W. W. Huffington, of Baltimore, appointing William E. Atkins, master of the vessel, his attorney, for the purpose of selling the same.
3. Bill of sale to José Lucas, a Portuguese subject, executed before the American Consul-General at Havana, and dated September 5, 1862.
4. A certificate of the Portuguese Consul that José Lucas had presented the bill of sale to him, and authorizing him to apply for register.
5. Certificate of Portuguese Consul that José Lucas had appeared before him, and declared that he was about to proceed to San Thomé, and ports on the coast; that he had no intention of engaging in the Slave Trade, and subjecting himself to the penalties mentioned in Article 13 of the Decree of the 10th December, 1836, should he act in its violation.
6. Bond entered into by José Lucas and his surety, Ignacio Unanne, before the Portuguese Consul, that the former would not engage in Slave Trade, and submitting to penalty for infraction.
7. Declaration of José Lucas before Portuguese Consul that he is sole owner.
8. Statement of wages paid to the crew.
9. Crew list.
10. Certificate of Spanish authorities respecting crew.
11. Certificate of Portuguese Consul of payment of fees.
12. Manifest.
13. Bill of health.
14. A certificate and nine Custom-house papers from Havana.
15. Sealed manifest and bills of lading certified by Portuguese Consul at Havana.

The captor's declaration is to the following effect:—

That being in latitude 6° 7' south, and longitude 12° 9' east of Greenwich, he seized the brigantine "Laura" for having violated the Treaty with Portugal of 3rd July, 1842;

That he had received in December an intimation from the Foreign Office that the "Laura" had changed owners at Havana, and might be looked for on a slaving voyage;

That having learnt that a suspicious brigantine had arrived in the Congo, he had on the 7th February despatched Lieutenant Farquharson to examine her;

That on receiving Lieutenant Farquharson's report he sent two boats to bring her to the anchorage of the ship, off Point Padrone;

That the brigantine was consequently brought down and anchored alongside the ship on the 13th of the same month;

That he then proceeded on board, and having examined the person calling himself master, the vessel, and the cargo, he determined to seize her, and send her before the Mixed Commission at Loanda;

That the papers seized are sufficient to prove her entitled to the flag she claims, Portuguese;

That no bond was produced such as is required by the Portuguese Government from vessels proceeding to the coast of Africa under their flag;

That although the vessel had cleared for St. Thomas, and her bills of lading made out for that island, she had not touched there, although she had been in the immediate neighbourhood, as shown by her chart, and she might there have obtained valid Portuguese papers had she been on a legal voyage;

That among her officers and crew not one appears to be a bonâ fide Portuguese subject;

That on Lieutenant Farquharson boarding her the first time on the 8th, no master made his appearance;

That when boarded and detained on the 11th, great difficulty was experienced in inducing him to come on board;

That when boarded and examined by captor, he represented himself as José Lucas, master and owner, but was proved, on being confronted with Lieutenant Allingham, of Her Majesty's ship "Antelope," and subsequently confessed himself to be a wholly different person, and by name Vital P. de Miranda;

That the cabin foremast bulkhead had been shifted aft 5 feet, and a flying deck built in the after part of the vessel, ventilated by a portion of the cabin skylight, as is frequently seen in slavers for the stowage of women and children, such alteration of the bulkhead and building of a flying deck not been noticed in any official document, and being in breach of the 2nd section of the IXth Article of the Treaty;

That no log-book was produced on demand.

The evidence of Vital P. de Miranda was to the effect that he had been requested by José Lucas, the owner and captain, who was ill on shore at Punta da Lenha, to take charge of the vessel after her capture. He could give no reason why the vessel had not touched at St. Thomas, beyond having been told by José Lucas that he expected to do better trade in the Congo. He admitted that he had been captured in 1850 when engaged in Slave Trade as Captain of the Brazilian brig "Desengano," but declared that he had never since embarked in speculations of that nature. He denied having had any connection with the "Flor de Loanda" or the "Liberdade."

The boatswain and cabin-boy were also examined for the defence, but their evidence had no immediate bearing on the case, beyond expressing their ignorance of the reason why the ship had not touched at St. Thomas, and that they did not know what had become of the log-book.

Vital P. de Miranda on being recalled, stated that the log-book was not in his possession; that on inquiring for it, he was told that it had gone on shore with the luggage of the first mate, who was also ill at Punta da Lenha.

In the session of the 3rd of March the Commissioners, at the request of the captor, appointed inspectors to examine the charts, and report what was the nearest distance from St. Thomas that the "Laura" had passed, and on the 5th, the Commission then sitting, the Inspectors reported that she had passed within 200 miles; and the second mate being called and examined, declared that the chart produced was the one used on the voyage.

The Court met again on the 16th March, and appointed the following day to hear Counsel, and give Judgment; and on the 17th March, Counsel having been heard on behalf of the captor, and for the defence, the Court condemned the "Laura" as good and lawful prize, and ordered that she should be disposed of in conformity with the stipulations of the Treaty.

W. VREDENBURG.

Inclosure 2 in No. 73.

Judgment in the case of the Portuguese brigantine "Laura."

(Translation.)

IT is resolved by the Portuguese and British Mixed Commission, established in this city by virtue of the Treaty celebrated between Great Britain and Portugal for the suppression of the Slave Trade, signed at Lisbon on the 3rd July, 1842; considering the declarations and the annexed documents, it is shown by the declaration of capture, folio 38, that Anthony Hiley Hoskins, Commander in the British Navy, and commanding the English steamer of war "Zebra," being anchored with the ship under his command off Point Padrone, at the entrance of the River Zaire (Congo), captured on the 13th of February last the Portuguese brigantine "Laura," which was detained by a boat belonging to his ship on the 11th of the said month; the brigantine having entered the River Zaire, and was found anchored at Punta da Lenha; and that going on board and proceeding to a minute examination of the said vessel, he determined to bring her before this Commission to be tried for having violated the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1842, because on examining her papers he observed that the vessel had come from Havana, bringing a cargo for the Island of San Thomé (St. Thomas), and on looking at the chart of her route he observed that the brigantine had never touched at that island, although she had been in its immediate vicinity, when an opportunity presented itself of obtaining valid Portuguese papers, if she had been on a legal voyage; he, moreover, remarked that the person who called himself José Lucas, and said he was captain and owner of the vessel, on being recognized by Lieutenant Allingham, Commander of the steamer "Antelope," confessed that he was another person and that his name was Vital Pereira de Miranda; that he could produce no official log-book; and, finally, that the bulkhead before the cabin was moved abaft five feet, and a flying-deck built, ventilated by a portion of the skylight of the cabin, as is frequently seen in slave-ships for the stowage of women and children.

This declaration of capture is ratified on oath by the captor at folio 18.

In the deposition of Vital Pereira de Miranda, at folio 22 v., he declares that he was the representative of José Lucas, captain and owner of the "Laura," since she was captured, because the said Lucas was very ill on shore, and charged him by a letter of orders to come on board with the ship's papers on the occasion of her capture. He declares that the ship had left Havana bound to the Island of St. Thomas and a market, and went to the Zaire (Congo) before going to St. Thomas, because they thought they would do a better trade; he denies that he represented himself to the captain as José Lucas, captain and owner of the brigantine, but confesses that in 1850, being captain of the Brazilian brig "Desengano," he was taken by the English steamer "Cyclops" at Ambriz, and sent to St. Helena, for navigating without papers, with water and provisions, but that from that time till now he has never tried a speculation in the prohibited Traffic, and that that was the first and only time.

The depositions of the boatswain and cabin-boy have little influence in the case, either for the defence or prosecution; they are unanimous, nevertheless, in being ignorant of the reason why the brigantine neglected to go to St. Thomas and changed her voyage by coming to the River Zaire, and respecting the captain's remaining on shore ill, the former saying that he spoke to him on the day of the capture, and saw him seated on the side of his bed, and the latter that besides the captain the first mate, whose name was Florencio Fradua, also remained ill on shore.

All of which being seen and examined:

Considering that the brigantine "Laura," above referred to, came from Havana with a cargo of provisions, cleared exclusively for St. Thomas, and verifying by an examination of the chart, folio 46, that she passed 200 miles to windward of that island, where the cargo ought to have been examined and duties paid on it, did not touch there notwithstanding the difficulties of the longer voyage that she made to the River Zaire, without the defence showing the slightest reason for this deviation;

Considering that having neglected to go to the port of her legal destination, and finding herself anchored at Punta da Lenha where there are no authorities, she there discharged the whole of her cargo, with a trifling exception, without the slightest plausible reason being given for such a proceeding;

Considering that, on the occasion of the capture of this brigantine, there appeared neither mate nor captain, and that the excuse cannot be admitted that they were both ill on shore, because, as relates to the captain, the boatswain, in his deposition, folios 27 and 32, states that he saw him up at the side of his bed; and in the letter of instructions of the said captain, at folio 39, he says that "the brigantine 'Laura,' his property and under his command, having been detained by an officer of the English navy, he delivers the command of the same to Captain Miranda, on account of the bad state of his health and other business that he had at that place." When it is certain that in all reverses and accidents the captain is always the last to abandon his ship; and that, finding himself unwell, he should not have lost the opportunity to avail himself of a passage in a steamer with a surgeon, which would have transported him to Loanda in a few hours, where he would with certainty have found all the resources necessary for his treatment, and which do not exist at the other place, and that no business more important and serious could interest him than the capture of a ship, his property and under his command;

Considering that, on the survey which was held on the ship, as appears in the auto at folio 40, the surveyors declare that they found a stove of such capacity that a boiler could be adapted to it, capable of cooking enough for 100 persons each time, which is a proof, according to No. 8, Article IX, of the Treaty of the 3rd of July, 1842;

Considering that, on the said survey, the surveyors found a flying deck before the cabin which had been recently augmented, having been removed, with the bulk-head, five feet abaft its original position, the consequence being the flying deck thus augmented became convenient to receive the women and children in order to separate them from the other slaves, the said flying deck or compartment being another of the proofs mentioned in the Treaty, Article IX, No. 2;

Considering that Captain Vital Pereira de Miranda, who was employed to represent the captain and owner of the brigantine, did not produce the official log of the same, and in his deposition, folio 22 to 25, confessed that he was a slave-captain in 1850, but denying that he had entered into any other speculation in slaves, it is proved by the declaration of three English officers, folios 81 and 82, that they recognize him as a slave-dealer, captured by them again in 1862.

From all these circumstances, and others that appear in the autos, it is proved that the brigantine "Laura" was destined for the Traffic in Slaves, in contravention of the Treaty of the 3rd of July, 1842, between Portugal and Great Britain, for the suppression of the said Traffic: therefore the Commissioners of the Mixed Commission judge the capture legally made, and condemn her as a good prize, with all her equipments, cargo, and other objects found on board, and liable to the effects of confiscation, and order that the said brigantine shall be disposed of in conformity with the stipulations of the said Treaty. They also order that the individuals found on board the said brigantine "Laura" shall be placed at the disposal of the Governor-General of the province, for which object he interposes his legal authority, and desires that the order be obeyed.

Given and published in session of the Mixed Commission in St. Paul de Assumpção de Loanda, the 17th of March, 1863.

Her Majesty's Commissioner to Earl Russell.—(Received September 19.)

My Lord,

Loanda, July 31, 1863.

IT having come to my knowledge that the custom still continued of allowing negroes, to the number of ten, under the name of "libertos," and provided with passports granted by the Provincial Government, to be shipped at this port on board of vessels bound to the Island of St. Thomas, and such a proceeding appearing to me to be a violation of the assurance given by the Marques de Loulé to Mr. Herries, as stated by that gentleman in his despatch to your Lordship of the 1st September, 1862, a copy of which despatch was transmitted by your Lordship to Mr. Gabriel in your despatch of the 23rd September of last year, I addressed a despatch to the Governor-General calling his attention to the circumstances, and requesting to be informed whether he had received any instructions to the effect mentioned in Mr. Herries' despatch.

I have the honour to transmit a copy of my despatch to his Excellency, with a translation of his reply.

Your Lordship will observe that he states that, on taking charge of the Government of the Province, the most serious attention and exact fulfilment of the Treaty with Portugal were particularly recommended to him; that in consequence of that recommendation he had been most scrupulous in granting passports; that he refused them altogether to slaves, and granted them to liberated negroes ("libertos"), after taking special precautions that they should enjoy all the advantages of their position as free men.

I have had, also, more than one conversation with his Excellency on the subject. He repeated to me the substance of his despatch, and added, that his personal views were strongly opposed to the Slave Trade, and that he would spare no means of putting an end to it; but that, with respect to the liberated blacks whom he permitted to go to St. Thomas, he thought that their position would be much improved, and that, from the precautions he took, he considered that there was no probability of their being again reduced to slavery.

From my knowledge of the present Governor-General, I am bound to state that I am satisfied that he is acting in good faith; but I am far from feeling satisfied that his precautions will attain the end he proposes.

I know nothing of the present Governor of St. Thomas, and would therefore not be justified in assuming that he will be neglectful of his duties; but it is certain that it is thought here that many of those libertos are sold and enslaved again on their arrival at that island. As long as these blacks are shipped as freemen I am afraid the authorities are within the letter of the Treaty, however much they may violate its spirit, and the only way to put a final stop to these proceedings would be for the Portuguese Government to carry out in its integrity the Marques de Loulé's assurances to Mr. Herries, "that effectual measures had been taken to put a stop to the practice complained of;" and that "any connivance at this Traffic would no longer be permitted."

I have, &c.

Her Majesty's Commissioner to the Governor-General of the Province of Angola.

Most Excellent Sir,

Loanda, June 3, 1863.

IN a despatch addressed on the 23rd of last September by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to Her Majesty's late Commissioner, Mr. Gabriel, it is stated that a despatch had been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lisbon, to the effect that he had been informed by the Marquis de Loulé that the Portuguese Government had taken effectual measures to prohibit the exportation of negroes from this Province to the Island of San Thomé.

Notwithstanding this assurance, I have learnt with regret that on the 12th of April the steamer "Dona Antonia" left this port with 10 so-called libertos on board.

On the 13th of last month the schooner "Paquete de Mossamedes" left with 10 also on board; and I have since been informed by the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Griffon" that he visited the "Nini," bound also to San Thomé from this port, and found 12 on board, provided with passports from the Provincial Government.

I should feel obliged by your Excellency acquainting me, for the information of my Government, whether any orders have been received from the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty of the nature mentioned in the despatch of Mr. Herries above referred to.

The Governor-General of the Province of Angola to Her Majesty's Commissioner.

(Translation.)

Illustrious Sir,

Palace of the General Government, Loanda, June 5, 1863.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of the despatch which you addressed to me on the 3rd instant, and in reply I have to inform you that the most serious attention and exact fulfilment of the Treaty of the 3rd of July, 1842, for the suppression of the Slave Trade, were particularly recommended to me by the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty when I came to take charge of this Government. I have, in consequence of that recommendation, been perhaps over-scrupulous in granting passports to blacks for the Island of St. Thomas, since I have only permitted to go in the condition of libertos a number equal and in the circumstances which the Treaty permits in the case of slaves; and besides declaring in the passports of the 10 blacks their condition of libertos, I have addressed a special despatch to the Governor of that Province, calling his attention to their going in the above-mentioned condition, so that they cannot fail to enjoy before the law the immense difference and advantage which they will possess over slaves.

With respect to the schooner "Nini," I have to inform you that I granted passports by her for the Island of St. Thomas to a colonist who took with him 10 libertos, after having fulfilled the legal formalities, and also to another European passenger. I am not aware, beyond these above referred to, that there were in that vessel any other passengers.

If, as you say, 12 blacks were found on board that schooner, I must think that they were not all provided with passports; it being, nevertheless, the fact that occasions have happened when 12 blacks have gone hence to St. Thomas in the same vessel, that is, 10 in the condition of libertos accompanying some colonist, and 2 as free blacks provided with passports which they had requested under circumstances which I could not refuse them, otherwise many authorities of the country would be prevented from leaving the place if their colour were an obstacle to their travelling.

In conclusion, I have to state that it will be very agreeable to me if this frank explanation gives you some satisfaction.

God preserve, &c.

Her Majesty's Commissioner to Earl Russell.—(Received October 22.)

My Lord,

Loanda, August 22, 1863.

FROM information courteously communicated to me by Commander Hoskins, Senior Officer of the South Division, I am enabled to report to your Lordship that on the 12th instant Commander Sholto Douglas, of Her Majesty's ship "Espoir," captured, off Masséra, a brigantine having on board about 550 slaves shipped two or three days before in the neighbourhood of that place.

From documents found on board, her name is supposed to be the "Haidee," and that she came from Lisbon and Cadiz; and although they denied the fact, the crew were evidently Portuguese. The captain mentioned that he had effected his escape last year with a cargo of slaves from about the same place. The circumstance of two or three of the slaves speaking a little English would point to Ambrizette as the place whence they were marched to the place of shipment.

The slaves being excessively crowded, and the slave-deck unusually small and confined, Commander Douglas removed into the "Espoir" 110 of them, he being bound to St. Helena, to which place he also sent the slaver with a prize-crew.

Her Majesty's Commissioner to Earl Russell.—(Received October 22.)

My Lord,

Loanda, August 24, 1863.

THE illness of Mr. Gabriel, and his lamented death so soon after the termination of the case of the launch "E," prevented his leaving any abstract or notes to assist me in preparing a report on that case; and as I was in total ignorance of the facts I have been obliged to depend entirely for materials on the confused and voluminous mass of papers filed in the cause. The report which I have now the honour to transmit will, in consequence of these circumstances, be found, I fear, neither as clear nor concise as I should desire.

The two Portuguese passengers and the crew of the launch were committed to prison on their arrival, and subsequently brought to trial, but Mr. Hewett informs me that he had heard that they had been acquitted for want of evidence.

Inclosure 1 in No. 76.

Report on the case of the Portuguese launch "E."

THE launch "E" was detained by Commander Sholto Douglas, of Her Majesty's ship "Espoir," on the 2nd of November, 1862, about twelve miles south of Mangue Grande, on suspicion of being engaged in the Slave Trade, and brought by him to this port to be tried by the Mixed Commission, in conformity with the Treaty of July 1842. The captor's declaration of capture, to the truth of which he was sworn on the 7th of November, is to the following effect:—

"I, the Undersigned, Sholto Douglas, holding the rank of Commander in Her Britannic Majesty's Navy, and commanding Her Majesty's ship 'Espoir,' duly authorized by the Treaty between Great Britain and Portugal, dated July 1842, for the suppression of Slave Trade, do hereby declare that on the 2nd day of November, 1862, being about twelve miles south of Mangue Grande, I seized the launch 'E,' sailing under Portuguese colours, manned by a crew of nine Cabendas, and having on board two Europeans, one of whom, Manoel Martins Barboza, declared himself to be the owner, and the other, Francisco A. P. de Lemos, stated he was a passenger, and the owner of the cargo.

"And I further declare that I have detained this launch for having violated the aforesaid Treaty, she having on board at the time of capture 5 slaves, 3 female and 2 male, without passport or any other document to show where or for what purpose they had been received on board, although, as alleged by the crew, they had been received on board in the River Congo a few days previously.

"And also for having on board at the time of seizure, 1st, an extraordinary quantity of food, and more than could be sufficient for the use of the crew, consisting of calavances, farinha, and ground-nuts, the same not being entered on a manifest or any other document as part of the cargo for trade; 2ndly, a quantity of mats, much larger than is necessary for the use of the crew of the launch.

"I do further declare that this launch when first observed made every effort to escape from the 'Espoir,' and that although when detained and brought alongside the owner stated that he was bound to Loanda, there is strong reason to suppose, from the course which she was steering at the time as well as her subsequent manœuvres, and also from letters found on board, that she was making for the notorious slave-station Mangue Grande.

"Declared and signed by me, this second day of November, 1862.

(Signed) "SHOLTO DOUGLAS, Commanding Her Majesty's ship 'Espoir.'"

Finally, besides the crew and 2 European passengers, 5 blacks unprovided with passports, 3 of whom were females and 2 males, were discovered on board.

The register was granted by the Provincial Government in January, 1859, to Messrs. Rabella and Cardozo of Benguela. They signed the bond mentioned among the papers on the 8th November, 1861. Senhor Martins Barboza, one of the passengers who declared that the launch was in his possession, as agent of the owners, had some time previously applied to the Governor-General for a passport for himself and two free blacks; failing to satisfy the Governor that the blacks were really free, the passport as requested was refused, and one granted to him alone; he did not hesitate however to falsify the passport, and inserted after the word "levando," the words "duas pretas livres."

Proceedings were commenced on the 7th November, on which day Commander Sholto Douglas, the captor, was sworn to the truth of his declaration. On the following day he was examined orally, and cross-examined by the advocate of the defendants, and on the 10th the witnesses for the defence were submitted to examination.

José Cabinda stated that he was the Master of the launch "E," that he left the River Congo on the 30th October bound to Loanda, and that three days after, opposite Maculla in sight of land, he was taken by the boat of an English steamer and conveyed on board; that on the demand of the Commander he delivered to him the papers of the launch, and she was taken in tow by the steamer.

He further stated that he used the Portuguese flag, and that the cargo consisted of about 100 bags of ground-nuts, $1\frac{1}{2}$ pipes of oil, 300 billets of wood, and water enough only for the use of the crew; that he brought 7 passengers, 2 being white (Portuguese) and 5 blacks, all of whom were received on board in the River Congo, and that he presumed that the blacks were free; that the launch was uncovered, and that they had on board neither planks, gratings, shackles, nor mess-tubs nor kids, beyond those necessary for the use of the crew; that he brought no regular mats, but a small number of fine mats; that he had but a small stove for the use of the crew; and that Martins Barboza, the passenger, was owner. That, besides the articles mentioned above, he had two small bags of beans for the mess of the crew.

The evidence of the boatswain ("contramestre"), José da Silva, was in every respect similar to the foregoing, with the exception of his deposing that the black passengers were sent on board by a person named Oliveira, residing in the Congo, who did not mention to whom they were to be delivered. They were treated as free persons on board, and messed with the crew.

On the 11th November the examination of the witnesses for the defence was continued, and Manoel Martins Barboza deposed that he was a native of Elvas and a merchant at Loanda; that the cause of his being in prison was as follows: That he left the River Congo on the 29th of last month, at 7 o'clock in the morning, and had arrived about twelve or fifteen miles to the southward of Mangue Grande, when they saw an English steamer, which dispatched a boat in the direction of the launch on which he was aboard; that he was taken on board the steamer, half the cargo on board the launch being also taken on board the steamer, as well as the trunks and luggage of the passengers; that, the trunks having been opened by the passengers, the papers contained in them were delivered to the Commander of the steamer, the money replaced in the trunks, which were locked by the passengers; that on leaving the Congo his destination was Loanda, touching at Ambriz for the purpose of delivering there three small bags of beans to a person named Leopoldo, but in consequence of the seizure of the launch he was unable to call at Ambriz.

He further stated that the cargo consisted of 100 and odd sacks of ground nuts, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ pipes of oil, 3 small bags of beans above-mentioned, and about 300 billets of wood; that the crew consisted of 9 Cabendas, including the master, and that he brought 7 passengers, 2 being white Portuguese, and 5 free blacks; that the launch belonged to Antonio da Cunha Mello Cardozo, captain of the Portuguese brig "Fortuna," but that she was in his possession under power of attorney from the owner to sell her or make use of her as he thought proper; and that beyond the before-mentioned articles she had not on board either planks, chains, handcuffs, gratings, mess-tubs, or kids; that they had so little water on board that there was scarcely sufficient for seven days' use.

He stated further, that of the three women that he took with him on another occasion to the Congo, two of them figure in the present proceedings, having left the third at Mangue Grande on the occasion referred to; that the two women, wishing to return to Loanda, asked for a passage, which he gave them gratis, and that he also gave passages to the other passengers; that the launch in which he had lately embarked, taking three black women with him, was the "Luiza," then belonged to him, but he sold it to a Dutchman in the Congo.

In answer to the advocate of the captor, he deposed that there was also among the cargo a lot of coloured mats received on board at the Congo to be delivered at Loanda to a clerk of José Bernardo da Silva.

In reply to the advocate for the defence, he stated that some sealed letters were opened on board the steamer by an officer in the presence of the Commander; that it was usual for blacks to go hence to the Congo to enter into service; that it was not usual for slaves to go from Loanda to the Congo.

Maïena, an uncivilized negro ("negro boçal"), was called for examination; he did not understand a word of Portuguese, and the examination was attempted by means of an interpreter; he said that he was free, but was bought by a white man in Bomba, who sent him to Loanda; that he did not know the name of the white man, and as he was a slave he could not ask the name of his purchaser. The Tribunal seeing the repugnance of this witness to answer questions declined to examine him further.

João Antonio, native of Colungo Alto, deposed that he was free; that he had been in the service of a person named Monteiro, residing in Moanda, who arranged for his passage, paying in merchandize, the value of which was deducted from deponent's wages; that he embarked at Bemana; that he had formerly been the slave of the deceased Victor Antonio, who gave him his freedom.

Francisco Antonio Pereira de Lemos, native of Barrosas, merchant, deposed to the following effect:—That coming from the Congo in the launch "E," about six leagues from Mangue Grande, they saw an English steamer, from which a boat was sent to the launch, with orders to the master to go on board the steamer; that a portion of the cargo of the launch was taken on board the steamer, as well as the trunks and luggage of the passengers; that the trunks were opened, and the papers and correspondence taken out of them, and some of the sealed letters opened; that they were opened by an officer, in the presence of the Commander, and taken to the cabin; that the search was made in the presence of the passengers, who delivered the keys to the Commander, at his request; that the money was taken out of the trunks, but was replaced; that the trunks were more minutely searched again at Loanda; that they again took out the money, which was counted by three or four officers, and kept by them; that the launch used the Portuguese flag, and the crew consisted of 9 Cabendas, including the master, and the passengers were 5 blacks and 2 white Portuguese, one of whom was the deponent; that Manoel Martins Barboza made use of the launch under a power of attorney from the owner; that the cargo which she brought was composed of two barrels of oil, a hundred and odd bags of ground nuts, a barrel of tar, a bale of prints, a piece of white towelling, and three bags of beans, to be delivered to Senhor Leopoldo at Ambriz, a bale of painted mats from Cabenda in a roll, some Cabenda baskets, with ivory dolls, to be delivered to Senhor Vincente, Clerk of José Bernardo da Silva, and some wood for house use, probably about 400 billets; that the launch had on board neither planks, shackles, bolts, nor handcuffs, nor mess-tubs, nor kids and was provided with so little water that two days after her capture they were supplied by the ship of the captor; that the black passengers were all free; that they embarked at Punta da Lenha, in the Congo, and that the black cook João, now free, had formerly been a slave of Senhor Martins or his father, and that in deponent's presence he requested Senhor Martins to give him a passage to Loanda, to which he acceded. He further deposed that a portion of the money, to the amount of two contos, a hundred and odd milreis, was delivered to him in Banana by Abraham Conqu ainé, Agent of the French house of Messrs. Régis, for delivery to divers persons in this city, and the other portion was confided to him by sundry persons in the Congo, for delivery to different persons in Loanda. He stated that it was usual for free blacks, male and female, to go from Loanda to the Congo to serve in different capacities, and that many free negroes were there in the service of white carpenters, caulkers, &c.; that he left Loanda on the 28th September in the brig "Julia," to trade in goods that he took with him, as will be shown by the bills of lading among the captured papers.

João Antonio having been recalled, said that he had no paper proving him to be free, that he had been in possession of a letter of freedom, which he had given to his godmother Maria Antonia, to take care of; that she had died, and that he did not know what had become of it.

In the Session of the 13th November, 7 Cabendas forming the crew were called before the Commissioners and gave their names, and an order was issued for a survey of the launch, and the effects found on board.

The Commissioners then took into consideration a despatch from the French Consular Agent claiming the money found on board, on the ground that it was the property of a French subject, Abraham Conqu ainé, and alleging that the money could not be considered among the suspected articles found on board; they determined that the despatch should be attached to the papers in the cause to be taken into consideration; they further determined that eight sealed letters that had been filed by the captor should be opened on the following day, the persons to whom they were addressed being summoned to attend.

On the 14th November the Court again met on Session, two of the persons to whom the letters were addressed being in attendance, who handed in protests on the ground that the opening of sealed letters was illegal, and in violation of the Constitutional Charter of the Portuguese Monarchy and of the laws of civilized nations, all of which guaranteed the secrecy of letters, and established penalties for their infraction.

The Court taking into consideration the 3rd and 9th Articles of Annex B of the Treaty declined to admit the protest, and decided that the letters should be opened. They revealed nothing of importance bearing on the case.

In the Session of the 18th November it was determined that all the documents in the suit should be sent for five days to the respective Advocates, and in the Session of the 24th it was decided that they should be heard on the 26th of the same month, and the Advocates for the prosecution and the defence having been heard on that day, the Commissioners declared that judgment would be given on the 29th, and on that day they condemned the vessel as good prize, and directed that she should be disposed of in conformity with the Treaty. A translation of the Judgment is annexed hereto.

Judgment in the case of the Portuguese launch "E."

(Translation.)

ON consideration of the facts, and of the documents produced before this Court on the occasion of the capture of the launch "E" by Her Britannic Majesty's ship "Espoir," Commander Sholto Douglas, which form the base of the process, it will be seen that the above-mentioned launch, sailing under the Portuguese flag, was provided with papers granted by the Governor-General of this province in 1859 in the names of Rebello and Cardozo, of Benguela, as owners of her.

By the declaration of capture, at folio 7, Manoel Martins Barboza, passenger on board the said launch, appears as claiming her as his own, and to prove his claim rests himself on the documents at folios 1 and 2 of the Appendix No. 2: being, 1st, a letter of instructions of a stranger authorizing him to sell that craft, or to employ her as he thought proper; and, 2ndly, a power of attorney, which, for want of being signed, is considered a document null and of no effect—a circumstance which the Court cannot but remark proves great irregularity and negligence on the part of the Notary of this city, Antonio Maria Lazary, who subscribed the said power. This claim of property on the part of M. M. Barboza is further supported by his deposition at folio 59, and by the evidence of the witnesses at folios 54 to 57 inclusive.

By the declaration of capture it appears that the launch was seen by Her Britannic Majesty's ship "Espoir" on the 2nd of November, about twelve miles' distance from Mangue Grande, under sail, steering a north-east course; and when she chased her she took to her oars, and advancing, continued under sail and with her oars, which causing suspicion on the part of the Commander, induced him to visit her. That he then found out that she had on board, besides her crew, 2 white men and 5 negroes (of whom 3 were females), none of whom were provided with passports or any other document which could show where or for what purpose they had embarked; and that on an examination, by order of the Commander, of the cargo of this launch, an extraordinary quantity of provisions was discovered, consisting of beans, farinha, and ground-nuts, no document being brought forward which could show that these articles were intended for legal trade; and that it was these irregularities and suspicions which determined him to seize the craft and to bring her before the Court for adjudication.

It is alleged in defence that the launch did not, when being chased, set more sail, and to support this argument the declaration on oath of the captor is referred to; and, further, it is denied that those negroes found on board the launch were slaves, bringing forward as a proof the certificate of the letter of freedom of a negress named Carolina. In the evidence of M. M. Barboza, folio 59, he declares that all those negroes were free, and that at their request he had allowed them a free passage to Loanda. That the bags of beans came for delivery to Leopoldo, of Ambriz, and that the fine mats were an order for Loanda. In the evidence of Francisco Antonio Pereira de Lemos, it is stated that the negroes were all free, and passengers embarked at Punta da Lenha (River Congo) for Loanda, and that among them there being one of the name of João, a cook, who had been a slave of M. M. Barboza, or of his father, he (João), in the presence of the deponent, asked the said M. M. Barbosa for a passage, which he gave him gratis. In his evidence at folio 61, the witness João Antonio, the cook, declares that he was at Moanda, near Cabenda, in the service of F. Monteiro, who arranged his passage with the patrão of the launch, and that he embarked at a place called Punta de Banana, his passage being paid by the said Monteiro with goods, the value of which was deducted from his wages. Being questioned as to his letter of freedom, he answered that having left it in the hands of somebody in Loanda, who is now dead, he was unable to produce it. In the evidence of the Cabenda, the patrão of the launch, folio 55, it is said that these negroes were free as he presumed, and in the evidence of the Cabenda, José da Silva, the boatswain ("contramestre") at folio 56, he said that the negroes were free, judging from what he had heard said of them. In the evidence of Maiana, the uncivilized negro ("boçal") at folio 60, he declared, after much trouble, that he was free, and immediately afterwards that he was bought at Boma, and embarked for Loanda by a white man whom he did not know, for being a slave he could not ask the name of the purchaser, this witness showing a very great reluctance to answer the questions put to him. Another of the negro passengers included among the number was a child of about 8 years old, but could not say anything to enlighten the Court as to her condition.

By the Report of Survey, at folios 74 to 77, there were found on board the launch "E" 2 bags and 1 demi-john, containing a little more than 3 cazingueis of farinha, 4 bags, with 7 cazingueis of beans more or less, 116 bags of ground nuts, in all about 200 cazingueis, 2 casks with 90 gallons of palm oil, 600 sticks of firewood, and a few mats. No other article mentioned in Article IX of the Treaty was found on board. The Court, without taking upon itself to decide whether these articles should or should not be considered as coming within the IXth Article, paragraphs 8 and 9, of the Treaty, cannot in any way neglect to take into consideration the absence of manifest or document of any kind to show the legal purpose for which they were destined, which, together with other circumstances which cause a doubt as to the object of her voyage, leads to grave suspicions with regard to their intended application. After the register of the ship, one of the papers of the greatest importance is the manifest of the cargo. It is of great importance to every ship to show the legality of the commerce in which she is engaged, and, when proceeding to ports on the coast where there are no constituted authorities, to be able to show a document similar, mentioning the shipper and consignee, and specifying all the articles on board, where received and whither going. This practice has been followed in other cases submitted to this Court, as, for instance, in the case of the cutter "Mist," released in 1860. It is possible that such a document can be dispensed with in crafts which belong to and are exclusively manned by indigenous Africans bringing articles to this province coming from ports where there are no authorities; but when such cargo consists of objects mentioned in the IXth Article of the Treaty, and the craft which takes them, whether under the Portuguese or English flag, is the property of a European, and being a European the chief consignee, in such a case the non-existence of such a document, even when the same has been dispensed with by the Custom-house at Loanda (a question which the Court cannot enter into) becomes not only illegal, but a practice of such a nature cannot be admitted on account of the frauds which might occur, and the suspicions which would naturally be caused. The same reflections can be made with regard to crew lists on account of irregularities which are so frequently seen, as is alleged by the defence.

In the written allegations for the defence, when it is contested that the launch endeavoured to avoid the steamer "Espoir," reference is made to the declaration on oath of the captor without regard to the fact that in the ratification of that declaration it is clearly explained that she did not set more sail because she had no more sail to set, but that she made use of her oars, and thus endeavoured to avoid meeting the said cruiser.

In the evidence of M. M. Barboza, at folio 59, it appears that of the three negroes whom he had before taken to the Congo in the launch "Luiza," two are those who appear in this process, whom he was bringing back in the captured launch, having left one at Mangue Grande on his voyage to the north, and by the certificate, at folios 78 to 80, it is shown that the passport granted by the General Government of this province to M. M. Barboza for that voyage, which is embodied in Appendix I, at folio 1, was falsified, the words "levando duas pretas livres" (taking two free negroes) having been added.

In the evidence of Francisco Antonio Pereira de Lemos, folio 63, he says that with regard to the money which was taken from him, 2 contos 100 and odd milreis, it was entrusted to him at Banana by Abraham Conquy ainé, a French subject, to be delivered in this city to different persons, the deponent not being able to state the exact amount. This declaration of the person in whose charge it actually was, and who was entrusted with that amount for delivery to different persons, is in contradiction to the claim (Appendix 5) of João Osmundo Toulson, merchant of this city, and of which the document treats (folio 65) who comes forward to claim on behalf of Abraham Conquy ainé; that he (Conquy) sent the whole of this amount to him, supporting his claim by a letter from the said Conquy, received before the arrival of the launch "E" at Loanda, in which he advises him of the remittance of 2 contos and odd milreis by the above-mentioned Lemos, and per said launch, but it is certain that these advices are not written in precise language, but conditional, depending on the day on which the said launch left that place, for which reason the evidence of the bearer Lemos is more probable and credible; that the 2 contos and odd milreis were for different people, and are not those of which the claimant speaks, and which were addressed to him alone.

In the allegations on behalf of the defence it is urged that certain irregularities, attributed to the cruiser, in this seizure, should be taken into consideration for the restitution of the launch. The Court is of opinion that it should not admit the principle that such imputations, just or unjust, can invalidate all the other grounds of the seizure; it being clearly expressed, in Article VIII of the Treaty, that when any interested party has reason to complain or appeal against any deviation from the stipulations of the said Treaty, his Government can seek reparation.

In the same allegations the Counsel for the defence brings forward the circumstance of many cases of disembarkation, at the Custom-house here, of negroes in a similar condition as those met with on board the launch

"E." The Decree of the 10th December, 1856, prohibits the importation of slaves by sea under any pretext whatever. It not being, however, within the functions of this Court to take cognizance of infractions of the Decree referred to, it abstains from giving any opinion at all on that point.

The Commissioners of this Mixed Commission, after having maturely considered all the arguments and documents, both on behalf of the accusation and the defence, and considering that the witness M. M. Barboza, although at folio 59 said that Antonio da Cunha Mello Cardozo was the owner of the launch, immediately after which evidence, folio 69, he declares himself owner of her, and interferes as such from the commencement, and producing then the letter of instructions and power of attorney appended to this cause, in order to prove his right.

In the face of all these contradictions, and of the fact that not a single paper was found which proves the transfer of the ownership of this craft, they (the Commissioners) cannot recognize as the real owners of her any but Rebello and Cardozo, of Benguela, in whose names the papers are made out. Considering that the falsification of the passport alluded to is proved by the document at folios 79 and 80, by which is shown that M. M. Barboza having asked the Governor-General of this province on the 26th of September last for a passport to go in the launch "Luiza" to the Congo, taking with him two free negresses, the said Governor refused his request as far as concerned them (the women), because he did not prove their freedom; and that the same Barboza, not having succeeded in illuding the vigilance and caution of the first authority of the province, altered the passport which had been granted to him alone, by adding in the same after the word "levando" the words "duas pretas livres," which were written above the dashes which fill and render useless the space which remained unwritten on—a fact very unfavourable, and which destroys the defence; but, however, as this Court cannot claim to take cognizance of the degree of criminality, it recognizes, from the direct influence which it has in favour of the grounds of seizure of the launch "E," in which the said Barboza was returning, especially that he left at Mangue Grande one of the two negresses whom he took away so irregularly with him for the Congo as he declares in his evidence at folio 59, without a sufficient explanation of the capacity in which he left her, being naturally presumed that he sold her, seeing the expedient by which he took her away, and the proposal to buy which is seen in the document No. 193 of Appendix I.

Considering that of the two negroes found on board, one of them is a negro who, although more than 14 years old, is uncivilized and without a will of his own, the other a child of 8 years, and, as such, without capacity to regulate its life, and that thus one cannot believe that they themselves asked M. M. Barboza for a passage to Loanda on board the launch "E;" considering besides that no other paper of a legal character was put in to prove that those negroes were in a free state, and, at the same time, as the proofs are all of a contrary tendency; considering, moreover, the discredit which attaches to the evidence and allegations trying to prove the free condition of these negroes found on board the launch "E," it follows clearly that there was a hidden intention which the thread of contradictions and divergences which may be found among the autos was sought to conceal. On all these grounds, and further proofs which exist in the autos, the Commissioners of the Mixed Commission adjudge that the launch "E" was legally detained, and the negroes on board the same having been embarked in evident contravention of Article I of the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1842, celebrated between Portugal and Great Britain for the suppression of the Slave Trade, condemn her as good prize, with all her equipments, cargo, and valuables comprised in her and found on board, of what kind soever they may be, for all the effects of confiscation to which by virtue of the said Treaty it became liable, and order that the said launch be disposed of in conformity with the stipulations of the said Treaty. Further, they order that all the people found on board of the launch "E," be placed at the disposal of their Government, and that the 5 slaves be granted letters of freedom according as Article VI of Annex B of the said Treaty directs; for which end they interpose their legal authority, and order that such shall be done.

Given and published in session of the Mixed Commission in St. Paul of the Assumption of Loanda, the 29th day of November, 1862.

My Lord,

Loanda, October 31, 1863.

Annual Report by Her Majesty's Commissioner.

THE slave-traders at the beginning of last October commenced their proceedings with their usual audacity and activity, but they were met with equal energy and activity by the Commanders of Her Majesty's cruisers, as the following list of vessels captured will show:—

Barque (name unknown) 3rd October, 1862; "Zebra."
Launch "E," 2nd November, 1862; "Espoir."
"Liberdade," 20th November, 1862; "Zebra."
Launch, 90 slaves, 20th November, 1862; "Zebra."
"Lola Montes," 25th November, 1862; "Antelope."
"Island Queen," 28th December, 1862; "Wrangler."
"Venus," 29th January, 1863; "Antelope."
"Bella Augusta," 10th February, 1863; "Brisk."
"Laura," 13th February, 1863; "Zebra."
"Mariquita," 473 slaves, 17th March, 1863; "Zebra."
"Haidée," 12th August, 1863; "Espoir."

The result of these energetic measures was most gratifying and satisfactory. The slave-traders were by their serious losses completely paralyzed, they found themselves without ships and without funds, and the Commodore informed me that when he visited the Congo in September there was not a vessel in the river. The Treaty with the United States, granting the right of search within certain limits, has compelled the Portuguese slave-traders to hoist the flag of their own nation. The vessels captured with slaves on board, resorted to the usual practice of destroying all proofs of nationality, but three ships were captured under the Portuguese colors and brought for adjudication before the Mixed Commission established in this city. Two of them, the launch "E" and the "Laura," were condemned as good prizes, and the "Venus," would probably have shared the same fate had she been captured after the "Laura," or had she been permitted by Lieutenant Allingham to enter the Congo before he detained her. The case was nearly identical with that of the "Laura;" they had both cleared from the Havana under a provisional register granted by the Portuguese Consul, both cleared for and were ostensibly bound to the Island of St. Thomas, neither touched there, and the "Laura" had absolutely entered the Congo, where she was captured, and that river was doubtless also the destination of the "Venus." The latter vessel had been released and her papers returned to the master before my arrival; I had consequently no opportunity of examining them, but there are strong grounds for suspecting that some of them were false. There is little or no doubt that the "Venus" was on a slave-trading voyage, and the Governor-General also arrived at that conclusion, he having compelled her to discharge her crew, and ship a fresh one; he also refused her a clearance for any point on the coast, and obliged her to go direct to Lisbon. There appear to have been some discrepancies and contradictions in the evidence, and Lieutenant Allingham, the captor, says that his evidence was misunderstood; but as Lieutenant Costa Cabral, who served for nine years in the Royal Navy of England, though at present in the Portuguese service, acted as interpreter, the misunderstanding could scarcely have arisen from misinterpretation. In March, a brig or barque escaped from Longibonda, with 800 or 900 slaves. With that exception (as far as I can ascertain) no vessel with slaves has got away between Loanda and Cape Lopez.

CLASS A.

It is by no means easy to obtain information respecting the movements of the slave-traders to the southward of this port. The "Island Queen," captured on the 28th December by Her Majesty's ship "Wrangler," and sent to St. Helena for adjudication, was fitted out for the Slave Trade, and was, when taken, waiting for her cargo to be ready for shipment from the vicinity of Equimina. Towards the end of April, the "Chefe" of Novo Redondo apprehended 79 negroes who were being conveyed by land towards Quicombo, with the object (as he suspected) of embarking them in that neighbourhood. In my despatch of the 20th May I reported erroneously that they had been captured in a launch. Two white men have been imprisoned for being concerned in this transaction, and are to be brought to trial.

There are strong grounds for suspecting that cargoes are still occasionally shipped to the southward, and great as is the necessity for a strong division of the squadron being employed on the more important coast—the neighbourhood of the Congo, it would, I think, be advantageous to have a vessel constantly cruising to the southward. Since my arrival at the beginning of April, two cruisers only have been stationed on the South Coast. The "Torch" was sent down towards the middle of the month of May; she was relieved by the "Griffon" in June, and that vessel remained on that coast till the middle of August. Since that period no vessel has been stationed to the southward of this port. The coast nevertheless has been occasionally visited by Her Majesty's ships bound hence to St. Helena.

With the exception of the launch "E," I have been unable to ascertain that the inhabitants of this city had any direct pecuniary interest in the captured vessels. This is due, not to want of sympathy with the slave-traders, whom they continue to supply with the articles necessary to enable them to continue their inhuman speculations, nor is it due to any disinclination to engage in slave-trading, but to the serious losses that they have sustained from capture, and consequent want of funds, to the determination of the Governor-General and the Portuguese Government to put an end to the Slave Trade, and principally to the important trade which has sprung up in the province. Cotton has during the last two years been planted in large quantities, valuable copper-mines have been opened and are being worked, and there is a large exportation of palm oil and ground nuts. So profitable are trading operations that persons who formerly obtained an unenviable notoriety as slave-traders appear now to be engaged in agriculture and legitimate trade. Nevertheless, as the traffic in human flesh, when it can be carried on with a reasonable chance of success, is still the most remunerative, there can be but little doubt that these persons would commence operations with renewed vigour should there be the slightest toleration on the part of the Portuguese authorities or relaxation of vigilance on the part of the Commanders of Her Majesty's ships.

The barracoons in the Congo are, I am informed, filled with slaves offered for sale at an unusually low price. The slave-traders at Ponta da Lenha, and other places on the coast, who provide slaves for sale and exportation, have been put to great expense in keeping such large numbers for a considerable period without the possibility of disposing of them or shipping them; all the vessels sent for them having been captured. I have been informed that two ships were lately offered for sale in the Congo, but no one possessed funds sufficient to purchase them. I was told, however, a few days ago, by that able and indefatigable officer, Commander Hoskins, that there was every prospect of the trade being revived with the vigour that it exhibited in October of last year.

The shipment of libertos to St. Thomas was, for a short period, entirely discontinued. The Governor-General, however, has again permitted a limited number to be dispatched by vessels bound to that island. His Excellency takes what he conceives to be sufficient precautions to ensure their freedom on their arrival. He limits the number to ten, he grants no passports to slaves, and requires the Governor of St. Thomas to see that their rights are secured to them. The facilities for again reducing these negroes to slavery are so great that I fear that the precautions to which his Excellency attaches so much importance will be but of little avail. I have been at some pains to learn, from the most trustworthy sources, whether the negroes sent to St. Thomas remain on the island, or are reshipped. The Governor-General says, most decidedly and authoritatively, that their services are so much needed there that it is more profitable to keep them than to reship them, and that none are sent away. Senhor Motta (who resided five years in the Island as Juiz de Direito, and has lately been promoted to the office of Judge of Relação in this city, and will be probably Portuguese Commissioner) confirms that opinion, and states that the export of coffee, which is of a very superior description, has more than doubled during the last five years; that more negroes are needed there, but none can be spared. The whole of the information that I have received tends to that conclusion. Although I am myself disposed to lean to that opinion, I in no wise allow myself to be influenced in my proceedings, nor do I in any degree relax my vigilance.

The Governor-General has made the most of the very inadequate naval force at his command, and has endeavoured to supply the deficiency by appointing confidential persons as "Chefes" at the most suspicious points on the South Coast, but the number from which he can select is, I suspect, very limited.

It is with the greatest satisfaction that I acknowledge the cordiality and promptitude with which his Excellency carries out the suggestions that I have occasion to offer, the courtesy with which he communicates to me information connected with the Slave Trade, and the perfect harmony that exists between us both in his capacity as Governor-General and Acting Portuguese Commissioner.

The aforesaid W. Vredenburg, Esq., declared that he had on the 14th instant, taken the oath as prescribed in Article I, Section 3, of Annex C of the said Treaty, in the capacity of Member of the Board of Superintendence of Liberated Africans; the oath having been administered to him in due form by the principal Magistrate of this province, the Vice-President of the Court of Appeal, the Judge Joaquim Guedes de Carvalho e Menezes, by which act was constituted the said Board of Superintendence, according to the stipulations of the said Treaty and its Annex C.

The British Commissioner afterwards said, that knowing by the Report presented by the Curator of Liberated Africans, and Secretary of the Board, that there were at the barracks under the care of the Government some libertos belonging to the Board, judged that it would be opportune that the presence of such libertos should be published in the official Gazette of the province, inviting whoever might wish to hire them under the conditions which would be mentioned, and his Excellency the Governor-General agreeing to this, the Board resolved that an advertisement should be placed in the Bulletin of the Government, in conformity with this resolution, agreeing that seven days after the publication of the advertisement, the Board would meet to decide upon the petitions presented.

Special Warrant.

Sir,

United States' Navy Department, 1863

I TRANSMIT herewith copy of a Treaty for the suppression of the African Slave Trade, concluded between the United States of America and Great Britain, April 7. 1862, to which are annexed, and form an integral part thereof, Instructions for Cruizers, marked A, and Regulations for Mixed Courts of Justice, marked B.

In furnishing you with this Treaty and the Instructions annexed to it, the Department specially authorizes, empowers, and directs you to exercise all the rights and privileges granted thereby to cruizers of the United States having a Special Warrant to act under it.

The rights and privileges granted by the Treaty do not in any way derogate from or conflict with the belligerent rights of United States' cruizers in time of war. The powers conferred by the Treaty are added to belligerent rights, and not substituted for them. Those rights still obtain, and are to be exercised.

This Special Warrant, issued in pursuance of the Treaty, authorizes a United States' cruiser possessing it, on falling in with a British vessel actually engaged in the Slave Trade, or suspected of being fitted for it, to exercise the rights and privileges which the Treaty concedes, and in the manner the Instructions (A) prescribe, by which alone the Mixed Courts of Justice will be enabled to exercise all their functions in cases sent to them for adjudication.

I am, &c.

Secretary of the Navy.

By the President of the United States of America.

A Proclamation.

Whereas a Treaty between the United States of America and Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, was concluded and signed by their respective Plenipotentiaries, at the city of Washington, on the 7th day of April last, which Treaty is word for word as follows:—

Treaty between the United States of America and Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the Suppression of the African Slave Trade.

[See Class B, presented 1863, Inclosure 1 in No. 331.]

And whereas the said Treaty has been duly ratified on both parts, and the respective ratifications of the same were exchanged at London, on the twentieth ultimo, by Charles Francis Adams, Esq., Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States at the Court of St. James, and Earl Russell, Her Britannic Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, on the part of their respective Governments.

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Treaty to be made public, to the end that the same and every Clause and Article thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this seventh day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-sixth.

Earl Russell to Her Majesty's Commissioners.

Gentlemen,

Foreign Office, June 5, 1863.

I TRANSMIT to you herewith, copies of the Regulations which have been drawn up for your guidance in the technical part of your duties as Judge and Arbitrator on the part of Her Majesty in the British and United States' Mixed Court of Justice at New York.

These Regulations contain instructions for the proceedings of the Court throughout the whole course of trial of a case, and they have been framed mainly in accordance with the course observed in the High Court of Admiralty in this country, adapting and limiting the proceedings to the objects prescribed by the Treaty under which the Commission is framed.

They have been so prepared for the purpose of giving to you every requisite facility and assistance in establishing a legal regularity in the proceedings of the Court of which you are members, and for the more complete attainment of the ends of justice.

With respect to the general interrogatories included in the Regulations, you will take care that the questions therein enumerated shall, so far as they may apply, be put to the several witnesses to be examined under your adjudication and arbitration; and whenever special points may arise which these interrogatories do not reach, you will frame additional interrogatories to meet those points, being always careful to obtain and weigh the whole facts of the case before you give your judgment upon it.

I have instructed Her Majesty's Minister at Washington to communicate copies of these Regulations to the United States' Government for their approval, and to state that Her Majesty's Government would of course take into consideration any amendments or alterations which the United States' authorities, after due deliberation, might see fit to suggest; but as the Regulations have been carefully prepared, his Lordship is directed to express the hope that they will accord with the views of the United States' Government, and that the United States' officers in the several Mixed Commission Courts at New York, Sierra Leone, and the Cape of Good Hope will be directed to guide their proceedings in conformity therewith.

I am, &c.

Her Majesty's Judge to Earl Russell.—(Received February 1, 1864.)

My Lord,

New York, December 31, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship that during the past year there has not been, to the knowledge of the Federal Authorities, nor so far as I have been enabled to ascertain, a single slave-trading expedition fitted out from this port.

The contrast presented by this state of affairs with the practice of outfitting slave-trading expeditions heretofore so extensively carried on in this city is not less agreeable than novel. The salutary change in this respect which has been wrought by the suppression of the unlawful practices which have been so long a reproach to this community is deserving of observation. New York has for many years furnished peculiar facilities and advantages for organizing and outfitting slave-trading expeditions. A large and populous maritime city, the resort of adventurers from other countries, within a few days' sail of and in constant communication with Havana, here have congregated the Spanish and Portuguese projectors of slave-trading voyages; and here have they been enabled by a liberal expenditure of money to command all the requisite means for carrying into execution their nefarious purposes. In the purchase of suitable vessels they had here a wide field; under the pretext of a legitimate trade with the West Coast of Africa, or of whaling voyages in the South Atlantic, it was a matter of no difficulty to despatch vessels from this or from other ports of the United States. If at any time the suspicions of the local authorities were aroused, it almost invariably happened that the vigilance of the police was eluded. If occasionally arrests or seizures happened to be made, some defect of process or deficiency of proof, or unfaithfulness on the part of the subordinate officers of justice, furnished a means of escape from the penalties of the law. When, indeed, accused parties were brought to trial, the well-known indisposition of juries to convict, even on clear evidence, secured, in advance, immunity to criminals, insomuch that a prosecuting officer has declared in open court that in view of the then existing state of public sentiment in reference to such offences, and having regard to the severe penalties of the law, he deemed it inexpedient to press cases to trial.

It is, consequently, not to be wondered at that in the brief period of a little more than three years preceding 1862, out of about 170 slave-trading expeditions which are said to have been organized by parties who were constantly passing and re-passing between Havana and New York, and who made this city their headquarters, no fewer than seventy-four vessels are known or believed to have cleared from New York, forty-three from other ports of the United States, forty from ports of Cuba, and the residue from European ports.

The withdrawal in 1858 of the cruisers which had been stationed in the waters surrounding Cuba (against whose operations the clamour which was aroused at the time was excited by the slave-traders, and by parties in their interest) was followed during the succeeding three years by a more and extensive and active prosecution of the traffic than probably ever took place during any previous equal period of time.

It was not until the present administration of the United States' Government came into power that the laws for preventing the outfitting of slave-trading expeditions began to be enforced with effect. The efforts of the Federal Officers in detecting and bringing guilty parties to trial and punishment, have doubtless been aided by the change of public sentiment which has been produced by the secession of the Southern States, and the attempt at disruption of the Union. Nevertheless it has been mainly owing to the zealous and vigorous exertions of the Federal officers under the existing administration, and more especially of the present United States' Marshal for the Southern district of New York, that the outfitting of slave-traders from this and neighbouring ports has been effectively checked. The conviction and execution of Captain Gordon of the "Erie" in February 1862; the conviction and sentence of two other notorious offenders, one at Boston, and the other in this city; the arrest of others long known to be actively engaged in slave-trading expeditions, or the outfitting of vessels for the purpose, struck terror into the parties whose impunity had hitherto been assured by the laxity with which the laws relating to their crimes were administered.

But the most efficacious agency for preventing the outfitting of slave-trading expeditions in the ports of this country, as well as for putting an end to the prostitution of the flag of the United States to the purposes of this inhuman traffic, will, I doubt not, be found in the provisions of the Treaty recently concluded between Great Britain and the United States for the more effectual suppression of the Slave Trade. The right of search of suspected vessels reciprocally granted to the cruizers of the two nations—a desideratum so long manifest—and the establishment of a blockade of the coasts of Cuba under conditions which are not to be affected by the clamour of the slave-traders, cannot fail to be productive of those beneficial results which the Treaty was designed to accomplish.

I am, &c.

REPORTS FROM NAVAL OFFICERS

WEST COAST OF AFRICA STATION.

No. 91.

Commodore Wilmot to Rear-Admiral Sir B. Walker.

(Extract.)

"Rattlesnake," off Lagos, November , 1862.

YOU will have been informed of my proceedings up to the 3rd instant, at which date I was at anchor at Ascension. I have now the honour to report my movements since that period:—

I left Ascension on the evening of the 8th, under sail, and anchored off Cape Coast Castle on the morning of the 16th. The "Brisk" was at anchor, having arrived two days before.

I left the following morning, and anchored at Jellah Coffee, near Quittah, on the afternoon of the 17th.

I visited Quittah, saw the Bremen Protestant missionary and palm-oil merchant, which latter carries on a good trade here. There is no doubt that slaves are shipped from this locality, particularly by a Portuguese named Lima, who has barracoons within ten miles of Quittah. There is another Portuguese, about ten miles further to the eastward, who is supposed to be engaged in the same occupation.

I arrived at Little Popoe on the morning of the 19th, and landed at noon, being received by the Chief and people with great honours and rejoicing.

From Little Popoe I went to Whydah, where no English officer has, I believe, landed for six years. After some trouble I sent a letter on shore to the Yervogah by a canoe, inclosing one to the King of Dahomey; copies of which, as well as the reply of the former, are inclosed. The Yervogah was, no doubt, anxious for the King's answer before receiving me, but I took advantage of a canoe belonging to the French establishment here and landed. From the beach I went up, accompanied by two officers, to the town of Whydah.

We were carried in hammocks from the beach to Whydah, a distance of about two and a-half miles. A description of the route will be very necessary for many reasons, as there is much water to pass through.

From the beach the road is over about 500 yards of sand, where the first lagoon is approached; we then entered the water a short distance, until a large canoe was found afloat, into which we stepped from our hammocks; we then poled across 500 yards to the dry land on the other side; here we got into our hammocks again, and went a quarter of a mile, when we reached the second water. This is not a lagoon, but a large extent of marshy ground through which an opening has been cut to act as a road, about 15 feet wide. This passage is more or less deep according to the season, and the banks on each side are dry, even now; when we crossed it was $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet deep, although the water is decreasing, and will, in a month, be not above 2 feet, as this is the dry season. This passage is long, I should say 1,000 yards. We then came to the French factory, or fort, as it is called, at the town of Whydah, a further distance of nearly a mile, thus making the whole distance two and a-half miles.

There are three factories on the beach—two Portuguese and one French—but no one resides there during the night. The clerks, or agents, return to Whydah in the evening, and come again in the morning. The two Portuguese factories consist of large barracoons,—without doubt slave-barracoons,—as I found the remains of manioc, &c., in a kettle which had evidently been lately used. There are a few native houses, probably for the families of those who look after the barracoons at night. The French factory at Whydah is a large building surrounded by a high wall.

The English fort, into which I went from the French factory, is much decayed since I last saw it. The walls are rotten, and of some extent, but are constructed of mud only. I was much disappointed in the appearance of the English fort; it is at present occupied by the Rev. Peter Wm. Bernasko, a native of Cape Coast Castle, and a Protestant missionary who goes from place to place. He speaks English perfectly, and was of great use to me in my interview with the Yervogah. Neither the French nor Portuguese have any territorial rights in this place; they are traders, like any one else who has permission to reside there. I sent my stick to the Yervogah to say I was coming to pay him a visit, which he returned with his own, with a message that he would be glad to see me. It is necessary in this country to follow the custom of the natives, and I knew the Yervogah required time to make his preparations for receiving me in state; while waiting for this, I went to the house of Domingo Martinez,* the celebrated slave-dealer of twenty years' notoriety. He received me most civilly, and said that the King of Dahomey would receive me in a friendly manner. He is far from well, suffering from a complaint in his eyes. He lives in a large well-furnished house, with plenty of slaves about him. He says he has given up the Slave Trade. From this house we went back to the English fort, and from thence to the Yervogah, who was ready to receive me. His house is about a quarter of a mile from the fort. We were preceded by two of his head men, and I carried his stick. In front of his house were assembled 200 or 300 warriors, all armed with muskets, and a great crowd of people. These went through a variety of war-dances to do us honour. We entered the Yervogah's house, and in an immense court found two great umbrellas spread, and his personal attendants waiting. In a small room off the court were seated in state the Yervogah and Prince Chudattory, brother of the King of Dahomey. I shook both cordially by the hand, and we then sat down. Our conversation was about various matters connected with the wish of England to be on good terms with every one, particularly with the King of Dahomey, if he would accept our friendship. I did not enter into questions relative to the Slave Trade, as this was merely a friendly visit. The Yervogah said that my letter had been sent to Abomey, and that the King would return back an answer in a few days. He seemed pleased, and so did the people, when I told him I had landed there and dined with the Yervogah twice in former years.

The brother of the King of Dahomey is a remarkably handsome person, very tall, a good expression of countenance, and as black as a coal; I have never seen an African so deeply black as he is.

After the usual ceremonies of drinking water, &c., we went away and were escorted back to the fort, surrounded by an immense concourse of people, all cheering, dancing, and firing muskets and pistols: this continued inside the fort, and I distributed cowries to the people, according to custom; I also made them a "dash" of rum.

Altogether my visit was most satisfactory, and will, I think, tend to wipe away any wrong impressions which the slave-dealers here are interested in spreading abroad. I was obliged to remain on shore all night, as the surf was too bad to return on board. I left my boats at Whydah, in consequence of a Brazilian brig having made her appearance off the coast, and sailed on the 23rd, anchoring off Lagos the following morning, "Brisk" in company. "Wrangler" was here also, and I sent her the same day to the South Coast, St. Helena, and Ascension, to return to the North Coast, where she will be stationed.

I brought from Ascension a life-boat cutter for Lagos, and also a case of plants for Kew.

I went myself in the "Advance" tug belonging to Mr. McCoskry on the morning of the 25th instant. The bar was favourable, with from twelve to fifteen feet of water over it. I saw the Governor, also Lieutenant Glover of the "Handy," and I visited King Docemo, also Kosoko and Tappa, who have only lately returned to Lagos. Everything is quiet as far as Lagos is concerned, but the Chiefs and people of Abbeokuta still show an inclination to be unfriendly.

There was a steamer that shipped a cargo of 560 slaves to the westward of Aghwey on the 20th October, with French colours flying. She is supposed to be very fast.

* Since dead.

We have Treaties with Aghwey and Great Popoe for the suppression of the Slave Trade, and I shall visit these places concerning the shipment of the slaves above-mentioned.

I have nothing further to add, excepting that from Whydah I shall return to Sierra Leone for my letters, &c.

Inclosure 1 in No. 91.

Commodore Wilmot to the King of Dahomey.

Sir, “Rattlesnake,” Whydah, November 20, 1862.
I HAVE arrived at Whydah, the sea-port of your Majesty's dominions, on my way to visit the ships of the Queen of England in the Bight of Benin.

It gives me great pleasure to salute your Majesty in the name of my august Sovereign Queen Victoria, who wishes you health, prosperity, and real happiness.

It was my good fortune to be well acquainted with your late father, who was always the friend of the white man.

In the year 1851, as Commander of a British cruizer, I wrote to the late King on the subject of the Slave Trade and the establishment of legitimate commerce, which was received in good part and as an act of friendship.

Your father was pleased to receive me very kindly on two occasions when I landed at Whydah in 1851, in company with an accredited Agent, or Consul, who was permitted to reside in the English fort.

Your high officers, the Yervogahs and Cabooceers, paid us every attention, for which we were thankful, and we earnestly prayed that these acts of friendship might continue.

The death of your father was a severe blow for Africa, because in his heart he believed that the words of the white man were words of truth, spoken in honesty and sincerity of heart to do good to your country, and make it prosper.

Alas that your Majesty has not followed in the steps of your enlightened father! If you had done so, your country would now have been prosperous, and yourself and subjects happy, in the knowledge of doing good, as well as rich by the profits of agriculture.

Would that your Majesty had listened to the voice of reason and justice!

If you are a great King, show an example worthy of a great King. Leave off these inhuman sacrifices, which are a curse upon your country, and the detestation of every civilized nation in the world.

By what right do you take the lives of your own people, your own flesh and blood? I speak plainly to your Majesty, because I would be your friend rather than your enemy, not from any fear of meeting you face to face, and telling you what I think, but because my Sovereign and the English nation hate war, and would be sorry for the slaughter of your people in an unjust cause.

Does the blood of your victims in any way make you happy, or make you a greater King than you otherwise would be if their lives were spared, and they were employed in peaceful and legitimate trade?

Shame to the great King of Dahomey that he pollutes his reign by such unworthy cruelties and horrors!

Give up also the Slave Trade, and listen to the voice of reason and humanity. Instead of selling your countrymen and bringing a curse upon your nation, employ them upon the soil, and in collecting the produce of your rich and fertile country. You will be far more wealthy in a few years by doing so, than by capturing and selling your people.

There is one great and supreme God in the skies above your head, who will judge you in another world. You cannot live for ever; where will you go to when you die? Has this thought ever occurred to you? You have power now for good or evil. If you do good you may be happy hereafter, for assuredly you will rise again to be judged. If you do evil, then will your spirit never rest, and in the next world you will regret in vain that you had not listened to the words of your real friends, the “white men.”

I wish your Majesty good health, and shall be happy to pay you a visit, if you feel disposed to receive me in a friendly manner.

I earnestly hope that the words in this letter may be interpreted to your Majesty literally and without fear.

I have, &c.

Sir, “Rattlesnake,” off Whydah, November 20, 1862.
INCLOSED is a letter which I shall feel obliged by your forwarding by the earliest opportunity to the King of Dahomey.

I am anxious to pay you a visit at Whydah, and shall expect that you will be prepared to receive me with honour, kindness, and friendship.

I have arrived upon the coast and taken command of the ships of Her Majesty the Queen of England.

I take this opportunity of wishing you health and happiness.

The Yervogah of Whydah to Commodore Wilmot.Whydah, November 20, 1862.

YOUR letter dated to-day I have received, and have heard all the contents of it, and I shall send your kind letter to the King of Dahomey to-day, but one thing am going to beg you, only to wait for little to receive the answer from King of Dahomey. The reason why I tell you to wait for awhile, because am just going to send the letter to the King, and know what he should answer.

I am very much glad for your kind letter written to ask of my healthy, and the King of Dahomey; am just going to despatch the messenger to the King, and send you immediately the answer.

Been as you has written me that you shall give out your visit, I am very glad, but I shall receive you with kindness and comfortable. With regarding to your requested that you shall call here as visit, I feel much happy, but soon as the messenger returns from Dahomey, and we have learned all what King says, then you shall proceed to Dahomey at once.

I remain, my dear Sir, with my kind compliments to you and all. The Prince Chedatone joins me the same, hoping you are in a good estate of condition.

No. 92.

Commander Douglas to Commodore Edmonstone.

Sir,

"Espoir," at Sea, October 17, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to report that on the 15th October I detained and sent in charge of Lieutenant Murray to Sierra Leone for trial, a barque of about 280 tons, sailing under the Netherlands flag, and stated to be the "Jane."

My reasons for detaining the vessel were as follows, viz. :—

1. Though claiming to be a Netherlands ship and sailing from a Netherlands port, no register was produced from home port, the register bearing date Curacao, April 1862, since which time the vessel was admitted to have been for some weeks at Rotterdam.

2. No manifest or port clearance from Rotterdam or Helvoetsluys, the last port of sailing from.

3. No certificate of bond for the large quantity of water-casks on board.

4. No clearance or documents from Elmina, at which port the "Jane" was stated to have called on her way out.

The above-mentioned reasons, with many minor circumstances, induced me to detain the "Jane," as I did not believe she would be able to show proof of her claim to the flag assumed.

It was after careful consideration that I arrived at the above conclusion, as heretofore this flag has been above all suspicion, so much so that on most occasions any vessel showing the Netherlands flag has not been visited.

I may add that before sending this ship to Sierra Leone, I removed from her at their own request two people stating themselves to be passengers for the Congo; on one of these was found a copy of the charter-party of the slave-ship "Nightingale." The supercargo of the "Jane" admitted to me that his ship had been chartered on much the same plan, that is to say, with the option to purchase before the charter expired.

Unfortunately, after I landed these passengers, I learned that one of them had been known on this coast as the Captain of the "Nightingale," and also that the supercargo was recognized as the Captain of the "John Boynton," a noted slave-ship on this coast.

I have, &c.

Sir,

"Espoir," Loanda, November 6, 1862.

ON the 2nd instant, being about 12' south of Mangue Grande, I boarded and detained a launch sailing under Portuguese colours, and claiming to be the "He," or "E." This launch had on board at the time of capture a cargo of ground nuts, oil, beans, and farinha, two Portuguese, and 5 slaves.

She was stated to be bound from the Congo to St. Paul de Loanda, but could produce no manifest for cargo, or any passport or certificate for slaves on board. Under these circumstances, deeming she had infringed the Treaty between Great Britain and Portugal of July 3rd, 1842, I towed her into Loanda, and placed her at the disposal of the Mixed Commission on the 5th instant.

I have, &c.

Sir, "Investigator," Sierra Leone, December 21, 1862.
I HAVE the honour to inclose a copy of my despatch concerning the Niger Expedition, for their Lordships' information, as I know it will not be possible for the Commodore to forward those I sent him by this mail.

Inclosure in No. 94.

Lieutenant Lefroy to Commodore Edmonstone.

Sir, "Investigator," Lagos Roads, October 26, 1862.
IN compliance with orders received from you, relative to the Niger Expedition, dated 4th August, which orders I received from the senior officer on the 26th August, on the following day being manned, coaled, and provisioned by Her Majesty's ship "Brisk." I started for Fernando Po, to pick up the remainder of Dr. Baikie's goods, and fill up with coals. Arrived off the Nun river on the evening of the 31st, and communicated with Her Majesty's ship "Brisk." On the following morning received provisions, and took Mr. McCoskry's large boat in tow with coals. On the afternoon of the same day, having Captain Luce, R.N., on board, I proceeded over the Nun bar, and found it very heavy. Anchored for the night off the Rev. Mr. Crowther's Missionary Establishment, which gentleman came on board, and begged a passage for himself and thirty-six of his followers, as far as the Confluence, which request I considered judicious to grant. On the 2nd September I commenced the ascent of the Niger. When about two miles up, stopped, and Captain Luce left for the Brass River. Proceeded at full speed. Found this part of the river low, swampy, and lined by the mangrove as far as Sunday Sound. Passed a few small, wretched villages, the water washing round them. At 6:30 P.M. anchored a mile above Akeddo, having made twenty-eight miles current, about two and a-half knots.

Wednesday, September 3.—Got under weigh at 5:30 A.M. General aspect of country same as day previous. Ground gradually becoming more elevated. Passed the hostile villages, Ketema, which we found temporarily deserted, the inhabitants having retired into the bush at our approach. After passing, observed numbers of men returning to the town with muskets, and shortly after heard report, and saw smoke of, I think, a 6-pounder. Passed the villages of Opuhporomæ: they saluted with three guns, and seemed glad to see us, the Chief pulling after us to Angama, which place I stopped at for a few minutes, as a Treaty had been made by "Bloodhound" in November 1860. They seemed anxious to communicate, and appeared disappointed we were not a trade ship. The factory is still standing, and they hope for trade again. They told me they were very angry with the traders from Brass, as they consider they were the means of the factory being broken up, for which cause they will not trade with them. At all the other villages we observed canoes from Brass laden with palm oil. Between Asasi and Tuesday Sound, where the "Espoir" got aground, we had $3\frac{1}{2}$ fathoms. Most of the villages hoisted a white flag, and the natives of all stood on the banks as we passed. At 6 P.M. anchored about two miles above Lahogrega. Made forty-four miles; strong current against us all day.

September 4.—Started at 5:30 A.M. Passed the hostile villages of Oloberi, also those of Imblamah, which had white flags up, and the natives stood fearlessly on the river bank. The village of Aghera, which fired on "Rainbow," had a white flag hoisted. I also observed canoes from Brass with palm-oil casks. After passing Aghera, I found less current in centre of river. Found it very hot on bridge up to 1:30 P.M., when we had a sharp shower, which reduced the temperature in shade from 90° to 84° . Above Truro Island the aspect of the country changes, trees are not so numerous, with a fine expanse of water; the first grass-land we passed at 2 P.M., and although not actually clear of the Delta, yet it is a decided improvement on the sameness of the lower part of the river. 3:30, heavy tornado; wind not so violent as at sea, but torrents of rain; it lasted some time. Abreast of second grass-land, the country becomes more open; trees of a larger description present themselves, and, as we near Ibo, the river expands considerably. Anchored at 6:30 P.M. off Abis Farm. Made forty-two miles.

September 5.—Started at 5:30 A.M.; thermometer 73° Fahrenheit. Passed Ebo early. This is the furthest town up the river to trade with by the Brass merchants, and evidently the Liverpool of the Delta, as it has a large trade up and down the river. Passed the town of Asonaro, which is at war with Ebo; also Abenso, from where we observed, for the first time, land of a mountainous nature in the distance. Here the river gets broad and noble-looking. We arrived at 6:15 at Mitsha, and sent some of Mr. Crowther's party on shore. Made forty-eight miles; found the current very strong here.

September 6.—Started from Onitsha at 5:45 A.M.; thermometer 75° . Heard that Aju, Chief of Ebo, was dead, the man that plundered Mr. Laird's factory in 1860, and that tried to detain Mr. Southwick when sent on shore from "Espoir." The first open land appeared below Miller Point, above Walker Island. The river is broad, but rather shallow. Monte Video Mountain was scarcely visible, owing to the cloudiness of the atmosphere. Thermometer at noon 84° , and at 3 P.M. 89° in the shade. We generally have a smart shower each afternoon, which cools the air. The current has not been so strong to-day, owing to the course being straighter; we have been going eight knots. Just above Agane a large sheet of water presents itself, and the land around us very mountainous. Passed several large canoes going down the river. Anchored at 6:30 P.M. near the head of Arka Island, having made fifty-two miles.

September 7.—Started at 5:30 A.M.; thermometer 74° in shade. At 7 A.M. passed the large town of Iddah, supposed to contain upwards of 10,000 inhabitants, situated on a pretty hill 127 feet in height. There is a large plain on the south side. The houses are round, and the natives dressed in the blue cloth of the country. This place might be made the key of the Niger, as the deep water channel is very narrow, so that the town entirely commands it. Igara is the name of the country, and the King of Iddah's territory reaches as far as the Confluence. The scenery about Shooter's Sound is of a fine picturesque description; hills, thickly wooded valleys, and mountains steep and rocky. Mount Preedy, in the distance, is conical shaped, about 800 feet in height. The natives have been down on the banks in great numbers as we passed. The country here might be turned to good account, and, from what I have heard, the natives would be glad to work the ground, only they are prevented by fear of King Massaba, who sends down his horsemen in the dry season, and takes them for slaves. The land opposite Beauford Sound grows guinea corn, and the island itself has several farms on it. The navigation here is very unpleasant, owing to the number of rocks, and some of them awash. From Beauford Sound upward the country still continues mountainous, and of a very rocky nature. Current strong. About four knots from Maconachee Sound I first observed Mount Patte, at the foot of which Dr. Baikie has his settlement, called by the natives Lukoya. At 5:20 P.M. landed the Rev. Mr. Crowther and party at Igbeba (Confluence), and then proceeded to Dr. Baikie's place, three miles higher up, and on the west side of the river; anchored and sent the gig on shore. Found Dr. Baikie was not there; men who had been left in charge of his place said he had gone up the country, but could not say in what direction more than that he left for Bida last September, and had not since been heard of.

September 9.—Came to the determination it was only wasting time remaining at the Confluence; determined to proceed to Rabba, as I was unlikely to gain any information respecting Dr. Baikie here, and knowing King Massaba could give me every particular of his whereabouts, and also in case of my not seeing him I would have a responsible Chief with whom to leave his goods. Weighed at 5 A.M., and found a great difference not having the boat in tow, being able to go 9.8 knots. The country to-day is flat, splendid ground for rice. The river up here was much flooded. At 5:20 P.M. anchored off Egga; sent messenger to the King requesting he would send fresh beef and wood in the morning, which he promised. Made seventy-five miles this day.

September 10.—Remained at anchor till 1:30 P.M., in hopes of getting some wood, but it came off in such small quantities, and the charges were so exorbitant, I did not consider myself justified in purchasing it. At 1:30 P.M. proceeded up the river. At 5:15 P.M. anchored off a small village called Eghon, and sent kroomen on shore to cut wood, which they did all night.

September 11.—5:15 A.M. Started this day; having come to the last of Lieutenant Glover's charts that are printed, we had to proceed with more caution, as Lieutenant Allen's charts are of little service owing to their being on such a small scale. Anchored for the night off Pascha.

September 12.—Started for Rabba at 8 A.M. Rain in the morning, very heavy. The natives here seem much finer, better featured, and not so dark as the coast men. The women rub a kind of fine red clay over their bodies. At 1 P.M. anchored off Rabba, well clear of the shore. It is situated on high ground, with red cliffs close to it. The King of Rabba sent messengers off to salute me, and Massaba's headman also called on me. Made arrangements for sending a messenger to King Massaba, who was encamped five days' journey from Rabba, informing him of my arrival, and requesting that he would send horses, as I intended paying him a visit.

From the 12th to the 17th September nothing of importance occurred; remained at anchor waiting for horses. On the afternoon of the latter date the messenger arrived with them; but owing to an attack of fever I was unable to start till the 19th, when we commenced our journey, and reached the village of Moqua, our party consisting of Mr. Southwick, Acting Second Master, five kroomen, three guides, and myself. Started on the following morning at 7 A.M. for Inguma, a town distant about twenty miles. On the way met War Chiefs, sent by King Massaba to conduct me to him, accompanied by one of Dr. Baikie's men, who spoke English; passed through tracks of cultivated land, consisting chiefly of guinea corn and cotton, the latter particularly is raised in great abundance through these districts. Reached Inguma at noon, having travelled during the day in a northerly direction. This town is situated on a very fine river called Accoa, with a bridge across it.

On the 21st September reached the town of Baga, twelve miles distant from Inguma, still proceeding northward, the country wild, and uncultivated bush land and high grass, road so narrow, only admitting the passage of one horse.

On the 22nd September arrived at the large town of Egbe, containing about 6,000 inhabitants, some fourteen miles from the town we stopped at the night previous; country less wooded, and of a more level description than that we travelled through the day before. Egbe is situated on a small stream called Damba. Our route this day lay in a northerly direction.

On the 23rd had a long dreary ride of twenty-six miles under a scorching sun, through a forest of small trees; saw quantities of monkeys and beautiful birds. Arrived at 5 P.M. at the village Tanga Auxallos, on the River Manullar, a very fine-looking stream. We are out of Nupe country to-day, and are now in Ebbé. All the villages we passed through have been lately taken by Massaba. Sent this morning my messenger on to the King, to inform him of my approach. Our journey this day still continued in a north-easterly direction.

September 24.—Feeling rather ill this morning I was much pleased to think this day would terminate my tedious journey, but was sadly disappointed at reaching Lucaloo to find the King's messenger waiting to inform me it was his wish that I should proceed no further that day, but remain and sleep for the night. We travelled twelve miles in a northerly direction.

September 25.—At 7 A.M. started for the camp called Eddo; met a number of War Chiefs on horseback sent to meet me. Arrived at 11 A.M., when the King sent to salute me, and said if I wished he would see me at once, but not being prepared I appointed 4 P.M., and employed the interval in getting ready his presents. At 4, Mr. Southwick and myself, accompanied by a guard of five kroomen, together with the Head Chief and others the King had sent me to escort me to his presence, proceeded to the King's house, where we found him sitting on a mat, and another spread with cushions for Mr. Southwick and myself. He is a fine-looking man, and from the great name he bears just the man I expected to see. We had a little palaver and exchange of compliments, after which I presented him with the presents I brought. He seemed much pleased with the coat of mail, and said it showed him he was not forgotten in England. He then requested me to go and see his sons, whom I found in great numbers with the second King, ready to receive me; some of them were remarkably fine men. I was then presented with some cola-nuts in accordance with the custom of the country, which broke up the palaver, and I returned to King Massaba, with whom I had a long palaver about Dr. Baikie. He informed me that he had gone to Kano after the papers and effects of a Dr. Vogel, who had been murdered there, and that he had recovered the papers; the King had given him horses and men, but did not seem pleased at his going, whether through fear of harm coming to him, or that he should go on to Socatoo, and remain there, I could not find out (as the Sultan of that place is more powerful than Massaba), the latter being tributary to him. The camp here is on a very large scale; and I have been informed he has upwards of 5,000 horsemen: his reason for being encamped is on account of an order from the Sultan of Socatoo to open the road between Bida and Socatoo, as the messengers were frequently robbed and murdered passing between those places, so that Massaba has taken the whole country, dethroning the Kings, and placing guards of his own men in their towns. Came twelve miles in a northerly direction this day. The camp is situated near a river called Talaware, and the country named Combalie.

Friday, September 26.—Had a long palaver with the King to-day; he spoke a good deal about Dr. Baikie, and again expressed his dissatisfaction at him going away, and not returning in time for the ship, as he had promised. I read to him a letter from the Governor of Lagos; and he replied, "It is good," and promised on his return to Bida he would open a road to Lagos. He then informed me he was going to send a large present to the ship, consisting of two bullocks, ten sheep, yams, honey, rice, butter, &c., for which I, of course, thanked him. He then placed me in a very awkward position by asking me for a ship's revolver I brought up for my protection. I informed him it was not my property, but belonged to Government; when he immediately replied, "Your Government will not mind my having it." So on consideration I thought it impolitic to refuse him before so many of his Chiefs, so I took the responsibility of presenting it, trusting my conduct in doing so would on consideration meet the approbation of the Commodore.

Saturday, September 27.—In the course of the day the King sent six of his great War Chiefs on horseback to my house; they certainly were ferocious-looking fellows, but the quantity of dress, both on men and horses, must render them useless in battle. He has 250 like them, and they only stand still in battle to frighten the enemy.

Called on the King in the afternoon, and he told me he felt sure I would neither hear nor see Dr. Baikie this year, but promised to send his letters to Lagos whenever he received an answer, as he had sent a messenger to Dr. Baikie on my arrival, with the letters and despatches I had brought up for him.

From September 27 to October 2, nothing of importance occurred, I being ill from an attack of fever most of the time.

On the morning of the 2nd, called on the King to wish him farewell. He sent a Chief, and one of Dr. Baikie's men, who understood English, to accompany me to Rabba, to take charge of Dr. Baikie's things. Arrived at noon at Lucoloo, where I remained for the night.

From the 3rd to the 7th of October I again travelled the same road as I came up, so there is nothing of importance to relate. On the afternoon of the 7th I again reached the ship, and felt very pleased at finding all well on board.

October 8.—My Kroomen, and the Chief that Massaba had sent, arrived, so made preparations for proceeding down the river on the following day. Had a long palaver with the Chief, who informed me it was King Massaba's intention to conquer the country right down to the mouth of the river for trade under his protection.

Thursday, October 9.—Weighed at 6 A.M., and proceeded close to the shore; landed forty-nine articles belonging to Dr. Baikie, and gave them in charge of a Chief called Sonafadder. This Chief then came off, and we had another long palaver, which detained me till 1 P.M., at which time a messenger from King Massaba arrived, informing me that the King had heard from Dr. Baikie, and that he was on his way back to the camp, and requested me to wait a few days longer; but this I knew would be of no use, as I could not possibly get an answer from the camp under ten days; and the water having already fallen 2 feet 7 inches, I did not consider myself justified in remaining another hour. At 1:30 P.M. started from Rabba; found it difficult to steam with wood; made thirty-five miles.

October 10.—Anchored at Egga, and sent on shore a messenger from King Massaba to order some wood. Remained at Egga Saturday and Sunday receiving wood.

On the morning of the 13th started for the Confluence, and arrived there at 5 P.M.; picked up coal-boat. Anchored off Dr. Baikie's Settlement for the night.

October 14.—Weighed, and proceeded to Ighebe, where I remained until the 19th wooding ship, and waiting for any despatches that might by chance come down from Dr. Baikie.

October 19.—I was so ill the doctor advised my returning down the river. Started for the mouth of the river; made sixty-three miles.

October 20.—Anchored off Onitsha, and filled up with wood.

October 21.—Proceeded down the river, and anchored seven miles below Ebo; made twenty-three miles. Found the river here had not fallen; in fact, it was more flooded than on our ascent.

October 22.—Started for the mouth of the river, at which place we anchored at 5 P.M., having made 111 miles.

October 23.—Remained at Akassa, and completed with wood and prepared for sea.

October 24.—At 5 A.M. started to cross the Nun bar, which we found very smooth. Proceeded for Lagos; weather very favourable.

October 25.—Proceeding for Lagos, in the outer roads of which place we anchored at 7:15 P.M.

I am happy to state that during the fifty-three days Her Majesty's ship "Investigator" was up the river, the health of the ship's company was exceedingly good, only a few cases of slight fever occurring, and that amongst the men received from Her Majesty's ship "Brisk," who had not been accustomed to river-work, my own men remaining perfectly healthy.

Owing to the clearness and correctness of Lieutenant Glover's charts, the services of Mr. Southwick as Pilot were not required; he, however, was most zealous and useful on many other duties.

"Zebra," off Point Padron, October 19, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that on the morning of the 10th instant, Point Padron bearing north-east about fourteen miles, I chased and boarded the Dutch barque "Jane," from Rotterdam and Elmina, and last from Kinsembo. The boarding officer thinking her very suspicious I proceeded to examine her myself, and carefully inspected her papers and hold.

The former, though apparently regular as far as they went, were deficient in some important items, particularly in there being amongst them no bond such as is exacted by the Government of the Netherlands from every vessel proceeding to the coast of Africa, no Custom-house clearance from Elmina, and no manifest. Her hold was in ballast, with the exception of the provisions and water for the crew, a considerable amount of cabin stores and provisions, and a number of shakes sufficient, as far as could be computed, to set up thirty more water-casks.

Under these circumstances I determined to detain her and send her in for adjudication, but found, on looking over my slave warrants, that the "Special Order" for acting on the Netherlands Treaty had not been forwarded to me; I therefore anchored her off Point Padron, and having unsuccessfully endeavoured to communicate with Commander Wratislaw of Her Majesty's ship "Ranger," kept her there till I was joined on the 14th instant by the "Espoir." Commander Douglas agreed with me that there was not the slightest doubt of her being engaged in slaving, and as he considered the authority possessed by him sufficient to act upon, I released the vessel on the evening of the 14th, and he shortly after, with my full consent, took possession of her, and dispatched her on the 16th to the Court of Mixed Commission at Sierra Leone for adjudication. Much corroborative evidence has been obtained by Commander Douglas and myself of the illegal object of her voyage, which is, however, prima facie sufficiently evident, as no honest trader ever visits this coast in ballast.

The apparently new plan of using, or rather abusing, the Dutch flag as the American has so long been, will I trust be checked by her detention.

I HAVE the honour to report that, on the 10th instant, I boarded the United States barque “Ocilla,” at 9 P.M., Point Padron bearing at the time south-east 2'.

The “Ocilla” had left Havana with a cargo of sugar, which she discharged at Havre, and then took on board her present cargo. I have no doubt this vessel is intended for the Slave Trade, but her papers being correct I could not detain her. The system on which she is acting appears to be much the same as that adopted by the “Clarissa.”

The “Ocilla,” at the time I boarded her, was making for the Congo, which she entered the next day.

The vessel was detained about forty minutes; I noted my visit in the log, and the captain had no complaint to make.

There is not the slightest doubt that this vessel is waiting an opportunity to embark a cargo of slaves, but at present there is nothing to warrant interference with her. The boarding officers' report is herewith inclosed.

“Narcissus,” at Sierra Leone, February 17, 1863.

WITH reference to your letter of the 9th January last, inclosing copy of a letter from Mr. Freeman, the Governor of Lagos, reporting the shipment of a cargo of slaves from Aghwey, on the 20th of October last, in a steamer bearing French colours, I have the honour to forward, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, copy of a letter I have received from Commander Beamish, of the "Wrangler," relative to the shipment referred to, which has been confirmed from other authentic sources.

Inclosure in No. 104.

Commander Beamish to Rear-Admiral Sir B. Walker.

Sir,

"Wrangler," Sierra Leone, February 14, 1863.

IN obedience to your Memorandum A, 1,069, of this day's date, I have the honour to report the particulars, so far as I am cognizant of them, of the reported shipment of a cargo of slaves by a steamer at Aghwey on the 20th October, 1862.

Her Majesty's ship under my command arrived at Accra from Ascension on the day in question.

Her Majesty's ship "Mullet" was at anchor there for the necessary protection of the place, consequent upon the mutiny of the Gold Coast Artillery Regiment; she was almost entirely out of coals and left for Fernando Po that evening.

Commander Simpson of the "Mullet" informed me that a slave steamer was reported to be off the coast.

On the 2nd November, I communicated with Her Majesty's ship "Lee," whose cruising-ground was off St. Pauls, and about twenty miles east and west of it. Commander Symons also informed me that a steamer was reported to be off the coast, and that he had a few evenings before chased a French gun-boat, mistaking her for a slave, and that his boarding officer had met with anything but a satisfactory reception from her; his boat did not go alongside. This gun-boat turned out to be the "La Motte Piquet."

On the 4th I communicated with Her Majesty's ship "Griffon," and by Commander Perry I was given the following information, viz., that previously to the 20th October, he had received intelligence that a shipment was to be made, and that though he did not rely upon the locality named, he nevertheless believed in the rumour of an approaching shipment.

On the 2th October he stood in towards the land, and when doing so he observed a steamer to which he gave chase; however he did not come up to her until she had anchored at Whydah, when he found her to be the "La Motte Piquet;" while being chased she had steamed from the westward (the direction of Aghwey) towards Whydah. Her Majesty's ship "Wye" was at anchor at Whydah at the time.

A few days afterwards he had been informed that on the day, and at the very time that he was chasing the "La Motte Piquet," a steamer had gone into Aghwey from the westward of it, and had successfully shipped a large cargo of slaves there.

On the 9th November I arrived at Lagos, and the shipment of the slaves on the 20th October was spoken of by everybody; I was told that two Portuguese who had been employed to effect the purchase, &c., of the slaves left in the "Athenian" mail-steamer for Europe on the 10th.

Captain Burton, Her Majesty's Consul at Fernando Po, took a passage in the "Athenian." On the 17th November I anchored at Little Popoe, eight miles from Aghwey, and I went on shore; the Little Popoe people are, I believe, the only ones on the coast who do not allow slaves to be shipped at their town—they are at war with the Aghweyans; I met and conversed with at least twenty people who had been eye-witnesses of the arrival of the steamer and of the shipment of the slaves; one man's brother had been carried off in her.

I have not a doubt that the shipment took place, and on the very day in question.

As to the slaver having hoisted French colours, it is the only matter about which I am uncertain, as some people said she hoisted no colours. The shipment took place in the forenoon.

I have, &c.

"Wrangler," at Sea, February 4, 1863.

HEREWITH I have the honour to transmit a letter, reporting the capture of a ship, name and nation unknown.

A copy of the inclosed letter has been forwarded to the Commander-in-chief, through Commodore A. P. Eardley Wilmot, C.B.

Inclosure in No. 105.

"Wrangler," at Sea, December 31, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to report to you the capture, by Her Majesty's ship under my command, on the 28th instant, in latitude 14° 37' south, longitude 9° 19' east, Little Fish Bay east $\frac{1}{2}$ north about 172 miles, of a full-rigged ship, perfectly equipped for the Slave Trade, and ready to receive from 1,000 to 1,300 slaves.

This vessel, when we sighted her, was lying with her head to the southward, under reefed topsails, and at first I was inclined to believe her to be a whaler. She soon wore round, however, and set every sail she could carry, but we came up with her after about four hours' chase under steam. She showed no colours, and had no papers, and her captain when I went on board called her the "Josephine." This was her actual but new name, for the next morning I had not much difficulty in making out on her stern the name "' Island Queen,' Washington, D.C.," though means had been taken to erase it, and the new name had not been put on.

The crew (twenty-one in number), were, I believe, Portuguese and Spaniards, and only one could talk English, even imperfectly: he might have been of any nation.

On the following day (having towed the prize during an almost calm night) I removed from her ten of her crew, and putting on board two officers and eleven men, parted company, having ordered her to proceed to St. Helena, to which island I was also going.

She was in sight a-head of us all the following day, but as she is a very fast sailer I have not seen her since.

From different sources I have been able to ascertain what I hope will turn out to be useful information, as to the devices of the slave-dealers now that they dare not claim American nationality when caught in the act of slaving or equipped for that purpose.

The "Island Queen" was fitted out in the United States or Havana in March 1862, with United States' colours and papers, and was commanded by R. Denham, a noted slave captain, and the man, I believe, who successfully ran a cargo in the schooner "Wanderer" not very long since.

The vessel proceeded to Cardiff or Swansea, and there took in a cargo of coals for Cadiz. Arrived at that place she discharged all her coal, except a few tons, sufficient for her next trip; and she remained at anchor in Cadiz Bay to fit for slaving.

Before fitting for the coast of Africa she is said to have changed ownership, and to have taken out Spanish papers under the name of "Josephine." Two persons (brothers), said to be Portuguese, named Botelho, made no disguise of being part owners; one of them took a passage out in the slave-vessel, and the other in the Portuguese mail-steamer (the "Estafania" I understand) to St. Paul de Loanda, carrying out the purchase money for the slaves.

A nephew of theirs (a Portuguese youth named Teixeira Souza) took a passage in the ship, being about to enter a merchant's office in Havana: 20,000 dollars were given to the American owners for the ship.

She received during her stay a new captain (a Portuguese named Luis Fonseca), and a Portuguese and Spanish crew (at least they spoke those languages), though denying any nationality.

I am informed that Denham, the American captain, took command, on leaving, of an American brig, one of five other vessels (one a steamer) fitted at Cadiz for the Slave Trade.

The Spanish authorities appear to have put no difficulties in the way while she was preparing for a slave voyage, and to have visited her after having received all her slave equipments.

The shipping agent who engaged the new crew did so undisguisedly for the Slave Trade; and the agreement was made, that should the voyage be successful, each seaman should receive 400 dollars, but that if they should be captured they should receive nothing.

On joining each man received twelve months' pay at 16 dollars per mensem in advance; legal Spanish ships seldom give half that rate of pay.

Rice, beans, fish, biscuit, slave medicines, wooden spoons, tin dishes, &c., were received at Cadiz in sufficient quantity to last about 1,900 slaves from Africa to Cuba, and she actually got in 300 pipes of fresh water, plank for her slave deck, very large quantities of firewood, and her slave-coppers for cooking.

She was supplied with four ensigns before leaving. They were Spanish, American, French, and Dutch: the latter is reputed just now amongst slave-dealers to be a very safe flag. On the 21st September she left Cadiz, and came out (touching nowhere) to Alucica Grande, near Equimina Bay, in Angola, off which she arrived on the 26th November, and landed her part-owner and supercargo Botelho, communicated with her consignee, from whom directions were received to cruize at sea until the 4th January, and then to return to Alucica Grande, where she would receive directions about her slaves, which were to be ready by that date.

I have reason to suspect that her slaves were to be put on board at Equimina or Elephant Bay, and were to be supplied by a man residing at Equimina who has large sugar plantations and a distillery there.

Her first mate was a Spaniard named Domingo Raieira; he had been in the Spanish navy, and held a commission from the Queen of Spain as "pilot."

Her boatswain was a Portuguese (an old hand at the Trade, who fitted her slave-deck and set up her slave cooking-apparatus on the voyage out). This fellow was in Her Majesty's ship "Heron" when she capsized, and he has made several successful and a few unsuccessful voyages. He did not in the least take to heart being captured, but trusts to be back to Cadiz quickly to venture again at his piratical villainous calling. He was once in a steamer, the "El Mina," alias "Guliermina," alias "Salvador," which successfully ran slaves to Cuba.

Most heartily do I wish it were in my power to bring him and his associates to justice on the simple grounds that they are pirates, and claim no nationality. As matters stand at present, the crews of slavers taken with no colours or papers get most politely treated as prisoners of war; but with this difference, that instead of being incarcerated, they are landed at the most convenient place on the coast, and are received with open arms by their confederates.

I have much pleasure in stating that his Excellency the Governor of St. Paul de Loanda, as also the Governor of Benguela, informed me that they had suspicion of slaving at Equimina.

I have since heard that a barque shipped slaves there about a month ago. How true this may be I cannot tell; I have only the authority of the slaver's crew for it.

"Narcissus," Sierra Leone, February 20, 1863.

IN carrying out the intention communicated in my letter of the 17th December last, I left Simon's Bay in this ship on the following day to inspect the West Coast of Africa Division of my command. I have now the honour to submit the following observations for the information of my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

I first touched at Walwich Bay, and found it to be spacious, and sheltered from every wind capable of affording protection for any amount of shipping. It is easy of access, and, from information the fishing party stationed there gave me, it rarely ever blows hard, and is a smooth-water bay at all times. The shores are sandy and barren, and although fresh water is scarce, yet bullocks, sheep, and vegetables can be obtained from the natives after a short notice. The fish are good and in great abundance, and, with the exception of the want of fresh water, this bay is a most eligible place for a coaling-station as a half-way point between St. Paul de Loanda and the Cape of Good Hope.

From Walwich Bay I kept within sight of the land looking into Great Fish Bay, Port Alexander, and anchored in Little Fish Bay. On the 2nd January I carefully examined the intermediate coast, and, with the exception of a small fishing-station at Port Alexandra, could observe no indication of natives or towns, which confirms me in the belief that no business, illicit or otherwise, is done between Port Alexandra and Walwich Bay.

Little Fish Bay, a Portuguese port, is considered a very healthy place. The Settlement of Mossamedes appears to be prosperous and increasing. A considerable quantity of fish is caught and prepared for exportation. The country here assumes a less barren appearance. Access to the interior is easier, and a small trade is conducted with the natives, who barter ivory, skins, guns, and cattle for cottons and hardware.

The lung disease which has prevailed had destroyed vast herds of cattle, and the oxen to be obtained were in such bad condition as to be scarcely fit for food. The same disease was existing in the neighbourhood of Walwich Bay, appearing to be southward. The supplies of fresh stock, represented to be abundant here, although sufficient for the small vessels on the coast of Africa, fell far short of the requirements of a ship of this class.

I saw some fair specimens of copper ore at Mossamedes which was collected at Campeo Armata, also some apparently good samples of cotton (raw material) grown on a small plantation near Port Alexander. Considerable attention is now directed to the cultivation of this plant.

I was informed that the "Wrangler" had called at Little Fish Bay, and left the day after Christmas-day, having taken in nineteen oxen for conveyance to Ascension; but as the Portuguese would not eat of these animals themselves, in consequence of the disease referred to, I have forbidden any more being shipped by Her Majesty's cruisers, and hope that the sickness has not been carried to St. Helena and Ascension.

I met a Portuguese civil engineer, Senhor Monteiro, at this place, who had been educated in England, and is now employed by Senhor Flores (once a notorious slave-dealer) to examine and report upon the copper discovered at the following places, Cuio or Quash, Ambriz, Chapeo Armata, Benguela. From the former of these mines as much as 3,000 tons of ore had been shipped in a year. This gentleman states that he has not yet found a good lode; and all the ore that he has hitherto seen is chiefly found on or near the surface, having been probably thrown up by volcanic action.

Leaving Little Fish Bay on the 3rd of January, I made a close examination of the coast for indications of Slave Trade barracoons, &c., until I anchored off Benguela on the 6th. Here there were large numbers of slaves seen on shore by the officers; and as little legal commerce of any kind apparently existed, I have no doubt that the Slave Trade is very rife in this locality. I received information that a Spanish slave-barque was expected in the neighbourhood, but although a good look-out was kept no trace of her could be discovered. I then continued my course along shore to St. Paul de Loanda, and caused the several suspected shipping-places, viz., Ogito, Novo Rodondo, to be searched, but no craft of an illegal character were seen; several foreign vessels were boarded, but at the time were under the protection of apparently legal papers.

I arrived at St. Paul de Loanda on the 9th of January, and regretted to find that the previously reported death of Mr. Gabriel, Her Majesty's Commissioner of the Mixed Commission Court, was confirmed. I am informed that he died on board Her Majesty's ship "Torch" on the 14th of December last from dysentery. His loss to Her Majesty's Government will be much felt, and his good offices and kindness to the cruisers on the station greatly missed. He was held in high estimation by the Portuguese authorities, who caused his body to be interred with military honours in the absence of any Consular authority. Mr. E. H. Hewett, the Clerk to the late Commissioners, had taken charge of everything, and had been authorized by the Senior Naval Officer of the division to act as Vice-Consul—a measure I approved—until the newly appointed Consul should arrive. I would here observe that no time should be lost in sending out another intelligent Commissioner on the part of the British Government, in order to prevent the revival of the spirit for Slave Trade, to which the late Mr. Gabriel, by his knowledge of the Portuguese people on the coast, was a great check. I found Her Majesty's ship "Antelope" coaling here.

The Portuguese Governor-General, who has lately assumed the Government of the Province of Angola, was indisposed from fever, and unable to give me an interview, which I regret; but I am glad to learn from many sources that he discourages every disposition to deal in slaves so far as his limited power will permit, and has discontinued the emigration to St. Thomas.

I examined the coal-depôt in charge of Mr. Hewett; and the arrangements, which are satisfactory at present, will bear improvement, when the storehouse (now in rather a dilapidated state) shall require to be re-built, in which case it should be placed close to the water's edge.

I weighed from St. Paul de Loanda on the 11th of January, and keeping the coast well in view, could observe that great facilities exist for carrying on Slave Trade, which nothing but the watchfulness of our cruisers can check. It has, notwithstanding, been very actively conducted in this locality. I fell in with the "Torch" off Mangue Grande, which vessel afterwards joined me in the Congo River, together with the "Zebra."

I am pained to find that the Slave Trade in the Congo River is still very brisk; and notwithstanding the vigilance and arrangements of Commander Hoskins, of the "Zebra," two large cargoes of slaves had been run from the river in the darkness of night about the 16th and 21st of October last. The vessel was a large barque, named the "Ocilla," with 1,540 slaves, supposed to be American; the other the "Mondego," a Portuguese brigantine, with upwards of 500 slaves. A Spanish brig, a schooner under French colours, and a Portuguese brigantine were up the river, suspected to be waiting an opportunity to ship a cargo of slaves. I purpose to increase this division permanently from four to six cruisers.

I next visited Cabenda on the 18th January, where I found the "Espoir," Commander Douglas, who had been actively cruising. Here the weather was wet, accompanied by tornadoes, but I pursued my way close in-shore to Cape Lopez and Fernando Po.

On arrival at this island, Fernando Po, on the 26th January, I anchored in the adjoining bay to Clarence Cove. On the following day the French Commodore, the Baron Didot, arrived in the frigate "Junon." We had a very cordial interview, and parted on the most friendly terms.

I should remark that the Spanish Governor at Fernando Po seems to be disposed to afford every assistance to Her Majesty's ships calling at that island.

Having made the best of my way to Lagos, which I reached at 8 A.M. on the 31st January, I was greatly disappointed to find that Commodore Wilmot, who had returned safely from Abomey, had left the same morning at 4 o'clock for Fernando Po to coal; the weather being thick from the smoke prevailing prevented the ships being seen by each other. I consider that a small depôt of coal is much required for the cruisers in this part of the Bights.

As the Governor of Lagos, Mr. Freeman, was unwell, and I was anxious to know the state of affairs at this Settlement, I paid him a visit, and found him in a low state from fever. He informed me that all communication with Abbeokuta had been closed for the last fortnight in consequence of its people (the Egbas) combining with another tribe, the Ibaddans, to shut out the Eboes from trading with Lagos. As, however, this interruption will be severely felt at Abbeokuta, Mr. Freeman appeared to be sanguine that it would soon terminate in amicable arrangements, and he was under no apprehension of hostilities.

Mr. Freeman further informed me that in consequence of the towns of Palma and Badagry, each about thirty miles to the east and west of Lagos, interfering much with the collection of the revenue of his Government, he had decided measures for taking possession and establishing Custom-houses at those places, which he had hoped to do without difficulty or opposition, and for which he had the sanction of the Home Government.

I see no way to suppressing the Slave Trade now confined to this locality in the Bights, but to maintain for a few years longer a continuous line of gun-vessels from Cape St. Paul to Lagos, which is being done as far as possible by the three cruisers and their boats now stationed there.

I fell in with Her Majesty's ship "Ranger," the Senior Officer of the Bight Division, off Quittah, and learnt from him that the Governor of the Gold Coast was desirous of the presence of a ship of war at Accra, as the "Mullet" was the only other vessel then on this Division. The "Lee" having gone to Fernando Po to coal, I proceeded at once to that place and anchored there on the 4th February.

At my interview with Mr. Pine, the Governor of the Gold Coast, he informed me that the Orobo Chiefs were giving some trouble, in consequence of their non-fulfilment to pay up their tribute to the Government. It appears that for some years an English merchant had paid it for them, but now they both repudiated their debt to him and the Government. Mr. Pine had therefore taken steps to compel them to fulfil their engagements, by which he thought he would soon accomplish that object.

Mr. Pine and the Chief Justice being desirous to return to the seat of Government, I gave them a passage thither in my flag-ship, and landed them at Cape Coast Castle.

All the buildings of masonry at Accra, including the fortifications, have been nearly shaken to ruins by the recent severe earthquakes.

As I learnt by a letter received at Lagos from Commodore Wilmot, that he intended to proceed to this port from Fernando Po, I have hastened here to intercept the mail-packet from England, and to await his arrival.

In conclusion, I must record my satisfaction at the appearance of the several cruizers which I have fallen in with; and I may add that although some slave-vessels have escaped, yet it has not been from lack of activity or vigilance. The Commanders I have met are very efficient officers, and appear to have the liveliest interest in the service upon which they are employed. It is also gratifying to state that the crews were generally enjoying good health.

Commodore Wilmot joined me here yesterday; his reports of his visit to King of Dahomey, which have been forwarded to their Lordships, will be read with much interest, and I cannot but admire the spirit and determination with which he performed that difficult service.

I purpose to leave this evening on my return to the Cape, touching at Ascension, to inspect that island.

Sir,

"Narcissus," Fernando Po, January 28, 1863.

I BEG to inclose, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, the copy of a letter I have received from Commander S. Douglas, of the "Espoir," relative to the English schooner "White Mouse," of Bristol, conveying Africans from Brass River to Fernando Po.

Having called upon the Acting Consul at this place for an explanation of this subject, I forward herewith his reply, and would beg to observe that had I met the "White Mouse" at sea with these men on board, I should have seized her for infringement of the Act of Parliament on Slave Trade; therefore I submit whether the Acting Consul is right in allowing these proceedings.

Commander Douglas to Commodore Wilmot.

Sir,

"Espoir," at Sea, Lat. 2° 40' S., Long. 9° 20' E.,
December 2, 1862.

WHEN at Fernando Po, on the 27th ultimo, a British schooner arrived and anchored in the bay, named the "White Mouse," owners Burford and Townsend, Captain Thompson; she was from Brass River.

It was not until after leaving port that I heard, on good authority, that this vessel had landed about thirty Africans immediately on her arrival. These slaves (for there can be no doubt that they were slaves) appear to have been hired from the King of Brass for the service of a British trader at Fernando Po, on what terms I am unable to state.

The carrying such slaves seems to be, without doubt, an infringement of the British law relating to Slave Trade, and would render the vessel liable to capture if met by one of Her Majesty's cruizers. If such is the case the landing of these people (which took place in Clarence Bay), in the presence of five men of war, is an infringement of our Treaty with Spain.

The export of any slaves is also forbidden to the King of Brass by his Treaty with Great Britain.

I had the honour to mention, in a former Slave Trade Report (October 1861), the fact of a large number of slaves being sold down the Niger, at Aboh, to the Brass people. May not this be one of the means by which they again find a receiver for the slaves so purchased, and thus help to perpetuate a system of slave-hunts in the interior of the country?

I was informed by Her Britannic Majesty's Acting Consul at Fernando Po that he thought it was the intention of the Spaniards to attempt the system of free emigration to the Colony of Fernando Po, as a circular had been sent round to all the residents, asking them how many labourers they could employ; but I received no notice of any such system having commenced under the British flag.

There is a great want of labour of any kind at Fernando Po, which would no doubt induce many more attempts of this kind to obtain labourers who might, by a very slight step, become the property of Europeans.

As this traffic appears to me, if allowed to proceed without some check, to be likely to revive some of the worst features of the Slave Trade on this part of the coast, I deem the subject of sufficient importance for a report from me, as authorized by Article 2, page 7, of the Slave Trade Instructions.

I have, &c.

Sir, "Narcissus," at Fernando Po, January 27, 1863.

HAVING been informed that the British schooner "White Mouse" arrived at Clarence Cove on the 27th November last with about thirty Africans, said to have been hired from the King of Brass, which Africans were landed on this island, I beg you will, in the absence of Her Majesty's Consul, be good enough to give me all the information in your power on this subject, stating by whose authority these Africans were conveyed in a British vessel, and to whom they were consigned, in order that I may lay the same before Her Majesty's Government.

Sir, Fernando Po, January 27, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to report, in reply to your despatch of this date, that the schooner "White Mouse," of Bristol, arrived here on the 27th of November last, with seventeen Benito men on board. These men had voluntarily entered into an engagement with Captain Townsend (a resident here and part owner of the "White Mouse") to serve him for the term of six months, for wages at the rate of 3 dollars per month, and they are to be furnished by Captain Townsend with a passage to Benito at the expiry of that time.

Fernando Po, February 6, 1863.

I BEG to state, for the information of my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that on reference to the letters from the officers commanding Her Majesty's ships on the South Division, reporting the boarding and detention of vessels engaged in the Slave Trade, and of others whose nationality have been suspected, it will be observed that the United States' barque "Ocilla" was twice boarded, first by the "Espoir" on the 10th, and afterwards by the "Zebra" on the 28th September, 1862; but although she was strongly suspected by both vessels, she could not be detained, as her papers were to all appearance correct. I learn from Commander Hoskins of the "Zebra," that the "Ocilla" escaped on the night of the 16th October with a cargo of 1,400 slaves. He proceeded in chase as soon as he knew of her departure (which was not till the following day), but was unsuccessful in the pursuit. During his absence the Portuguese schooner "Mondego" escaped with 494 slaves on the 21st October; and I beg to refer you to Commander Hoskins' letter of the 19th November last, relative to this latter vessel.

WITH reference to your letter of the 4th of August last, relative to the schooner "Buenaventura Cubano," taken out of the hands of the Liberian authorities in the Gallinas River in June 1861, by the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Torch," and calling for any further evidence which can be obtained relative to the illegal nature of the voyage of that vessel, I beg to inclose herewith such additional remarks on this subject as Commander Smith is enabled to furnish.

Inclosure 1 in No. 109.

Commander Smith to Rear-Admiral Sir B. Walker.

Sir,

"Torch," off Congo River, January 16, 1863.

IN compliance with your instructions relative to any further information I may be able to offer in the case of the capture and destruction of the Spanish vessel "Buenaventura Cubano" in the Gallinas River in June 1861—

1. I have the honour to inclose a copy of a declaration made on oath by Lieutenant Martin before the Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court at Sierra Leone.

2. These facts, sworn to by Lieutenant Martin, will no doubt clearly prove to the Spanish Government that the "Buenaventura Cubano" was actually engaged in a slave-trading transaction at the time of detention by the Liberian Government schooner "Quail."

3. During the week that elapsed between the issuing of the monition and the condemnation of the vessel in the Vice-Admiralty Court at Sierra Leone, the master and crew were lodging in the town, and neither during this time nor on the occasion of her condemnation as a vessel engaged in the Slave Trade, not entitled to the protection of any flag or nation, did either one or the other protest or offer one word in behalf of their vessel as being a legal trader.

4. Señor Calderon Collantes is in error when he states all the papers which might have led to the complete discovery of the truth were destroyed by the captors (Monrovia I presume). The vessel's papers (if there were any at all) were taken away by the master when he deserted his vessel, and I can confidently assert no papers of any kind were destroyed.

5. With regard to the statement made by the Liberian Consul-General, that her master had again re-appeared on the coast in the neighbourhood of the Gallinas for the purpose of procuring a cargo of slaves, I have no positive information of myself, as the "Torch" has been attached to the Southern Division of cruisers during the past year, but I have little doubt of the truth thereof; nevertheless the correctness or otherwise of this statement could be easily established by reference to the authorities at Sierra Leone.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 2 in No. 109.

Declaration of Lieutenant Martin.

In the Vice-Admiralty Court of Sierra Leone.

OUR Sovereign Lady the Queen against the topsail schooner, name unknown, name of master unknown, her tackle, apparel, and furniture, and the goods, wares, and merchandize lately on board the same, taken and seized by Frederick Harrison Smith, Esquire, Commander of Her Majesty's steam gun-ship "Torch," and subsequently destroyed by fire, and against all persons in general having, or pretending to have, any right, title, or interest therein.

I, John James Martin, Lieutenant of Her Majesty's steam gun-ship "Torch," Frederick Harrison Smith, Esquire, Commander, make oath and say as follows, that is to say:—

1. That the said Commander is duly authorized and empowered, by a warrant from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, under the Statute 2 and 3 Vict., cap. 73, to make seizures of vessels engaged in the Slave Trade not being justly entitled to claim the protection of the flag of any state or nation.

2. That on the 13th day of June, 1861, being in latitude 7° north and longitude 11° 38' west, and standing in for the Gallinas, the officers and crew of the said steam gun-ship espied a fore-topsail schooner at anchor inside the bar; but the surf being too heavy for our boats to land, we went down to Soliman, and were informed by a krooman who came off to the vessel that the foretopsail schooner we had seen was there for the purpose of shipping slaves, and had landed a quantity of her slave equipments at the Gallinas. We therefore then returned to the Gallinas and anchored off the bar; and the said Commander then instructed me to proceed with our two whale-boats, and land to the northward of the bar; and upon landing I hauled the boats across the land into a branch of the river, and then proceeded towards the said schooner.

3. That on boarding her we found the Captain and crew were on shore, and a few Monrovia were pacing the deck as if they had taken possession of the vessel; and they confirmed the statement of the said krooman. I then examined the vessel and found—

1st. Seventeen large water-casks in her hold, capable of holding about 130 gallons each, being a larger quantity than was requisite for the crew of the vessel; a quantity of wooden spoons, such as are generally found in slave-vessels; and four large boilers, capable of cooking for a great number of persons.

2ndly. A sufficient quantity of plank for laying a second, or slave-deck, necessary tubs usually seen in slave-vessels, and a large quantity of firewood.

3rdly. A great quantity of rice, calavances, and fish, a quantity of food far beyond what might probably be requisite for the use of the crew.

4thly. The hatches were very large, and there were irons for gratings on board; and after the most diligent search I was unable to find any papers or flag, or any document of any kind, showing the right of the said vessel to claim the protection of the flag of any State or nation.

4. That upon the said Commander being informed of these several particulars, and that it would be very dangerous to attempt to take the schooner over the bar, he ordered me to seize and detain the said vessel (and after admeasuring her to destroy her by fire), which I accordingly did under the Act 2nd and 3rd Vict., cap. 73, by reason of her being engaged in and equipped for the Slave Trade, not being justly entitled to claim the protection of the flag of any State or nation; and upon our detaining the vessel, the whole of the Monrovia's went on shore.

(Signed) J. J. MARTIN.

On the 22nd day of June, 1861, the said John James Martin was duly sworn to the truth of this affidavit.

"Rattlesnake," Sierra Leone, March 16, 1863.

A PRIZE to the "Brisk," taken off Annabon, arrived here to-day with 270 slaves out of 368 which were on board when she was captured; nearly 100 have died on the voyage to this place, and the remainder are in a most wretched condition. They consisted of 82 men, 119 women, 79 boys, and 88 girls, who were all shipped at Cabenda and the Congo, and bound to Cuba. The vessel is a schooner of 150 tons, and had no name, papers, or colours.

It appears that she got clear off the coast, but was short of water, which the master intended to fill up at Annabon, when fortunately the "Brisk," which was just leaving the island, picked her up after five hours' chase.

The poor slaves are in the most emaciated condition, and I fear a great many more will die.

They were for a long time waiting to be shipped in the Congo, and were obliged to drink salt water for many days before being embarked.

Commodore Didelot to Commodore Wilmot.

M. le Commodore,

Lagos, le 2 Mars, 1863.

D'APRES ce que m'avait dit M. le Contre-Amiral Sir Baldwin Walker, que j'ai eu l'honneur de voir à Fernando Po, j'avais conçu l'espoir de vous rencontrer prochainement dans le Golfe de Benin. Outre le prix que j'attachais à faire votre connaissance personnelle, il me paraissait nécessaire d'entrer au plus tôt en communication directe avec vous, afin de prévenir, par une entente commune, les graves inconvénients qui ne peuvent manquer de survenir si les navires placés sous votre commandement ne reçoivent pas des instructions précises de se conformer scrupuleusement aux dispositions de la Convention par laquelle nos deux Gouvernements ont réglé, en 1859, les rapports qui doivent exister entre nos croiseurs et nos bâtiments de commerce respectifs.

C'est dans ce but, dont l'importance majeure ne vous échappera point, et que nous ne saurions trop promptement chercher à atteindre, que je me décide à vous écrire, ignorant à quelle époque les circonstances me permettront de vous rencontrer.

Je tiens à établir tout d'abord que la France, dégagée depuis 1855 des obligations contractées par elle lors du Traité de 1845, a repris exclusivement et sans partage la police de son pavillon dans ces parages, tout aussi bien que dans les autres mers du globe; qu'à cette police exclusive sont adhérentes l'indépendance et la dignité de son pavillon; et qu'à ce titre tout bâtiment de commerce légitimement couvert des couleurs Françaises doit être respecté par les croiseurs Anglais, tout comme les bâtiments de ma division respectent les navires du commerce Britannique.

Celle est, M. le Commodore, la base, la pensée fondamentale des instructions concertées en 1859 entre l'Angleterre et la France. Cependant, on n'a point hésité à admettre que l'un et l'autre pavillon pourraient être abusivement arborés par les traitants sans foi ni loi, qui, malgré la réprobation unanime dont ils sont frappés, et la vigueur avec laquelle ils sont pourchassés sur tous les points, ne craignent pas de s'aventurer encore dans les risques de l'infâme Trafic des Noirs. La Convention de 1859 a tenu compte de ces justes susceptibilités, et tout en proscrivant tous les procédés fâcheux qui ont marqué jadis le droit de visite, elle a admis (mais à titre tout exceptionnel) dans des cas extrêmes de soupçons bien fondés sur la nationalité d'un bâtiment, et à défaut de ces indices matériels si évidents à l'œil d'un marin et qui attestent par eux-mêmes la nationalité d'un navire—elle a admis, dis-je, que dans de telles circonstances nous pourrions contraindre ce bâtiment à faire la preuve de sa nationalité en exhibant ses papiers de bord. Mais, en vous reportant à la Convention, vous ne manquerez pas de remarquer, M. le Commodore, que ce droit extrême exceptionnel a été entouré de toutes les garanties que l'on a jugées propres à en prévenir l'abus, et qu'il y a faute grave de la part de tout croiseur qui ne se renferme pas strictement dans les limites tracées; que tous ceux de ses actes qui excèdent ces limites sont un abus de la force qui appelle la résistance, une violation de l'indépendance du pavillon qui ne saurait être tolérée.

C'est dans ce sens que sont conçus les instructions que j'ai données aux capitaines placés sous mon commandement; ils s'y conforment rigoureusement à l'égard des navires Anglais de commerce, et je me croyais fondé à l'espérer qu'il en serait de même de la part des croiseurs Anglais vis-à-vis des bâtiments marchands placés à l'abri de mon pavillon, bâtiments qui, je le répète à dessein, relèvent exclusivement de ma surveillance et de ma police.

Je regrette de dire qu'il n'en a pas toujours été ainsi, et que plusieurs navires Français ont été dans ce derniers tems soumis à des traitements contre lesquels je dois réclamer. Je me vois dans l'obligation précise de vous prier, M. le Commodore, d'y mettre un terme, et de rappeler aux capitaines des navires de Sa Majesté Britannique placés sous votre commandement, quels sont en pareille matière les droits que leur confère la Convention, les actes et les procédés qu'elle leur interdit. Ainsi il ne suffit pas de soupçonner légèrement un navire de porter indûment les couleurs sous lesquelles il s'abrite; il faut que les soupçons s'appuient sur des fondements et des indications dont on doit justifier. On doit surtout s'abstenir absolument de toute investigation sur les passagers, la cargaison, le voyage, et ne point forcer violemment l'entrée d'un navire lorsque le capitaine exhibant ses papiers de bord s'y oppose.

J'ai été amené, M. le Commodore, à vous soumettre toutes ces observations par suite des plaintes qui m'ont été adressées sur les visites faites par les croiseurs Anglais, depuis quelques mois, sur des bâtiments Français, et notamment sur la goëlette "Lagos," qui, après avoir été visitée trois fois dans le Golfe de Benin par les avisos "Lee" et "Griffon," vient de l'être encore récemment auprès du Congo par la canonnière "Torch." Je n'ai pas encore le rapport officiel que le capitaine doit me remettre, affirmé par son équipage; dès qu'il me sera parvenu je m'empresserai de vous le transmettre, avec les observations détaillées qu'il me paraîtra comporter.

Je n'ai pas la moindre doute, M. le Commodore, que mes réclamations ne trouvent auprès de vous l'accueil que j'ai droit d'attendre. J'ai le plus vif désir que rien ne vienne altérer, pendant mon commandement, la bonne harmonie qui règne entre nos Gouvernements, et à laquelle de si grandes intérêts sont attachés. Je me tiens pour assuré que tels sont aussi vos sentiments, M. le Commodore, et que je vous trouverai toujours disposé à co-opérer cordialement avec moi, pour assurer en ce qui dépend de nous ce résultat si désirable. Nous aussi, nous avons fort à cœur l'abolition de la Traite des Noirs, et la cessation des hontes et des misères qu'elle traîne à sa suite; mais nous n'attachons pas moins de prix à ce que notre pavillon jouisse du respect et de l'indépendance auxquels il a droit.

Je saisisrai avec empressement, M. le Commodore, la première occasion qui se présentera de faire votre connaissance personnelle. Je suis certain d'avance que nos relations s'établiront et se maintiendront aussi faciles et aussi cordiales qu'elles l'ont été entre votre prédécesseur, M. le Commodore Edmonstone, et moi; de mon côté, je ne négligera rien pour cela.

Veuillez, &c.

Côtes Occidentales d'Afrique,

Inclosure 2 in No. 111.

Commodore Wilmot to Commodore Didelot.

Sir,

"Rattlesnake," Monrovia, March 25, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2nd March last, and beg to assure you that I quite coincide in all the opinions you have expressed with regard to what ought to be conduct of those who are engaged in the important duties of abolishing the Slave Trade.

It is with much regret that I find you complain that many French merchant-vessels have been boarded without due regard being shown to the nationality of the French flag, and contrary to the instructions issued for the guidance of officers commanding British cruisers on this coast.

I am sure that you will believe that in all cases where these instructions have been exceeded, the object of the boarding-officer has been to discover whether the merchant-vessel was justly entitled to carry the French flag, and was a legal trader or not.

Suspicious circumstances may have called for these necessary precautions to satisfy the officer that the flag of France was not used as a deception by men engaged in the Traffic of Slaves.

You cannot believe that any insult was ever intended towards the French flag, and I beg of you to dismiss from your mind all thoughts contrary to the most perfect respect and good feeling. You mention the "Lagos" as an example, and that she was boarded by the "Lee," "Griffon," and "Torch," at different periods of course. The "Lagos" was at Whydah in November of last year, and from thence went to the Congo, returning again to Whydah early this year.

It is probable that British cruisers boarded her as she passed their several stations without knowing that she had been examined before.

The "Lagos," I beg to assure you from my own personal observation, and from the statement of the master himself, is a very suspicious vessel.

The master told me himself, in presence of other officers, that he was ready to take in a cargo of slaves, and would do so whenever an opportunity offered. He said that he had done so before, and would do so again. He made no secret of his intentions, and I have not the slightest doubt he will do all in his power to embark slaves instead of palm oil.

It is reported that the steamer that escaped with a cargo of 960 slaves from the neighbourhood of Aghwey about the 20th October last, did so with French colours flying, and that the French flag is used very generally on the coast now to prevent suspicion and examination.

I mention these circumstances to show you that we have some good reasons for being particular in our dealings with vessels that show French colours, not merely for the sake of proving their right to display those colours, but to prevent the flag of France from being used in such a cause, and as a cloak for wicked purposes.

I will instruct the cruisers under my orders to be most particular in their duties with respect to French vessels, and I trust from henceforth you will have no cause of complaint against them.

I shall be very glad to have the opportunity of paying my respects to you in person, and making your acquaintance.

You may rest assured that my great object on all occasions will be to keep up the most friendly intercourse with you, and to strictly carry out the instructions that I have received from my Government for the service on which I am employed.

Believe me, &c.

Extract from Orders of Sir B. Walker to Commodore Wilmot.

Paragraph 2.—MY recent inspection of that coast, and the information I have received, lead me to the conclusion that the spirit for the Traffic in Slaves has been renewed of late to the southward of St. Paul de Loanda, particularly in the localities of Benguela, Equimina, and Novo Redondo. A slave-vessel, as you are aware, has been recently captured by the "Wrangler," which was to have shipped 1,700 slaves at Equimina. Benguela, also, at the time of my visit was full of slaves. Such being the case, I consider the South Division should be strengthened, and that not less than six cruisers should be stationed there, four to watch the River Congo and the adjacent coast, and two the coast between the Congo and Little Fish Bay.

Paragraph 3.—The other locality for Slave Trade appears to be the seaboard of the territories of the King of Dahomey, which should be as closely watched as the means at your disposal will allow. Not less than four cruisers should be stationed in the Bights, in addition to the "Investigator" or "Handy," which vessels are occasionally to leave Lagos and the Lagoons for change of climate.

Paragraph 6.—Your known zeal and former experience of the West Coast of Africa, and of the nefarious practices of the slave-dealers, give me the assurance that you will use every means at your disposal to put an end to their illicit trade, whilst, on the other hand, you will be equally zealous to advance the cause of civilization and legal commerce.

"Rattlesnake," April 30, 1863.

THE same evening (the 27th April) I left for Lagos, and anchored there on the 29th. I called in at Whydah on my way, and found the "Mullet" there. There were also nine merchant-vessels of different nations—mostly English.

Excellent beef and stock of every kind is procurable since my visit to the King, and every one says that this has done an immensity of good.

I have found it necessary to send the "Mullet" immediately to Ascension for repairs, and have ordered the "Investigator" to take her place off Whydah till I can relieve her by another cruiser.

There have been no slaves shipped in the Bights since the departure of the steamer in October last, but this vessel is expected again, and the King of Dahomey's late foray has been to collect slaves for the next voyage.

The following is an extract from Commander Beamish's half-yearly Report on the Slave Trade to the 31st December, 1862, which, as it concerns this steamer, will probably be interesting:—

"The boatswain of the slave-ship 'Island Queen,' of Washington, Delaware County (captured four days ago by the 'Wrangler'), and an old hand at the trade, told me that he belonged to a steamer about four years ago; that he and others, all Spaniards and Portuguese, went to Hartlepool, Durham, England, and having arrived there, waited until a screw steamer, the "Gulielmina," or "Wilhelmina," building for them was ready for sea, when they navigated her to Cadiz, and sailed a slaving voyage in her successfully. He said that he thinks the steamer 'Noc Daqui' is the same. He was corroborated in his statement by a shipmate in the 'Island Queen,' who had been to Hartlepool with him."

"Rattlesnake," Ascension, July 1, 1863.

I COASTED down to Loango, and anchored there on the afternoon of the 31st May.

The next morning I visited the English and French factories, at the latter of which I met M. Parrat, the French Agent on this part of the coast for all the factories lately employed in the shipment of emigrants.

I anchored off the Congo on the evening of the 3rd June. Everything is quiet in the Congo, but there is very little legitimate trade and scarcely any Slave Trade, the latter arising from want of funds.

The Portuguese are leaving the river.

From the Congo I went to Kinsembo, and visited the different factories on shore, which were carrying on a brisk trade in ivory, gum, copper, and ground nuts; very good coffee is produced here, which, though small in quantity, possesses an excellent flavour.

From Kinsembo I went to St. Paul de Loanda, and arrived there on the afternoon of the 8th. The usual salutes took place. Being short-handed it took five days to complete with coals.

The Governor-General paid me a visit on the 17th June, and I received him with all due ceremony and distinction.

I left on the forenoon of the 18th, and arrived at Ascension on the morning of the 28th June.

"Rattlesnake," at Sea, Lat. 3° 30', Long. 5° 30',
May 26, 1863.

ABBEOKUTA is about eighty-three miles from Lagos, including lagoon and river.

The river varies a good deal in breadth and depth, and has many turnings and windings. The average breadth is eighty yards, although in some places it is scarcely thirty. Trees and branches of trees block it up in many places, and render the navigation difficult,—particularly during the night. The current varies according to the seasons; the banks on either side are high, particularly on the left-hand bank, which would be a source of great strength and security to an enemy if he knew how to take advantage of it.

There are a few villages on either side of the river, and Indian corn and cassada is largely cultivated; there are also stakes laid down for fishing.

Large trees and dense jungle abound, which are full of every description of birds,—the grey parrot, toucan, plover, and a beautiful black and white sandling, the large kingfisher, which is very handsome, the small black and white kingfisher, besides other birds, both large and small, of beautiful and variegated plumage. We did not see any alligators, although they are plentiful in the river; monkeys of all descriptions and sizes are seen.

Abbeokuta is built within and upon a number of granite hills, and is surrounded by a mud wall about twelve miles round, and varying in height from four to five feet, not particularly thick, with a small ditch outside. There are several gates.

CLASS A.

O

Some of the blocks of granite are enormous, and singularly placed. The whole country is covered with granite, which might be profitably worked for building purposes.

There is not much cultivation inside the walls, as the people depend upon their farms in the distance.

Cattle, sheep, goats, fowl, ducks, &c., are in abundance; the markets were full of them; the sheep are large, and the meat excellent; milk can be obtained very cheap, and butter is made by the European residents; a bottle well shaken for half-an-hour being used as a substitute for the churn.

The markets are very large; and, besides corn, sheep, &c., European articles are displayed by many in small quantities.

The native workmanship in leather, iron, cloths, &c., is very strong and good; and they know how to put a price upon their wares. The native cloths are very fine, and prettily worked and marked: these are worn principally by Mussulmans, who seem to take a great pride in their dress.

Horses are plentiful, and full of life and spirit; they vary in size, but the largest are not more than fourteen hands. I should think the breed might be improved by importations from Arabia.

The horsemen imitate the Eastern warriors in their movements. The bit is very powerful, and makes the horse uneasy and fretful; the trappings are handsome, and copied from the Turks. The Mussulmans have no doubt introduced these habits. There is iron in the country, which only requires capital and enterprise to work out with advantage. The wild grape is seen everywhere, and excellent cotton is produced.

Mr. Phillips, an American, a most worthy and valuable missionary, is trying a variety of plants on a small farm which he is commencing. I am certain that everything will grow in profusion.

Water is plentiful; the pasture for cattle is excellent, as the grass is not of that coarse and rank description which I observed in Dahomey.

The country round Abbeokuta is very picturesque, being a succession of hill, valley, and plain. Forests are seen in the distance, particularly towards that part where the Dahomian army was encamped.

I visited this camp, which had been skilfully selected, the advance guard being in front of the forest about five miles from the river, and the main body with the King (if he was there) on the other side, a mile distant. In the middle of the forest the town of Harra, which is of considerable size, is situated. This was destroyed by the Dahomians.

There are several streams running through this forest, which shows that the position was carefully chosen by the Dahomian Chief.

The remains of the large camp are still visible, being composed of sticks and palm leaves, with some of greater pretensions to comfort and appearance: the marks of their fires for cooking are also very distinct.

I have no reason to alter my estimate of their numbers which was formed at Abomey. The Europeans all agree on this point, and say that 10,000 must have been the maximum, exclusive of camp followers, servants, and carriers, which would probably swell the numbers to 13,000. This is also corroborated by prisoners who escaped.

Abbeokuta is said to contain 100,000 inhabitants, which may or may not be correct. No census has ever been taken, and I could not find out in what manner these numbers had been estimated.

It is merely conjecture, as is also the opinion that they can bring from 30,000 to 40,000 warriors into the field.

If this be true, then let us cry shame that they did not boldly march out and take the whole of the Dahomian army prisoners.

It is said, however, that it is not their custom to act on the offensive, but only to defend themselves, which will account for their being an agricultural rather than a warlike nation.

A great deal of the land inside the walls of Abbeokuta might be profitably cultivated, and, in the event of its being besieged, would enable the inhabitants to hold out a considerable time; but they never think of this, "sufficient for the day being the evil thereof."

The people are warm-hearted, and more anxious for peace than war, in order that they may turn their attention to trade and the cultivation of their farms.

There are Christians of all denominations excepting Roman Catholics, and they number not less than 2,000. The missionaries have churches and schools in different parts of the town, which are well attended. I examined several classes both of adults and others in Bible history, and was much pleased with their answers. They read remarkably well.

The missionaries deserve well of their country, and are entitled to our warmest thanks, praise, and sympathy for their labours and privations in this far away heathen land.

There is no doubt that human sacrifices are still offered up in Abbeokuta, but when, where, and by whom it is difficult to say. The missionaries and others do not deny this, nor can they prevent it; it is done in secrecy and without much ceremony; but that it is done is a certainty, and superstition is still in the ascendant, as we had many opportunities of observing.

Women are forbidden to be out after a certain time of night, and death is awarded to them if their curiosity is excited so far as to look at, or even speak of, those men who are selected to represent deities possessing supernatural powers, whose presence is well known by a most peculiar howl or noise, which is occasioned by a piece of wood attached to a line which they whirl rapidly over their heads, or round their bodies, producing the extraordinary sound referred to. When this is heard all the women shut themselves up, but the men may go where they like. I believe that this heathenish deity rejoices in the name of "Oro."

Quite different from Abomey, where all are warriors, I did not see a single soldier; perhaps they are all at the camp at Makun. There was no display of any kind in this way. You would imagine that there was not a soldier in this town. We passed a few country people with muskets on their farms. It seems to me that a great crisis is approaching at Abbeokuta, and that a civil war is not improbable. There are two parties whose strength is nearly equal—war and peace.

I hope these few remarks will not be uninteresting.

"Rattlesnake," Kinsembo, June 7, 1863.

I BEG to inclose a letter I have received from Commander Hoskins, of Her Majesty's ship "Zebra," senior officer on the South Coast, on the unsatisfactory state of affairs in the Congo, &c.

Commander Hoskins' knowledge of the Congo and its vicinity, as well as my own experience on this part of the coast, induces me to agree with him fully in the opinion that hostile operations, unless carried out on an extensive scale, would be perfectly useless.

If all the agents now residing at Punta de Lenha could be induced to leave that place and establish themselves at Banana, much good would be effected, and we should get rid of that troublesome plague-spot up the river.

Banana is entirely within our protection, and merchants could establish themselves there without fear of being molested, as our cruisers could anchor off the place.

I would suggest most respectfully the advantage of a steamer like the "Investigator" in the Congo River, attached to the senior officer of this division as a tender; her services would be most invaluable.

She could safely navigate the creeks of the river, punish the refractory tribes, and convey a wholesome lesson to plunderers when required.

I am sure that such a vessel, from her great speed, light draught, and powerful armament, would save the loss of much valuable property, the loss of life by exposure in open boats, be a protection against sickness and the fire of the natives, as well as carry out entirely the object of their Lordships, by opening this magnificent river to legitimate trade.

Inclosure in No. 116.

Commander Hoskins to Commodore Wilmot.

Sir,

"Zebra," River Congo, June 5, 1863.

IN answer to your letter of yesterday's date, inclosing letters from the Secretary of the Admiralty and from the Under-Secretary of State respecting the unsatisfactory state of affairs in the Congo River, and calling upon me for information on the subject, I have the honour to report to you that, having, on my first assuming charge of this Division, made inquiries into the circumstances attending the destruction of Mr. Meecham's factory, and his being carried, with other Englishmen, into the bush, I became satisfied that it was owing to an unprovoked and wanton assault, committed by Mr. Meecham on the person of one of the Native Princes of great influence, and it was on this account that the persons and properties of British agents were "singled out" for capture and destruction.

Under instructions from Commodore Edmonstone no further steps were taken in the matter.

This factory (Messrs. Tobin's) has not been re-established, and the only British one existing at Punta Lenha is that of Messrs. Hatton and Cookson, from whose agent, though my boats have been constantly in communication with him, I have received no complaints, nor intimation of his labouring under any difficulties, save such as he creates for himself amongst his European employés.

Apart from these troubles, though liable to be mixed with them by strangers, are the impediments to the navigation of the Upper River, caused by a predatory and warlike tribe called the Mossolonghas, who, when they, owing to the close of the season, cease to receive Customs for the passage of oil up and down the river, endeavour to support their receipts by capturing and ransoming, impartially, any European or European goods they can master.

With respect to the question of hostile operations in the Congo, my opinion is that there is at present no sufficient reason for having recourse to them. That, on good grounds, a prompt punishment inflicted for insult to our countrymen has a most beneficial effect along the whole coast I am entirely of opinion, and I think Commodore Edmonstone's operations at the mouth of the Congo have, without exasperating the natives, given them a high idea of our readiness to support our traders when pillaged or ill-used; but I do not think that there are just grounds for avenging the behaviour of the natives at Punta da Lenha to Mr. Meecham, nor reasonable hope that any punishment we could inflict there would be (the length of time now elapsed being considered) prompt enough or complete enough to have the desired effect.

In conclusion, I would beg to call your attention to the thriving state of the Dutch factory at Banana, to which place Mr. Elkman, the agent of Messrs. Kerdyk and Pincoffs, of Rotterdam, has withdrawn almost all his transactions in the Congo, intending shortly to close his establishment at Punta da Lenha altogether, and were the English Houses in the River to adopt a similar course, they would enjoy a constant protection from the ships of war on the station, free themselves from the contamination of a nest of slave-dealers, and from suspicions which, I regret to say, in many instances, have been attached to the English name on this coast, and, as the business of the Dutch House proves, would certainly be safer in a commercial point of view.

I have, &c.

Sir,

"Rattlesnake," Kinsembo, June 7, 1863.

A RUMOUR has reached me, which I believe to be true, that the owners of the American schooner "Mariquita," lately captured by the "Zebra" off the Congo, entered into very heavy bonds at New York, before her departure from that place, for her good behaviour, and the legality of her voyage.

I cannot find out who the parties are at New York who are liable for this vessel, but there is no doubt the American Government can easily do so if they feel inclined.

I hope you will induce their Lordships to press this point, as the payment of these bonds will produce a good example out here, and probably deter others from following the same course.

The "Mariquita" is a schooner of 153 tons.

M. l'Amiral,

Lagos, le 2 Mars, 1863.

J'AI appris avec un profond regret à mon arrivée à Whydah que votre Excellence, après avoir inutilement tenté de rencontrer M. le Commodore Wilmot, s'était décidée à faire voile pour le Nord. Il m'eût été bien agréable, M. l'Amiral, de saisir cette nouvelle occasion de vous présenter mes devoirs, et de vous remercier de l'accueil si obligeant que j'ai reçu de vous à Fernando Po.

J'aurais, en outre, vivement désiré pouvoir conférer, sous vos auspices, avec M. le Commodore Wilmot au sujet de quelques plaintes qui me sont parvenues sur des faites de visites dont quelques bâtiments Français ont été l'objet de la part des navires de la croisière Anglaise. Il me paraît que tous ne comprennent pas de même que nous les instructions concertées en 1859, entre nos Gouvernements, pour remplacer les stipulations du Traité de 1845, qui a pris fin au terme de dix années fixées pour sa durée. De là, des actes qui se ressentent quelquefois du régime antérieur admis pour le droit de visite, actes contre lesquels nous devons réclamer et protester, et dont la répétition pourrait avoir pour effet d'amener de regrettables conflits, et d'altérer (ce dont Dieu nous préserve et le monde entier) les bonnes relations si heureusement maintenues entre la France et l'Angleterre.

Vos vœux et vos désirs à cet égard, M. l'Amiral, ne sont certainement pas autres que les miens; et je suis convaincu que votre esprit, si plein d'élévation et de droiture, comprendra combien il importe que l'on n'aille pas au delà des concessions consenties en 1859 pour assurer la légitimité du pavillon, et que les garanties dont cette vérification a été entourée soient scrupuleusement respectées.

Les circonstances m'ayant enlevé l'occasion que je recherchais de traiter toutes ces questions, dont l'importance ne saurait vous échapper, avec votre Excellence et avec M. le Commodore Wilmot, j'ai l'honneur de vous envoyer copie de la lettre que j'adresse à ce sujet au Commodore, en vous priant, M. l'Amiral, de vouloir bien me faire connaître votre opinion sur les points qui y sont traités.

Je me crois d'ailleurs fondé à espérer que de même que sous le commandement de M. le Commodore Edmonstone il y aura une entente commune sur ces matières délicates, et que les difficultés de détail qu'elles pourraient soulever seront toujours résolues d'un commun accord, et dans un esprit de franche et loyale équité qui nous permettra de prévenir tout conflit.

Je prie, &c.

Côtes Occidentales d'Afrique, &c.

Inclosure 3 in No. 118.

Rear-Admiral Sir B. Walker to Commodore Didelot.

M. le Commodore,

"Narcissus," Simon's Bay, June 2, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's communication, dated from Lagos the 2nd of March last, inclosing the copy of a letter you had addressed to Commodore Wilmot in consequence of not meeting that officer as you had expected in the Bights of Benin, and upon the subject of which you request my opinion.

Permit me to express my regret that circumstances did not enable us to meet Commodore Wilmot at Lagos as we had anticipated on our parting at Fernando Po; a few words of conversation upon such an occasion would have enabled us fully to exchange our views of the stipulations of 1859 agreed to by our respective Governments. I, however, felt so assured, from our agreeable interview at Fernando Po, that your Excellency and myself were acting together in the same friendly spirit for the abolition of slavery, that I took care to impress Commodore Wilmot with those sentiments when I afterwards met him at Sierra Leone.

The instructions with which the Commodore and all the Commanders of the cruisers under my command are furnished under the Convention of 1859, mutually framed by our respective Governments, and to which they are ordered strictly to adhere, are so clear and distinct that there ought not to be any difference of opinion as to their interpretation.

It is admitted that national flags are fraudulently hoisted; and it is well known that slave-dealers will use the flag by which they think they can best carry on their abominable traffic. Until recently the American colours were exhibited to cover their nefarious business; but the Government of that country having abolished slavery, and entered into a Treaty with Great Britain for its suppression, they are now but seldom hoisted. I am sorry to say that instances have been represented to me of slave-vessels showing French colours having no right to them, and it is asserted that a Spanish steamer not long ago carried off 1,100 slaves under the French flag, and at no great distance from a French ship of war, which probably may not have sighted her.

I am also informed that some French vessels have made their movements such as to draw suspicion upon their true character, and diverted our cruisers by long chases and other harassing proceedings, but such cases have not been made the subject of complaint.

Under all these circumstances it can hardly be a matter of surprise that British officers, in the zealous discharge of duties, rendered difficult and delicate through the trickery of lawless slave-dealers, should occasionally be deceived in supposing that a vessel has fraudulently hoisted French colours, particularly in localities where Slave Trade is known to exceed every other. These cases are, however, very rare; and if the long established and universally exercised international right to ascertain whether a suspected vessel is or is not entitled by her papers to the flag which she hoists were to be put an end to, every slave-dealer and other pirate in the world would use the French or any other flag to cover his nefarious pursuits with impunity. No right beyond the proof of nationality is claimed by the British Government, and no offence to the French flag can be alleged, because the right which the English Government exercises is general and reciprocal, and it can never object to its being exercised towards British ships under circumstances which warrant suspicion.

With regard to the schooner "Lagos" being visited by Her Majesty's ship "Torch" in the River Congo, I beg to inform your Excellency that this vessel came under my own observation; and when I anchored in the River Congo on the 14th of January last I was so much struck with her suspicious appearance and movements that I caused an officer to be sent to verify her nationality, and it was with much difficulty that I could believe her papers to be genuine, as she appeared to me to be an American vessel, and my suspicions were the more excited when the officer represented to me that the mate or acting captain of her voluntarily stated that she had 50 slaves on board, and intended to ship more.

Our warm and cordial meeting at Fernando Po leads me to hope that you will hardly need re-assurance of my hearty desire to maintain unimpaired the good and friendly feeling existing between us and the officers under our respective commands, and I should be deeply grieved that any trifling excess of zeal in verifying the nationality of a suspected vessel on either side should be deemed to be an insult to the freedom and independence of our respective flags. You may be certain that every reparation would be made for an occasional mistake which might happen under the most guarded circumstances.

I have, &c.

I HAVE heard that Major Burton, our Consul at Fernando Po, has been appointed by the Government to proceed on a Mission to the King of Dahomey. You may be assured he will receive every assistance from me, and I hope to land him at Whydah with due honours, according to the importance of his Mission.

"Espoir," at Sea, Lat. 7° 34', Long. 12° 30' E., August 12, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to report that this day at noon in latitude 7° 34' south, and about twenty miles from the land, I boarded and detained a brig of about 200 tons for being engaged in the Slave Trade.

This vessel, supposed to be the "Haydee," had on board at the time of her capture a cargo of about 550 slaves, and a crew of 16 Europeans.

She had shipped the previous evening in the vicinity of Massera, and had only been a few hours on the coast.

The slaves being very much crowded, the slave deck only 3 feet 7 inches high, 17 feet wide, by 37 feet in length, I deemed it advisable to remove 111 of the slaves to Her Majesty's ship under my command.

"Rattlesnake," Lagos, September 2, 1863.

I ANCHORED at Whydah on the 26th August, and found the "Antelope" there, besides several merchant-vessels.

The "Jaseur" joined in the evening; I communicated with the shore, and received several very friendly messages from the Yervogar and Chiefs, who had long been expecting my arrival. Inclosed is the copy of a letter I sent to the King of Dahomey on this occasion.

As Captain Burton is about to proceed on a Government mission to the King of Dahomey, I have placed the "Antelope" at his disposal. Lieutenant Allingham is to be at Fernando Po on the 1st October, to attend upon that gentleman until his mission is over.

I think I may report that the policy and proceedings of his Excellency the Acting Lieutenant-Governor of Lagos are likely to bring about shortly a more satisfactory state of things.

Inclosed is the copy of a letter I have addressed to the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta.

As it is of importance that the Niger should be visited this year, with a view of communicating with Dr. Baikie, I have determined to send the "Investigator" on this service.

The expedition will be deprived of the valuable services of the late Lieutenant Dolben, which I cannot sufficiently regret; but I place the greatest confidence in the zeal and energy of Lieutenant Gambier, who has received ample instructions from me on the subject, copies of which are inclosed.

I shall start to-morrow the 3rd instant, in company with the "Investigator," and a large boat I have hired for carrying coals to the mouth of the Niger, and having filled her fully up with coals, &c., Lieutenant Gambier will enter the river, and I shall leave for St. Thomas' and the Congo; from there I shall go to St. Paul de Loando, Little Fish Bay, St. Helena and Ascension, returning to Cape Coast Castle about the middle of November.

Inclosure 1 in No. 121.

Commodore Wilmot to the King of Dahomey.

Your Majesty,

"Rattlesnake," off Whydah, August 25, 1863.

I HAVE arrived again off your Majesty's seaport of Whydah, and hope that you are quite well and in the enjoyment of good health.

I send your Majesty my best wishes and my most friendly compliments.

I was sorry to hear that your Majesty had, after all I said to you on the subject, encamped before Abbeokuta, and shown yourself unfriendly to the friends of England.

A special messenger has been appointed by Her Majesty the Queen of England to come again to your Court, and see you upon the great question of the Slave Trade, and human sacrifices.

I am sure your Majesty will receive him well, as becomes the King of an African country on friendly terms with England, and as a messenger from so great and good a Queen ought to be received. Major Burton, who has already been to your capital, is the messenger selected, and he will be here very shortly to see you.

I entreat your Majesty, for your own sake as well as for the interests of your people and country, to seriously consider what the Commissioner will say to you, should you refuse to listen to the voice of reason and humanity.

With many prayers that your Majesty and Council will be guided in your decision by the future safety and interests of your country, I beg, &c.

Inclosure 2 in No. 121.

Commodore Wilmot to the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta.

(No date.)

I HAVE arrived again at Lagos, and hope that the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta are quite well.

Receive my kindest compliments and best wishes for yourself and country.

I hope you have well considered what was said to you when I had the pleasure and satisfaction of meeting you in public last, and that since then the real happiness and welfare of your people has been uppermost in your thoughts.

As I promised you in the presence of all your people, I have placed before the Government of England all that has transpired between you and the late Governor of Lagos, and I feel certain that justice will be done to all parties.

But I pray you to lay aside at once and for ever all pride and selfishness, and firmly believing in the reality of England's friendship for Abbeokuta, if Abbeokuta will pursue a right course of honesty and fair dealing, use your best endeavours to bring the question at issue to an amicable settlement, by doing which you will show yourself worthy of your high position, promote the happiness and prosperity of those intrusted to your charge, as well as open out the resources of your country.

I remain, &c.

Instructions issued to Lieutenant Gambier, Lieutenant in Command of Her Majesty's ship "Investigator," about to proceed on the Niger Expedition.

THE principal object of this expedition is to communicate with Dr. Baikie, or obtain intelligence of his movements.

Every exertion must be made to effect this, and all ulterior objects must give way to succeed in accomplishing this anxious desire of Her Majesty's Government.

I place the most implicit reliance in your prudence and judgment, and feel certain that you will endeavour to carry out the main object of the expedition; you have my authority also to make this visit of the "Investigator" one of peculiar interest and permanent usefulness.

Everything has been provided by me for the success of the expedition, as well as for the health and comfort of the officers and crew.

You will enter the river as soon as you are in all respects ready, and leave it again when your own experience of the rise and fall of the water, as well as of the seasons on this particular part of the country, points out to you the necessity of again crossing the sea-bar.

When in all respects ready for entering the river, you can do so, taking the accompanying boat, full of coals, in tow.

I send you one Lieutenant, one Assistant Surgeon, one midshipman, two shipwrights, and six seamen to assist you in your arduous duties, and in navigating the "Investigator" up the river.

(Signed) A. P. EARDLEY WILMOT.

When the "Investigator" recrosses the bar after the expedition is over, you have my permission to keep to sea, and cruize in the Bights for the benefit of the health of the crew, as the season will then be so fine, should it be desirable to do so, or even proceed to Ascension if necessary.

A. P. E. W.

"Rattlesnake," off the Niger, September 7, 1863.

I HAVE great pleasure in informing you that Her Majesty's "Investigator" passed safely inside the bar of the Niger River this forenoon, and is at present at anchor within.

2. I went myself in her to the entrance of the bar, and every one on board is full of health, energy, and spirits, at the prospect of being useful to Her Majesty's Government.

No. 123.

Extract from the Journal of Commander Wildman, of Her Majesty's ship "Philomel."

FROM the 15th to 25th October, 1862, I was laid up with fever at Government House, Sierra Leone. My coxswain, the only white man in the Gallinas River with me, having been taken with fever the day after, he died on the 23rd, on board the "Isis."

The above is, I think, a convincing proof of the unhealthiness of rivers and boat-work in them.

Remarks on the North Division.

The rainy season begins at Sierra Leone on the Queen's birthday, and continues until October, during which time the weather is most vile in every way.

When the rains are beginning to "take off," as they call it at Sierra Leone, is undoubtedly the most unhealthy time to do anything up any rivers and to be near the coast generally. The rivers begin to lower a little, having brought a large quantity of vegetable matter during the rains; the whole soil is saturated with water, the vegetation thick, and the sun very powerful. In consequence of the above, noxious vapours arise from the ground, and from the decaying vegetable matter brought down by the rivers and now left exposed.

Remarks on Trade.

Legal Trade.—This is now very large, both from and in the Colony of Sierra Leone, and to the north and south of it, and up the various rivers. There is a large trade in every river between the Gambia and Sierra Leone, the exports being wax, ground-nuts, palm oil and palm-nuts, a little gold, and in time there will, I think, be cotton in small quantities.

To the southward of Sierra Leone there is a large and rapidly increasing trade, in the Sherbro and Boom Kittam Rivers, and produce enough in the Gallinas River, viz., palm oil, palm-nuts, cotton, beeswax, &c., to supply many factories, and a great demand for English goods. There is at present only one factory, namely, that belonging to Messrs. Isaac Campbell and Co.

The trade in rivers north of Sierra Leone is carried on in small coasting schooners and cutters, and in vessels under French colours. Salt is taken up the rivers in French vessels, who take home ground-nuts. The salt comes from England, the ground-nuts go to France. The French Navigation Laws cause the employment of French vessels. By far the largest importer and exporter, I should think, was Mr. Heddle, of Sierra Leone.

The trade south of Sierra Leone, as far as Cape Mount, is carried on by means of coasters and some larger vessels belonging to Messrs. Isaac Campbell and Co., under English colours. Some of these vessels do not go away from the coast at all, but collect the produce from the different factories, and keep them supplied with English trade goods, &c.

There is very little trade with Liberia, considering the great extent of coast they have, and whenever they are allowed to obtain coast line or harbours there the trade will be lost to England, the customs laws, &c., being framed so as to place obstacles in the way of white men trading; and in the Republic no white man is allowed to establish himself as a merchant and buy the produce direct, but it must be done through a black or coloured citizen. In Liberia they are (though selfish and narrow-minded in their views) enterprising, and on the plantations grow sugar and coffee, both which they export to the United States. They have lately tried cotton, but find that the Sea Island (seeds of which were sent from England) does not answer, on account of the pods bursting in the middle of the rains, when it is planted at the beginning. They intend to try planting at another time, and if it does not answer, giving up the Sea Island, confining themselves to the plant indigenous to the country.

Ground Nuts.—The vessels arrive in the rivers for ground nuts, during January, in large numbers, the new nut coming in then.

Remarks on the Slave Trade.

It is said to be still carried on to a small extent in the rivers to the north of Sierra Leone, viz., Pongas, Dubreeka, &c. One shipment is said to have taken place last March or April, in a small vessel, but I do not think the report of much value. Governor D'Arcy informs me that he has received reports to the effect that cargoes are taken from Bissao and Cacheo to the Cape de Verde Islands; I have not been able to obtain any certain information, but have informed the Governor-General of the Cape de Verdes of the reported intention.

The prices of slaves on the coast varies from 30 dollars to 40 dollars.

There is a trade in domestic slaves between the Sherbro and the north, which could only be effectually checked by the boats cruising between Cape Sierra Leone and the Bananas; I think even that would do little towards stopping the trade, and the boat-cruising would undoubtedly be bad in every way for the cruisers, both in the health of the men and discipline of the ships. Information is often given to the Governor of Sierra Leone of the intended shipment of domestic or other slaves in the Sherbro, in which case he sends the Harbour Master, who generally succeeds in detaining the native boat in which these slaves are carried.

There is no other Slave Trade on this division, to the southward of Sierra Leone, at present. At the Gallinas Prince Manna will take the money and goods for slaves from the Spaniards who come for them, but immediately sends information to Sierra Leone instead of giving the slaves.

There are large numbers of slaves in his territory and that of the neighbouring Chiefs, but he keeps the Treaty unbroken.

I am very much inclined to doubt there being now any regular foreign Slave Trade on this division, there is so large a legal trade in all the rivers, and the slaves are so valuable in the country from the present large cultivation of the ground-nut.

If there is any foreign Slave Trade now on this division, which I do not think there is, it is a chance shipment during the rainy season, at which time the negroes on the ground-nut farms are idle. The large ground-nut, palm-oil, and other legal trade, has, with the increased value of the negro for house slavery, quite, I think, stopped the foreign.

There is undoubtedly a large trade in slaves for the ground-nut farms between the Sherbro, Sierra Leone River, and those further north, and I have no doubt that as labour becomes dearer, in consequence of more land being cultivated, the trade will largely increase. Even if possible, it would be a very doubtful good for the country (Africa) to stop this trade or rather supply of slaves, from a part where the people either cannot or will not grow anything, to a part where the legal trade is now so great and increasing every year.

Commodore Wilmot to Rear-Admiral Sir B. Walker.

Sir,

"Rattlesnake," at Loanda, October 3, 1863.

I TAKE advantage of the Portuguese steamer which leaves this place to-morrow for Lisbon, to report my arrival here on the 26th September last from the Congo, where I inspected the "Zebra," and met the "Griffon," "Mullet," and "Lee," all of which vessels have since proceeded to their cruising-grounds.

2. I visited Banana and Punta da Lenha in the "Lee." There are no vessels of any kind in the Congo, and the slave-dealers are beginning to be much alarmed in consequence.

3. You will receive my letters from St. Helena, by the regular mail in which I have given all the information relative to these two places.

4. I leave here on the 6th for Little Fish Bay, St. Helena, and Ascension, and shall return to Cape Coast Castle from the latter place.

5. The war that has been carried on for the last eighteen months between the Portuguese Government and some of the native tribes in the interior has been brought to a pacific conclusion.

From what I hear of this war I believe that the Governor-General was about to make overtures to these tribes, not being satisfied with the proceedings, when the Chiefs of these tribes offered to give in themselves.

"Rattlesnake," St. Paul de Loanda, October 3, 1863.

WHEN off the Congo, at the latter end of September last, I took advantage of the presence of my tender, the "Lee," to visit Banana and Punta da Lenha, both of which were accomplished the same day. I started from Shark's Point at 5 A.M. and returned again 8 P.M., which clearly proves that vessels of this class may safely and expeditiously traverse a portion at least of this important river.

I inclose a list of factories from Banana Point to Boma, which is some twenty-five miles beyond Punta da Lenha; Commander Perry of the "Griffon" has taken a great deal of trouble in collecting these, and his exertions on this and upon all other occasions deserve my best thanks.

I visited the Dutch factory at Banana, and was very warmly received by Mr. Elkman, who is in charge.

This gentleman carries on a good business in palm oil and other productions of the country, and one of his vessels, a barque of 250 tons, was loading off the factory.

He sends away about 800 tons of palm oil annually to Rotterdam.

A supply of coals and provisions on this spot would be most convenient; a gun-boat of the largest class can safely ride off the factory, the distance only of a few yards.

It is very healthy, as the sea-breeze blows over the Point and drives away every unpleasant odour.

There are no vessels of any kind in the Congo at present, excepting the Dutch barque mentioned before belonging to Mr. Elkman, and the slave-houses at Punta da Lenha are at their wits' end in consequence. They will be obliged to close their houses and depart if this continues, and are even now reduced to buy palm oil, &c., merely to keep up their supply of provisions.

I counted fifteen factories at Punta da Lenha; the only English house belongs to Messrs. Hatton and Cookson, whose agent is Mr. Peter McCulloch, at present at Kinsembo. Legitimate trade is very scanty.

This place is admirably situated for slave-trading purposes, the water being so deep that the vessels ship alongside the banks, upon which large piles of wood are driven.

Every house has its back yard of large dimensions, with small gardens attached, in which cabbages, lettuce, onions, and turnips, are grown in large quantities, and in quality excellent. In one garden belonging to a Portuguese, the fencing was formed of tomatoes, which grew in such abundance that large quantities are given away, and drop off from being rotten. They were of enormous size, some weighing half-a-pound each, and of excellent flavour.

It is easy to observe here those who have been long resident in the country as slave-dealers, from their comfort, gardens, and general aspect of good order and consideration.

In my letter to you of the 7th June of this year I remarked that "if all the agents now residing at Punta da Lenha could be induced to leave that place, and establish themselves at Banana, much good would be effected, and we should get rid of that troublesome plague-spot up the river." Again, Banana is entirely under our protection, and merchants could establish themselves there without fear of being molested, as our cruisers could anchor off the place.

As I have since visited both these places myself, I will qualify the first of the above remarks by observing that there is only one agent residing at Punta da Lenha who carries on legitimate trade, all the rest being slave-dealers; and that I have no reason to alter my opinion of Banana as expressed in the second paragraph, but will add that there is scarcely room at the place for more than three houses to carry on legitimate trade at the same time.

The whole of the above houses, with the exception of the English and Dutch (the French house being closed), are engaged in the Slave Trade, which is at the present almost at a stand-still, owing to the great difficulty found in procuring ships.

Several of the houses are insolvent, and if the present dearth of ships continues will certainly be closed.

The little trade done in oil by the Portuguese houses is simply to enable them to pay their way and purchase provisions.

No. 126.

Commodore Wilmot to Rear-Admiral Sir B. Walker.

Sir,

"Rattlesnake," December 9, 1863.

THE following few remarks connected with the successful return of the "Investigator" from the Niger, in the month of November last, will perhaps afford some interest and information to their Lordships.

It seems that Lieutenant Gambier ascended in the steamer as far as Egga, about 360 miles from the entrance of the river; from thence he advanced a further distance of five miles in his boats, and entered a small river up which he went fifty miles to a village called Wunagi, seven miles from Beda, the capital of King Massaba.

Dr. Baikie accompanied him. At Wunagi they were met by King Massaba's messengers, who informed them that horses would be sent down for their conveyance to his town.

The name of this river is not yet given in any chart, neither has it been surveyed. It will be well to call it by some name connected with this year's expedition. It is about 300 yards across in the broadest part, and from thirty to forty in its narrowest part, depth unknown, but Lieutenant Gambier thinks its average quite two fathoms.

The banks are thick with mangrove and a few trees, but the country is well cultivated, yielding Indian corn and yams. There is also the butter tree, which is about ten feet high, and produces what is called "shea butter," which is used by the natives for food and for greasing their bodies. The leaf of this tree is larger than a laurel leaf, but of the same shape.

There is plenty of cotton, red and white, and large quantities might be grown.

At every village cotton was brought down for sale.

The country seems well populated with much of the same description of people as in other parts of Africa. All were very friendly and anxious for trade.

The soil appears to be most fertile, cotton, Indian and Guinea corn, cassada, the date palm, yams, &c., growing in great abundance. The yams are superior to those in most places on the coast, and the climate from all accounts is very healthy, a fresh breeze blowing up from the sea.

Dr. Baikie came on board at Lukoja, his own place, about 220 miles up, and was greatly rejoiced to see the "Investigator," as his supplies were exhausted, and he had given up all hopes of being relieved this year.

The missionaries were all landed at those places where they had missions embarking again when the "Investigator" returned. All the goods, &c., belonging to those gentlemen were likewise conveyed by Lieutenant Gambier up the river.

There are partridges and guinea fowl, also elephants and buffaloes, in the neighbourhood.

From the entrance of the Niger to Egga, a distance of 360 miles, the average depth in the rainy season is between four and five fathoms, excepting in one part of the ship channel, which was only 10 feet; this of course makes it impossible for vessels drawing more water to proceed further than this shallow part, which is about 200 miles up.

There is another passage the other side of the island, near which this ten feet is, which has not yet been surveyed, and Lieutenant Gambier thinks it highly probable that a deeper channel may be found there.

My opinion, formed upon the information I have been able to obtain, is, that it would well repay one company to take the trade of the Niger into its own hands, encouraged and assisted by a yearly subsidy from the Government, until the trade is regularly and permanently established and certain profits arise.

After this it will be, of course, for Her Majesty's Government to rescind the charter and do away with the monopoly, as they think proper.

It appears that this single ten-foot channel, mentioned above, is the only obstacle, excepting the river bar, to vessels of large draught of water navigating the river, after passing the bar and taking in their cargoes, 300 miles up.

This is a very serious obstacle, but it can be overcome by steamers of light draught towing up large cargo boats or hulks of a considerable size.

The bar is another drawback to vessels drawing much water; there is only twelve feet on it in the rainy season.

A company must therefore be prepared to enter upon their work with two powerful paddle-wheel steamers, drawing when loaded nine feet of water, which is only one foot less than the depth of the channel in its shallowest part, with a good supply of cargo boats or other conveyances as they may deem expedient for river work.

The ship to receive the cargo must be at anchor outside the bar.

These steamers should be armed with one heavy and one light gun, also a proportion of small-arms, rockets, &c., in case of necessity. They should be very fast, well ventilated, and carry at least 100 tons of coal.

A depôt of coal must be in the river at the best selected place, and wood can be obtained very cheap.

I should say that steamers with two rudders would be the best, which will prevent the necessity of turning.

At first some little difficulty will doubtless arise, which must be expected, but the enterprise of British merchants, backed up by the energy and skill of British seamen will conquer every obstacle, and establish a trade in the Niger, that will fully satisfy in a few years every one that is really interested in the happiness and prosperity of Africa.

I have, &c.

Sir, "Gorgon," at the Seychelles, December 17, 1862.
I HAVE the honour to report the capture and destruction of a slave dhow, in latitude 40° 46' south, on the 10th November, by a division of boats of this ship, in charge of Lieutenant Keppel, under the circumstances detailed in Inclosure No. 1 (extract from that officer's proceedings), and to acquaint you that, having reported the case to Mr. Witt, Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Zanzibar, for the information of His Highness the Sultan, I received a letter of which Inclosure No. 2 is a copy.

Lieutenant Keppel to Commander Wilson.

November 28, 1862.

(Extract.) AT 1 P.M. of the 10th November I chased dhow No. 24, which, on perceiving us, made towards a small creek, and regardless of several blank cartridges, and shot fired to bring her to, continued to make away for three hours, when, on our boats approaching her, she was run on shore and abandoned, and from 70 to 80 slaves were seen to leave her.

Finding her a northern dhow totally deserted, without colours or papers, and unmistakably equipped for the Slave Trade, and being fast on shore, I destroyed her by fire, after taking her measurement.

Sir, I HAVE the honour to state, in answer to your letter of yesterday's date, that His Highness the Sultan approves of the capture and destroying of a dhow, off Wasseen, by a division of your boats, on the 10th November, she having no papers or flag, having landed her slaves, and the crew abandoned the dhow as your boats came up.

No. 128.

Rear-Admiral Sir B. Walker to the Secretary to the Admiralty.

Sir, "Narcissus," Walwich Bay, December 23, 1862.
IN obedience to the directions contained in your letter dated the 31st October last, to report more fully, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, the cases of vessels escaping from the East Coast of Africa, with full cargoes of slaves, I beg to inclose extracts from letters I have received from Commander Wilson, of the "Gorgon," and Captain Oldfield, late of the "Ariel," on this subject, and, in corroboration of those officers' statements, I have to acquaint you, that on my recent visit to Zanzibar and Mozambique, these reports of shipments of slaves were confirmed by intelligent Arabs, and at the latter place by a Portuguese gentleman.

2. Two of the shipments are reported to have taken place in European vessels at Keelwa, in March and in May, one of which was under American colours, and the other under Spanish—the latter described as a black barque, which Lieutenant-Colonel Pelly informed me had anchored for several days at the north end of Zanzibar, in the early part of the month of May.

3. The embarkations at Inhambane were confirmed by the Portuguese gentleman above referred to, and I have no reason to disbelieve the reports; but as it is not the interest of a slave-trading people to give particulars of their nefarious business, I am unable to say how many slaves were thus carried off.

I have no doubt that some other vessels, of which we have not heard, have got away, as occasionally we have had no cruisers stationed at the places mentioned. I had also information when at Zanzibar of an American slaver being in one of the ports of Madagascar waiting for a certain time to appear again on the East Coast of Africa for her human freight, probably to be taken in at Keelwa.

4. My reasons for asking for gun-vessels or gun-boats for service at Zanzibar are, first, that an extensive Slave Trade has recently sprung up in that quarter, of which I do not think their Lordships are fully aware. I am informed that in consequence of the prohibition of the exportation of slaves from Tunis and Tripoli, the Arab dealers have transferred their abominable Traffic to the East Coast of Africa, and supply their former slave-markets by the Red Sea and Persian Gulf, through which many thousands of Africans are annually transported, as represented by Lieutenant-Colonel Rigby, Her Majesty's Consul at Zanzibar, of which I received confirmation when at the last-named place (Zanzibar).

5. In the next place, from the prevalence of fresh winds and strong currents in that locality in the slave-trading season, it is not a suitable or safe coast on which to employ boats. There is no good shelter for them, and the maritime natives, being in league with the slave-dealers, are hostile to our people; moreover, the Arab dhows are fleet, and in some instances offer opposition, to the sacrifice of human life.

6. From my own observation, I am convinced that, unless some strong measures are taken to put down this Traffic, it will entirely nullify the advantages of legal trade, and arrest the progress of civilization and Christianity in Eastern Africa. Dr. Livingstone also bears testimony to the thousands of human beings who are taken from the shores of Lake Nyassa, and across that lake, to supply the demands of the slave-dealers on the coast.

"Gorgon," December 31, 1861.

Ibo is still supposed to be the great resort of Spanish slavers, but though no doubt it is carried on there to a large extent, yet it is so well known and watched that I think the bulk of those vessels (Spanish) now ship their slaves from the coast of Madagascar.

I am informed by Colonel Rigby that he had certain information of two of these vessels shipping their cargoes there last year, a vessel called the "Caridad" acting as decoy.

Probably the slaves were taken in dhows from Ibo to the port settled on. I have since heard from different sources that the above is the case.

When the boats from the ship under my command were last at Ibo they landed the interpreter, who reported that upwards of 1,000 slaves were collected for export, and that a large proportion were in the fort chained by the necks in gangs.

From Delgado to Quiloa (including the ports of Mongulho, Lindy, Kiswara, and others) the Slave Trade flourishes; thousands are taken north and south yearly in the country crafts, &c. Several large vessels have lately shipped their slaves from these ports, especially from Mongulho.

N.B.—I have just heard that a Spanish ship took a cargo of slaves from Mongulho about the 15th of November last.

"Ariel," February 11, 1862.

Ibo.—ONE European vessel has obtained a cargo of slaves from this vicinity in the early part of this half-year; another attempted, but failed.

His Excellency the present Governor gives one every reason to believe that he is averse to the Slave Trade, and makes the best use of the boats, &c., at his command to prevent slavers, Europeans or native, shipping or obtaining their cargoes in his Government.

Slaves have been both plentiful and cheap in this district during the period of this Report; by that it may be inferred that the export has not been very brisk, and that in taking evidence for the number of European slavers off and about this district during the twelve months as three, I am not very far wrong.

From this district it may be estimated that without doubt some 1,200 to 1,500 slaves have been exported in European slave-vessels.

Zanzibar.—One European slaver (and I believe the one made mention of as having failed in her object at Ibo) succeeded in running a cargo from Mongulho or its vicinity in the month of November, slaves being both plentiful and cheap both at Quiloa and the vicinity of Ibo at the time; it is as likely she obtained her cargo from one locality as the other, or from both.

European Slave Trade.—ONE Spaniard has been heard of between Ibo and Zanzibar in the months of January, February, and March (early part).

Two vessels succeeded in running cargoes from Inhambane, latitude 23° 51' south, or its neighbourhood last year. It is to be regretted that the station south of Sofala is not, and has not been, worked, in consequence of the paucity of cruisers.

The cruiser so ordered should be a vessel whose sailing and steaming qualities would command success in chase.

European Vessels.—ONE I have heard of seeking for a cargo in the vicinity of Quiloa in the end of February and March (early part), and subsequently heard of in the vicinity of Pemba in the middle of March.

Two other vessels have been reported to me as having run cargoes from the country lying between Inhambane and Delagoa Bay—I believe the former—and one other from Delagoa.

SUBMITTED for the information of their Lordships, observing that this is one of many cases of Arab dhows carrying French colours, under the cloak of which slaves are transported to the Colonies of Mayotte and Nos Beh. "Ariel," Zanzibar, March 6, 1863.

ADVERTING to my letter of the 26th ultimo, I have the honour to inclose a copy of a letter I have addressed to Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Zanzibar with reference to a dhow under French colours which was boarded by Her Majesty's ship I command, on the 26th ultimo, off Comoro under very suspicious circumstances.

You will perceive that the movements of this dhow were most suspicious; she had no cargo whatever, and there were twenty-eight passengers on board, if you can call them so, considering they were mostly children, and did not know their names and destination.

This is a second case of a like nature in which I have seen the French flag abused, and I consider it my duty to bring the matter before your notice, trusting that my proceedings will meet with your approval.

I have no hesitation in saying that I think this dhow was about to ship slaves at Comoro for Mohilla; she had met the dhow I detained and destroyed at Quiloa, and had sailed in company with her: moreover, the captain of the vessel I captured desired to be put on board of her, together with his crew, with which request I complied. I have also learnt that the owner of this vessel has an agreement to ship a certain number of slaves annually for Mohilla and the north-west coast of Madagascar, from thence to be conveyed quietly to Nos Beh and Mayotte.

Inclosure 2 in No. 129.

Commander Chapman to Her Majesty's Acting Consul, Zanzibar.

Sir, "Ariel," Zanzibar, March 6, 1863.
 I HAVE the honour to inform you that, on the 26th ultimo, when off Comoro in Her Majesty's ship under my command, I boarded a dhow, under French colours, bound from Zanzibar to Mayotte, having a pass signed by the Acting French Consul at Zanzibar.

This vessel was named the "Fataon Salama," of 33 tons, belonging to Mogue Gomé, Monosa Montimou captain, and left Zanzibar on the 14th February for Mayotte, to touch at Comoro on her way, having a passport for fourteen crew and twenty-eight passengers.

This dhow was visited and the passengers mustered, and it was discovered that she left Zanzibar with no passengers whatever, although her papers distinctly said she had twenty-eight passengers from Zanzibar to Mayotte. The passengers found on board were brought on board at Quiloa, and appeared to be slaves and not passengers. They were mostly children, and did not know their names as described on the passenger list; they were also ignorant of their destination.

She was sailing in company with a dhow having neither papers nor colours, owned and manned by Sooree Arabs, having a slave-deck and 4 slaves on board, which had also visited Quiloa, but had heard that a man-of-war was in the vicinity, and had therefore run for Marony, where she was to ship some 100 to 150 slaves which had been, a few weeks previously, landed from a dhow seized by the cutter of this ship.

The captains of these two dhows seemed thoroughly to understand each other, and it is my firm impression that this vessel under French colours was about to ship slaves at Comoro.

I have represented the whole case to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, informing them that this is certainly not the first case I have seen of the French flag fraudulently assumed, although the papers furnished from Zanzibar were correct; as I am confident His Imperial French Majesty the Emperor is not aware of these most suspicious proceedings.

 REFERRING to your letter of 7th October, 1862, relative to the Sultan of Zanzibar fulfilling the Treaties with the British Government for the suppression of Slave Trade, I have the honour to submit for the information of their Lordships a letter I have received from Captain Gardner of the "Orestes," whom I ordered to confer with Her Majesty's Consul at that place on the subject, and I am glad to learn that the Sultan is now doing his best to carry out the Treaties with good faith.

 UPON arriving at this port, I communicated at once with Captain Playfair on the subject of your instructions to confer with Her Majesty's Consul as to the best mode of carrying out the views of Her Majesty's Government for compelling the Sultan to observe the Treaties for the suppression of Slave Trade.

I inclose a copy of Captain Playfair's letter to me, from which you will see that the Political Agent does not consider it necessary at the present time to make any further representations to the Sultan, whom he has every reason to think is doing his best to carry out the Treaty in good faith.

(Extract.)

Zanzibar, July 24, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 20th June, received on 22nd instant.

I do not entertain the belief that the Slave Trade has been carried on with greater activity than formerly, though I must say that it does not appear to have sustained any very decided check; nevertheless, the Sultan has during the past season manifested the utmost anxiety to fulfil his Treaty obligations. He has resisted the Northern Arabs in a most determined manner and by force of arms, and he has confiscated nearly 300 slaves which they had purchased or kidnapped for exportation.

He has further promised me that he will use even greater exertions during the coming season, and he has agreed to prohibit entirely the transport of slaves, even from port to port, in his own dominions during the season when they can be exported to Arabia.

CLASS A.

Q

It appears to me that these engagements, if carried out in good faith, are all that can reasonably be demanded of him; and I hope that you will agree with me in thinking that it will be unnecessary to make any further representations till we are assured that he has failed in his promises—the rather that the entire question of the Slave Trade is now under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, to whom it has been or will immediately be submitted by the Government of Bombay.

No. 131.

Rear-Admiral Sir B. Walker to the Secretary to the Admiralty.

Sir,

"Narcissus," Simon's Bay, November 19, 1863.

IN transmitting the Report on the Slave Trade for the information of their Lordships I beg to observe that I consider the best and only means to stop the extensive Slave Trade carried on by the Northern Arabs from the Zanzibar Coast will be to keep three or four gun-vessels of 80-horse power, or of the new class 60-horse power, stationed there continuously for two or three years. The Sultan, finding such vessels constantly in that locality ready to support him, would carry out his laws against these marauders with greater vigour, and their nefarious trade would very shortly cease.

9. The officers of the gun-vessels would acquire greater experience of the Arab character than can be obtained by those of a casual cruiser: such arrangement would tend to further the development of lawful trade and help to civilize that remote part of the world.

3. A slight modification of the squadron would meet this plan without increase of expense.

I BEG you will acquaint their Lordships that Commander Grant, of Her Majesty's ship "Steady," has, in a letter dated Havana, 11th December last, furnished me with the following information respecting the Slave Trade on the coast of Cuba :—

"Her Majesty's Consul at this port has given me the following information of the landing of slaves, viz. :—

"A cargo of about 1,000 slaves was landed on Sunday last the 7th instant, at the sugar estate "Proyectos" in the district of Remedios ; the Captain-General has dismissed the Lieutenant-Governor.

"Another cargo of 650 slaves was landed on the Isle of Pines last week ; the Lieutenant-Governor has also been dismissed.

"A third cargo is said to have been landed from a small schooner at Mariando (ten miles from Havana) the night before last.

"A large cargo has also been landed at the Jardinillos cays, and has been brought over to the mainland at Mayabeque, &c., by small coasting vessels."

REFERRING to your letter of the 17th October last, relative to the steamer "Noc Daqui" being engaged in the Slave Trade, I have now the honour to inclose, for their Lordships' information, a copy of a letter I have just received from Commander Grant of Her Majesty's ship "Steady," detailing his proceedings in consequence of receiving information of her being at the Island of Mugerres, and reporting that she had been seized by Rear-Admiral Wilkes on the ground of her having been transferred to the Confederate Government.

2. I have expressed to Commander Grant my entire approval of his proceedings.

"Steady," Havana, January , 1863.

ON arriving off this port on the 5th instant, I intended communicating by boat with Her Majesty's Consul, and avoid bringing the ship into the harbour, that being disallowed by the authorities (the circumstances whereof I have reported in a separate letter), and Her Majesty's Consul wishing to see me I got steam up and came in at 8 P.M.

Mr. John Crawford, Vice-Consul, then gave me information of a celebrated slave-steamer being at Isla Mugerres, Yucatan ; and as it was apparent dispatch was necessary, I considered myself justified in using steam, to be there, if not before, at least as soon as the smack alluded to in Mr. Crawford's letter.

I left Havana at 10 P.M. the 5th instant, and when twenty-five miles off Isla Mugerres, at sunset of the 7th, brought-to the smack, which had on board a Mr. Drain, merchant of Havana, with 200 doubloons. As the smack by the register had no business there, and Mr. Drain stating that though he had unfortunately destroyed his papers yet he could assure me he was engaged in the Confederate and not in the Slave Trade, I accordingly detained the smack to give him an opportunity of verifying his statement.

On arriving at Isla Mujeres the following morning, I found both steamer and schooner there in charge of an officer and fifty men (Marines) of the "Wachusett," which ship, bearing the flag of Admiral Wilkes, arrived soon after my anchoring. I communicated with him, and he confirmed the particulars of the statement Mr. Drain had made, that the "Noc Daqui" had bonâ fide Confederate papers.

From information received at Isla Mujeres, I am led to believe that slaves are landed on that island and thence transferred to Cuba by small vessels. A barracoon was found there, and, from appearances, lately erected.

The crew are all well.

Inclosure 2 in No. 133.

Statement made by Mr. Drain.

THE "Noc Daqui" was owned by Señor Julien de Zulueta, planter and merchant, and while engaged by him ran several cargoes of negroes to Cuba. Getting, however, very notorious, about one year ago he sent her to Truxillo, the Governor thereof having been previously bribed to get a proper clearance, and thus evade the chance of capture. While there a British ship of war (the "Spiteful") arrived, and as there was some doubt as to the legality of capturing her, she sailed, saying she would be back in two or three days, and if the "Noc Daqui" was there then, she would be taken. Accordingly she sailed (her machinery being out of order) for Bordeaux, was repaired there, re-equipped for the Slave Trade, but as a blind took in a cargo of wine for Vera Cruz, and was cleared for that port. On the way she went for the coast of Africa, threw overboard part of the wine, and taking in slaves, successfully ran them on the south side of Cuba about the 1st December last. Thence she proceeded towards Vera Cruz; breaking down in the machinery, however, she put into Isla Mujeres somewhere about the 4th December. The Mexican authorities at the island, finding the crew away, seized her, on suspicion of being engaged in the Slave Trade, about the 22nd December, and sent the crew to Madrid. Admiral Wilkes, passing the island on the 29th, fancied it was the "Alabama," and went in, when the Mexicans, fearing every day the arrival of the French, delivered her up to him, and he then discovered she was to be employed in the Confederate trade, but told the captain, who had arrived for her since her capture by the Mexicans, that he had put the men on board merely as requested by the Mexicans, and should return in ten days, when he would take the guard away. He went to Havana and there obtained sufficient information to seize her.

Her Confederate history is this:—

About the 1st December Zulueta represented to the Confederate interest that the "Noc Daqui" was in first-rate order for running the blockade to Mobile, and would have had 45,000 dollars for her, but on receiving information that she was at Mujeres and completely broken down, he informed Mr. Drain that the contract was void; but he again had information that she was not in such a bad condition but that she might be repaired where she was. Zulueta offered her for 15,000 dollars, which was accepted; and on the 13th December the schooner "Papita" (John Johnstone) was dispatched with 5,000 blankets, 4,500 pairs of shoes, 100 sacks of salt, and a crew of 39 men, including the captain and engineer. The shipping-master not doing his business quietly, Admiral Wilkes heard of the steamer, and went round by Cienfuegos in search of her, as she was then believed to be on the coast of Cuba. Much delay had occurred already and the schooner did not arrive till the day after the "Noc Daqui" was seized (the 23rd), and was also seized immediately. A vessel with the information was sent to Havana, but did not arrive till the 2nd January, and on the 3rd Mr. Drain left with 200 ounces, intending to buy off the Mexicans in charge, or, if that failed, to endeavour with his crew to seize her, and going to sea land the guard in the smack. On his arrival on the 6th, he found the Americans in charge, saw his captain, and then thinking from what Admiral Wilkes had told the captain before leaving on the 29th December, that he would take the crew off and blockade the harbour, he authorized the engineer continuing repairs. Hearing the Mexicans intended seizing him he left at once.

The "Noc Daqui" is now called the "Virginia," she is barque-rigged; 400 horse-power; 900 tons; part of the slave-deck still remaining.

No. 1.

Consul Freeman to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13, 1863.)

(Extract.)

My Lord,

Lagos, November 20, 1862.

IN reply to your Lordship's despatch of the 23rd October, on the subject of the lawlessness of the Egbas, I regret to have to state that affairs have gone on from bad to worse, till such a point has now been reached that either the Egbas must reform, or Her Majesty's Government will be forced to take some active measures to bring them to reason.

A short time since a robbery was committed on the river by the Egbas, and I soon after received a letter from the Bashorun (the Alake being dead), saying he regretted the occurrence, and would try and find out the culprits and punish them, and begging me to have patience and everything should be restored.

Though aware that the robbers were well known to be certain Chiefs, I waited, according to the Bashorun's request, to see what would come out of the matter. Instead of the stolen property being restored, and the robbers punished, a fresh robbery on a larger scale was committed, nearly 2,000*l.* worth of goods being taken in one week, and the communication with Abbeokuta was stopped, as every canoe attempting to pass was taken and robbed. Several canoe-men (Lagos people) have been killed, and two Englishmen coming down to Lagos were stopped and ill-treated, and, according to their statement, would have fared worse if some dispute had not arisen among their pursuers.

Applications were immediately made to me by the Abbeokuta Commercial Association, and by private individuals who had suffered losses, to obtain restitution of their property, and some guarantee that like outrages should not occur in future.

Having no power to protect life and property at Abbeokuta and on the river, and knowing that nothing short of very strong measures would put a stop to the robberies, I determined to recall from Abbeokuta all persons claiming British protection, and I accordingly addressed letters, of which the inclosed are copies, to the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta and to the Abbeokuta Commercial Association, and published also a Proclamation recalling the British subjects from Abbeokuta, and holding the Bashorun and Chiefs responsible for their lives and property.

The merchants answered to the call immediately, but the missionaries refused to pay any attention to it. Had all the white men left Abbeokuta, the Egbas would have given in immediately; but when the latter see that all my words and actions are utterly disregarded by the missionary agents, they also are apt to pay little attention to them.

The fact of slaves having a secure refuge in the Colony of Lagos has but little to do with the opposition of the Egbas. It is true that this opposition has a slight connection with the Slave Trade, and the cession of Lagos may have had some influence in exciting them on. The real cause, however, of the present distracted state of these parts is, as I have mentioned on former occasions, the desire to kidnap.

The exportation of slaves from this coast being to a certain extent checked by the efforts of Her Majesty's Government, the majority of the population have turned to commerce and agriculture for a subsistence. In every town and every village, however, there is a party of wild, lawless spirits, who prefer making a venture at slave-trading when the opportunity offers, by which, if successful, they obtain much greater profits than by any other occupation. This War party, though in numbers a small minority of the inhabitants, being formed of the most spirited and reckless men, generally has a great predominance over the other, and when it can give any colouring of patriotism to its forays it carries with it the goodwill and assistance of the peaceful portion of the population. Thus all the wars are carried on for the benefit of this small party; the majority, even if not approving, not venturing to oppose.

Inclosure 1 in No. 1.

Governor Freeman to the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta.

Lagos, November 14, 1862

THE Undersigned presents his compliments to the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta, and begs to acknowledge the receipt of their letter of the 14th of October, expressing their regret at the robbery committed on the canoes of merchants proceeding from Lagos to Abbeokuta, stating that they had sent to the camp to ascertain by whom the robbery was committed, and begging that he would take it patiently, as he would see that all the goods were restored.

The Undersigned has waited patiently for one month; but instead of the stolen goods having been returned, fresh robberies and outrages are being committed daily. The canoes from Lagos have been robbed to an amount already exceeding 2,000 bags of cowries.

Besides all these robberies of Lagos canoes, the canoe-men in some cases having been murdered, and in many others more or less brutally treated, two Englishmen have been assaulted on their road near the Egba village of Tepona, and robbed, one having been beaten, and both threatened and insulted.

If the Bashorun and Elders were sincere in their expressions of regret at what took place a month ago, the recurrence of the outrages proves that they now either side with the aggressors, or are too powerless to protect the lives and property of British subjects and those under British protection.

The Undersigned therefore considers it his duty to recall from Abbeokuta all persons who claim British protection, until such time as the Chiefs of Abbeokuta shall be willing and able to give good guarantee for their safety.

Ever since the cession of Lagos the various parties in Abbeokuta have been perpetually insulting and giving cause of complaint to Her Majesty's Government, apparently forgetting the obligations they are under to them, and the power of the British nation.

England is slow to anger, but such outrages as have been and are still being committed against her people will arouse her, and she will require such reparation and satisfaction for those wrongs committed as will be sufficient guarantee that such abuses shall not recur again for the future.

These crimes have been committed either by or through the influence of Solauki, Chief of Igbein, and Ogubeyi, of Igbori, and their people; the same who robbed the messengers of the Queen of England on their way to the Niger in 1859.

The course of crime of these men has done enough injury to the Egba cause and to British interests, and it is time that a check were put on their villainies.

The Undersigned therefore demands, as a first step towards reparation for the late outrages, that the said Solauki, Chief of Igbein, and Ogubeyi, of Igbori, together with the ringleaders in the robbery, and also the men of Tepona who ill-treated Messrs. Hughes and Mills, be delivered up to him for punishment.

The Undersigned further, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, holds the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta responsible for all the British property hitherto stolen, or which may be stolen hereafter; and if restitution of the same be long delayed, interest will be charged to cover the losses of the merchants. Also all persons leaving Abbeokuta on account of the present state of affairs will place such property as they cannot bring down to Lagos with them under the charge of the Bashorun and Elders, who will be held responsible for the safety of it, as it is through the lack of protection afforded by them that the British subjects are obliged to leave Abbeokuta.

HY. STANHOPE FREEMAN.

Inclosure 2 in No. 1.

Governor Freeman to the Honorary Secretary of the Abbeokuta Commercial Association.

Sir,

Lagos, November 14, 1862.

I HAVE received your letter of the 6th instant, by the hand of Mr. Mills, informing me of the outrages committed by the Egbas, and the robbery of British property by them; and in the name of the Abbeokuta Commercial Association requesting that I should take such steps as I may deem advisable to obtain restitution of the stolen property, and to ensure greater safety to the river traffic for the future.

I herewith inclose copy of a letter I have addressed to the Bashorun and Elders respecting the robberies, and also a Proclamation which, not having any direct agent in Abbeokuta, I have to beg that the Commercial Association will communicate to the residents in Abbeokuta who claim British protection.

I must here remark that I have for some time observed arising in the Egbas, the spirit which has resulted in so much injury to British interests, and have protested against it. But, unfortunately, instead of receiving support, I only got opposition from the British residents in Abbeokuta, and thus my influence has been undermined. Had the British residents supported my representations it is scarcely to be doubted that affairs in Abbeokuta would never have reached the present state of anarchy and of impotence in those who call themselves Rulers. If now the residents of Abbeokuta wish for the interference of Her Majesty's Government, they must simply comply with my instructions, and they may rest assured that for every man who leaves Abbeokuta there is so much gained towards a satisfactory and speedy solution of the questions now pending. Every British subject, on the contrary, who remains, not only loses his claim to British protection in case of any outrage being committed on himself or his property, but also, even though he and his effects be safe, tends to strengthen the opposition of the Egbas by his defiance of the orders of his Government.

I have, &c.

HY. STANHOPE FREEMAN.

Inclosure 3 in No. 1.

Proclamation.

By his Excellency Henry Stanhope Freeman, Governor, Commander-in-chief, and Vice-Admiral in and over the British Settlement of Lagos and its Dependencies, and Her Britannic Majesty's Consul for the Bight of Benin, &c.

WHEREAS certain parties of Egba belonging to and subject to the Government of Abbeokuta, have for some time past been committing robberies on Lagos canoes passing up the River Ogun to Abbeokuta, ill-treating and sometimes even murdering the canoe-men, whereby, besides the loss of life, great injury has been done to British trade, and to the interests of British subjects domiciled in Abbeokuta as well as in Lagos; and whereas the Chiefs of the said town of Abbeokuta have taken no steps to effect the restitution of the stolen goods and the punishment of the criminals;

And whereas the Local Government of Lagos has no power to afford protection, under present circumstances, to the persons and properties of the British subjects residing in Abbeokuta;

Now, therefore, as far as possible to avoid any further loss of life or injury to person, or loss of any damage to British property by means of the want of will, or inability on the part of the Chiefs of Abbeokuta to grant such protection as British subjects are entitled to: We call upon all persons residing in Abbeokuta who have any claim to British protection forthwith to leave the said town, and to repair to Lagos, within the jurisdiction and protection of Her Majesty's Government. And further we order such persons repairing for safety to Lagos, formally and officially to place under the protection of the Chiefs of Abbeokuta any property they may possess there which they cannot bring down the river with them, for which property the Chiefs of Abbeokuta will be held responsible by Her Majesty's Government.

And we do hereby declare that any British subject who, on any pretext whatever, fails or refuses to leave Abbeokuta, will forfeit all claim for British protection, and in the event of his being molested in his person or property, the Government of Lagos will not interfere in his behalf, as he will be considered to have resigned for the time being his nationality.

By command of his Excellency the Governor,

No. 2.

Consul Freeman to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13, 1863.)

(Extract.)

Lagos, December 6, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to report that Commodore Wilmot arrived in the Lagos Roads in Her Majesty's steam-ship "Rattlesnake" on the 23rd ultimo, and came ashore the following day.

According to the instructions conveyed to me in your Lordship's despatch of the 23rd of October I consulted with the Commodore respecting the measures to be pursued with regard to Abbeokuta, and I have the honour to forward herewith inclosed copies of my letter to that officer and his reply.

The Commodore is now gone up on a visit to Dahomey.

Inclosure 1 in No. 2.

Consul Freeman to Commodore Wilmot.

Sir,

Lagos, November 26, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to you, herewith inclosed, copy of a despatch I have received from Earl Russell respecting Abbeokuta, whereby I am instructed to consult with you as to the measures short of actual hostilities which it may be practicable to adopt to bring the Abbeokutans to reason.

I also inclose the whole of my correspondence with the authorities of Abbeokuta since my arrival in Lagos, in order that you may see how the affairs of the former place have been gradually going on from bad to worse, till at least the very Chiefs have become highway robbers and murderers. In the last outrage on the river, more than 2,000l. worth of British property was stolen, and several Lagos people were killed.

The recall of the Europeans from Abbeokuta has produced a profound effect in that town, but I fear that before the war party will give in, stronger measures will need to be adopted.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 2 in No. 2.

Commodore Wilmot to Consul Freeman.

Sir,

"Rattlesnake," off Lagos, November 27, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's letter of yesterday's date, inclosing your correspondence with the Alake and Chiefs of Abbeokuta, in which you request my opinion with regard to certain matters that have transpired between your Government and that place.

After reading over most carefully all the documents connected with this unhappy dispute, I am certainly of opinion that you have acted most judiciously, and with due regard to your own high position as well as to the dignity and honour of the British Government.

Before, however, arriving at any conclusion as to the means to be adopted for bringing the Alake, Chiefs, and people of Abbeokuta to reason, I perfectly agree with the opinion expressed in Lord Russell's letter to you, dated "Foreign Office, October 23, 1862, in which he says, "I have to state to you that I think it will be advisable to refrain for the present from taking any hostile measures, such as you suggest, against the Abbeokutans. Her Majesty's Government would prefer that time should, if possible, be allowed for the present hostile feeling to subside, which has not unnaturally been engendered on the part of the Abbeokutans by finding that their slaves have a secure refuge in the neighbouring Colony of Lagos."

I cannot but agree in this wish of Her Majesty's Government, and I earnestly hope that your decided line of conduct will produce the most satisfactory results.

It is probable that the Egbas have been led astray by bad advice, and from the want of a strong Government to restrain them.

If it is possible still to convince the Egbas that the only right way of restoring friendly relations between the Government of Lagos and themselves will be by receiving an accredited agent from you, with full powers to inquire into all matters of dispute, I have every hope that the present unpleasant state of things will cease, and that the old friendship and alliance will exist again.

I have written to Mr. Townsend strongly on this point, but have claimed as a preliminary measure that they first make an ample apology for all wrongs inflicted, as well as compensation for losses to individuals.

But, above all, they are to make a most ample apology to yourself for refusing to receive you at Abbeokuta, and slighting your good intentions.

These terms will be for your consideration, to accept or not, as you shall deem most fit.

I can have but one object in view in the settlement of this unhappy dispute, which is the upholding the honour and dignity of the British Governor of Lagos, and the happiness and well-being of this distracted country.

I have, &c.

Earl Russell to Consul Freeman.

Sir,

Foreign Office, January 31, 1863.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 6th ultimo, inclosing copies of a correspondence which has passed between you and Commodore Wilmot relating to the affairs of Abbeokuta, and I have to acquaint you that I approve of that officer's views as expressed in his letter to you of the 27th of November last.

Earl Russell to Consul Freeman.

(Extract.)

Foreign Office, February 6, 1863.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 20th of November last, reporting the steps taken by you to procure redress from the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta for certain outrages and robberies committed by the Egbas on the persons and properties of British subjects.

I approve those proceedings, and am not without hope that they may have had the desired effect; but in the contrary event it may become necessary for Her Majesty's Government to take ulterior measures to obtain redress.

Consul Freeman to Earl Russell.—(Received February 12.)

(Extract.)

Lagos, January 3, 1863.

I HAVE had the honour to receive your Lordship's instructions of the 31st October, referring me to a despatch of the 24th of March, by which your Lordship directed me to report whether any steps had been taken by the Alake and Chiefs of Abbeokuta to make good the value of the articles belonging to the Niger Expedition, which were stolen in the year 1859 whilst on their passage through the country over which the Abbeokutan Chiefs claim jurisdiction.

The Chiefs of Abbeokuta instructed the Abbeokuta Commercial Association to pay the amount still due out of the duties owing by the merchants to the Chiefs. The Secretary of the Association accordingly made some payments on account, but in consequence of the robberies on the River Ogun the merchants of Abbeokuta refused to pay up the duties, when the payments to me also ceased. Since then the Egbas have pursued such a course of robbery that it became useless for me to make any further representations.

I must again urge upon your Lordship to stop all trade with Abbeokuta until such time as the Egbas shall have made full reparation for the robberies they have committed, and have given some guarantee that similar depredations shall not be committed for the future.

I have long seen, and am still of opinion, that such a blockade is the only means, short of actual hostilities, of bringing the Egbas to reason. With Her Majesty's ships "Handy" and "Investigator" at my disposal I could easily enforce such a blockade from Porto Novo to Epé, without interfering with the trade of those places further than to stop their communication with Abbeokuta.

I beg again to point out to your Lordship that the real cause of the opposition offered by the Egbas to this Government is not that Lagos is a refuge for runaway slaves. In the course of a year not a dozen slaves from Abbeokuta have claimed protection here, and the Egbas and their supporters are perfectly aware that only the bad characters among them, or those who are ill-treated, do run away.

The real cause is that the Egba war-party see that they cannot be on friendly terms with Lagos, and continue their kidnapping and slaving expeditions, which, in principle, are the same as those of Dahomey. The bush now covers where stood thirty-two flourishing towns and villages which have been destroyed by the Egbas in the last twenty years, but the fanatic advocates of Egba civilization never allow the cry from the inhabitants of those towns who have been sold into slavery to reach the ears of the English public.

But a few days ago I received messengers from the town of Otta, which belonged to Lagos in Kosoko's time, but has been half ruined by Abbeokuta. I reproached them with joining the Egbas in their wars, and their answer was, "The Egbas rob and murder and sell us, and we would apply to you for protection; but we see that Lagos people are also robbed and murdered without your doing anything, and we therefore thought it better to do as the Egbas tell us." To this I could only reply that England was patient, but would exact reparation eventually.

The legitimate influence of Lagos is to put an end to slavery; and we must not, therefore, fight against that influence appearing as such, but rather use it impartially against all those who are determined to carry on the Slave Trade in these parts.

No. 6.

Earl Russell to Consul Freeman.

(Extract.)

Foreign Office, February 21, 1863.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 3rd ultimo, reporting that the Chiefs of Abbeokuta have failed to make good the value of the articles belonging to the Niger Expedition, which were stolen in the year 1859 whilst on their passage through the country under their jurisdiction, and you again urge, as the only means of bringing the Chiefs to reason, the entire stoppage of all trade between Abbeokuta and the sea until reparation is made for the robberies and outrages committed by the Egbas on the persons and property of British subjects.

In the event of Commodore Wilmot concurring with you in opinion that a blockade of the entrance of the river leading to Abbeokuta will be sufficient to procure reparation for the wrongs done to British subjects, you are authorized to take the necessary steps for carrying this blockade into effect.

No. 7.

Consul Freeman to Earl Russell.—(Received April 13.)

My Lord,

Lagos, March 2, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship that the Egbas, far from making any sort of amends for their previous conduct, have continued in so determined a manner to oppose this Colony that the legitimate traders dare no longer send goods up the river, while certain persons were granted protection by the Chiefs, and thus kept the little trade that was going on to themselves, and furnished the Egbas with everything they required.

To put a stop to this state of affairs, I have closed all trade with Abbeokuta from Porto Novo to Epé, and have blockaded the entrances to all the creeks, and stopping the markets.

I have reason to hope that this measure will bring the Egbas to reason, for I have received a civil letter from the Bashorun stating that he was too busy, preparing for the defence of the town against the Dahomians, to do anything in the matter, but that so soon as the danger was over he would give his attention to it.

My Lord,

Lagos, April 6, 1863.

HEREWITH I have the honour to transmit to your Lordship copy of a despatch I have addressed to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies respecting the affairs of Abbeokuta, by which your Lordship will see that in consequence of the Egbas having promised to indemnify the owners of the property stolen on the River Ogun, I have removed the blockade which I had established some two months ago.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 1 in No. 8.

Governor Freeman to the Duke of Newcastle.

(Extract.)

Lagos, May 6, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Grace that I deemed it advisable before leaving Lagos to make a final attempt to induce the Egbas to come to terms with this Government, and I therefore addressed a letter to the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta, informing them of my intended departure, and suggesting that they should send an envoy to Lagos with authority to settle all pending questions.

In their reply, though they said the time was too short to send an envoy, yet they declared themselves willing to pay for all the property of British subjects which was stolen on the river if I would send up to them a list of the amount and owners of it.

I accordingly addressed them another letter inclosing affidavits sworn to by the different persons at Lagos who had been robbed, and stating at the same time that as I was willing to believe that they were earnest in their promise to pay the damages demanded, I had removed the blockade on the Abbeokuta trade, which was done by proclamation on the 6th April.

Inclosure 2 in No. 8.

Governor Freeman to the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta.Lagos, March 20, 1863.

THE Undersigned presents his compliments to the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta, and begs to inform them that he purposes proceeding to England by the next homeward-bound mail to recruit his health.

It would be very gratifying to the Undersigned, as well as to Her Majesty's Government, if he could be the bearer of intelligence of the settlement of all questions pending between Abbeokuta and England.

The Undersigned, therefore, hopes that the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta will show their desire for peace and friendly relations with the British Government by sending down to him some Chief with full power to come to a settlement of affairs. If the people of Abbeokuta desire peace, they must send at once, or the Undersigned will have left Lagos on a visit to England, and much time will be consequently lost in communicating.

The Undersigned hears that the Dahomians are encamped before Abbeokuta, but that the Egbas are fully powerful enough to protect themselves. They could, therefore, send a Chief down on such an important mission as to make peace with England.

The Undersigned wishes health and prosperity to the Bashorun, Elders, and people of Abbeokuta.

(Signed) HY. STANHOPE FREEMAN.

Inclosure 3 in No. 8.

The Rev. H. Townsend to Governor Freeman.

Sir,

Abbeokuta, March 28, 1863.

I AM requested by the Bashorun and Elders to acknowledge your letter of the 20th instant.

They desire me to inform you that the Dahomian army encamped around the Ibara wood in sight of Abbeokuta sixteen days, but being made acquainted with the preparation made to receive them here were afraid to attack, and left without making any attempt upon Abbeokuta.

They desire me to state that they are not able to send messenger to Lagos. That they did by letter promise to make compensation for the robberies on the river before you put the blockade on them; they wish me now to ask you for information as to the amount robbed by their people that they may make preparations to fulfil their promise.

They hope to be able to prove that they have not, and never had, any intention to act towards the English Government but with the best feelings and intentions.

With best wishes for your health and happiness, I remain, &c.

No. 9.

Consul Freeman to Earl Russell.—(Received May 18.)

(Extract.)

Lagos, March 20, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that a short time since I received an application, of which Inclosure No. 1 is a copy, from Wm. McCoskry, Esq., to the effect that I should rent the hulk belonging to this Colony to enable him to make an expedition up the Niger. I also inclose a copy of a letter addressed to me by the Rev. Samuel Crowther, pointing out to me the necessity of communicating this year with our stations on the above-named river.

Urged by the arguments brought forward by these gentlemen, and influenced by a report, which appeared well-founded, that Her Majesty's Government has not decided on sending a vessel up the river this year, I deemed it advisable to accede to Mr. McCoskry's proposition. I therefore strongly urge that Her Majesty's Government should take advantage of Mr. McCoskry's expedition to communicate with Dr. Baikie, and, if possible, to make Treaties with some of the Native Chiefs.

Mr. McCoskry talks of leaving for the Niger in the first week of July; any despatches, therefore, or other things for the establishment at Lukoja should be dispatched by the mail leaving England on the 24th May, that they may reach Lagos in time.

Inclosure 1 in No. 9.

Mr. Mc Coskry to Consul Freeman.

Sir,

Lagos, March 11, 1863.

FROM several considerations, I have come to the conclusion to make a commercial speculation up the Niger as far as the Confluence, if I can obtain a vessel to take in tow for the reception of cargo, the tug "Advance" being unable to carry.

No vessel would suit my purpose better than the hulk belonging to the Colony, and if your Excellency would let me have the use of her on reasonable terms, I conceive she could not be put to a better use.

Apart from my special interest, I think it is important to keep up a communication with the population of territories so abounding in valuable natural productions, and as no Government expedition is expected to ascend the river this year, I could enable many who are now here to get to their homes, and give an opportunity to the friends of those already there to send them supplies, of which I am informed they are much in want.

The Rev. S. Crowther, upon whose representations chiefly I have formed my plan, wishes himself to visit various stations on the Niger, and I have requested him to lay before your Excellency his various reasons for the expedition.

With me it will be a commercial speculation, for which I must take what measures I can to insure success; and without a vessel to receive cargo it cannot succeed. There is no vessel to be got here so suitable as the hulk referred to. I hope, therefore, for your favourable consideration of my application.

I am, &c.

(Signed) W. Mc COSKRY.

Inclosure 2 in No. 9.

The Rev. S. Crowther to Consul Freeman.

(Extract.)

Lagos, March 2, 1863.

MANY circumstances have conspired which hindered me from writing to you on a subject of very great importance respecting the River Niger, from which place I have but lately returned, to solicit your kind influence and attention to its continued regular yearly visit, as I know you are very much interested in the opening of increased commerce to European markets, as well as in the civilization and evangelization of the teeming population on the banks of that noble river and its tributary the Tshadda.

The advantages of these rivers have been so often reported by competent persons that it is needless to repeat them here. There are many persons now here at Lagos who came from Sierra Leone last year, with a view to return and settle in their own country, and many others in Sierra Leone ready to follow, but were sadly disappointed that they could get no passage on board Her Majesty's steam-ship "Investigator," being so small, and she went alone.

There were another large party of Christian teachers, connected with the Church Missionary Society, waiting at the mouth of the Nun, with their packages and those for the Mission, and the cotton-press and gins for the Mission stations at Onitsha and the Confluence, to encourage the cultivation of that most useful staple, but most of these were with great regret left behind at the Nun for want of room in the "Investigator."

From these considerations, a yearly visit of a gun-boat, with an assistance or facility given to an owner of a steam-tug with a cargo-vessel in tow, will not fail to open the Niger to extensive commerce, which will be greatly encouraged by such regular yearly visits. The natives know no other European nation in that river but the English, who have explored it, prepared the people to call forth the vast resources of the country, and who ought also to reap them, as they are now ready to be bought of the people.

I hope your Excellency will excuse the liberty I have taken in thus freely expressing myself, when you know that I have been, since the last two-and-twenty years, in connection with the exploration of the Niger, and with the attempts of the Church Missionary Society in the civilization and evangelization of the natives on its banks, which it is hoped will ultimately result in the abolition of the Slave Trade on that great natural highway to the sea.

No. 10.

Earl Russell to Acting Consul Glover.

Sir,

Foreign Office, May 23, 1863.

I HAVE received a despatch and its inclosures from Mr. Freeman, of which I annex copies,* reporting the circumstances under which he has agreed to lease to Mr. McCoskry for a few months the hulk belonging to the Colony, in order to enable him to make an expedition up the Niger.

I have to acquaint you that I approve this arrangement, and that Her Majesty's Government have determined to avail themselves of the terms of the contract with Mr. McCoskry to forward supplies by this opportunity to Dr. Baikie.

I accordingly authorize you to purchase and to entrust to Mr. McCoskry's care goods to the value of not exceeding 300*l*. Your experience and knowledge of the country will enable you to make a proper selection of supplies for Dr. Baikie, and you will make such arrangements as you may deem necessary for ensuring their safe arrival at their destination.

It is of great importance that Her Majesty's Government should receive advices from Dr. Baikie by the opportunity that will be afforded on the present occasion of communicating with him, and if you should think it necessary to do so you will send a messenger of your own for this purpose.

When Her Majesty's ship "Investigator" ascended the Niger last year you are aware that Dr. Baikie was absent on an expedition into the interior of the country, and that therefore no advices were received from him. It is not impossible that he may, from unforeseen causes, still be detained in the interior of Africa, and in this case it would be important to know when and where Dr. Baikie was last heard of. King Masaba is the only Chief who would be likely to furnish this information, and it would, therefore, be advisable to make arrangements, if possible, for communicating with that Chief. I must leave, however, the decision in this case to your discretion and judgment.

I am, &c.

(Signed) RUSSELL.

No. 11.

Acting Consul McCoskry to Earl Russell.—(Received June 10.)

My Lord,

Lagos, May 9, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Lordship abstract of the case of a vessel adjudicated in the Vice-Admiralty Court of this Colony on the 7th ultimo, for being engaged in the Slave Trade.

This vessel, a schooner, on being chased by the whaler of Her Majesty's gun-boat "Mullet," was run on shore and abandoned by her crew at Point Padron.

In consequence of the violence of the surf preventing the approach of the whaler, Lieutenant Brooke beached her, and waded in the water, thereby saving the lives of many slaves, who were unfortunately afterwards consigned to slavery, as that officer could not convey them to his vessel. She was found to be fully equipped for the Slave Trade, and without any papers or colours to show her name or nationality.

A portion of the bulwark, the only thing saved from the wreck, was condemned, and the schooner pronounced to have been liable to forfeiture at the time of seizure.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 2 in No. 11.

In the Vice-Admiralty Court of Lagos.

In the case of a schooner, name and nation unknown, captured by Courtland Herbert Simpson, Esquire, Commander of Her Majesty's gun-boat "Mullet."

AT a Court held at Lagos, West Coast of Africa, on the seventh day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, before the Worshipful William McCoskry, Esquire, Acting Judge and Commissary of the Vice-Admiralty Court of Lagos, lawfully constituted and appointed.

Our Sovereign Lady the Queen against a certain schooner or vessel, name and nation unknown, her tackle, apparel, and furniture, and the cargo laden therein, taken and seized by Courtland Herbert Simpson, Esquire, Commander of Her Majesty's gun-boat "Mullet."

In pain of parties cited not appearing, Mayne referred to the monition heretofore brought in duly executed, and also to the affidavits of Thomas A. Brooke, Lieutenant of and belonging to Her Majesty's gun-boat "Mullet," heretofore exhibited and remaining in the registry of this Court.

The Acting Judge at his petition having heard the said affidavit read on his monition as counsel on behalf of Her Majesty, by interlocutory Decree pronounced the said schooner or vessel, name and nation unknown, her tackle, apparel, and furniture, to have been at the time of seizure thereof equipped for and engaged in the Slave Trade, and employed in the illegal transport of negroes or others, for the purpose of consigning them to slavery contrary to the provisions of the statute or statutes in such case made and provided, and as such or otherwise subject and liable to forfeiture and condemnation to Our Sovereign Lady the Queen, her heirs and successors, and condemned a portion of the bulwark belonging to the said schooner or vessel, and brought to Lagos accordingly.

And further pronounced that the same should be publicly sold, as in and by law in such case made and provided.

No. 12.

Consul Freeman to Earl Russell.—(Received June 20.)

(Extract.)

Lagos, April 10, 1863.

WITH reference to my report of the 8th of September last, relating to the complaint of Mr. Henry, of the Benin River, that an outrage had been committed on his factory by the natives, I have the honour now to inform your Lordship that I have just returned from a visit to that river, having settled all the questions there pending between the natives and British merchants.

Mr. Henry has never reported to me the amount of property which he states to have been stolen from his factory, and for which he now demands compensation; but in his letter to Her Majesty's Consul at Fernando Po, demanding support from that officer, he declares that property to the amount of 8,000*l.* has been taken from his stores.

As this is perfectly at variance with the result of my investigations, and further, as Mr. Henry has made several statements a confirmation of which I have not been able to obtain on the spot, I think it necessary to enter into all the details of this unfortunate affair.

In the spring of the year 1861, Mr. Henry, by one of those acts of prepotency to which the West Coast traders frequently resort to obtain a settlement of their claims, seized fourteen puncheons of oil belonging to a Chief of the name of Akebua, having first pretended he would pay him a good price for it. Of the fourteen puncheons two were said to have been seized by Mr. Henry as a debt of Akebua, six as a debt of Akebua's brother, and six due by a man who had been dead some years.

Akebua after this came several times to demand payment for the oil, and Mr. Henry at last seized him and put him in confinement; and, according to the general report in the river,—which is, however, denied by Mr. Henry,—kept him chained by the neck.

Soon after this occurred, and after Akebua had been released, Mr. Henry went to England, and on his voyage out again in the year 1862, addressed me a letter from the Lagos Roads under date the 23rd of April, a copy of which is inclosed.

At this date I knew nothing of Mr. Henry, save by public report, and I was unaware of the occurrences mentioned above; but I immediately perceived that all could not be fair by Mr. Henry anticipating an outrage, which the last paragraph in his letter manifestly shows.

Having, in reply, informed Mr. Henry that he should refer to me in the event of his requiring protection, I soon received another letter from him dated the 27th of May, informing me that an outrage had been committed on his factory during his absence at the bar, and demanding my assistance.

Not deeming it advisable to send to the Benin Her Majesty's ship "Investigator," I made a requisition to the Senior Officer of the Bights Division to have a gun-boat despatched to that river with instructions to the Commanding Officer to investigate the matter. Commander Beamish accordingly despatched Her Majesty's ship "Bloodhound," Lieutenant-Commander Stokes, to inquire into the affairs at Benin, instructing him to report to me. Lieutenant Stokes, however, appears to have obtained no further information than what I had already received, as will be seen by his correspondence, which I inclose.

A few days later I received another letter from Mr. Henry, a copy of which I also submit herewith, together with a copy of my reply.

Mr. Henry soon after came to Lagos on his way to England; and I informed him that as I had made another application to Captain Luce, C.B., to send a vessel to the Benin, I could take no further steps until I heard from Her Majesty's Government, or until such time as I might be able to visit the Benin River in person. He had already applied for assistance to Captain Burton, who made a requisition on Commander Stokes, of the "Bloodhound," to take him to Benin. Captain Burton saw none of the Chiefs of the river, and no investigation was made beyond, I believe, taking the deposition of one of Mr. Henry's own people. He then made a trip to the town of Benin with Commander Stokes, leaving the "Bloodhound" anchored off the factories, and subsequently left, having done nothing during a stay of three weeks in the river.

Being about to leave for England on account of my health, after settling everything here previous to my departure, I determined to visit the Benin to terminate the pending questions in that river.

I started in Her Majesty's ship "Investigator" on the 28th of March, and after passing a day at Palma on the way, reached the Benin River on the 30th. The agents of the firms possessing factories in the river immediately came off to me. I stated to them that I had come on purpose to settle the old-standing disputes on the river, and especially to investigate the circumstances connected with the attack on Mr. Henry's factory; and in order to arrive at the truth I was desirous to have a meeting of all the white people and Native Chiefs in the river.

The merchants doubted whether any of the Chiefs would come to see me, for they had refused to hold any communication with Captain Burton on the occasion of his visit to the Benin. On the following day, however, in consequence of a message I sent them, Jerry of Jacqua, styled Governor of the river, Jerbuffon, his brother, and Dola, an old female relative of the Kings of Wari who possesses great influence, came on board Her Majesty's ship "Investigator" to see me.

The English merchants being present, I examined them as well as the Chiefs, and also Mr. Henry's agent, and the krooboy and coopers belonging to his factory, and the result of the inquiry furnished me with the details of the circumstances which preceded, and evidently caused, the outrage as stated above, and further supplied me with the full particulars-respecting events subsequent to Mr. Henry's departure for England in 1861, and which are as follows:—

Nothing particular occurred until Mr. Henry was on his way back to the coast, but on the night of the 22nd of April, the very day before he addressed me his first letter, and of course unknown to him, four of the before-mentioned Chief Akebua's men attempted to steal a new canoe from his factory at Benin; the krooboys gave chase and brought back the canoe and one of the thieves, the other three having succeeded in escaping. The prisoner wounded several krooboys with his knife before he could be disarmed; he was taken to Mr. Henry's factory, and was given over to a friend of Akebua's the next day in a dying state. He only lived for a few hours after, and the natives pretend that he had a red-hot ramrod run into his head by Mr. Henry's krooboys. There was no evidence to prove this, but there can be no doubt he had been brutally ill-treated; for the krooboys not being armed when they seized him, he could not have been so seriously injured in the affray as to die from the effects of it.

Akebua then went to Mr. Henry's factory and demanded compensation for the loss of this man, and on being refused, left with the threat that when he came again he would obtain payment by force. Upon this Mr. Henry's agent applied to Jerry, Governor of the river, for protection, who sent an armed party to the factory; but Mr. Henry himself arriving a day or two after, sent away this guard, saying he could protect his own premises, thus taking the responsibility on himself.

Exactly one month after this, when Mr. Henry was absent from his factory on board the mail-steamer, the outrage of which he complains was committed.

After obtaining the above information I dismissed the Chiefs, telling them that on the 2nd of April I should return to Lagos, and before leaving should go ashore to Messrs. Horsfall's factory; that I should expect all the Chiefs, Akebua included, to be there, and that I should then make some settlement of the affair.

I was told that Akebua would not come, as he dare not trust himself in my hands. I however insisted on it, and a special messenger was sent to bring him, with an assurance from me that he should have a safe-conduct; that I deemed it necessary to have him present at the meeting, but that he should be allowed to go away again; and that if he deserved punishment I should take ulterior measures to capture him.

I then addressed a letter, copy of which I beg to inclose, to the agents of the different firms in the river, requesting information as to the outrage in writing, and an estimate of what they consider was the probable value of the goods taken from Mr. Henry's factory.

Their replies I also transmit herewith.

On the day fixed, the 2nd April, I landed at Messrs. Horsfall's factory, accompanied by Commander Lefroy and Captain Mulliner. The Chiefs had already arrived, and even the culprit, Akebua, trusting to my promise had made his appearance.

The result of this second investigation was merely to confirm the previous one; for the testimony of Akebua and his people was in the main to the same effect as that of the other persons examined, merely varying as to the amount of goods taken by him, and the provocation he had received, he of course endeavouring to make the best of his case.

Notwithstanding the circumstances which led to the attack on Mr. Henry's factory, in which I consider him so much to blame as almost to have deprived himself of any right to claim compensation, still such an outrage could not be allowed to pass unnoticed or unpunished by Her Majesty's Government; and I therefore held the Chiefs responsible for the property stolen, and declared my intention of punishing Akebua. I accordingly submitted to the assembled Chiefs an agreement which I had prepared, by which they were to bind themselves to pay the amount of thirty-five puncheons of palm-oil, a part as compensation to Mr. Henry for the losses he had sustained, and a part to Messrs. Harrison in restitution for 120 kegs of powder stolen recently from their factory,

This agreement, a copy of which is annexed, binds Jerry of Jaqua and the other Chiefs to pay the above-mentioned thirty-five puncheons of palm-oil, to deliver up Akebua to Her Majesty's Government within six months, and further to make such arrangements as will ensure better protection to British life and property for the future. On the other hand the compact guarantees to the Chiefs, after their fulfilment of the foregoing conditions, a fixed comey or duty on the trade of about 1 per cent., in order to enable them to maintain their authority.

At all the other rivers this comey is paid by the merchants, and the same was formerly the case at the Benin; but some years ago, in consequence of some robberies having been committed, for which the merchants could obtain no redress, the latter refused to pay it any longer. This alone is sufficient to account for many of the irregularities and abuses of such frequent occurrence in the Benin; for it cannot be expected that Chiefs, who are such merely in name, and have not the means of supporting their authority, should be held responsible for acts which they have not the power to prevent.

After some discussion the Chiefs signed this document, which is witnessed by the merchants who were present.

I experienced much difficulty in obtaining their consent to Article 2, by which they engaged to deliver up Akebua within six months, but I insisted most strongly upon the fulfilment of this Article, and in this I was entirely successful, for Akebua, as I had anticipated, offered to pay any sum I might name, independently of the thirty-five puncheons to be paid by the Chiefs, to atone for his crime. I at last consented to receive twenty puncheons of palm oil, which is to be paid up before he is allowed to trade in the river. This was my only means of punishing and making an example of him.

With regard to Mrs. Henry, whom Mr. Henry chooses to consider murdered by the natives, because she died of fever soon after the outrage, I need only mention two or three points to show your Lordship that her death cannot be taken into consideration.

From the evidence of all the witnesses examined, neither Akebua nor any of his people attempted to lay hands on Mrs. Henry, and no insult was offered to her beyond Akebua threatening that if she made any opposition to his robbery he would throw her into the river. Had Akebua wished to prevent her she could not possibly have left the house and run to Messrs. Harrison's factory. Mrs. Henry had an attack of fever two or three days after the outrage, and recovered from it. She subsequently had another attack, which ended fatally, on the 11th June, eighteen days after the robbery at the factory. About the same time, or soon after, four or five more Englishmen (the total number of residents not exceeding eight) died, the river being very unhealthy.

I have omitted to mention that it appears from the evidence I obtained, that Akebua went to Mr. Henry's factory with only one large canoe and one small one, the former not being capable of holding more than forty men, and the latter four. These canoes were seen passing by the people at Messrs. Harrison's factory after the robbery, and Akebua was dancing on the stolen goods in the large canoe, which, considering its size and the number of men in it, could not have held more than from 200*l.* to 400*l.* worth of goods, according to their quality. It appears also that at a meeting of the Chiefs to try and settle the affair Akebua offered to give back 70 out of the 100 cases of gin he had taken, and pay for the rest in palm oil; but Mr. Henry refused to have back anything, and demanded an indemnity of 60 puncheons of palm oil, equal to about 800*l.*, to terminate the question, and this was after his wife's death. It is strange, therefore, that he should subsequently state to Captain Burton that 8,000*l.* worth of his property had been stolen, which would be a full cargo of a good-sized ship.

If your Lordship is pleased to approve of the arrangement I have made, I would venture to request that instructions should be sent to the Acting Governor of Lagos and the Commodore to take measures for paying periodical visits, say every three months, to the Benin to see that the conditions of the Treaty are strictly fulfilled, otherwise serious complications will eventually arise. But I have no doubt, if the Treaty is kept by both parties, an end will be put to the Benin disturbances.

Inclosure 1 in No. 12.

Mr. Henry to Consul Freeman.

Sir,

"Armenian," Lagos, April 23, 1862.

I AM now on my passage to the Benin River, where I have property to the value of some 15,000*l.* in the hands of the different Chiefs and others in that river, and am under the impression that there will be both difficulty and danger in the effort to collect the same or any portion of the amount. I am induced to entertain this idea from the fact that heretofore no protection has been shown to European merchants there since the time of the late lamented Consul Beecroft's offices. It is true some ships of war have some three or four times visited that quarter, each time leaving without any decisive measures having been taken. Even last year murder and piracy have been committed with impunity; thus, as I am now determined to use my utmost endeavours to collect this said property (acting as justly and considerately as I can), I wish to know, in case of any unforeseen accident, or I should say outrage, to whom I am to apply for redress. Benin was in the jurisdiction of Lagos under the Consulate, but now I am ignorant if it is a dependency of Lagos.

I shall feel honoured if your Excellency will make your views known to me on this subject.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 2 in No. 12.

Mr. Henry to Consul Freeman.

Sir,

Lemnos, Benin River, May 27, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your advices dated 22nd instant, and have to regret to be so soon obliged to seek protection from you.

From the following facts I should hope you will find it necessary to give me assistance with as little delay as possible.

On the 24th instant, and during my absence at the mail-steamer, my factory was plundered to a large amount. Mrs. Henry's life was threatened, and most gross insults offered to her; to save herself from being murdered or otherwise worse used, she had to run away through the bush; through this exposure, together with the shock her nervous system has received, she is now confined to her bed, and I fear incipient fever. The party who committed this outrage holds an independent position in the country; this is his second attack on my premises within the month; he has threatened to renew the act; I am obliged to keep an armed watch night and day. Should this matter be allowed to rest, there will be no such thing as safety for life or property here.

I trust you will, in person, honour us with a visit, as I much think both stringent and coercive measures will be required.

I have, &c.

Lieutenant-Commander Stokes to Consul Freeman.

Sir,

"Bloodhound," Lagos, June 21, 1862.

IN compliance with orders received from Commander Beamish, I beg to forward a copy of my letter to him relative to the late outrage committed in the River Benin.

I shall remain at this anchorage till the 23rd instant.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 4 in No. 12.

Lieutenant-Commander Stokes to Commander Beamish.

Sir,

"Bloodhound," Lagos, June 21, 1862.

IN obedience to your orders, received on the 10th instant, to proceed to the Benin to inquire into the particulars of the late outrage committed on Mr. Henry's factory, I have the honour to report that I arrived off the Benin on the 14th instant.

The following day I forwarded a letter to Mr. Snape, the principal merchant in the river, requesting him or any of the merchants to repair on board, as I wished to see them on business concerning Mr. Henry's affair.

The same afternoon I received a despatch that was signed by all the merchants, a copy of which I inclose.

Probably the next day I should have gone in to inquire into the matter, but owing to the bar being impassable I was unable to perform this duty.

In answer to my first letter, requesting the merchants to come over the bar, their answer was, it was impossible for them to leave their factories, as they risk their property by so doing. I consider that one merchant could look after the factories for the space of eight hours or so, if they wished to have an interview with me.

In answer to their second letter, I informed them I was merely sent down to inquire into the particulars of the attack on Mr. Henry's factory, but I would not fail to lay all their letters before his Excellency the Governor of Lagos, and I thought his Excellency the Governor would honour them with a visit on my return, when I laid their case before him.

I could not gain any information of the amount of property Mr. Henry lost, or anything concerning the outrage.

I consider it would be highly advantageous for a man-of-war of light draft to visit the river, as the natives are rather hostile towards the traders.

At present I consider there is not sufficient water for the "Bloodhound" to cross the Benin bar.

I remained off the Benin till the morning of the 20th to gain information, but received none.

I have, &c.

(Signed) JOHN ED. STOKES.

Inclosure 5 in No. 12.

Messrs. Henry, Snape, &c., to the Senior Officer of the Bights Division.

Sir,

Benin River, June 16, 1862.

ON the 27th May a communication was forwarded by R. C. Henry, Esq., to his Excellency the Governor of Lagos, informing him that on the 24th May last an attack was made on Mr. Henry's establishment by a number of armed men, the place plundered of very valuable property, and Mrs. Henry's life threatened, and she was most violently assaulted and driven out of the house to seek protection at another establishment; the result of this most violent outrage brought on an attack of fever, and has since ended in fatal consequences to Mrs. Henry; and owing to fright and ill usage another European is at present insane.

Having informed the said Governor of the above circumstances, and soliciting his interference in vain (the boat having waited six days and then being dismissed without any written or verbal reply), we, the Undersigned, are enforced, for our own safety and the protection of the property placed in our charge, to make this present application to you for assistance and protection, to which we, as British subjects, are entitled, and also to request that justice will be done on the perpetrators of this most murderous and felonious attack on the lives and properties of British subjects.

We remain, &c.

Inclosure 6 in No. 12.

Messrs. White, Rothery, and Henry to Lieutenant-Commander Stokes.

Sir,

Benin River, June 17, 1862.

WE are in receipt of your letter dated 16th instant, and as you are fully aware of all the particulars of the late outrage committed on the property of a British resident here, we of course leave the affair in your hands. We are quite unable to do anything ourselves, and are of the opinion that you are the proper party to apply to. In the letter you received yesterday, you had the unanimous opinion of all the agents or parties trading in the river, and it is impossible that any of the said parties can leave their establishments to meet you outside the bar, as we risk our property by so doing.

We sign this as Mr. Snape is unable to do so through sickness, and beg to remain, &c

(Signed) JOHN A. WHITE.
G. H. ROTHERY.
R. C. HENRY.

P.S.—The descendants of the late King are now in the river, awaiting the settlement of this affair.

Inclosure 7 in No. 12.

Mr. Henry to Consul Freeman.

Sir,

Lemnos, Benin River, July 4, 1862.

I BEG to inform you, in addition to my former advices, that this river is at present in a most unsettled state, and requires protection for European property, to say nothing of life. I now wish to know if you intend to see that property is protected or not. As to life, it seems of little consequence with you.

Statements have been made to you last month which any British subject should have expected would have been attended to, but I must say I am sorry to see they were not of sufficient weight with you. My wife now dead, one European nearly murdered, my property plundered to a large amount, and of course all my mercantile affairs interrupted, and I have no redress. If you are a married man, think, Sir, what your feelings would be if your wife lost her life through the hostility of a gang of savages, and you had no redress; would you bear with it? No, Nature would forbid such apathy. Every man, Sir, has his duty to perform; if he does so, he must feel satisfied with himself, let what may occur; but he that neglects it, in after-life must feel its consequences.

Messrs. C. Horsfall's establishment is left without any one to protect it since Mr. Snape's death on the 21st ultimo, and would have been plundered to the amount of many thousand pounds ere this had not Captain White, Messrs. Stewart and Douglass' agent, and the writer, exerted ourselves for its protection.

I have now, Sir, only to remark that if you think well to attend to the affairs of this river, it will be much to the advantage of British subjects.

As I am anxious that no man should think me otherwise than candid, I must inform you that this communication will be made public.

I have, &c.

(Signed) R. C. HENRY.

Inclosure 8 in No. 12.

Consul Freeman to Mr. Henry.

Sir,

Lagos, July 28, 1862.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of two of your letters of the 27th of May and the 4th of July.

The insolent tone of the latter would demand from me the severest censure did I not feel that some excuse may be made for your state of mind after what has occurred. This excusable excitement may have also made you forget (when you accuse me of not caring for British life and property, and say I have been applied to by you in vain) that I sent Her Majesty's ship "Bloodhound" on purpose to inquire into your case. The merchants at Benin, however, did not appear anxious to give Lieutenant-Commander Stokes any further information than what I had received already.

With regard to your expression that "all men have their duty to perform," I entirely agree with you, and would further add that I have perfect confidence that the majority, at least, of Her Majesty's officers are guided in their actions by a sense of that duty, and not by threats of abusive letters against them being published in the public journals. Such proceedings can never force attention to your affairs from me.

In conclusion, I have merely again to assure you that I quite pardon the tone of your last letter, which may be excused, though not justified, by the very natural state of excitement your sudden bereavement must have caused.

I am, &c.

Inclosure 9 in No. 12.

Consul Freeman to the Merchants in the Benin River.

Sir,

"Investigator," Benin River, March 30, 1863.

I AM desirous, before leaving this river, to obtain every possible information respecting the robbery at Mr. Henry's factory, and more especially with regard to the value of the goods stolen.

CLASS B.

D

Mr. Henry having left Mr. Brown in charge of his factory without informing him of the value of the stolen property, the latter gentleman can only roughly estimate the loss; and as his estimate differs materially from that made by Mr. Henry, I find it difficult to form any opinion on the matter.

I therefore have to request that you will give me your opinion, based either upon any certain knowledge you may possess, or else on probability and current report, as to the amount of property for which Mr. Henry might fairly and honestly claim compensation.

I should also wish to know whether you have heard of any previous dispute which led to this outrage, as Mr. Henry, by his letter to me of the 23rd of April, 1862, when on his journey out from England, evidently expected something of the sort would happen on his arrival here.

You will understand that in requesting this information I am actuated by a desire that both the white man and the black in this river should obtain strict and impartial and, if necessary, severe justice.

The British Government will certainly not permit the natives of these parts to commit unprovoked outrages on the factories with impunity; but it is equally certain that they will never allow the Englishmen residing in this river to violate all principles of law and justice in obtaining by violence a settlement of their mercantile affairs, and then acknowledge their right to appeal to them for protection against retaliation, or compensation for losses resulting to them thereby.

In conclusion, I have to beg that you will lay before me without delay a statement of any of your affairs in this river which require a settlement before my departure, which will be on the 2nd of April at the latest.

I have, &c.

(Signed) HY. STANHOPE FREEMAN.

Inclosure 10 in No. 12.

Mr. Hooper to Consul Freeman.

Sir,

Fort Harrison, Benin River, April 2, 1863.

I RECEIVED your communication this morning, and, according to the best of my knowledge, I should estimate the amount of Mr. Henry's loss of goods to be the value of 200*l.* I know nothing of any previous dispute between Mr. Henry and the natives, excepting the stealing of the canoe, as mentioned by Mr. Brown, and which I heard of at the time it happened.

Respecting our own establishment, we have one long-boat and two kroomen detained at Becky by the natives. They will not deliver them up excepting by our paying between 60*l.* and 70*l.*, which we think is quite out of all reason. The "Sunshine's" pinnace they have also detained. I have also had on one occasion 25 quarter-barrels of gunpowder, and on another occasion, within six weeks following, 98 quarter-barrels of ditto, stolen, and for which no satisfaction or compensation has been had, although reported to Jerry, the Governor.

I remain, &c.

Inclosure 11 in No. 12.

Mr. Forshaw to Consul Freeman.

Sir,

Benin River, April 2, 1863.

I BEG to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 31st ultimo. In regard to Mr. Henry's affairs I must state, in the first place, that the outrage took place in May 1862, and I did not come in the river till September 1862.

Mr. Snape, who was then here, and who relieved me in April 1861, wrote me on the 23rd May, 1861, of which the following is an extract:—

"Now for that simple cove, Aquabo: his canoes, with fourteen puncheons of oil in, were three or four miles up Warree Creek for eight days before you left there; they had orders to remain till you were gone."

(I must here state that Aquabo owed me thirteen puncheons of oil when I left here in April 1861.)

"Some few days after you left he came to tell me his oil had come from market, &c.; wanted the hogshead of tobacco, and trust from me for twenty puncheons before he would bring the oil to pay your trust. Of course I would do no such thing. Mr. Henry, hearing of this oil being there, goes to Batara, jams with him for it; following day Aquabo takes the fourteen puncheons to him, tom-toming in fine style close past our wharf. Well, Henry gets his oil on board, and settles with him so—

"Two puncheons, chop for trust he owes him.

"Six ditto ditto ditto Yellow, of Fishtown, his brother.

"Six ditto ditto ditto Accubo, a man who has been dead some six years.

"Mr. Aquabo returns to his virtuous home, highly indignant, of course, at being sold so. Two days after goes again to Henry, threatens war, &c., if not paid. Henry, not to be frightened by such a 'coon, sends his people away, confines Aquabo on account of some old trust of Dollas and Chenomi's, and does not let him go until after several great meetings, and Doz and Co. stand guarantee for him."

This account is substantiated by both white men and the natives. Mr. Henry went home soon after this, and left Mr. Brown in charge. In April 1862 there was some affair between Henry's kroomen and Aquabo's people, in which a slave of Aquabo's was killed. Aquabo is reported to have demanded payment for this slave in Mr. Brown's absence, threatened war, &c., and left the beach. Mrs. Brown (I believe) sent word of this to Jerry, who sent some of his people down to protect Henry's beach from Aquabo, and on Mr. Henry's arrival in the river in May 1862, he sent Jerry's people away, saying he could protect himself. On the 24th of May, while outside the bar, waiting for the mail, Aquabo landed on the beach, and robbed the place, after ill-using a European, and using threatening and insulting language to Mrs. Henry.

About the amount of property taken I can form no idea of what was taken further than by surmising what two canoes would carry of the description of property alleged to have been stolen. In the first place Aquabo acknowledges to 100 cases of gin, say $3\frac{1}{2}$ puncheons. Now I have never heard that any bales or cases of cloth were taken, only loose cloth and silk, in the shop. If he had 1,000 pieces of cloth loose in the shop, and all taken, it would amount to 12 puncheons of oil, and take up a great deal of room when bundled out by the natives. The silk, supposing it to have been bandana silk, say at the outside there was 200 pieces, this would realise 16 puncheons, in all $31\frac{1}{2}$. Now other small articles, which would take room in regard to their value to a puncheon of oil, such as knives, locks, matchets, &c., say $8\frac{1}{2}$ puncheons. This would quite fill a large and small canoe, which were said to be there on the day of the robbery. The value of 40 puncheons or 27 tons at invoice prices of the description of goods taken, would be about 485*l.*; of course this is all surmise on my part, but it is in relation to the means of conveyance and the description of articles I have heard were stolen that I have formed the idea.

I will now give you a copy of the letter I wrote to H. G. Foote, Esq., in March 1861, which will show you what little power of redress we have here. The affair has happened so long since that further than their being now made aware that such a thing shall not happen again with impunity, I do not wish the matter taken notice of:—

"H. G. Foote, Esq.

"Sir, Benin River, March 6, 1861.

"In consequence of a trader having carried off two of my kroomen, I deem it expedient to inform you on the 7th February my long-boat went up the river for water with four kroomen and six empty casks. On the 8th two canoes came and carried off two, the other two escaping in the bush. Since then I have got one krooman; they still have the other one. The Governor of river sent up for my boat, when she came down minus the sails, ropes, and three empty casks. The cause of this is my refusing to pay this trader for a half puncheon of oil, which was one-third all mud. Instead of him going to the Governor about it, he has acted as stated above. I have still the half puncheon on the beach. You are perhaps aware that things are not altogether right in this river concerning the Governor—he seeming to have no power further than his own town.

"I remain, &c.

(Signed) "THOS. S. FORSHAW."

There are other matters which have happened to Messrs. Harrison's factory, but of which I have no direct information; such as the murder of a krooman by some one unknown in 1861; the robbery of powder, and the detention of some of their kroomen and long-boat somewhere on the coast.

I must also state that there is a krooman now living at Fish Town or Beggy, who it is the general wish of us white traders should be given up to be sent home to his country, or any other place he wants to go out of this river. He was steward with Captain McKay (now dead), whom he robbed to a great extent, and gave the proceeds of the robbery to a native for the use of his daughter or relation—I am not sure which. When Captain McKay found it out he flogged him severely, which caused him to run away; was given up by the natives, and ran away again. He is now living amongst them, and we think to our detriment, knowing that he had no property of his own when he came here first, and the natives are not likely to keep him for nothing.

In conclusion, I would beg to state that an occasional official visit of a man of-war, say once in six months, just to inquire into the state of the river would be beneficial, when your Excellency might be unable yourself to come; holding the Chiefs generally, and not Jerry solely, the responsible parties (they would be Jerry, Jebuffa, and Dolla, the latter representing the King's sons at Warree) for anything happening in this river.

I remain, &c.

(Signed)

THOS. S. FORSHAW.

Inclosure 12 in No. 12.

Mr. White to Consul Freeman.

Sir,

Benin River, April 2, 1863.

IN reply to your letter of March 31st requesting information concerning the late outrage upon Dr. R. C. Henry's factory, I beg leave to state that in the first place, the perpetrator of the outrage, Ikebua, owed to Dr. Henry about fourteen puncheons of oil; another native, Accoradoz, informed Dr. Henry that Ikebua had just received from market about sixteen puncheons of oil, and suggested as a good plan that Dr. Henry should by offering a good price for that oil, induce Ikebua to put the sixteen puncheons oil upon his (Dr. Henry's) beach, when he could chop or seize the fourteen puncheons due to him: this was accordingly done.

Ikebua, it appears, after that determined to have revenge for losing his oil in the above manner.

After several months' time this man's people attempted to steal a canoe from Dr. Henry's factory, which attempt cost him a man killed; this again aroused Ikebua and he in person went to Dr. Henry's house, while Mr. and Mrs. Henry were away, and threatened, to the wife of Mr. Brown, to burn down the whole establishment.

Upon 24th May, Dr. Henry outside the bar, Ikebua attacked his factory with a number of people. Mrs. Henry being frightened ran away through bush to Messrs. Harrison's factory.

Ikebua took keys of the shop from a yellow-man, Emanuel, and helped himself to about 100 cases gin, half-cask bread, some silk and knives; other things also might have been taken away at same time, but as I have stated, so I heard from Dr. Henry himself. Supposing the silk taken to have been to the value of 200*l.*, knives to the value of 100*l.*, the gin 30*l.*, the bread 4*l.*, it would give a total of 334*l.*

Seventy puncheons of oil is the amount that Dr. Henry told me he claimed from Ikebua for the goods stolen. I should think that the claim of 500*l.* would well cover Dr. Henry's entire loss of cargo.

As regards my own affairs, I have only to say that everything has gone on quite unmolested in every way. I therefore have no fault to find further than this, that Jerry thought proper to stop my trade for eight days, and for re-opening the same received from me a puncheon of rum and other goods.

Cause of my trade being stopped was, that I could not pay Jerry salt for two puncheons oil he lent me. I had made no jam for this oil, and my salt was all sold.

The like of the above, I think, that Jerry would not hesitate to repeat, not only to myself, but to any one else for a like petty affair.

I am, &c.

Inclosure 13 in No. 12.

Compact between his Excellency Henry Stanhope Freeman, Esquire, Governor and Commander-in-chief in and over the Settlement of Lagos and its Dependencies, Vice-Admiral of the same, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul for the Bight of Benin, &c., &c., on the one part, and Jerry of Jacqua, Governor of the Benin River, Jerbuffon of Jacqua, and Dola of Bubi, as representing the Chiefs of the Benin River, on the other part.

WHEREAS for some time past no adequate protection has been afforded by the Chiefs to the British merchants in this river, their factories having been attacked, their property stolen, and themselves insulted and threatened, without any redress.

In order, therefore, to terminate the existing disputes, and to ensure for the future greater protection to British commerce, and to the lives and property of British traders—

ARTICLE I.

It is agreed between the said Contracting Parties, that the amount of thirty-five puncheons of palm-oil be paid into the hands of whoever may be designated to that intent as the Representative of the British Government in these parts, the said oil to be paid as compensation to certain merchants whose property has been stolen by people of this river.

ARTICLE II.

Atuatia, of Becky, shall be given up to the British authorities at Lagos within the period of six calendar months, and will be imprisoned at that place for one year, after the expiration of which he will be allowed to return to his country.

ARTICLE III.

Should any robbery be committed henceforward, unless the stolen property be immediately returned or paid for, and compensation made, the offender shall be delivered up to the authorities at Lagos, there to undergo imprisonment, the period of which will depend upon the circumstances of the case; and the Chiefs of the river will be made responsible for the stolen property.

ARTICLE IV.

Any white merchant who shall trade or attempt to trade with any native guilty of a robbery, or attempt to rob, or other crime, until full amends shall have been made for the same, shall have his trade stopped by the Government for a period not exceeding one month.

ARTICLE V.

Any white man who may attempt by violence to obtain payment of trust due to him shall have his trade stopped by the Governor for a period not exceeding one month for the first offence, or until such time as the British authorities at Lagos can be communicated with on the subject.

ARTICLE VI.

The thirty-five puncheons of oil mentioned in Article I shall be paid in the course of eighteen months; but if twelve puncheons of the same be not paid within the period of six months, and all the other conditions of this Agreement fulfilled, the British authorities will consider themselves entitled to adopt what measures they may think advisable to obtain satisfaction, as though this compact had never been made.

ARTICLE VII.

As soon as the indemnity guaranteed by Article I shall have been paid, and the other conditions of this Agreement fulfilled, a comey of one puncheon per 100 tons shall be charged on the European trade, and shall be paid by the merchants to the Chiefs of the place, the division of the same to be made hereafter according to their rank and position in the country.

Inclosure in No. 13.

Mr. Dalton to Mr. Layard.

(Extract.)

Brunswick Cottage, Forton, Gosport, May 27, 1863.

I RESPECTFULLY beg to call attention again to my applications for repayment of 36*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* owing to me for losses sustained during my service with the Niger expedition, as stated in my letter of the 24th February, 1862; and as in your letter of reply of March 26th it is stated that communications had been made to the Governor of Lagos, who is now in England, I hope such information will be obtained from him as will enable my claim to be settled forthwith.

No. 14.

Acting Consul Glover to Earl Russell.—(Received July 12.)

(Extract.)

Lagos, June 9, 1863.

I INCLOSE, for your Lordship's information, copy of a letter I addressed to the Bashorun and Chiefs of Abbeokuta announcing my arrival, and trust that the sentiments I have therein expressed may meet your Lordship's approval. I also inclose a copy of their reply.

In sending my letter to the Bashorun and Chiefs I caused it to be intimated to them privately, by a person resident in Abbeokuta, that if my proposals should be accepted I would write officially and request an interview.

On the 6th instant messengers arrived from the Bashorun and the Chief Atambala, who presented me with a very large fat sheep. The following is the substance of the message they brought down, viz.:—

"Very glad to hear of my safe arrival; very glad to see the letter I sent, more especially as I was an old friend. Since their interview with the late Acting Governor and the Commodore they have been waiting to see what the Governor would do about settling the Iccorodu matter. Since their promise of abstaining from hostilities towards Iccorodu, Iccorodu has carried on hostilities. Knowing that Iccorodu is under our protection they don't like to do anything offensive. They now beg to know what I intend to do about settling the Iccorodu matter, and they will remain quiet until they have heard from me. They beg that if I intend to settle the matter to do it as soon as possible; if otherwise, that they may be told in time, so that they may know what to do."

I proceeded the same day, viz., the 6th instant, in Her Majesty's ship "Handy," to Iccorodu. The people of Iccorodu declared that they will die where they stand, and see their town burnt, before they will again trust their King, because he has brought in the Egbas to destroy Makun and their own town; and during the war the Chiefs of thirty towns who had made their submission, as they are now requested to do, had been afterwards sacrificed, their wives, children and people sold into slavery, and their towns destroyed. I promised to stand between them and their King in negotiating peace, assuring them that Her Majesty's Government could never sanction such atrocity being committed upon them as that which had been perpetrated upon their tribe (viz., Jebu Remos in the interior).

After a long and very stormy debate I succeeded in getting them to place themselves entirely in my hands, and to abstain from further hostility until I had a conference with the other contending tribes.

By this your Lordship will see that I have shown the Egbas and the King of Jebu Ode my willingness to do all on my part to open a way to negotiation.

Your Lordship will observe by the message received from the Egbas, that there is no mention of my application for an interview being received by them; and it is privately intimated that the Iccorodu matter is to be settled (that is, given up to destruction) before my presence among them will be acceptable. I trust, however, that I may be enabled to open a communication with the King of Jebu, when, if the matter be plainly put before him, I think he may be more easily induced to listen than the Egbas, inasmuch as he is at present destroying his own interests, as well as the prosperity of his country.

Inclosure 1 in No. 14.

The Acting Colonial Secretary to the Bashorun and Chiefs of Abbeokuta.

Lagos, May 26, 1863.

I AM directed by his Excellency Lieutenant-Governor Glover, Commander in Her Majesty's Royal Navy, to inform the Bashorun and Chiefs of Abbeokuta that Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to appoint him her Lieutenant-Governor, Commander-in-chief and Vice-Admiral of her Colony of Lagos, and its dependencies, and his Excellency has desired me to express to the Bashorun and Chiefs of Abbeokuta his good wishes for the prosperity, safety, and peace of Abbeokuta, as well as of this country generally.

His Excellency takes this opportunity of reminding the Bashorun that they are not unknown to each other, and that when his Excellency was last at Abbeokuta the Bashorun said that he loved him. Mr. Townsend will remember this, and his Excellency has not forgotten it.

The Bashorun may be certain that his Excellency will, on his part, use his best endeavours towards obtaining a settlement of the present difficulties; and his Excellency would be delighted to receive from the Bashorun the assurance of his co-operation in all measures which may tend to the happiness, peace, and prosperity of the peoples over whom they have been called upon to govern and protect.

Sir,

Aké, Abbeokuta, June 1, 1863.

I AM requested by the Bashorun and Chiefs of Abbeokuta to acknowledge your letter of the 26th ultimo, informing them of your appointment as the Lieutenant-Governor of the Colony of Lagos.

They have requested me to offer you their congratulations on the event of this your appointment.

The Bashorun remembers well that he said that he loved you, and not being unknown to each other, he and the Chiefs sincerely hope that your Excellency will agree with them in measures tending to the general welfare of the country.

Inclosure 1 in No. 17.

Mr. Henry to Acting Consul Glover.

Sir,

"Ethiophe," Lagos, July 9, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform you I have been at Benin River since the 24th of May last, up to the 22nd day of June; that I find it quite impossible to carry on any business whatever in that river. The natives will not come near my establishment, since they do not consider the outrage of May 1862 has been settled. They feel convinced that outrage was of so aggravated a nature that it deserved severe punishment, and they expect it will be inflicted.

The natives do not take the slightest notice of the compact of April 1863, made by Governor Freeman.

Jerry, the Governor of the River Benin, denies in toto the 1st, 2nd, and 6th Articles in the compact. Having asked him how I was to recover my property which was due me, I was advised to catch the slaves passing in the river, and sell them.

I have the honour to inclose you a list of property due me, and likewise an estimate of losses through this outrage, that should your Excellency visit the Benin River after the 2nd of October next, you may be better enabled to form an opinion of the extent of my pecuniary losses through this man's act.

I am now proceeding to England, and shall hope Her Majesty's Government will take my case into further consideration: it is the first of its nature on this coast; God grant it may be the last!

Acting Consul Glover to Earl Russell.—(Received August 14.)

My Lord,

Lagos, July 10, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch dated the 23rd of May, and its inclosure, informing me that Her Majesty's Government have determined to avail themselves of the contract with Mr. McCoskry to forward supplies to Dr. Baikie, and authorizing me to purchase such goods for Dr. Baikie's use as I may consider suitable, to the amount of 300*l.*, and to entrust the same to Mr. McCoskry's care.

I shall take the necessary steps for executing your Lordship's directions; but I would beg leave to bring to the notice of your Lordship that I have been compelled to store a very great quantity of powder on board the hulk, viz., 9,488 kegs of gunpowder.

The quantity being so large (in consequence of our roads to the interior being closed), that the safety of the Colony required that it should be under the safe-keeping of the Government, I am preparing a temporary place where I hope this powder may be landed, stored in such security as I can give it, until the rains (which are at present unprecedented both in their continuance and force) shall be over, when I will build a magazine.

I would suggest to your Lordship whether it would not be better that the man-of-war which ascends the Niger shall tow up the schooner, as I consider that while the tug-steamer "Advance" is up the Niger, Lagos will be at a stand-still until she returns.

This is the worst season for the bar, and there are days, sometimes weeks, when even the "Investigator" dare not attempt to go out, neither can any ship enter or go out during the absence of the steam-tug "Advance."

I have, &c.
(Signed) JOHN H. GLOVER.

No. 19.

Earl Russell to Acting Consul Glover.

Sir,

Foreign Office, August 24, 1863.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 10th ultimo, suggesting, with reference to Mr. McCoskry's proposed expedition up the Niger, whether it would not be better that the man-of-war steamer which ascends that river should tow up the schooner that has been lent to Mr. McCoskry to enable him to carry out his proposed expedition.

I have in reply to state to you that I am not aware that any arrangements have been made for sending a man-of-war steamer up the Niger this year, and even if arrangements had been made for sending one, I should not feel justified in asking the Lords of the Admiralty to instruct the Commander of one of Her Majesty's cruisers to tow a vessel engaged in a private speculation up that river.

It should be borne in mind that when Mr. McCoskry's request to be allowed to have the use of the hulk for the ascent of the Niger was acceded to, it was on the understanding that his own steam-vessel towed her up the river, and the fact that Lagos would be without the use of a steam-tug during the absence of the "Advance," must have been as well known at the time the request was made, as it was subsequently, when you wrote your despatch.

I trust, however, that Mr. McCoskry will be enabled to carry out his proposed expedition without the aid of one of Her Majesty's ships.

I am, &c.

No. 20.

Acting Consul Glover to Earl Russell.—(Received September 11.)

My Lord,

Lagos, August 7, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 23rd June, transmitting copy of a letter from Mr. Dalton calling attention to his claim to be reimbursed the sum of 36*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, the value of some goods belonging to him, which were stolen whilst in their passage through the territories belonging to the Chiefs of Abbeokuta when Mr. Dalton was attached to the Niger Expedition, and desiring me to include this claim in any arrangements that may be made with the Abbeokutans for the settlement of British claims.

I have the honour to state that due attention shall be paid to the same in any arrangements that may be made with the said Chiefs.

I have, &c.

Lagos, August 8, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inclose, for your Lordship's information, copies of correspondence exchanged between this Government and that of Abbeokuta.

Trusting my reply to the Egba Chiefs may meet your Lordship's approval, I have, &c.

Inclosure 1 in No. 21.

Mr. Robbin to Lieutenant-Governor Glover.

Sir, Aké, Abbeokuta, July 22, 1863.
I AM desired by the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta to present you their respectful compliments.

In accordance with the suggestion in the latter clause of your letter of the 11th June last, they request me to inform you that it will give them great pleasure to receive the visit you kindly offered them at Abbeokuta for the calm discussion of the existing state of affairs.

They will be happy to send messengers to accompany you up, as soon as you give them notice of your readiness to start.

They further request me to state that, should you have any intention, on your coming, of bringing any Representative of the Ikorodu, you will kindly give them timely notice, that they may be able to send for a Representative of the Awujale.

I remain, &c.

Inclosure 2 in No. 21.

Mr. Robbin to Lieutenant-Governor Glover.

Sir, Aké, Abbeokuta, July 22, 1863.
THE Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta request me to state for your information that the Ikorodu people have again been on a kidnapping expedition near their war camp in Makun, and have killed two of their men very near the walls of their camp.

Their people no sooner heard of this than they pursued them and caught five of them.

The Bashorun and Elders respectfully request that as the Ikorodu people are under your protection, you would examine into this act of aggression; this being the third time of their having committed acts of this kind on their people since your letter to them dated the 11th June last.

I remain, &c.
(Signed) H. ROBBIN.

Inclosure 3 in No. 21.

Mr. Foresythe to Mr. Robbin.

Sir, Lagos, July 30, 1863.
IN reply to your letter of July 22nd, reporting the three acts of aggression committed by the Ikorodu people, I am directed by his Excellency to state, for the information of the Bashorun and Chiefs, that from inquiry, his Excellency finds as follows:—

The people of Ikorodu are not to be held responsible for the actions of the remnants of the people of Makun who had escaped the destruction of the said town by the Egbas.

That the escaped from Makun gather themselves and encamp near Makun to worry the Egbas who are encamped in their said town.

The people of Ikorodu are attending their farms, and have nothing to do with the war.

That twenty-three days ago the people of Ofin came to and kidnapped seventeen persons from their farms.

That eleven days ago another attack was made on their farms by the Ofins, who took away eight men.

That yesterday a man, Ogufowora, fled from his farm, where were he and five other men, four of whom were taken away by the Ofins, and one killed.

The Jebu Ode have never kept the understanding come to between the Acting Governor and Commodore and Bashorun and Chiefs, viz., that hostilities should be suspended until the Acting Governor went to Makun.

Inclosure 4 in No. 21.

Mr. Foresythe to Mr. Robbin.

Lagos, July 30, 1863.

Sir,

I AM directed by his Excellency to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated July 22nd, and to request you to present his Excellency's compliments to the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta.

In reply to their kind offer to receive his Excellency at Abbeokuta in accordance with the latter clause of his Excellency's despatch dated June 11, "for the calm discussion of the existing state of affairs," his Excellency desires me to state, for the information of the Bashorun and Elders, that if his Excellency's visit shall have for its purpose "the opening of negotiations for the settlement of a general peace," as stated in his Excellency's despatch dated June 11, it will afford his Excellency great pleasure to meet the Bashorun and War Chiefs at some place on the river, say Markoloki or other place near Makun; this would be carrying out the arrangements entered into between the Acting Governor and Commodore and the Bashorun and Elders of Abbeokuta.

The late visit of the Acting Governor and Commodore is not considered by this Government to have been attended with any satisfactory result; and after some days spent in long discussion, the Acting Governor was referred to Makun, an arrangement which has never been carried out (not through any fault of the Government of Lagos).

You will again express to the Bashorun, Elders, and War Chiefs of Abbeokuta the compliments of his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, and assure them of his Excellency's readiness to do all on his part towards opening negotiations which may bring about the settlement of a general peace.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 2 in No. 23.

Lieutenant-Governor Glover to Mr. McCoskry.

(Extract.)

Lagos, September 3, 1863.

HAVING been directed by Earl Russell to entrust to your care goods to the value of not more than 300*l.*, I have placed on board Her Majesty's ship "Investigator," (which vessel will convey you up the Niger) supplies for Dr. Baikie, amounting in value to 293*l.* 5*s.* 10½*d.*; also seven packages for Mr. and Mrs. Hinderer, who are in great distress at Ibadan.

I have also directed two Haussa men and a Yoruban to accompany you; the two men, viz., Harry and Mahomodo, are both known to King Massaba, as my people, and Oshotto the Yoruban is well acquainted with the country.

Should Dr. Baikie be absent from the Confluence when you arrive there, you will endeavour to ascertain where he is, and bearing in mind that the principal object of the expedition is to communicate with that officer, you will use your utmost endeavour to effect this.

Should Dr. Baikie not have been at the Confluence since the visit of the "Investigator" last year, you will at once proceed to King Massaba, at Bidda, or wherever that King may happen to be, taking with you in the "Investigator" the supplies which you have have for Dr. Baikie. I consider that these supplies should not be landed at the Confluence until you have either communicated with Dr. Baikie, wherever he may be (if that be possible), or have seen King Massaba, and learnt from him the latest intelligence of Dr. Baikie.

Should Dr. Baikie be absent from the neighbourhood of the Niger, you will consult with King Massaba as to how, if it be possible, you may obtain a personal interview with Dr. Baikie. You will find that King Massaba will afford you every facility in effecting this object, as I know that he was very much annoyed that Dr. Baikie was absent when the "Investigator" visited the river last year.

Should Dr. Baikie have died, you will endeavour to recover his property, and bring down with you anything that may be of sufficient value, but more especially make every effort to recover and bring away his journals, indeed every scrap of paper belonging to him that you can recover; you will endeavour to obtain every information respecting his death, should it have taken place—when, where, how, and among what people he died. Should any of them be at Bidda or the Confluence, you will (if you find from inquiry that he was kindly treated) reward them liberally. You will endeavour to obtain the amount of any debts he may have owed, and liquidate them; and you will deal most liberally with King Massaba from the supplies under your care.

I must request that as soon as possible you will despatch Harry and Oshotto with the seven packages for Ibadan, obtaining the necessary assistance from King Massaba, who will send his messengers and people with them. I consider that they should return from Ibadan to Lada (Lahday) on the Niger in fourteen days, so as to be enabled to return to the coast in the "Investigator," and I hope the "Investigator" may be able to remain in the neighbourhood of Egga or Lada for that time.

If Dr. Baikie should be sufficiently near to be communicated with, you will find Mahomodo a suitable and trustworthy person to send to him as a messenger. I am not aware what orders Commodore Wilmot will give to the officer in command of the "Investigator," but there can be no doubt that as little delay as possible should take place until you have communicated with either Dr. Baikie or King Massaba; and all Treaty visits to the different towns on the river should be deferred until the principal object of your visit to the river has been effected, viz., communicating either with Dr. Baikie or King Massaba.

Should Dr. Baikie be alive and so far distant as to render any communication with him impossible during the short stay the "Investigator" can make in the river, you will leave the supplies under the charge of King Massaba, and no one else, always supposing that he is willing to undertake it.

You will be particular to impress upon King Massaba Her Majesty's appreciation of his kindness and the protection he has always afforded to her people since they came to him in 1857. You will assure him (and if it be possible make him believe) that we are some day coming to trade with him, and establish permanently factories in his country. You will find this a delicate subject to treat of with him; but from your long residence in this country as a merchant I am quite sure that your discretion and judgment will enable you to effect a good understanding with King Massaba on this point.

I must beg you to remember me to King Massaba, and assure him that I have never forgotten his kindness, in proof of which please hand to him the present I have sent. As soon as the war is over, which at present separates us, you will tell him that we must often see each other's messengers.

With full confidence in your zeal, ability, and discretion, I have, &c.

Sir, Foreign Office, October 23, 1863.
I HAVE received your despatch of the 8th of September last, transmitting a copy of a letter addressed by you to Commodore Wilmot, inclosing a copy of the instructions to Mr. McCoskry on his proceeding to communicate with Dr. Baikie and King Massaba, and I have to convey to you my approval of your having employed Mr. McCoskry on this service, and I concur in your instructions to him.

No. 25.

Acting Consul Glover to Earl Russell.—(Received December 11.)

Extract.) Lagos, November 6, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inclose for your Lordship's information a copy of the report furnished me by Mr. McCoskry of his proceedings while on board Her Majesty's ship "Investigator," which returned here from the River Niger on the 17th October.

By this vessel King Massaba has sent a horse as a present to Her Majesty. I have taken charge of it until I can receive instructions from your Lordship.

There is also a letter from King Massaba to Her Majesty, but this the officer commanding Her Majesty's ship "Investigator" is forwarding by this mail to the Secretary of the Admiralty.

King Massaba has also sent me a horse in lieu of the one he sent to me last year, and which was drowned on the bar.

Inclosure in No. 25.

Mr. McCoskry to Lieutenant-Governor Glover.

Sir, Lagos, October 24, 1863.
IN accordance with your wishes I herewith subjoin a report of the last Niger expedition in Her Majesty's ship "Investigator."

Having on the 3rd ultimo taken in charge the despatches and supplies for Dr. Baikie, and received your instructions, I went on board Her Majesty's ship "Investigator," and soon after she crossed the bar and anchored close to the "Rattlesnake," Commodore Wilmot, who, having supplied her with officers, men, and fuel, despatched her the same day for the Nun.

The "Rattlesnake" (in which I was offered a passage, and which I gladly accepted) followed next morning, and early on the 5th came up with the "Investigator" at anchor some eight miles from the Nun. The "Rattlesnake" towed her the remaining distance, and this day and the next were employed in putting on board the "Investigator" fuel and other supplies for the expedition.

On the morning of the 7th all was ready, and the Commodore having given the Commander instructions with reference to the Treaties to be made, supplied him with drafts of the same, and furnished him with presents for the Chiefs with whom he treated.

I conceived that any interference of mine in this department would be unbecoming, and therefore whatever credit is due for the negotiation of Treaties belongs to the Commodore and his officers.

We crossed the bar, and anchored off the mission station at 2 P.M.; and the Commander having gone ashore, the Rev. Mr. Crowther called a meeting of some men styling themselves Chiefs of Acarsa, who the same day signed a Treaty, and promised to protect the English flag which was hoisted; they claim both banks of the river. These Chiefs, and the people I saw here, struck me as being the lowest type of African I have yet seen; the acquisition and consumption of rum and tobacco seem to be the chief end of their existence.

Having taken on board the Rev. S. Crowther and some other passengers at 10 A.M. next morning, we proceeded up the river; and while, within the influence of the tide, could see nothing but a gloomy luxuriance of mangrove vegetation. At 3 P.M. we passed sundry islands, in the neighbourhood of which some small clearings, growing bananas, and sugar-cane were seen; as we ascend, these became larger and more numerous; and as the oil, palm, and silk-cotton tree supersede, the mangrove villages became frequent, the population turning out to gaze in wonder at the steamer; canoes, said to be from Brass, are seen going up and coming down the river, the one going for and the other returning with palm oil; they are all armed with one or more small carronades.

At 7 A.M. on the 13th anchored at Onitsha, the land being well above the highest level of the river, and from the bank slopes upwards gently till it attains, in a few miles, the height of 400 or 500 feet; the town is rather over a mile from the landing. The Church Missionary Society have here a station, which has a clean and healthy appearance; the soil is good and easily cleared; palm-oil is already produced in considerable quantities, and cotton only requires a steady demand to increase its production to an almost unlimited extent.

The King and Chiefs of this place are desirous of receiving emigrants from British Settlements; they would readily grant them land to cultivate, and afford them all the assistance and protection in their power.

Promising to make a long stay on our return, we were again under weigh by 3 P.M., and soon after passed the pretty village Asabi.

On the 15th, at 9:40 A.M., we passed the sandstone cliffs of Idda, waterworn and bare to the height of 80 feet, then sloping and covered with vegetation to the top. On the morning of the 16th arrived at Gbebe; here Mr. Crowther and the rest of the passengers left us, the station here being the highest point of missionary enterprise on the Niger. The King of Gbebe died about nine months ago, and the Government is now administered by three of the principal Chiefs, two of whom we met at the mission-house; the other Chief was ill. I learnt that here, and in all the towns about, the small-pox had been and was now carrying off numbers of the people. This town owes allegiance to the Alle of Idda, but it is virtually independent. By 11 A.M. we were moving towards Lukoja, where we arrived at noon. Dr. Baikie soon after came on board, and looked in better health than I expected. I delivered to him his mail-bag and packages; he informed me afterwards that he received letters now which should have come last year, and others, he feared, were missing altogether.

We remained at Lukoja till the afternoon of the 19th, when, Dr. Baikie having come on board, we started for Egga at noon. Next day we stopped at Bidon, called upon the Chief and desired him to send messengers to Bidda to announce our coming to the King, and also get him to send men with us to procure canoes at Egga.

On the 21st, at 8:25 A.M., anchored in the creek close to the town of Egga, and the men sent on shore about the canoes; during the day the natives brought off over half a ton of ivory, most of which they sold. Before dark the vessel went into the stream to avoid as much as possible the swarms of various insects which infest the river. Next morning, the canoes having come off, prepared to start; we then gave them our interpreter, servants, and luggage to convey, and the Commander, the Second Master, Dr. Baikie, and myself preferring the ship's gig, we pushed off at 10 A.M., and, about three miles higher up, crossed to the left bank, and pulled up a small river which passed the village of Wonagi, six miles of Bidda; the current was strong, and though the distance passed in the bush could not been more than 55 miles, we did not reach Wonagi till 9 P.M. on the 24th; and, being there detained till the King sent horses, we only got to Bidda at 6 P.M. on the 25th. The country between Wonagi and Bidda is all under cultivation; the shea-butter trees standing in the farms with just sufficient intervals between to avoid interference with the growth of the corn-crop below. Some distance outside the gates we were met by a mounted Chief and a party of horsemen, who saluted us, and led the way through the town to the King's residence, where we waited only a few minutes, and were then, without ceremony, ushered into the presence of the King. He was reclining on a mat, and had some spread for us, the custom here being to talk in this position; he said he merely wanted to see and welcome us, and as we must be tired he would not detain us, but would send to show us our quarters—a very sensible proceeding, of which we took immediate advantage and retired. I may here state that this day, and every day while we remained, the King sent food, both cooked and uncooked, sufficient for three times the number of our whole party, and he also sent cowries sufficient to defray all incidental daily expenses.

Next day we made an official visit, and His Majesty, without loss of time, went straight to the subject most interesting to him, and indeed to us. He said his father had seen white men at Rabbah, his brother also had seen them, and he himself had been visited several times; to both his predecessors and himself hopes had been held out of permanent trading establishments being formed in the country; but up to this time he had not seen any, and he did not know what to think. He said it was not his custom to deceive any one; the productions which he had before said his country afforded were still to be found, and his people were anxious to partake in the benefit they knew the Yoruba country derived from its trade with the white men. Dr. Baikie, acting as interpreter and spokesman, explained to him the reason why as yet no trading establishments had been made so high up as his country, and how the factories lower down the river, of which he had heard, had finally been withdrawn in consequence of the death of Mr. McGregor Laird; he assured the King that the attention of the people in England was more than ever directed to the countries on the Niger, and that there was little doubt that next year at least one expedition fitted out expressly for trade would ascend the river. He seemed so far satisfied with the explanation, and, alluding to the war in the Yoruba country, he said he was in favour of the Ibadans having direct road to Lagos; and he said when opportunity offered he would assist them: he added, however, that he thought if he kept a road open from his country to Ibadan, we should keep it open thence to Lagos. Nevertheless he maintained that the river is the safest and easiest route, and he urged us not to neglect it. He promised full protection now as far as the Confluence, and in a short time he hoped to be able to protect us efficiently as far as Idda; lower down we must manage ourselves. I learned that he can turn out 2,000 armed horsemen, and I saw reason to believe it. The walls of Bidda inclose a rectangular area of 3,000 by 2,500 yards or thereabouts; they are 7 to 8 feet high, with a ditch 10 feet wide, as many deep; the walls are in good repair. The population may be 70,000; the town does not occupy more than two-thirds of the inclosed space.

On the 28th we gave the King the presents; he examined each article, and at the end seemed much gratified. To-day it was settled that only loads made up in native fashion could safely be sent to the Rev. Mr. Hinderer at Ibadan, and these the King could not dispatch for some days to come; he promised, however, they should be sent the first safe opportunity. The two men who were to be left to take charge of them I instructed to make the best of their way from Ibadan through Ketu and Okeodan to Lagos.

This afternoon Commander Gambier, who had fever the day before, becoming worse, Dr. Baikie advised his immediate return to the vessel; and as the King would not hear of the whole party leaving, it was arranged that I should accompany him to the vessel next day, Dr. Baikie and Mr. Adlam remaining to receive the return presents and letter for Her Majesty and you which the King said he would write.

On the 29th at 7:30 we left Bidda, embarked in the boat at 10 A.M., and pulling all day with the current, arrived on board the "Investigator" at 7:45 P.M. Dr. Baikie and Mr. Adlam arrived on the afternoon of the 4th instant, the horses from the King arrived and were received on board safely on the afternoon of the 5th, and at 1 P.M. on the 6th anchored at Lukoja; observing that, although at Egga the river had fallen at least two feet, it had here risen about six inches. As the "Investigator" would go to-morrow to Gbebe to procure wood, I decided upon remaining with Dr. Baikie till the 9th, by which time he would be ready with his despatches and letters. I had thus a few days to look around me at Lukoja; and the result of my observation is, that I consider it better adapted for the residence of Europeans than any other part in the Niger. The situation is dry and the water good; the soil is rich—corn, yams, sugar-cane, and other tropical productions growing luxuriantly with very little labour. Cotton of three varieties is indigenous, and is not grown in large quantities simply because there is no demand for it. This place possesses peculiar advantages for the establishment of trading factories, inasmuch as it is isolated, and free from the dangers and annoyances incident to living in a populous native town, ruled by a native Chief. Here Dr. Baikie has already established the nucleus of a British settlement: the people under his protection are all free, many of them having been redeemed by him; they have brought a considerable tract of land under cultivation, and the place seems perfectly self-supporting; in all disputes the people refer to him and abide by his decision. Massuba is willing to define a boundary within which British law should be administered; and if this was done, and the place managed with good sense and judgment, it would speedily become a most important centre of commerce and civilization. There, as elsewhere, the utmost caution would be necessary in dealing with runaway slaves seeking protection wherever possible; full value should be paid as redemption; but cases might arise in which the slave should be sent back to the master; for if the natives once see indiscriminate protection given to runaways, our position there would speedily become untenable.

On the 11th at 5:30 we left Gbebe on our way down; the Chiefs of the place would not sign the Treaty, referring the Commander to the Allah of Idda, at which place we anchored at 11:15 A.M., and the Commander, with the Rev. Mr. S. Crowther and others, having landed and ridden up to the town, it was found the King could not be seen for five days; so next morning we proceeded down the river, and arriving at Onitsha, a visit was made to the King, and he and his Chiefs having signed the Treaty, with the exception of the clause abolishing human sacrifices, which they said could not be done at once, the party returned on board. I observed that in this place though both oil and cotton is abundant, the natives were ignorant of the use of lamps, using instead, torches and lighted brands of resinous wood. At noon on the 13th, we were off Abo, and landing, found the town mostly under water, pulled through the town in the gig, and the old Chief Tchukuma having sent a boy, who spoke English, to welcome us, we called upon him, but finding no part of his house dry, he came into the boat, and talked a few minutes. He and Mr. Crowther were old friends, and from the latter I learned that Tchukuma has always been a steady friend to white men, and as far as he could protected the factory of Mr. Laird from the rapacity of the late King Aje; having procured a guide, we proceeded to the house of the King, which was in a very similar state to the rest. The King received us on the only dry spot there was; he was grotesquely dressed in a soldier's coat of the beginning of the century, a high red comical cap and green velvet breeches. He, however, talked sensibly; he was glad to see a ship off his town, as he feared the conduct of his predecessor Aje had given it a bad name. He said Aje was alone to blame for the plunder of Mr. Laird's factory, and he hoped as he was dead traders would again come to Abo; he assured us that during his rule both traders and missionaries would be protected; he readily signed the Treaty; and having given him his presents, which he received with great satisfaction, we took leave of him, and went on board. I sent a small present to Tchukuma, and the same day we got under weigh, and without communicating with any other place we arrived at the mouth of the river late in the day on the 14th. On the 15th, coal and wood was taken on board, and next morning crossed the bar, and arrived at Lagos on the 17th, without losing a man. The cases of fever we did have on board were, in my opinion, caused by exposure on shore, and the want of rest at night. I suffered only from a cold. The lower part of the Delta should always, if possible, be passed without stopping; higher up the river is as healthy as any other part of tropical Africa.

I am, &c.

AFRICA. (Consular)—Bight of Biafra.

No. 26.

Earl Russell to Consul Burton.

Sir,

Foreign Office, January 12, 1863.

I TRANSMIT to you herewith a copy of a letter from the African Association at Liverpool, inclosing copies of Agreements proposed to be entered into between Pepple, King of the Bonny country, on the one part, and Messrs. Foster and Chamerovzow on the other part, by which certain exclusive privileges of trade and navigation are to be granted to the latter in consideration of the sum of 20,000*l.*, to be paid by them to the King.

I have to acquaint you that I referred the papers in question for the consideration of the proper Law Officer of the Crown, and in conformity with his opinion I have to state to you that the Agreement, which restricts for the period of twenty years, to particular persons, the rights of navigating the River Bonny, and of placing exclusive trading establishments thereon, is at variance with the letter and the spirit of the VIth Article of the Treaty with the King and Chiefs of the Bonny of the 21st of November, 1848, which confers upon all Her Majesty's subjects the right of trading freely in all the rivers, places, and ports of that kingdom.

I have accordingly to desire that you will inform King Pepple that any privileges of trade or navigation which he may grant to Messrs. Foster and Chamerovzow and Viscount Thury will be claimed equally for all British subjects.

I am, &c.

(Signed) RUSSELL.

Inclosure 1 in No. 26.

The Vice-Chairman of the Liverpool African Association to Earl Russell.

My Lord,

African Association, Liverpool, December 18, 1862.

I HAVE been requested to forward to your Lordship the inclosed copies of Agreements proposed to be entered into between Pepple, King of Bonny, West Coast of Africa, and Messrs. John Foster and Louis Alexis Chamerovzow, of London, and Viscount de Thury, of Paris, by which it will be seen that exclusive trading privileges are proposed to be granted by the King to these parties. It is clear that such exclusive privileges will operate most prejudicially to the interests of all the other parties trading in that river. About 15,000 tons of palm oil are exported annually from that river to this country. Almost all this oil is brought down the creeks and rivers from the up-country, and such proposed trading-stations would, or might, effectually intercept this trade passing to the vessels trading in the river. It would also be very likely to lead to disturbances between the Native Chiefs and the persons living at such stations; and as some of the contracting parties are foreigners, it would probably lead to interference by the men of war of their respective countries, the result of which it is impossible to predict.

The proposed agreement would appear to be clearly at variance with the Treaty of the 21st November, 1848, concluded by this country with the King and Chiefs of the Bonny, and alluded to by Lord Palmerston in a letter to this Association, dated the 7th of November, 1849, viz. :—

Article VI. "The subjects of the Queen of England may always trade freely with the people of the Bonny in every article they may wish to buy and sell in all the places and ports and rivers within the territories of the Kings and Chiefs of the Bonny and throughout the whole of their dominions. And the King and Chiefs of the Bonny pledge themselves to show no favour and give no privilege to the ships and traders of other countries which they do not show to those of England;—”

When the French Government attempted to obtain a Treaty by which English traders would have been effectually excluded, and no doubt the French Government would have endorsed the Treaty had it been made.

We consider it therefore highly important to draw your Lordship's attention to this matter in order that measures may be adopted to protect British interests in the Bonny.

I have, &c.

(Signed) THOMAS HARRISON, Vice-Chairman.

Inclosure 2 in No. 26.

Memorandum of Agreement made and entered into this 16th day of August, 1862, between Richard Thwaites, of Highbury Terrace, Islington, in the county of Middlesex, Esquire, Agent for and on behalf of King Pepple, of the Bonny, hereinafter called the said party hereto of the first part, and M. Etienne Vicomte de Thury, of 26, Rue de l'Université, Paris, in the Empire of France; John Foster, of 28, Queen-street, in the city of London, Gentleman, and Louis Alexis Chamerozow, of 27, New Broad-street, in the said city of London, Esquire, hereinafter called the said parties hereto of the second part: Witnesseth that the said party hereto of the first part agrees, on behalf of the said King Pepple, his heirs and successors, to grant to the said parties hereto of the second part the following privileges, that is to say:—

1st. THE exclusive right of way or navigation from above the town of Bonny for steamers and other vessels up, in, and through the River Bonny, which is the better of the two only practicable entrances into the Niger for the term of twenty years, from the 1st of January, 1863; such right, however, not to interfere with the rights of native traders to navigate the said river, or with the rights of the King and his successors to navigate the same.

2nd. The exclusive right of establishing trading stations on the banks of the said River Bonny above the town of Bonny, such right not to interfere with any rights of the King or his successors to establish stations to trade on his or their personal account, or in combination with any person or persons being the born subject or subjects of the said King or his successors, but not as agent for or in combination or co-partnership with any trade firm, company, person or persons whomsoever not born subjects of the said King or his successors.

And the said parties hereto of the second part agree that, upon proof being given to them in city of London of the ratification of this Agreement by the said King Pepple they will pay, within three months after such proof has been given as aforesaid, to the said King, or to his authorized agent or agents in that behalf, the sum of 20,000*l.*

And it is agreed and declared, by and between the parties hereto, that this Agreement and all stipulations herein contained is and are to become null and void in either of the following events:—

1st. If this agreement be not ratified by the said King within three months from the date hereof.

Provided always, and it is hereby further expressly understood and agreed between said parties hereto, that nothing herein contained shall exempt the said parties hereto of the second part from paying to the said King of Bonny and his successors such rates, tolls, customs dues, or other assessments in respect of their vessels, steamers, boats, and barges, or their freights, cargoes, or merchandize, or of the vessels, steamers, boats, barges, freights, cargoes, or merchandize of any person or persons, or company or companies for the time being claiming under the said parties hereto of the second part, or entitled to use the said right of way or navigation by virtue of this Agreement, or of any deed or deeds to be executed in pursuance thereof, as hitherto have been or shall be usually and from time to time levied and paid in respect of the vessels, steamers, boats, and barges, freights, cargoes, or merchandize of other parties passing into or up the said River Bonny as far or as high as the town and port of Bonny, or as the said King and his successors hitherto hath and have been, and now is or are entitled from time to time to

Provided also, and it is hereby declared, that every right of way, interest, and privilege whatsoever hereby provisionally agreed to be sold or assigned, is agreed to be so sold or assigned, and to be taken and accepted without any prejudice whatsoever, and entirely subject to all and every the vested rights or right, or interests or interest, of any third parties or party whatsoever in the premises, or any part thereof.

It is further agreed that, in case of the happening of either of the events on which this Agreement shall become so null and void as aforesaid, neither party shall have any recourse or claim whatsoever upon the other party in respect of the aforesaid Agreement. And particularly it is agreed that nothing herein contained shall in any manner render liable the said Richard Thwaites to any persons, or in any respect whatsoever. And lastly, it is hereby agreed that the words "the said party hereto of the first part" mean and shall include, as well the said King Pepple as his successors, and the words "the said parties hereto of the second part" mean and shall include, not only the said M. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this day of

Signed, sealed, and delivered by the above-named Pepple, King of the Bonny, in the presence of us.

Dear King Pepple,

6, Old Jury, London, August 21, 1862.

Your Agent, Mr. Richard Thwaites, called on us a short time since with reference to a proposal made by the Vicomte de Thury and some other gentlemen to purchase of you the exclusive right of way through and of establishing trading stations in the upper portion of the Bonny River. Mr. Thwaites informed us you were at present requiring a considerable sum of money, and we considered such an arrangement as the above would be advantageous to you, not only in meeting that requirement, but also that it would greatly extend the navigation through the lower part of the River Bonny, and proportionably increase your revenues from the Custom dues and tolls payable at the port of Bonny.

We therefore suggested that an Agreement should be drawn up between Mr. Thwaites and the parties with whom the arrangement was proposed, and after considerable negotiation the Agreement inclosed herewith has been come to and signed by Mr. Thwaites, on your behalf, and the other parties, subject however to its ratification by yourself.

You will at once observe that the Agreement in nowise interferes with your rights to trade as at present exercised.

We submit the terms of the Agreement with great confidence to your approval, and if, as we doubt not, you do approve, you will please act on the following instructions.

We send three signed Agreements, one of which is duly attested by Mr. Venn, the Notary Public of this city. At the foot of each Agreement there is appended a clause of ratification which you must sign, if you please, where we have marked your name, and let a witness sign his name and address where we have marked "A.B., of &c." When you have done this, please return two of the Agreements (the one attested by the Notary, and one of the others) to us by the next post. The third Agreement you can keep for your own satisfaction and use, and we also inclose for your use a plain copy of the Agreement.

It will be necessary, in order to carry out this Agreement, to appoint Mr. Thwaites your attorney for that purpose to receive the moneys payable, and execute the necessary deeds, &c.; and we herewith inclose also such power of attorney for your execution. Please execute it before two witnesses, who must sign their names and addresses where we have marked "A.B. and C.D., of &c."

We also inclose an authority to Mr. Thwaites to pay your necessary expenses in reference to the matter, and to pay the balance of the moneys to be received into Messrs. Gurney's bank, or any other bank or establishment you desire. Please sign this also, and fill up the blank left for the name of the bank or establishment.

In conclusion, we sincerely hope this scheme will meet your approbation, and that on your returning the papers all executed and signed by you, we may be able to carry it out successfully.

Awaiting your instructions, we are, &c.

(Signed) BEVAN AND WHITTING.

To Pepple, King of the Bonny.

Dear Sir,

I hereby authorize and request you out of any sum or sums of money to be received by you as my attorney, under or by virtue of a power of attorney I have this day executed enabling you to act in my behalf in carrying out the terms of Agreement between yourself and M. Etienne Vicomte de Thury and others, to retain and reimburse yourself all expenses to which you have or shall have been put with reference to the said Agreement and power of attorney, or the subject matter thereof, and also to pay to Messrs. Bevan and Whitting, my solicitors, all their costs, charges, and expenses in reference thereto respectively, and I request you to pay the balance of any such sum or sums to _____, of London, to my account.

Dated this _____ day of _____, 1862.

I am, &c.

Richard Thwaites, Esq.,
10, Highbury Terrace, Islington.

No. 27.

Consul Burton to Earl Russell.—(Received January 23.)

(Extract.)

London, January 10, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to bring the following circumstances to your notice.

It would be uncalled for to prove by lengthy calculations that the Niger is the most promising of the four great African rivers. And it is hardly required to show that the malarious region at the mouth is rapidly traversed by means of steam, and that the upper regions are rendered undangerous by the use of quinine.

Still the work of exploitation remains. I need not enter into the history of previous explorations. Their failure, however, may easily be traced to a confusion of interests, scientific and naval, commercial and missionary. Promises were made to the natives which were never fulfilled, and at last the delight with which the advent of the white trader was hailed yielded to disappointment. Rivals in the Brass and Benin Rivers, jealous of the notice and of the subsidy bestowed upon the Niger, naturally did not attempt to allay the dissatisfaction of the Ibo (Eboe) peoples; the consequence has been bloodshed and waste of property as well as life.

There is little to be dreaded from the hostility of the villages on the lower course of the Niger. What they want is "comey," alias transit dues. Their claim is lawful as that of any European Custom-house, and it should be settled in a commercial and practical way by some official directly in the service of Her Majesty's Government. At the same time they might be warned against the machinations of the Brass traders, and these in their turn should be invited to co-operate in opening the Niger, a river to which they could so easily transfer themselves.

After these preliminary measures agents would be established at the following six stations, viz.:

1. On the Nun River at the mouth of the Akassa Creek.

2. Abo, at the head of the Lower Delta.

3. Anjama, at the head of the Upper Delta.

4. Onicha (Onitsha), midway between the sea and the Confluence.

5. Idda, on the left bank between Onicha and the Confluence.

6. The Confluence of the Kwora (Niger) and the Benin (Chad). Where sufficient water is found, hulks should be preferred to habitations on shore. Agents should be in duplicate for each station, one being in the river whilst the other is recruiting his health in Europe. I need hardly say that the selection of sober and honest men is of primal importance.

But these establishments must fail unless supported by a regular line of steamers, and the want of it may be laid down as the main cause of failure in the Niger. Flat-bottomed boats, drawing not more than $2\frac{1}{2}$ feet, could reach the Confluence even in the driest season, and make Rabba during the greatest part of the year. Of these "inter-colonials," one should make the voyage once every month or six weeks.

It is clearly impossible for any individual single-handed to undertake this extensive project with reasonable prospect of success; and though several companies are spoken of, they will hardly think of forming without a subsidy. The African Steam-ship Company might undertake the scheme, although their present charter forbids them to trade. A Negro Association at Sierra Leone, and a West African Trading Company at Liverpool, confine themselves to the coast. The most capable, perhaps, would be the Niger Navigation and Trading Company now in process of formation. Of a total capital of 100,000*l.*, they desire to raise without going to the public 50,000*l.*, and of this sum 20,000*l.* has, it is said, been paid in.

The sum of 4,000*l.* was expended for three years on the Niger, and 5,000*l.* on the Zambesi River in South-Eastern Africa. This sum total allowed for a reasonable time within which new river-boats would pay themselves, and, devoted to a monthly postal vessel communicating with the Confluence, would, I believe, at once form a Company.

I would conclude by soliciting your Lordship's attention to the advisability of limiting upon the Niger River the importation of arms, ammunition, and spirituous liquors. The coast tribes of the Bight of Biafra have been singularly demoralized by the latter, and the former would be used merely as implements for slave-hunting by the now half-armed tribes of the interior.

Mr. Layard to Consul Burton.

Sir,

Foreign Office, March 23, 1863.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to transmit to you the accompanying copies of a letter and its inclosures from Admiral Sir Baldwin Walker, &c.,* relative to the conveyance by the British schooner "White Mouse" of African labourers from the Brass River to Fernando Po.

There are strong suspicions that the men taken to that island were slaves, and that a traffic in negroes is carried on between the mainland and Fernando Po, under the guise of introducing free labourers.

I am to desire that you will furnish his Lordship with a full report of the circumstances under which the negroes in question were introduced into Fernando Po; and I am further to desire that you will inform his Lordship what foundation there may be for the report referred to in Commander Douglas's letter of the 2nd December last, that it is the intention of the Spanish authorities to establish a system of free emigration from Africa to the Colony of Fernando Po; and, should the report be well founded, in what manner it is intended to carry it into effect.

I am, &c.

Consul Burton to Earl Russell.—(Received June 10.)

My Lord,

Lagos, May 8, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that I landed at this place on the 22nd ultimo, for the purpose of obtaining a cruiser to visit the Oil Rivers, and have addressed a requisition to Commodore Wilmot to that effect.

On the 2nd May the Commodore informed me that at present no cruiser can be spared, but that he will place one at my disposal when opportunity offers. The generally disturbed state of the coast causes me to fear a long period of inactivity.

I have, &c.

No. 30.

Earl Russell to Consul Burton.

Sir,

Foreign Office, June 23, 1863.

I TRANSMIT to you herewith, for your information, copy of a despatch from Commodore Wilmot,† reporting the particulars of his visit to the King of Dahomey in the months of December and January last.

* Class A, No. 107.

† Ibid., Nos. 103.

Although Commodore Wilmot did not succeed in getting the King to give up the Slave Trade, or to make any promise that he would desist from his barbarous massacres or customs, Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that it will on every account be advisable to cultivate the friendly relations which have been established between the British authorities on the coast and the King; for it is only by personal intercourse with the Dahomian Chief that we may hope to persuade him to give up his human sacrifices, and to turn his energies to the development of the resources of his country.

You will see from Commodore Wilmot's report, that he led the King to expect that he would either return himself to Abomey at the expiration of six months, or that he would be visited by some other officer deputed by Her Majesty's Government to confirm the friendly and conciliatory messages of which the Commodore was the bearer. It has been determined that the expectations thus held out to the King shall not be disappointed; but as the important duties devolving upon the senior officer on the African station will not permit of his absenting himself from his command, it will not be possible for Commodore Wilmot to return to Dahomey.

Under these circumstances Her Majesty's Government, having every confidence in your judgment, discretion, and knowledge of the African character, have determined to intrust to you the duty of making known their views to the King and Chiefs of Dahomey; and I have accordingly to desire that you will hold yourself in readiness to proceed to Abomey as soon as possible after the arrival on the African coast of the packet which will leave this country with the African mails on the 24th of July next.

You will receive by that opportunity further and detailed instructions for your guidance, together with such presents as it may be deemed advisable to make to the King, and in the meanwhile it will perhaps be expedient that you should announce through the authorities at Whydah that you will shortly proceed on a mission to Abomey.

I have requested the Lords of the Admiralty to give directions that you may be conveyed in a ship of war to and from Whydah, but that the journey to Abomey should not be undertaken till the close of the rainy season.

Your instructions will be forwarded to you at Lagos, at which place it will be desirable that you should wait the arrival of the next mail.

I am, &c.
(Signed) RUSSELL.

No. 31.

Mr. Layard to Consul Burton.

Sir,

Foreign Office, June 23, 1863.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 18th of December last, I am directed by Earl Russell to transmit to you a copy of a letter signed by certain Chiefs and traders in the Bonny River, complaining that the trade in that river has suffered greatly in consequence of the refusal of Her Majesty's Government to recognize the new Tariff proposed by King Pepple to be levied upon all vessels trading in that river, and requesting to be informed why Her Majesty's Government refuse to sanction the levying of dues from the African Steam-Packet Company's hulk anchored in that river.

I am to instruct you to inform the Bonny Chiefs, in reply to their letter, that Her Majesty's Government see no reason to alter the decision already come to regarding the Tariff and the demand made by them for duties on the African Steam-Packet Company's hulk. If the Bonny Chiefs wish to increase the revenue of the river, the wisest course to pursue will be to take proper steps for increasing the quantity of oil and other native produce, by which means they will obtain a larger trade and an increased revenue.

I am, &c.

Inclosure in No. 31.

Chiefs of Bonny River to Earl Russell.

Sir,

Bonny Parliament House, May 5, 1863.

WE, Bonny Chiefs and traders, say, firstly, that it is necessary that you should sign and pass the new Tariff, as the natives in the interior will not be bound by any laws, nor will they make roads, nor anything else that is wanted to improve oil coming down, until yearly presents are sent down to them by the King Pepple, that is the reason why King Pepple has made the dues higher, and last year canoes were sent to Eboe to ask them why oil did not come up: the Eboe Chiefs killed a great number of the men, and said they had not received their yearly presents; unless you sign the new Tariff oil cannot come up as before. Secondly, that the African Steam-Packet Company's hulk was in this river about two years, and sold coals to Captain Straw, Charles Horsfall and Son's agent, for their steamer; also a great quantity to one Spanish steamer. What reason, and why you say they must not pay?

Please to send your reply to Richard Thwaites, Esq., who will immediately forward it to us.

A letter nearly the same as this is sent, per this mail, to the Liverpool African Association.

We are, &c.

Sir, Foreign Office, July 23, 1863.
WITH reference to my despatch of the 23rd ultimo, instructing you to hold yourself in readiness to proceed on a Mission to the King of Dahomey, I have now to acquaint you that the presents with which you will be entrusted for the King, and the instructions for your guidance, will be forwarded to you by the packet which leaves Liverpool with the African mails on the 23rd of August, and you will therefore make your arrangements accordingly.

Consul Burton to Earl Russell.—(Received August 14.)

My Lord, Bonny River, June 27, 1863.
I HAVE the honour to inform you that I have addressed King Pepple to the effect that according to the tenor of his Treaty engagements with Her Majesty's Government (21st November, 1848), he is not justified in granting exclusive privileges to any Company or foreign Power whatever.

Sundry irregularities have been brought to my notice by the Court of Equity, Bonny River, which, when forwarded to me in writing, shall be submitted to your Lordship.

I have, &c.

No. 34.

Earl Russell to Consul Burton.

Sir, Foreign Office, August 20, 1863.
YOU were informed by my despatch of the 23rd of June last, that you had been selected by Her Majesty's Government to proceed on a mission to the King of Dahomey to confirm the friendly sentiments expressed by Commodore Wilmot to the King on the occasion of the visit which he made to that Chief in the months of December and January last.

I have accordingly to desire that as soon after the receipt of this despatch as it may be feasible to do so, you will proceed to Dahomey, taking care first, by previous communication with the King, to ascertain that a proper reception will be accorded to you.

You will on your arrival inform the King, that the many important duties which devolve on Commodore Wilmot as the officer in command of Her Majesty's naval forces on the African coast, have prevented him returning in person to confirm the good understanding which it is hoped has been established between the King and Her Majesty's Government by the Commodore's late visit. You will state that the Commodore faithfully reported all that passed between him and the King, and that he correctly made known the wishes and feelings of Her Majesty's Government on the several topics on which he addressed the King.

With regard to the question of the export of slaves from his territories, you will not fail to impress upon the King the importance which Her Majesty's Government attach to the cessation of this Traffic.

Her Majesty's Government admit the difficulties which the King may find in putting a stop to a trade that has so long existed in his country, and from which his ancestors have derived so much profit; but his income from this source must be very small compared with that of former Kings, and it will be to his interest to find out some other source of revenue before that which he now derives from the sale of his fellow-men to the slave-dealers is entirely put a stop to.

You will remind the King that he himself suggested to Commodore Wilmot that if we wished to put a stop to the Slave Trade, we should prevent white men from coming to buy slaves, and you will state that Her Majesty's Government having determined that the Traffic shall cease, will take steps to prevent effectually the export of slaves from his territories. You will add, in illustration of what you state, that Her Majesty's Government have concluded a Treaty with the United States' Government, which will prevent for the future any American vessels from coming to ship slaves.

With regard to human sacrifices, I rejoice to find from Commodore Wilmot's Report that the number of victims at the King's customs has been exaggerated.

It is to be feared, however, that much difficulty will be experienced in prevailing upon the King to put a stop entirely to this barbarous practice, which prevails more or less openly along the greater part of the Western Coast of Africa. But we must seek, by whatever influence we may possess or be able to attain, to mitigate, if we cannot at once prevent, the horrors of these customs, and I rely upon your using your best efforts for this purpose.

The King in his interview with Commodore Wilmot expressed a wish that English merchants should come and settle and make trade at Whydah, and he offered to help to repair the old English fort there, and to permit it to be garrisoned by English troops.

You will thank the King for this mark of his confidence, and you will at the same time state that, as he has promised to protect any British merchants who may settle at Whydah, Her Majesty's Government put entire faith in his promises, and see no necessity for sending English soldiers to garrison the fort there. You will, however, add that there is one thing needful in order that the King's wishes in regard to the settlement of English merchants at Whydah should be carried out, and that is, that there should be a sufficiency of lawful trade to induce them to do so.

English merchants cannot take slaves in return for their goods; they must have palm oil, ivory, cotton, and such other articles as the country is capable of producing. The King will see, therefore, that it very much depends on his own exertions and those of his subjects whether it will be worth while for British merchants to settle at Whydah. Should, however, the King think fit to enter into an engagement with Her Majesty's Government to encourage lawful trade, and to promote as far as lies in his power the development of the resources of his country, Her Majesty's Government would be willing to appoint an agent to reside at Whydah to be an organ of communication with the King, and to assist in carrying out his views.

As an earnest of their friendly feelings, Her Majesty's Government have caused the presents, of which a list is inclosed, to be prepared and forwarded to you for presentation to the King. You will see that, as far as possible, the King's wishes, as expressed to Commodore Wilmot, have been carried out in regard to the articles selected for presents, with the exception of the carriage and horses, and with respect to these you will explain to the King that, in the first place, it would be a difficult matter to get English horses out to the coast, and, even supposing they arrived safely at their destination, it would be very doubtful, from the nature of the country and climate, whether they would long survive their arrival.

If, however, our future relations with the King should be of a nature to warrant such a proceeding, Her Majesty's Government would not hesitate to endeavour to comply with his wishes by sending him an English carriage and horses.

I have only, in conclusion, to add, that it has been suggested to Her Majesty's Government that, among the King's captives, there may still be some of the coloured Christian prisoners taken at Ishagga; and if, on inquiry, you should be able to ascertain that this is the case, you will state to the King that it would be taken by Her Majesty's Government as an earnest of his friendly feeling, and as showing a desire to perform his promise to them, if he would restore these prisoners to liberty.

I am, &c.

Foreign Office, August 20, 1863.

WITH reference to my other despatch of this day's date, containing instructions for your guidance on proceeding to Dahomey, I have to state that you should, if possible, stipulate with the King, before proceeding to Abomey, that there shall be no human sacrifices during the time of your stay in his capital; and you will, under any circumstances, decline to sanction these sacrifices by your presence if they should unfortunately take place whilst you are in the country.

I have requested the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to give directions that you may be conveyed to and from Whydah in a ship of war; and I have also informed their Lordships that it would be advisable that a medical officer should accompany you, if one can be spared from Her Majesty's ships for this purpose.

No. 36.

Earl Russell to Consul Burton.

Sir,

Foreign Office, November 21, 1863.

I TRANSMIT to you herewith copies of a letter and its inclosures from the Liverpool African Association, from which it would appear that King Pepple has proceeded to enforce his project of levying a largely increased Comey or Customs duties on vessels trading in the Bonny River, and that he has stopped the trade of the river until such increased duties are paid. You will perceive also from the letter from Mr. Thwaites to King Pepple, which forms one of the inclosures in the Liverpool African Association's letter, that this office is quoted as having acknowledged that Chief's right to enforce payment of the increased dues, if he is able to do so.

I have to acquaint you that there is no foundation whatever for this statement of Mr. Thwaites, and you will give Pepple distinctly to understand that he will not be allowed to levy any higher or other duties than those sanctioned by the Treaty of the 3rd of October, 1850, unless he shall have previously obtained the sanction of the British traders in the river.

I am, &c.

Inclosure 1 in No. 36.

Mr. Cooper to Earl Russell.Liverpool African Association, 3, Brown's Buildings, Liverpool, November 12, 1863.

My Lord,

I AM instructed by the Liverpool African Association to forward to your Lordship copies of two letters received from Bonny by the last mail, that your Lordship may be informed of the uses to which the name of the Foreign Office has been applied, doubtless without the authority or cognizance of that Department.

It appears to this Association that the closing of the trade of the River Bonny to enforce his demands for a largely increased Comey or Customs duty is in direct violation of the Treaty of the 3rd of October, 1850, made by King Pepple with this country, and is certain to result in serious injury to the trade, and loss to British interests generally (it is especially an injustice to those traders who had paid the usual Comey previous to these increased demands of King Pepple, and who are now prevented from loading their ships); and I am further instructed to request that your Lordship will be pleased to direct such representations to be made to King Pepple, through the Consul or otherwise, as will prevent him from persevering in his unreasonable demands, and stopping the course of legitimate commerce, as this Association cannot suppose the line of proceeding he has adopted can be either countenanced or approved of by your Lordship.

I have to express the hope that this matter will receive your Lordship's early attention, and that I may be favoured with a reply in time to enable the Association to communicate with its agents at Bonny by the mail leaving Liverpool on the 23rd instant.

I have, &c.

Consul Burton to Earl Russell.—(Received December 12.)

My Lord,

Fernando Po, October 27, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge receipt of your despatches of 23rd June, 23rd July, and 20th August, conveying to me the gratifying intelligence that you have honoured me with a mission to Dahomey, and forwarding directions for my guidance.

With respect to the list of presents I would submit to you, that although those named are sufficient for the King, I shall be compelled to lay in at Whydah a certain provision of cloth and rum as "dash" to the Ministers and Amazons.

I will endeavour as much as possible to carry out your Lordship's wishes expressed in letter of 20th August, 1863, namely, that there shall be no human sacrifice during my stay at the capital. But there is little probability of success: it will be only after many interviews that I may be able to persuade the King to substitute bestial for human victims. Of course I shall refuse to witness the brutalities of the "customs," which have, I regret to say, been lately sanctioned by the presence of Europeans.

Her Majesty's steam-ship "Antelope," Lieutenant-Commander Allingham, has been ordered to convey me to Whydah, and I have to thank Commodore Wilmot for facilitating in every way my mission. The cruiser is expected here on November 20th, and it would be unadvisable to visit Agbomey before early December, the season having been exceptionally rainy in the Bights. Indeed, the rains have not yet ended.

I have, &c.

No. 38.

Mr. Layard to Consul Burton.

Sir, Foreign Office, December 22, 1863.
I AM directed by Earl Russell to transmit to you a copy of a letter from the African Merchants' Company, stating that it is their intention to establish a commercial house at Whydah for the purpose of carrying on legitimate trade with Dahomey, and they propose to appoint Mr. Craft, a man of colour, as their agent at that place. I have accordingly to instruct you to inform the King of Dahomey that the Company of African Merchants are desirous of establishing lawful trade with his subjects, which cannot fail to benefit him and his people; and you will express the hope that the King will afford Mr. Craft his protection and support in carrying out the operations of the Company.

Company of African Merchants, 8, Adelphi Terrace, London, December 16, 1863.

My Lord,
THE Company of the African Merchants, Limited (London and Liverpool), are most desirous to assist by every means consistent with sound mercantile principles in carrying out the views of Her Majesty's Government for the suppression of the Slave Trade, and the extension of legitimate commerce in Western Africa.

Believing that there is now an opening at Whydah for direct legitimate commercial relations with England, and that by means of a resident agent there, the King might be strongly influenced toward entering upon a new and more satisfactory course than that he has hitherto pursued, the Company have engaged with Mr. William Craft to represent them at that place. Mr. Craft is the person of colour who, following Commodore Wilmot's most beneficial visit, was soon after so favourably received by the King of Dahomey, and invited by him to commence business at Whydah. Mr. Craft will take charge of the Company's goods, and conduct their business at Whydah under arrangements which make him a participator in all profits to be thence derived.

As it is important that every precaution should be taken to make this effort at legitimate trade with Dahomey permanent and successful, the Company beg leave to solicit from your Lordship such letters to the King of Dahomey and to the British authorities on the coast in favour of Mr. Craft, as shall insure that protection to British subjects and property which your Lordship is ever so ready to accord.

Mr. Craft will leave England for Whydah by the mail packet of the 24th instant.

I have, &c.

Earl Russell to Mr. Christie.

Sir, Foreign Office, January 8, 1863.
WITH reference to your despatch of the 24th of November last, inclosing a copy of the Regulations issued by the Brazilian authorities for the government of the free Africans at the naval establishment of Itapura, I have to instruct you to take such measures as you may deem best calculated for ascertaining whether among the Africans in that establishment there are any who were liberated through the late British and Brazilian Mixed Commission Court.

Should there be any negroes in this category, you will state that Her Majesty's Government are bound to see that faith is kept with them; and you are consequently instructed to claim from the Brazilian Government their unconditional freedom.

The effect of the Regulations recently issued for the government of the negroes at Itapura, is practically to consign to six years' forced servitude men, women, and children, who are free according to the showing of the Brazilian authorities themselves; and the Government of Her Majesty are consequently bound to require that those Africans who were liberated under British auspices, shall not be subjected to the Regulations in question.

HER Majesty's Government have desired me once more to remind you of my many notes long unanswered, from two years and a-half to a year and a-half old, of which I urgently reminded Senhor Taques in two notes addressed to him on the 17th of April, on the subject of the free blacks handed over to the Brazilian Government by the Mixed Commission Court under the provisions of the Treaty of 1826.

Her Majesty's Government desire me to say on this occasion that the Africans have all served more than the time prescribed by the Brazilian Legislature for their apprenticeship, and are therefore incontestably entitled to their unrestricted freedom, and that, as they were emancipated under the conjoint auspices of the British and Brazilian Governments, Her Majesty's Government feel themselves in duty bound to see that faith is kept with them.

No. 41.

Mr. Christie to Earl Russell.—(Received February 23.)

My Lord,

Rio de Janeiro, January 24, 1863.

IN a valuable article in the "Revue des deux Mondes" of the 15th of July of last year, on "Brazil and Colonization," is the following passage relating to the "free Africans," on which I have had occasion to write so much to your Lordship, and on which it is impossible to extort information from the Brazilian Government:—

"These agents" (i.e., the parties to whom free Africans were assigned as apprentice labourers) "were themselves planters who received on their properties the negroes newly enfranchised, made them work like slaves, and in order to save themselves from the embarrassment of restoring them to liberty took care to exchange names between them and old labourers or invalids. Whenever one of these last died, they put one of the newly arrived blacks in his place on the list of deaths, and in this manner they kept their accounts right with the Government, who goodnaturedly closed their eyes to these malpractices."

It is a matter of common statement and belief that numbers of free Africans have in this way passed into slavery.

I mentioned this to your Lordship in a despatch dated the 27th May, 1861, which is printed at page 44 of the Slave Trade Correspondence, Class B, of that year, and I then pointed out that this was probably one of several reasons why we could not obtain from the Brazilian Government the information which has been so often asked for as to these blacks consigned to their care on a guarantee of freedom under Treaty with Great Britain.

It is not only that notes of mine asking for such information written two years and a-half ago yet remain unanswered, it is not only that a note written by your Lordship's express direction on the 18th of March, 1861, asking for a list of the free blacks yet remains unanswered, but similar demands have been made by the British Government since 1851, when Mr. Hudson was Minister, and they have always been evaded.

Mr. Christie to Earl Russell.—(Received April 6.)

My Lord,

Rio de Janeiro, February 26, 1863.

IN a report which I made to your Lordship not very long after my first arrival in this country, on the 5th of August, 1860, and which is printed in the Slave Trade Correspondence, Class B, presented in 1861, I gave the opinion, founded chiefly on communications made to me by a well-informed and intelligent Brazilian, that the slave population in Brazil had probably not been diminished since the cessation of importation, and that it was even slightly increasing. I have constantly paid such attention as I could to this subject, and am disposed to conclude, after inquiries and observations made during the subsequent two years and a-half, that the opinion which I was first led to form is not correct, and that the slave population is decreasing, though not very considerably. The mortality among the children of slaves is very great; and Brazilian proprietors do not appear to have given nearly so much attention as might have been expected, from obvious motives of self-interest, to marriages among slaves, or the care of mothers or children.

There are no statistics as to the slave population, and Government does not seem to care to have them.

On two cardinal points on which I early expressed decided opinions to your Lordship, my opinions remain unchanged: there is no possibility of a revival of Brazilian Slave Trade; and there is no sign of effort or preparation for the abolition of slavery.

(Extract.)

Rio de Janeiro, February 26, 1862.

ON receipt of your Lordship's despatch of January 8, having no doubt of the fact that among the Africans at Itapura are free Africans liberated by the Anglo-Brazilian Mixed Commission of Rio de Janeiro, I have thought it best to address to the Marquis of Abrantes the note of which I inclose a copy. The attention of the Brazilian Government is, I have reason to believe, seriously turned to this subject of the free Africans.

Itapura is very distant from Rio, and is most easily arrived at by a circuitous voyage to the River Plate, and up the Rivers Paraná and Paraguay, and through Mattogrosso. The expense of sending an individual there to make inquiries on the spot would probably not be less than 200*l*.

Inclosure in No. 43.

Mr. Christie to the Marquis of Abrantes.

M. le Marquis,

Petropolis, February 12, 1863.

HER Majesty's Government have carefully considered the Regulations published by the Minister of Public Works under date of the 5th of November, 1862, for the free Africans employed in the naval establishment of Itapura.

Her Majesty's Government are yet without accurate information as to the number of free Africans employed at Itapura who were liberated by the British and Brazilian Mixed Commission Court.

I have again to call your Excellency's attention to the following notes addressed by me to your predecessors, referring to free Africans at Itapura:—December 19 and 28, 1860, January 10, 1861, to Senhor Sinimbú; June 3, 1861, to Senhor Sá e Albuquerque. I abstain from mentioning unanswered notes of mine asking for general information about free Africans, which of course include those employed at Itapura.

Her Majesty's Government instruct me to say that, with respect to Africans liberated by the late Mixed Commission Court of Rio de Janeiro, they are bound to see that the Brazilian Government keep faith with them; and I am instructed to claim for all such Africans unconditional freedom.

Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the effect of the new Regulations for the Government of Negroes in the Itapura establishment, is practically to consign to forced servitude for six years men, women, and children who are free according to the showing of the Brazilian authorities themselves; and Her Majesty's Government consequently feel themselves bound to require that these Africans, who were liberated under British auspices, shall not be subjected to the Regulations in question.

Mr. Christie to Earl Russell.—(Received April 6.)

My Lord,

Rio de Janeiro, March 5, 1863.

WITH reference to my preceding despatch dated the 21st ultimo, I inclose translation of a note which I have received from the Marquis of Abrantes, on the subject of the new Regulations of the naval establishment of Itapura, the application of which to free Africans liberated under British auspices I protested against under your Lordship's instructions; and I also inclose a copy of a further note which I have addressed to the Marquis of Abrantes in rejoinder.

I have made no remarks in my reply on the explanations offered as to the Regulations, which I leave entirely to your Lordship's judgment. But I thought it well to point out to the Marquis, in reply to his remarks on the danger of wholesale sudden emancipation, that, had the Imperial Government done their duty, and attended to the representations of successive British Ministers, all might by this time have been made free by gradual measures, and that the object of the fourteen years' apprenticeship, which all have now served, was to prepare for full freedom.

Your Lordship will observe that on this occasion I have received a sufficiently prompt answer. Since the reprisals the Marquis of Abrantes has become very prompt in answering.

Inclosure 1 in No. 44.

The Marquis of Abrantes to Mr. Christie.

*Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Rio de Janeiro,
February 28, 1863.*

(Translation.)

MR. WILLIAM DOUGAL CHRISTIE, &c., in his note of the 12th instant, calls my attention to various notes which he addressed to my predecessors on the subject of free Africans employed in the naval establishment of Itapura, and particularly respecting the instructions sent on the 6th of November last by the Ministry of Agriculture, Commerce, and Public Works, for the administration of the said Africans employed in that establishment.

In the same note Mr. Christie declares that he has been instructed by his Government to claim unconditional liberty in favour of the Africans who were freed by the last Mixed Commission.

In reply to this note; I now transmit to Mr. Christie the information which I received from the Minister of Agriculture relative to the said instructions.

Before doing so, however, I have to assure Mr. Christie that the Imperial Government, with the greatest earnestness and solicitude, studies the question of the free Africans, and is collecting all the necessary information, in order to proceed with all such discretion and prudence as the case requires. It cannot escape the perspicuity of Mr. Christie, that serious inconvenience and dangers might result from letting loose at once among the population, without certain precautions, a large number of uneducated individuals, and without experience to guide them.

From the information above referred to, the result is, that the instructions of the 6th of November had in view the guaranteeing of the future existence of the free Africans of the establishment of Itapura, and of enabling them to become useful and morigerous citizens, habitually prone to work; they being to that end subjected to military discipline, and made equal to the military colonists of the third class existing in that same establishment.

For that reason pecuniary advantages were granted them, and the right to a portion of land, after six years of good services, this being the term in which not only the soldiers, volunteers from the army, and even the medical men and apothecaries of the Body of Health, are obliged to serve.

In the position thus prepared for those individuals, and in which they meet with the means of subsistence and the advantages of military colonists, the Imperial Government judged that the interests of these same individuals were reconciled with the necessary guarantees in favour of the society in which they live, against the dangers with which it would be menaced if they were to have been abandoned to their own discretion.

The instructions recognize the full and absolute right of those Africans to their liberty, and they recognize it in designating them as free Africans; declaring, in the 8th Article, that they have a right to the letter of emancipation, and ordering that, besides rations and clothes, which are furnished them, they are to be paid for their work.

And if, besides the time during which they have to serve in compensation of the advantages conferred upon them, proofs of good services and good behaviour are exacted for the delivery of their letters of freedom, the principle is only observed which prevails also in the army, when soldiers are punished for infractions of the Military Regulations with the loss of time of their previous services.

On this point the instructions agree with the general principles of the military legislation.

It is proper still to note that the Regulations of the garrisons and military Colonies of the Empire contain the same provisions as the instructions.

These are the elucidations which it behoves me to bring to the knowledge of Mr. Christie, and which appear to be sufficient to show that the individuals in question do not remain, by those instructions, subject to forced slavery.

I renew, &c.
(Signed) MARQUIS OF ABRANTES.

BRAZIL.

Inclosure 2 in No. 44.

Mr. Christie to the Marquis of Abrantes.

M. le Marquis,

Petropolis, March 4, 1863.

I HAVE received your Excellency's note of the 28th ultimo, giving explanations, in reply to mine of the 12th, as to the Regulations to which free Africans have been lately subjected in the naval establishment of Itapura.

I shall lose no time in forwarding a copy of your note to Earl Russell, and Her Majesty's Government will judge whether these explanations suffice to show that the condition of the free African under the Regulations in question is not one of forced servitude.

I restrict myself to remarks on some general propositions of your Excellency.

You say that the Imperial Government are attending to the question of the free Africans, and are collecting all the necessary information in order to act with the judgment and prudence required; but you do not say that they have been collecting information in order to communicate it to Her Majesty's Government, in compliance with the particular request which I addressed to Senhor Paranhos on the 18th of March, 1861, that is, two years ago.

You speak of the inconveniences which may follow from a general sudden emancipation of the free Africans, who are without education and experience. Let me remind your Excellency that Her Majesty's Government have been urging this question on the Government of the Emperor from time to time, and in various ways, for the last thirteen years, and that similar language was held in 1856 to Mr. Scarlett by Senhor Paranhos, who at the same time declared that it was the intention of the Imperial Government to give all these free Africans their freedom. Had the interval been well employed in gradual emancipation, all might now be free. As it is, every free African who was liberated by the British and Brazilian Mixed Commission Court must have served more than fourteen years. And what was the object of this fourteen years' apprenticeship, but to train them for the full enjoyment of freedom?

I can perfectly understand that the labour of these free Africans is cheap and serviceable to the Imperial Government at Itapura and elsewhere.

I take occasion to remind your Excellency that in 1860 and 1861 Senhor Sinimbu promised me on several occasions that no more free Africans should be sent to Itapura from Ypanema. Since then all my efforts to obtain particular information have been fruitless. It will be satisfactory to Her Majesty's Government to be assured that no free Africans were sent to Itapura from Santos or Ypanema after July 1860.

I need not tell your Excellency that the journey to Itapura is long and tiresome, that the place is notoriously unhealthy, and that such a destination is not likely to be chosen by free men.

I avail, &c.

Mr. Eliot to Earl Russell.—(Received May 6.)

My Lord,

Rio de Janeiro, April 3, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inclose translation of an article which appeared in the "Diario" of Rio de Janeiro on the 2nd instant, showing the difficulties thrown in the way of the free Africans obtaining their liberty; difficulties which, as it appears, render it almost impossible for these unfortunate people to obtain that result unless powerfully protected.

I have, &c.

(Signed) W. G. CORNWALLIS ELIOT.

Inclosure in No. 45.

Extract from the "Diario" of April 2, 1863.

(Translation.)

A NAME is a word by which things are expressed, according to Padre Antonio Pereira de Figueiredo and other simple-minded people of that age.

In Brazil, however, this note has its exceptions, exceptions very ironical and satirical as regards our "free institutions," if such they be.

The law which prohibited the traffic in human flesh declared free all the Africans taken from that time, providing for the protection of the rights of these unhappy creatures, giving them judges, guardians general, and special and temporary, and clerks : the special guardians are the private persons or public establishments to whose service the Africans were given over until they could be freed by law.

In the wretched condition in which the unhappy creatures live in Brazil, as well those delivered to private persons as to public establishments, it appears (unless satire and irony are legal) that the law ought to facilitate and protect, even directly and in all ways, the emancipation, the true liberty of the Africans, once that the time required for them to acquire moral capacity for self-government has elapsed.

However, let us see what facilities, what protection they meet for emancipating themselves, and how that emancipation is realised. The free African delivered to the service of a private person or of a public establishment does not cease to be practically a slave. Those who enjoy his services do not commit the folly of facilitating his emancipation, and slave as he is de facto, he is unable to obtain the pecuniary means to pay advocates to occupy themselves about it. It follows then that these wretched beings must resign themselves to the taunts of the law, or wait until chance procures for them a disinterested protector, and that clothed with the most evangelical patience they must prepare to suffer and follow the following proofs of this new moral inquisition :—

1. To ask from the Clerk of the Africans (Escrivão) the positive attestation that the time has elapsed.
2. Petition the Imperial Government through the Minister of Justice.
3. The Minister of Justice refers to the Judge of Orphans.
4. The Judge of Orphans gives information, and returns the petition to the Minister.
5. The Minister refers to the Chief of Police.
6. The Chief of Police refers to the General Guardian (Curador.)
7. The Guardian gives information, and returns the petition to the Chief of Police.
8. The Chief of Police refers to the Director of the House of Correction.
9. The Director of the House of Correction gives information, and sends back to the Chief of Police.
10. The Chief of Police gives the information, and sends back to the office of the Secretary of Justice.
11. The Secretary's office makes a précis of the information to be acted on by the Minister.
12. Finally the Minister acts, ordering a letter of freedom to be issued.
13. The petition returns to the Judge of Orphans.
14. Notification of the decision is sent to the Chief of Police.
15. The Judge of Orphans refers the petition to the Clerk, and orders a letter of freedom to be given ; but retains it in his possession until the party pays the respective emoluments.
16. The letter is made over to the Chief of Police.
17. The Chief of Police communicates with the Director of the House of Correction, ordering the African to appear.
18. The Director sends for him, and the Chief designates his place of residence.
19. The Chief of Police of the City of Rio de Janeiro (Corte), communicates with the Provincial Chief of Police to whom the place designated belongs, and hands over the free African with the letter.
20. The Provincial Chief of Police hands over the wretched man and his letter to the police authority of the place approved by the Chief of Police of Rio de Janeiro, as place of banishment for a free man condemned for no crime.

And after all this work and expense incurred with procurators and intermediaries, in order that the petition may not remain buried in the great ocean of our departments, the wretched African succeeds in being banished from the place where he has lived ten, fifteen, or twenty years, in which he had taken root, where had begun to found his future, his hopes.

This in Brazil, in the year of grace 1863. This is not a censure on authorities or functionaries ; it is an evil which is exclaimed against, and for which we claim the attention of the Imperial Government.

CENTRAL AMERICA.

No. 60.

Mr. Mathew to Earl Russell.—(Received October 14.)

(Extract.)

Guatemala, August 29, 1863.

I HAVE received from Mr. Kirkpatrick, Her Majesty's Consul in Honduras, a despatch, under date of the 13th of July, of which I inclose a copy, communicating to me an insurrection, on the 5th, at Truxillo, headed by the late Commandant, Colonel Fonseca, and apparently fomented by persons interested in the Slave Trade, and connected with the slaver "Noc d'Aqui."

In pursuance of the instructions conveyed by your Lordship's despatch of the 28th of July, 1862, I demanded the dismissal of Commandant Fonseca, for his evident and notorious participation in the arrangements for facilitating the Cuban Slave Trade; but the Government of Honduras judged that the decision of a tribunal was necessary for this object, and, as they stated, for his further punishment; and, by the usual chicanery of Central American law, the matter was still pending, and Colonel Fonseca remained in a probably nominal confinement.

A subsequent letter of the 31st, which has reached me by way of La Union, states that Colonel Fonseca pillaged from the Custom-house 12,000 dollars which, by the especial assignment of the duties at Truxillo, under the Convention of March 2, 1852, were due, on the 1st of this month, to British claimants. Mr. Kirkpatrick adds that Fonseca had arrived at Comayagua, and had not only been received with great cordiality by General Medina, the recently declared President by the Guatemalan forces in Gracias, but, as was currently reported, was about to be named to a command.

Inclosure 1 in No. 60.

Consul Kirkpatrick to Mr. Mathew.

Sir,

Comayagua, July 13, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to communicate to you the inclosed copy of a despatch addressed to me by the Minister, Señor Garrigó, referring to a serious insurrection which has broken out in Truxillo, and which seems to be fomented by persons interested in the Slave Trade.

It appears that Antonio Fonseca escaped from prison, and prevailed on the garrison to unite and pronounce against the Government.

They incarcerated the authorities, seized the arms and Custom-house funds, and having rendered themselves masters of the town, called on the rebels in Olancho to join them, and unite their combined forces against the Government.

The Captain of the slaver "Noc Daqui" is expected at Truxillo with arms, ammunition, &c., and there is every probability that the whole conspiracy is set on foot by the slave-traders of the Havana, in order to profit by the anarchy, and fit out other vessels for the Slave Trade.

Under these circumstances the Government solicit the assistance of a British vessel of war to protect the port and Custom-house, and to put down the rebels.

The information of these occurrences has come from Yoro. No communication has been received from Truxillo, and consequently I have not heard from Mr. Melhado since the outbreak. But four days ago I received from him a letter dated June 25, in which he states:—

"Don J. Julio, the consignee of the 'Noc Daqui,' after having been absent a very suspicious period of over seven months, has returned here in a three-masted American flat-bottomed centre-board schooner, originally the 'George K. Dixon,' but subsequently white-washed and re-named 'Numero Uno.' She is now under a British license for six months, and so sailed from Philadelphia to Havana; thence here. The license expires on the 14th of September; the owner is represented as one Mr. Henry Henderson, of London. She is bought ostensibly for the cattle trade with this and Batabano, and all her papers are at present in proper form. Yet grave suspicions are entertained, from her build and other circumstances, that she is destined for the Slave Trade, which, after or about September, she will manage to facilitate.

"I will note that the schooner is 206 tons, and sailed on the 24th instant for Batabano with 210 head of cattle, from which you can judge of her capacity."

From this letter, and from the appearance of Don José Julio in Truxillo about the time of the outbreak, I am led to give full credit to the assertion of the Government that the insurrection is in connection with the slave-traders.

I have already despatched a special courier to his Excellency Governor Seymour, giving him all the information I have on the subject, and inclosing a copy of the Minister's despatch.

I trust his Excellency will be able to send a vessel of war to the coast, for, with a revolution in Olancho, and a factious Government established in Gracias under the protection of Guatemala, I fear the Honduras Government will be a long time before it can restore order in Truxillo, and prevent the farther extension of the Slave Trade along its coast.

I have, &c.

(Signed) EDWARD KIRKPATRICK.

Inclosure 2 in No. 60.

Señor Garrigo to Consul Kirkpatrick.

(Translation.)

Sir,

Comayagua, July 13, 1863.

BY the annexed copy you will see that the garrison of Truxillo has been seduced and turned against the legitimate authority; that as soon as the revolt had taken place they invited the rebels of Olancho and Yoro to occupy the port, and that probably it has fallen into the power of the latter.

Still, this intelligence would not be so alarming if it were not positively stated that the Captain of the "Noc Daquí" has brought, or was about to arrive with munitions of war, which proves this to be a conspiracy with him.

Under these circumstances the Government, who see in this an event not exclusively concerning Honduras, and because they have seized the Custom-house, which is especially devoted to the payment of the English debt, hasten to communicate it to you, in order that you may, if you think fit, induce his Excellency the Governor of British Honduras to send a ship of war to watch our coasts, and even assail the rebels of the port whilst the forces of the Department of Yoro attack them by land.

The Government do not doubt that you will immediately take this determination; certain that the Minister of Her Britannic Majesty, to whom, under this date, I communicate what has occurred, will give you his approval; the more so that he has always shown himself so zealous in the affair of the slave-ship that is now the occasion of this disturbance.

(Signed) M. GARRIGO.

Inclosure 3 in No. 60.

Señor Lara to the Chief Civil Authority of the Department.

(Translation.)

Sir,

July 9, 1863.

WITHOUT knowing how the constraining circumstances which overturn Honduras will affect your policy, I send you positive information upon which you may act.

Antonio Fonseca has raised a revolt in the garrison of the port, has made prisoners of the authorities, and summoned the Olanchans to arm themselves against the Government.

Bernabé Antunes occupied the arsenal on the 5th, with Olanchans and Yorans, so that these will doubtless make the people of Olanchito pronounce themselves, then communicate with Fonseca, and then attack us.

If you wish us to resist in this place, send a despatch to the Government requesting the munitions requisite, such as gun-flints, &c., and a hundred men under a good commander. Whatever your determination is, I will obey you with pleasure.

Mr. Layard to Consul Sunley.

Sir,

Foreign Office, May 5, 1863.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to call your attention to a despatch which his Lordship addressed to you on the 14th of June last, acquainting you that you must give up the employment of slaves on your estates, or be prepared to resign your Commission as Her Majesty's Consul for the Comoro Islands.

Lord Russell concludes as you have taken no notice of the despatch, that it may not have reached your hands. I am, therefore, to transmit to you a duplicate copy of it, and to desire that you will communicate to his Lordship, with as little delay as possible, the decision you may have come to in this matter, and you will also explain the cause of your delay in replying to his Lordship's despatch.

My Lord,

Johanna, December 31, 1862.

I WAS informed that four dhows arrived at Mohilla with slaves in March and April, but I have not been able to obtain any particulars about them.

I have not heard of any dhows having carried slaves to Comoro.

In March, 53 slaves were landed on the east side of the Island of Johanna from a dhow navigated by a Soorie Arab named Hamisse Washalla. On my speaking to the Sultan on the subject, he stated that the dhow had been blown off Mayotte, and had put into Johanna for water and food; that the slaves were very feeble, and some of them very ill; and that he thought it would have been very cruel not to have allowed them to be put on shore. I accepted this excuse, as there was a design to make a disturbance in the island, when the Sultan was openly taxed with breaking his Treaty with the English Government.

I have no knowledge of any slaves having been taken from Mohilla and Comoro to Mayotte or Nossi Bé.

My Lord,

Johanna, February 20, 1863.

COMMANDER CHAPMAN, of Her Majesty's ship "Ariel," the Senior Officer, has informed me that Sub-Lieutenant Fellowes, in the cutter of that vessel, chased a dhow, under Arab colours, on the 21st of December, off the south-west end of Comoro, which ran on shore at Ytsanda, where the crew and about 60 slaves escaped. The Chief at Ytsanda would not permit them to enter his town, and they proceeded to Maroni. On Captain Chapman requesting the Chief of Maroni to give up the slaves, he denied all knowledge of their being in his territory; and as the seizure took place in the waters of this Consulate, Commander Chapman did not take strong measures to get them, and reported the matter to me.

The anchorage at Maroni is very unsafe at this season; when the monsoon changes, and I have an opportunity, I shall communicate with the Chief at Maroni upon the matter.

No. 64.

Consul Sunley to Earl Russell.—(Received July 7.)

My Lord,

Johanna, February 22, 1863.

YOUR Lordship's despatch of the 14th of June last was received on the 30th of December by Her Majesty's ship "Ariel."

In reply to my explanation of the circumstances under which I employ slaves as labourers upon my sugar estate, your Lordship informs me that if Her Majesty's Government were to countenance my proceedings they could not consistently refuse to do the same in other cases; that their motives would be misunderstood, and they would lay themselves open to the charge of tolerating the employment of slave-labour by a British officer, while they denounced the employment of slaves by the planters of other countries; and your Lordship observes that I must have been aware that in employing slaves I was acting contrary to the Regulations laid down by Her Majesty's Government for the guidance of their Consular Officers, and that I shall therefore be prepared for their decision, namely, that I must give up the employment of slaves in my service, or be prepared to resign my commission.

In a matter where I am so deeply interested it would not become me to attempt to alter the decision of Her Majesty's Government by offering any further explanation of the circumstances under which I employ slaves; but I cannot but think that if they were to receive an account not only of my proceedings, but also of the condition of the population of the island, from a disinterested person, they would pronounce that the labour which I employ is not what is usually meant by the term "slave-labour;" and that I am, in the limited sphere in which I am placed, practically working against slavery. The Arab element in the population of the island is fast disappearing, and it is the slaves and their progeny that will people the island. These people I am civilizing.

Before I had the honour to be appointed Her Majesty's Consul I employed the people of the island as I now do, and I was not aware that I was acting contrary to the Regulations made by Her Majesty's Government for the guidance of their Consular Officers.

I cannot, without serious inconvenience, immediately dismiss the slaves in my service; and I respectfully request your Lordship will allow me to defer for a few months the resignation of my commission, that I may try—what I am afraid is impossible—to employ none but free persons as labourers on my sugar estate.

I have, &c.

My Lord,

Foreign Office, January 13, 1863.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 15th of September last, relative to the Spanish steamer "Noc d'Aqui" which was reported as being about to sail from the port of Bordeaux, where she had been equipped for the African Slave Trade, I now transmit, for your Excellency's information, a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Bilbao,* reporting that the "Noc d'Aqui" has landed a cargo of upwards of 1,000 slaves in Cuba.

This vessel is doubtless the one referred to in Mr. Consul Freeman's despatch of the 29th of October last, as having shipped a cargo of slaves from Aghwey under French colours, on the morning of the 20th of that month.

I have to instruct your Excellency to bring the particulars respecting this vessel to the notice of the French Government, and you will express a hope that strict inquiries will be made into this case, with the view to the punishment of any parties who may be amenable to French laws for their participation in the equipment of the "Noc d'Aqui."

No. 68.

Earl Cowley to Earl Russell.—(Received May 23.)

My Lord,

Paris, May 21, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that I communicated to the Imperial Government the information contained in your despatch of the 31st December of last year, respecting the shipment of a cargo of 1,000 slaves on board a steamer under French colours from Aghwey, and on the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of January 13th last I addressed a note to M. Drouyn de Lhuys, stating that the Spanish steamer "Noc Daqui" which was reported to have been equipped in Bordeaux for the African Slave Trade, had landed a cargo of slaves in Cuba, and that this vessel was doubtless the one which shipped a cargo of slaves from Aghwey, and I expressed to his Excellency the hope of Her Majesty's Government that the parties concerned in the equipment of this vessel would be brought to punishment. In the answer which I have received from M. Drouyn de Lhuys, a copy of which I have the honour to inclose, his Excellency admits that the vessel was equipped at Bordeaux, but with so much secrecy that it was not possible to ascertain whether she sailed under French colours. His Excellency requests me further to call the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the fact that ten or twelve days after the departure of the slaver the two shippers arrived at Lagos, and embarked on the 10th November on board the English packet, of which the Governor of Lagos could not have been ignorant. His Excellency concludes by assuring me that the "Noc Daqui" will not escape the vigilance of the marine authorities, should she again appear in a French port.

M. l'Ambassadeur,

Paris, le 19 Mai, 1863.

VOUS m'avez fait l'honneur de me communiquer à la date du 3 Janvier dernier un rapport de M. le Gouverneur de Lagos, d'après lequel une opération de Traite aurait été effectuée à Aghwey le 20 Octobre, 1862, sous pavillon Français. Le Commandant du navire de Sa Majesté Britannique le "Grillon" ayant appris qu'un chargement d'esclaves se préparait à Whydah, s'était d'abord mis à la poursuite d'un vapeur Français qu'il supposait avoir ce chargement à bord, mais ce vapeur était l'avisio le "Lamothe Piquet," de la marine Impériale, et cette méprise du Commandant Perry avait permis au négrier qu'il voulait atteindre de lui échapper. Par une lettre sub-séquent du 22 Janvier, votre Excellence m'annonçait que le navire qui avait embarqué des noirs à Aghwey n'était autre que le steamer Espagnol "Noc Daqui" dont les préparatifs dans le port de Bordeaux avaient précédemment éveillé des soupçons qui se trouvaient ainsi justifiés.

Je m'étais préoccupé dès la réception de la première lettre de votre Excellence d'obtenir sur les faits qu'elle me signalait des informations qui me manquaient. Il résulte de celles qui viennent de me parvenir que le navire étranger indiqué comme ayant été se réparer à Bordeaux dans le courant de 1862, après une première opération de Traite faite peu de temps auparavant à la côté d'Afrique, en aurait, en effet, effectué une seconde dans les mêmes parages au mois d'Octobre dernier. Mais le secret avec lequel il s'y est livré n'a pu permettre de constater qu'il se fut couvert pour cela du pavillon Français, et rendait d'ailleurs inutile cette simulation de pavillon. Il n'y a donc eu de la part de M. le Commandant Perry qu'une supposition provenant peut-être d'avis calculés pour lui faire prendre le change ainsi qu'il lui est arrivé en se mettant à la poursuite du "Lamothe Piquet." Ce qui est certain, au contraire—et je dois à mon tour prier votre Excellence d'appeler sur cette circonstance l'attention du Gouvernement Britannique—c'est que dix à douze jours après le départ du bâtiment négrier, les deux chargeurs avoués et reconnus de cette cargaison arrivaient tranquillement à Lagos, s'y embarquaient le 10 Novembre à bord du paquet Anglais, et que M. le Gouverneur de Lagos n'a pu l'ignorer.

Quoiqu'il en soit, au surplus, le "Noc Daqui" n'échapperait pas à la surveillance de nos autorités maritimes s'il venait à réparaître dans un de nos ports.

My Lord,

I HAVE received your Excellency's despatch of the 21st instant, inclosing the reply of M. Drouyn de Lhuys to the note which you addressed to him, expressing the hope of Her Majesty's Government that the parties concerned in the equipment at Bordeaux of the Spanish slave-steamer "Noc Daqui," in the month of August last, would be brought to punishment.

It would appear, from the tenour of the French Minister's reply, that his Excellency is under the impression that blame in some measure attaches to the Governor of Lagos, for permitting two persons whom he knew had been engaged in shipping the cargo of slaves on board the "Noc Daqui," to pass through Lagos, and to embark on board the English packet; but I have to instruct your Excellency to point out to M. Drouyn de Lhuys that, although the individuals who shipped the slaves on board the steamer were known to the Governor, yet as they had committed no crime which a British authority would have been entitled to take cognizance of, the Governor would not have been justified in detaining or otherwise interfering with them on their passage through Lagos.

Foreign Office, June 30, 1863.

I INCLOSE, for your Excellency's information, copy of a despatch from Commodore Wilmot* respecting his visit to the King of Dahomey, which has been laid before Parliament by command of Her Majesty.

I have at the same time to acquaint your Excellency that it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to send Captain Burton, Her Majesty's Consul for the Bight of Biafra, to Abomey, to confirm to the King of Dahomey the friendly messages of which Commodore Wilmot was the bearer, and I inclose for your Excellency's information a copy of a despatch which I have addressed to Captain Burton on this subject.†

My Lord,

Foreign Office, June 30, 1863.

WITH reference to my despatch of this day's date, I transmit for your Excellency's information copies of a letter from the African Aid Society to Viscount Palmerston, and of the answer which by my directions has been returned to their communication relative to the affairs of Dahomey.

Inclosure 1 in No. 72.

The Chairman of the African Aid Society to Viscount Palmerston.

African Aid Society, 8, Adelphi Terrace, Strand, London, June 8, 1863.

My Lord,

THE Council of the African Aid Society beg leave respectfully to recall to your Lordship's recollection that they have from time to time, in memorials and letters, by deputations and at interviews, brought the subject of Dahomey, its laws, customs, and Slave Trade, under the notice of Her Majesty's Government, with a view to obtain some remedial action on their part for bringing about a change of system in Dahomey. They have urged at various times the sending of a Commissioner to Dahomey, the granting of an adequate annual subsidy to the King under certain conditions, and the occupation of Whydah by Her Majesty's forces. In doing this, they have been seconded and supported by the principal Chambers of Commerce throughout the country, and by the merchants, manufacturers, and other principal persons in London, Liverpool, and Manchester.

The recent visit of Commodore Wilmot to Dahomey, the nomination of a French Consul at Whydah, and the acceptance on the part of his Government by the French Commodore on the coast, of the Protectorate of Porto Novo, render it necessary for the Council to appeal again to your Lordship on the same subject of Dahomey.

The facts observed and the statements elicited by Commodore Wilmot during his late visit to Abomey, and the recent invasion of the territory of Abbeokuta, prove that no beneficial change whatever has yet taken place in Dahomey. But not only the great interests of humanity, but also those of the cotton-manufacturing population of Great Britain, France, and other European countries, demand that such a change should no longer be delayed. The industrial regeneration of, and the spread of civilization over, a most important tract of country as regards cotton supply depend upon such change. Whatever may be the issue of the war now devastating the Cotton States of America, it cannot be expected that those States will ever again furnish to Europe a dependable supply of cotton to such an extent as heretofore. And yet the increasing populations of the world and the march of civilization among them render continually increasing supplies of cotton necessary to them, as well as to our manufacturers. Dahomey and the adjacent valley of the Niger are adapted to the production of that particular quality of cotton which the Cotton States of America had until lately supplied with so much advantage to the manufacturers of Europe. And yet, in consequence of the atrocious system which prevails there, Dahomey is not only herself unproductive, although the population is one of the most systematically agricultural in Africa, but she is also the cause of unproductiveness in adjacent territories. Ishagga was a cotton producer; Dahomey destroyed it and its people. Abbeokuta is a cotton producer; Dahomey impedes the extension of cotton production there, and threatens to annihilate it altogether.

Under these circumstances, the Council beg leave to urge upon your Lordship the immediate adoption and exercise, by Her Majesty's Government, of every possible means for bringing Dahomey within the circle of advancing civilization.

The King of Dahomey has expressed to Commodore Wilmot his desire that the British should occupy the fort at Whydah. The Council cannot, at this moment, urge upon Her Majesty's Government the immediate occupation of the British fort at Whydah by a detachment of one of the West India Regiments, because the trouble with Ashantee may render it necessary to send every available portion of those regiments to the protected territories and to Quittah. But as the King of Dahomey has expressed a desire that the English should occupy that fort, and that a Government Agent should be established there, the Council beg to state their conviction that the permanent presence of some British authority at Whydah—Consular or other—would tend materially to bring about a better state of things at Whydah, and to impede or destroy the Slave Trade from that port.

The Council beg leave further to point out to Her Majesty's Government that the presence of a French Consul at Whydah, and the French Protectorate at Porto Novo, may be made instrumental for effecting the desired change in Dahomey. The Council have reason to believe that the French Government are strongly impressed with the great productiveness of the soil of Dahomey, and the great cotton capabilities of the Dahomian territory. They therefore believe that the French Government would readily co-operate with that of Her Majesty if invited to do so. And so strongly are the Council impressed with the truths that African regeneration will spring only from European influence, and that questions of European domination in Africa are of trivial importance when compared with the universally-beneficial results of the industrial regeneration of Africa, that they feel no jealousy as regards the preponderance of French influence in Dahomey, provided that influence be directed to the annihilation of the Slave Trade and the development of the vast natural resources of the soil and climate of the Dahomian territory.

The Council beg further to express the hope that Her Majesty's Government will not overlook those peculiarities of African character which render necessary a second visit of Commodore Wilmot to the capital of Dahomey. The expression of the King, that he could not know whether Her Majesty's Government were in earnest until he had received a second visit from Commodore Wilmot is in strict keeping with the general prejudices and customs of Africa. The Council have therefore no hesitation in urging upon Her Majesty's Government that due authorization be given to Commodore Wilmot to proceed again to Dahomey and that he be duly furnished with the necessary presents for that purpose. But the Council beg leave to suggest that Commodore Wilmot be instructed to make it a condition of his revisiting Abomey that no human sacrifices should be offered during his stay at the Dahomian Court, such sacrifices being abhorrent to the feelings and principles of Christian people, and such as no Christian Envoy should ever sanction by his presence.

The Council, in conclusion, beg leave once again to direct the consideration of Her Majesty's Government to the question of a subsidy to the King of Dahomey, to cease when he may obtain from legitimate trade a revenue equal to that hitherto derived from the sale and export of slaves. They entreat Her Majesty's Government not only to order Commodore Wilmot to revisit Abomey, but to furnish him also with full instructions and powers to enter into a Treaty with the King; to appoint a British Resident to the fort at Whydah; to order the occupation of that fort by a detachment of Her Majesty's forces, so soon as the other exigencies of the public service may permit of this being done; and to endeavour earnestly to obtain the co-operation of the Government of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of the French for obtaining, by joint representation, remonstrance, and subsidy if necessary, that change of system in Dahomey which can alone satisfy Christian Europe, and lead to the realization of those hopes which have been formed of the great capabilities of the soil and climate of Dahomey, and of the agricultural character of its people.

J'AI eu l'honneur de communiquer à votre Excellence le 19 Mai dernier les premières informations que j'avais pu recueillir sur le fait de Traite qu'elle m'avait signalé par ses lettres du 3 et du 22 Janvier. Je lui faisais savoir que le navire Espagnol le "Noc Daqui," désigné comme s'étant armé à Bordeaux et sur lequel s'étaient portés les soupçons, avait effectué ses opérations avec des précautions telles qu'il n'avait pas dû être possible de constater qu'il se fût réellement couvert du pavillon Français. M. le Ministre de la Justice avait toutefois, sur ma demande, prescrit d'ouvrir à Bordeaux une procédure sur cette affaire. Or, il résulte de l'ordonnance de non-lieu qui vient d'être rendue, qu'aucun Français n'a pris part à l'opération de Traite dont il s'agit, laquelle s'est effectuée dans des eaux étrangères; que le véritable but de l'expédition est demeuré secret entre l'armateur, habitant de Bilbao, et le capitaine Espagnol commandant le navire, et, qu'aux yeux de l'autorité comme de tout le monde de Bordeaux, le "Noc Daqui," armé pour un voyage de commerce, n'a paru avoir bien effectivement d'autre destination que la Vera Cruz. Je m'empresse de communiquer confidentiellement à votre Excellence cette ordonnance de non-lieu, qui, ainsi qu'elle le verra, met notre commerce complètement hors de cause.

Judgment in the case of the "Noc Daqui."

NOUS a Ste. Marie, Juge d'Instruction à Bordeaux.

Vu le procédure suivie contre quidam inculpé du crime de Traite;

Vu la réquisition de M. le Procureur Impérial;

Attendu que s'il paraît résulter de l'instruction que dans le courant d'Octobre 1862, à Aghwey, sur la côte d'Afrique, le navire le "Noc Daqui" s'est livré à une opération de Traite en se couvrant des couleurs Françaises qu'on sait être pures et respectées, il est établi—

Qu'aucun Français n'a pris part à cette opération;

Que le crime a été commis dans des eaux étrangères et par des étrangers;

Qu'entré au mois d'Août 1862 dans le port de Bordeaux pour s'y réparer, le "Noc Daqui" en est sorti le 14 Septembre suivant, sans que les dispositions prises à bord et le chargement aient en rien décélé le but de l'armement;

Qu'il ne résulte de la procédure aucun indice de culpabilité contre des capitaines armateurs, bailleurs de fonds, ou assureurs Français;

Qu'il appert, au contraire, de la correspondance saisie, que le véritable but de l'expédition est demeuré secret entre l'armateur Tsadi de Bilbao et le capitaine Espagnol commandant le navire;

Enfin, qu'aux yeux des autorités et des commerçants de Bordeaux le "Noc Daqui" armé pour un voyage de commerce n'a paru avoir d'autre destination que la Vera Cruz;

Par ces motifs déclarons n'y avoir lieu à suivre.

Fait à Bordeaux, en mon cabinet, le 6 Juillet, 1863.

Memorial.

Unto Her Most Gracious Majesty Victoria, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, India, and other Colonies of the British Empire.

The Memorial of the undersigned inhabitants of the parish of Hanover, in Her Majesty's Island of Jamaica.

May it please your Majesty,

Your Memorialists desire very humbly to approach your Majesty's Throne with feelings of the most profound respect and regard for your Majesty's person and Government, and with the most grateful acknowledgements to the Giver of all good for the innumerable and most precious blessings which they enjoy in their connection with the British Empire, and under your Majesty's benignant reign.

That your Memorialists crave permission to represent to your Majesty that their hearts are deeply oppressed with grief when they consider the horrors and cruelties of the inhuman Slave Trade which is now being carried on between the Western Coast of Africa and the Spanish Island of Cuba, and which, as proved by documents laid before the British Parliament, all the efforts of your Majesty's cruizers stationed on the coast of Africa have failed to prevent, or even greatly to mitigate.

That many of your Majesty's Memorialists belong to the emancipated class in this island, and that many others of them are descended from those who once were slaves, and therefore regard with feelings of peculiar sadness and sorrow this monstrous traffic in human beings with which the world is still cursed.

That your Memorialists have reason to believe that the provisions of the Treaties which now exist between your Majesty's Government and the Government of Her Majesty the Queen of Spain for the suppression and extinction of this accursed traffic, are systematically avoided and violated by some of the officials of the Spanish Government, whose duty it is to implement these Treaties; and that, in consequence of this, no fewer than at least 30,000 African slaves were last year landed in the Island of Cuba. That other and more stringent measures than have yet been adopted are therefore necessary to secure the fulfilment of these Treaties.

That your Memorialists are grateful to learn that the right of search has now been conceded by the United States of America as well as by other nations, and that accordingly the objections do not now exist which formerly applied to the stationing of your Majesty's cruizers off the coast of Cuba for the purpose of intercepting slavers engaged in this unholy and most hateful and abhorrent traffic; and your Memorialists have reason to cherish the conviction that, should this mode of dealing with the case be adopted by your Majesty's Government, it would speedily prove completely successful, and the whole system of slavery and the Slave Trade, in connection with the Island of Cuba, would receive a fatal blow.

May it therefore please your Majesty to take this most solemn and important matter into your most gracious consideration, and so to instruct your Majesty's Government in reference to it, as that farther steps may be speedily taken for the final extinction of the accursed African Slave Trade throughout the whole world; and thus "hearing the groaning of the prisoner and loosing those that are appointed to death, the blessing of those who are now ready to perish and are doomed by man to die," will descend yet more abundantly on your Majesty's person and reign.

And your Majesty's Memorialists, as in duty bound, shall ever pray that your Majesty may be long spared, and still more highly honoured by the Father of Mercies, as the instrument of abounding blessing to the British Empire and to the world at large.

Earl Russell to Earl Cowley.

My Lord,

Foreign Office, November 30, 1863.

I TRANSMIT to your Excellency, for your information, a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Zanzibar,* inclosing copies of a correspondence which has passed between him and the Gérant of the French Consulate in that city upon the subject of the assumption of the French flag by Soorie Arabs who are in the habit of making periodical visits to the East Coast of Africa for the purpose of obtaining slaves for conveyance to the Persian Gulf. It appears that these Arab vessels are furnished with accurate registers, issued to them by the French authorities at Mayotte and Nossi-Bé, which entitle them to French protection, and thereby enable them effectually to evade the search of Her Majesty's cruizers on that coast.

The piratical tribes by whom the Slave Trade on the East Coast of Africa is now carried on will not be slow to take advantage of this state of things, and the effect will be to give a new impetus to the Slave Trade on that coast, which has of late years received a severe check and been considerably diminished by the exertions of Her Majesty's cruizers.

Her Majesty's Government feel assured that the Imperial Government will not countenance this abuse of the French flag for Slave Trade purposes, and I have accordingly to instruct your Excellency to bring this matter to the notice of the French Government.

No. 81.

Lieutenant-Colonel Playfair to Earl Russell.—(Received October 9.)

(Extract.)

Zanzibar, August 26, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to forward, for your Lordship's information, copies of the despatches I have addressed to the Government of Bombay on the subject of the Slave Trade.

Inclosure 1 in No. 81.

Lieutenant-Colonel Playfair to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay.

(Extract.)

Zanzibar, May 23, 1863.

IN a former letter I reported my arrival at Zanzibar. After the first visits of ceremony were paid and returned, His Highness Sayid Majid granted me a private interview, at which we discussed several points, and foremost amongst these the question of the Slave Trade and the modification of the existing Treaty.

It is my pleasing duty to report that His Highness has, during the present season, evinced the utmost anxiety to fulfil his Treaty obligations; instead of succumbing to the insolent threats of the Northern Arabs, he has opposed them vigorously, and has even had recourse to arms to prevent them taking slaves from Zanzibar. Some he has flogged, one or two have been killed in resisting his soldiers, while others are even now in prison, and he has deprived them of upwards of 300 slaves whom they had purchased in the market, or kidnapped for embarkation on board their boats.

He assures me that he will continue to adopt like energetic measures, and in future he intends preventing the Northern Arabs from hiring houses at all in Zanzibar. If, says he, "the British Government could only prevent their leaving the Arab coast at all, I should be delighted, and the Slave Trade would be almost extinguished; but if they must come, they shall stay on board their boats, for I will not again permit them to reside on shore."

He has further conceded amost important point—he has ordered that all his boats engaged in the bond fide transport of slaves from port to port in his dominions shall have a Custom-house manifest stating the exact number on board, and he has permitted our cruizers to seize all boats contravening this order, or all in which a greater number are embarked than that specified in the manifest; thus, no doubt can exist regarding boats engaged in the transport of slaves as sanctioned by the Treaty, and such as are destined for exportation.

I think it would have a good effect, and would confirm His Highness in the decided course he has adopted, were his Excellency the Governor in Council to communicate to him, in a khareeta, the gratification with which he regards this altered policy.

I regret to state that His Highness the Sultan of Muscat appears to be engaged in the African Slave Trade. It is well known that a dhow captured by the "Ariel" at Melinda with 59 slaves on board was engaged in His Highness's service; the nacoda and crew of the dhow admitted the fact, the superior character of some of the slave girls lends probability to it, and if further proof be necessary I have in my possession a letter from His Highness bearing his seal, admitting that last season a boat carrying slaves for him was run on shore to avoid capture near Magdashooa, and calling on the Chiefs of that country, who are subjects of Sayid Majid, to restore and deliver them up to his agent, Sayid Mahomed ben Boo Beker, a native of Shehr.

I attach this letter in original, with an English translation.

A question of great difficulty now remains to be considered. Under date of the 7th of June last, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, addressing Colonel Pelly, refers him to previous correspondence, and desires him to propose to the Sultan of Zanzibar that orders should be given by His Highness prohibiting the transport of slaves from one portion of his dominion to another, and that His Highness should consent to the embodiment of the point in the existing Treaty; in other words, that while the status of slavery should remain unchanged in each separate portion of his dominions, no fresh supply of slaves should ever again be introduced, nor should the old ones be transported from one place to another.

I brought this to the notice of His Highness, and explained to him in detail what the desire of Her Majesty's Government was; but I received a reply to the effect that he was ever ready to listen to the English Government, but it was too much to expect that he should agree to a measure which must certainly prove his ruin. He was willing to take any steps in his power, or which we could suggest, to prevent the export of slaves from his dominions, but he really could not cut off the supply of slave labour from them.

It is for Her Majesty's Government to consider whether a measure should be forced on the Sultan which must inevitably cause the downfall of his House, or whether we should not rather await the time when the natural resources of Zanzibar having been more fully developed, such a measure may be carried out with safety.

Although Nature appears to have lavished her choicest gifts on the island, man has done little to turn them to advantage. The revenue of the island consists almost entirely of the Custom duties levied on foreign trade, whereas by the introduction of European capital and enterprise the island might be made to yield valuable crops of sugar and cotton.

The Sultan is very anxious to encourage enterprize of this nature. He has already made arrangements with a planter of Bourbon, of a very liberal nature; he has assigned him an estate whereon to cultivate sugar, and provides him with labour on condition that the speculator furnishes his own machinery, and allows him half the profit of the concern.

He is anxious to extend this system, and already an English and a Hamburg firm have it in contemplation to accept his offer.

I mention this to show that there is by no means a remote prospect of the natural advantages of this island being turned to good account; but I feel assured that until this be done our efforts to effect a sudden revolution in the institutions of the country will prove most disastrous.

I trust that his Excellency the Governor in Council will approve of my taking no further steps to cause the Sultan to consent to an amendment of the Treaty until I receive further instructions.

Inclosure 2 in No. 81.

Lieutenant-Colonel Playfair to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay.

(Extract.)

Zanzibar, August 26, 1863.

IN continuation of my letter dated the 31st ultimo, I have the honour to report, for the information of his Excellency the Governor in Council, that I have not been able to carry out my intention of visiting the ports in the Zanzibar dominions. The season is not favourable for doing so in the "Pleiad," and Captain Gardner, who had volunteered to take me in the "Orestes," received intelligence of a suspicious Spanish brig being at Mozambique, and hurried off in pursuit of her.

Early on the morning of the 1st instant the boats of Her Majesty's ship "Orestes" captured a small bedan, leaving the harbour of Zanzibar, with 64 slaves on board; these were owned by a party of Joasmee Arabs, who were conveying them to Pemba, there to await the opening of the season; they would then have been transhipped to a larger vessel and conveyed to the Persian Gulf.

The present case was one of more than ordinary atrocity. The Gulf Arabs, finding it difficult to obtain cargoes of slaves by open purchase, have adopted the economical expedient of kidnapping all on whom they can lay hands. In this instance the majority of the slaves belonged to residents at Zanzibar, and had either been decoyed into their captors' possession by temptation, or taken by force.

Two of them belonged to a respectable Arab of this city; they had been seized and gagged on their way home from market: the elder offered considerable resistance; he was, on this account, mercilessly murdered in the presence of numerous witnesses, and his body was cut in pieces and thrown into a cesspool.

After the capture of the bedan his comrade reported what had taken place, and I immediately waited on His Highness and represented very strongly the necessity for making a severe example, as the Arabs in question had committed the triple crime of murder, robbery, and disregard of the Slave Trade regulations.

His Highness admitted the propriety of my suggestion, and said that on Friday (it was then Monday the 3rd instant) the actual murderer should be executed, and the rest condemned to imprisonment.

Later in the day he wrote me to the effect that many of the slaves had been stolen from their legitimate owners, and he hoped that if any were proved to be such, I would restore them.

I replied that the question of restoring the slaves rested with Captain Gardner, their captor; that the ordinary maxim of municipal law which requires that stolen property should always revert to its rightful owner could not hold good in the present instance; the slaves in question were captured at sea, on their way to a slave-market; that the moment they trod the deck of the "Orestes" they became free, and we could not, consistently with our law, restore to slavery those whom we had been instrumental in liberating. This was the opinion expressed by Captain Gardner, and I fully concurred with him.

I received no reply to this letter, but on the day appointed for the execution His Highness sent his Secretary to say that Friday being the Mahomedan holiday, it had been deferred till the following morning. Saturday and several other days passed without any execution having taken place; and on the 18th instant I wrote to request that he would let me know, for the information of Government, what decree he had made in the case, as it was provided in the Treaty that all who export slaves, contrary to its provisions, should be severely punished.

He replied that as I had stated that the question of restoring the stolen slaves rested with Captain Gardner, he had deferred the case till the return of the "Orestes."

I may mention that the proposal to execute the murderer emanated from Sayid Majid. I was glad that he showed so much decision, and I knew that it would produce a most salutary effect: at the same time it was not a point that I could have insisted on; the murder was simply a criminal offence, which had no connection with our Treaty relations with His Highness. Moreover, according to Mahomedan law, a free man cannot be executed for the murder of a slave.

On the 20th instant the "Orestes" returned to Zanzibar, and Captain Gardner and I waited on His Highness; we explained to him how impossible it was to restore any of the slaves, although they had been captured within three miles of his coast, and therefore in his waters. He could not be convinced that we were right, and I promised to solicit the opinion of Government on the question, whether, should a man-of-war make a capture within his waters, and any of the slaves on board should prove to have been kidnapped from their legal owners at Zanzibar, we can be called upon to surrender them like any other stolen property?

It appears to me monstrous to suppose that Her Majesty's vessels especially engaged in the suppression of the Slave Trade can be expected to act as police for the recovery of stolen slaves, when the Government of the country is too weak to prevent them being stolen and exported.

I insisted that His Highness should punish severely the Arabs who owned this boat and had kidnapped the slaves, and he assured me he would imprison them for life. I expressed a hope that he would not include them in the general release of prisoners he is in the habit of making each Ramazan, his answer was:—"When you intercede in their behalf I shall release them, but not till then."

I have further to report that on the 14th instant I received information that a boat was on the point of starting with a cargo of slaves, there was no vessel of war in the harbour, and it was too late at night to communicate with His Highness, but the soldiers consented to act upon my request and the boat was seized. The greater portion of the slaves were secreted on shore, but nine were found on board; these with the boat were confiscated by His Highness, and the crew were imprisoned.

Inclosure 3 in No. 81.

The Sultan of Muscat to the Sultans of the protected Bunders (viz., Merka, Magdeshooa, and Brawa).

WE inform you that last year a bedan went ashore at Magdeshooa, with slaves in her, belonging to us. Now, our beloved Sayid Mahommed is sent to you, and we desire that you will make them over to him wherever they may be, and give them into the hands of the Sayid Mahommed above mentioned. We only mention this in the way of friendship ; this is what is required between us.

Inclosure 4 in No. 81.

Lieutenant-Colonel Playfair to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay.

(Extract.)

Zanzibar, June 15, 1863.

I EMBRACE the opportunity of a vessel proceeding to Bombay, to report for the information of his Excellency the Governor in Council that my relations with his Highness Sayid Majid continue on the most friendly footing.

2. I have recently had several interviews with him, and have induced him to assent to two measures of great importance, the first towards the suppression of the Slave Trade, and the second for the improvement of his dominions.

3. The months during which the exportation of slaves is carried on are January, February, March, and April, and his Highness has consented to prohibit the transport of slaves entirely during that period, even from port to port in his own dominions. If this be carried out in good faith the Northern Arabs will find great difficulty in obtaining slaves in any number, and every boat found by our cruisers with slaves on board will be a legal capture.

No. 82.

Lieutenant-Colonel Playfair to Earl Russell.—(Received November 21.)

My Lord,

Zanzibar, September 20, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to bring to your Lordship's notice a new phase in the Slave Trade on this coast, which threatens to paralyze the operations of our cruisers for its suppression.

2. The Soorie Arabs have had recourse to every possible expedient to escape the search of our vessels. Last season, instead of coasting northwards according to their usual custom, they sailed in small fleets and stood out to sea, every eight or ten boats being provided with a person qualified to navigate out of sight of land. This will hardly succeed a second year, and of that they are well aware, and some new expedient is necessary.

3. This they have found in the protection of the French flag. They are well aware that under it the right of search is denied to us, and it has now become the great object of their desire to obtain a French register.

4. I attach copies of a correspondence which has passed between the Gérant of the French Consulate at Zanzibar and myself on the subject. In my first letter I have stated that I was assured that the boats alluded to were engaged in legitimate commerce, and so far, it is true, that they are, and I do not doubt that the French authorities have full belief in that alone being their object; but further inquiries have altered my opinion considerably, and a glance at the character of the boats now in port will, I doubt not, convince your Lordship, as it has convinced me, that the French character has been assumed for no other reason than to secure them an opportunity of continuing their nefarious Traffic unmolested by our cruisers.

5. the boats now in port are—

(1.) A bugalow belonging to Mahommed-bin-Nasir, a native of Soor, who has never resided in any French Colony, and has only visited Nossi Bé occasionally for the purpose of trade. This, indeed, may be said of them all.

(2.) A bugalow belonging to Ahmed-bin-Saeed, also a native of Soor.

(3.) A bedan belonging to Ahmed-bin-Salim, of Soor. The owner is known to have taken a cargo of slaves from this coast to Soor in 1860, and Colonel Rigby reported this fact to His Highness Sayyid Majid.

(4.) A bugalow belonging to Mahommed Mobarak and Saleem, of Soor. The former is a notorious slave-dealer, and had a contract with M. Mas for the supply of slaves for the Cuban market; in this service he had eleven boats engaged.

(5.) A bugalow belonging to Mahommed-bin-Ahmed, a Soorie, from Ras-el-Had.

(6.) A kanja belonging to Salim Saeed-el-Hajeree, a native of Soor, who is known to have taken a cargo of 200 slaves from Kilwa.

(7.) A bugalow belonging to Wuhed Esh-Shervi, of Soor.

(8.) A bugalow belonging to Rashid-el-Murzooki, of Soor.

(9.) A kanja belonging to Mahommed-bin-Ahmed Bardthawan, of Shehr, a notorious slave-dealer, belonging to a more notorious slave-port.

(10.) The kanja belonging to the natives of Kutch, alluded to in my second letter to M. Jablonski.

6. That these men have any real claim to French protection it is impossible to believe, but so great is the facility of obtaining registers at Nossi Bé and Mayotte, that I confidently expect that every slave-dealer who can manage to make one or two preliminary voyages to those Colonies will thenceforth be able to carry on the Slave Trade without fear of interruption ; at least he will run a single cargo, and if he succeeds in that, he can afford to burn his vessel and commence de novo.

7. M. Jablonski states that he cannot see in what respect the presence of French boats can embarrass our officers engaged in the suppression of the Slave Trade, and he quotes the Convention of the 31st March, 1859. A single paragraph from that document sufficiently answers his objection :—

“7. To inquire into the nature of the cargo, or the commercial operations of the vessel, or any other fact, in short, than that of the nationality of the vessel, is prohibited ; every other search and inspection whatever is absolutely forbidden.”

I have, &c.

Lieutenant-Colonel Playfair to M. Jablonski.

Sir,

Zanzibar, September 14, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inclose an extract of a letter to my address from His Highness Sayyid Majid, complaining of the act of certain boats of Her Majesty's ship “Orestes.”

2. The complaint, if well grounded, is a very legitimate one, and it will be carefully investigated ; but my object in now addressing you is to call your attention to what I cannot but observe, to what is patent to every resident at Zanzibar, and to what Sayyid Majid himself admits—that the flag of France is used by vessels at this port which have no claim whatever to its protection.

3. It may be, and doubtless is true, that some of the complaints made against vessels of Her Majesty's navy are not altogether groundless, although in the performance of so difficult and disagreeable a duty as that of suppressing the Slave Trade, mistakes cannot always be avoided, but it is no less true that it has become the expressed object of vessels engaged in the Slave Trade to obtain the protection of the French flag, as a means of ensuring them that security which their own cannot afford.

4. That they usually succeed in obtaining their desire I do not assert or believe ; on the contrary I am assured that most of the Arab vessels now sailing under French colours are engaged in legitimate commerce : but exceptions do occur, and one has been officially reported to this Agency and to Her Majesty's Government by the Commander of the “Ariel.” Certainly the practice offers great temptation to a race not remarkable for its scrupulousness, to abuse the privilege conferred upon them.

5. I am not aware what the law of France may be regarding the grant of registers, or whether the Government of His Imperial Majesty approves of the use which is made of the French flag at Zanzibar, but I believe that the laws of all civilized nations are very similar in this respect, and that a vessel, to obtain the flag of any country, must be owned, bond fide, by a subject of it.

6. That such is not the custom here I need hardly point out to you ; it would not be difficult to prove that most of the boats now in harbour under the French flag are in reality owned by natives of the African and Arabian coasts. How they obtain the privilege I cannot say, possibly through the fiction of representing the owner to be a native of Mayotte, but that the name thus used is merely the nominis umbra is thoroughly understood.

7. The inconvenience likely to arise from this system, and the difficulties and embarrassment it will present to officers of the Royal Navy engaged in the suppression of the Slave Trade, are so great, that it will be necessary for me to bring the matter to the notice of Her Majesty's Government. I would therefore beg the favour of your informing me whether such dhows receive their French papers at your office, or, as I suspect is sometimes the case, at Madagascar, and what constitutes a title to the privilege of using the French flag.

I have, &c.

(Extract.)23 Rubeeah-el-ewvel (September 8, 1863).

TO-DAY a complaint has reached me from Pemba, that Government boats are cruising there, and that they (i. e. their crews) land on shore, and whenever a slave runs away they take him from his master. If Government boats continue this practice most of the Arab boats will place themselves under French protection, as has been done, and only for the reason I have mentioned.

Lieutenant-Colonel Playfair to M. Jablonski.

Sir, Zanzibar, September 14, 1863.

SINCE the dispatch of my previous letter of this day's date, it has come to my knowledge that a kanja (native boat) named "Baroongoo" (?) belonging entirely to subjects of the British protected State of Kutch, and therefore to individuals entitled to all the rights and privileges of British subjects, is in the harbour of Zanzibar with French colours and a French register, obtained at Nossi Bé.

2. I should esteem it a favour if you would permit me to inspect the papers of the said kanja.

3. I inclose copies of the depositions of one of the owners, and of the agent of the other, in order that you may be aware of my grounds for making the above statement.

Deposition of Sewjee Mahommed.

Appearance and depositions of Sewjee Mahommed, on solemn affirmation, before me, Lieutenant-Colonel Robert Lambert Playfair, Acting Political Agent at Zanzibar, this 14th day of September, 1863, who saith:—

I am a British subject, and usually reside in Kutch, in Hindostan. I have lately come from the French Colony of Nossi Bé. The kanga "Baroongoo," now in the harbour of Zanzibar, under French colours, belongs half to me and half to Suleiman Jooma, also a resident of Kutch, and a sepoy of the Rao. The share of Suleiman was purchased with the money of a Bhattia named Ketu Ludda, also a resident of Kutch, and therefore I presume the last-mentioned is the real owner of the second half of the kanja. No other party has any share or interest in it.

Suleiman has a wife belonging to the French Settlement of Nossi Bé, but he himself is not a French subject.

Suleiman obtained a French register for the said kanja in Nossi Bé.

Affirmation of Khimjee Damjee.

Appearance and Deposition of Khimjee Damjee, on solemn affirmation, before me, Lieutenant-Colonel R. L. Playfair, Acting Political Agent, Zanzibar, this 14th day of September, 1863, who saith:—

I am a native of Kutch, and represent here the firm of Ketu Ludda, also of Kutch. I know the kanga now in the harbour of Zanzibar, under French colours, but not its name.

Ketu Ludda has an interest in the said kanja, but he has not written to me to say how much that interest is. Suleiman, a sepoy of the Rao of Kutch, purchased it in Nossi Bé, but he has now returned to Kutch.

I believe that Sewjee Mahommed also has an interest in the said kanga, but I have no certain knowledge of the fact.

I never heard that any French subject had an interest in the said kanga.

M. le Consul,

Zanzibar, September 15, 1863.

I BEG to acknowledge the receipt of the letter which you have done me the honour to address to me of yesterday's date, on the subject of the nationality of the French boats which frequent this port.

All the boats which carry the French flag are furnished with papers in proper order, delivered to them in our Colonies, stating that they belong to Frenchmen. Their papers are all visé at this Consulate on arrival and departure.

It is true that the proprietors and Commanders of these boats are all of Arab or Sowaheli origin, but I have the honour to make you aware that the condition of French citizen is obtained not only by birth, but by benefit of the law, namely, by naturalization, and that a stranger, associated with a Frenchman, may be the proprietor of a French ship.

I abstain from citing here our laws concerning the enjoyment of civil rights and the "francisation" of boats, because it is impossible for me to admit that a French authority, in matters concerning those under him, can submit to any control other than that of His Imperial Majesty's Government.

His Highness himself cannot object to this state of affairs, because he has declared to us in writing that there is no law which prevents any of his subjects expatriating himself.

I do not see, M. le Consul, in what respect the presence of French boats can occasion embarrassment to officers commanding vessels of Her Britannic Majesty engaged in the suppression of the Slave Trade. The Convention dated the 31st March, 1859, of which I have the honour to transmit you a copy, regulates the conduct to be pursued, as well on the high seas as in those of a neutral country.

M. le Consul,

Zanzibar, September 15, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, demanding explanations on the subject of the French boat "Ambanourou," in which certain subjects of Her Britannic Majesty pretend to be co-partners, and I beg to inclose an authenticated copy of the "acte de francisation" of this boat.

As you may convince yourself, the sole legal proprietor of this boat is a French subject, named Sélémani bin Djouma, domiciled at Ambanourou. I do not know what title this person may unite with that of a French citizen; if he was born at Kutch, as is stated in the deposition which you did me the honour to transmit, it is evident that, having complied with the necessary formalities prescribed by the law of the Empire, he has demanded and obtained French naturalization.

I regret, M. le Consul, not to be able to give effect to the depositions of Sewjee Mahommed and Kimjee Damjee; the simple affirmation does not, according to our law, constitute a title to property. That affair is entirely the concern of the tribunals of Nossi-Bé, the domicile of the defendant, and I do not doubt, if it be true that this individual has deceived the aforesaid subjects of Her Britannic Majesty in taking their money and making them believe that they were admitted into partnership in the boat, that prompt justice will be rendered them.

Sir,

Foreign Office, November 30, 1863.

THE Secretary of State for India has communicated to me a copy of a despatch dated the 18th of May last from Brigadier Coghlan to the Secretary to the Government of Bombay, inclosing copies of two Treaties concluded with the Chiefs of Maculla and Shuhar for the suppression of the Traffic in Slaves within their territories.

I transmit to you copies of the Treaties in question, together with an extract from Brigadier Coghlan's despatch, by which you will see that Silah bin Mahomed and Ali bin Najee, the Nukeeb of Maculla and Shuhar, on signing these Treaties, expressed a wish that the Sultans of Muscat and Zanzibar might be informed of the engagements which they had contracted towards Her Majesty's Government, and that Brigadier Coghlan promised that the Chiefs' wishes should be attended to.

I have accordingly to desire that you will take an opportunity of informing the Sultan of Zanzibar of the engagement concluded by these Chiefs with Her Majesty's Government.

(Extract.)

Aden, May 18, 1863.

LEAVING Bunder Muryah on the 12th instant, I crossed the Gulf of Aden to Shuhur on the Arabian coast. The hope of concluding a Treaty with the Nukeeb of this port, and also with the Nukeeb of Maculla, has been long cherished by me; but it always happened formerly that, just as I was on the point of setting out to confer with these Chiefs, some impediment arose to mar my scheme,—either I was detained at Aden by pressing business there, or my ship was suddenly called away on other duty. My design, however, is at last accomplished.

These two independent ports, Maculla and Shuhur, are the principal slave-depôts or entrepôts on these coasts; it is at either of them (but chiefly at Maculla) that the slaves brought from the East Coast of Africa, from Zanzibar, from the Somali and the Donkali ports, are lodged, pending despatch to their final destination, in the Yemen, in the Hedjaz, or in the Persian Gulf. The Slave Traffic constitutes a considerable portion of their revenue, and the institution is so blended with their interests, their prejudices, and even their religion, that I entertained more of hope than of expectation when I presented the question to them.

Hence I was not surprised at my proposal being somewhat coldly received by Ali Najee, the Nukeeb of Shuhur. He was willing, he said, to oblige Her Majesty's Government, he had no interest in the Slave Traffic, as little or none came to his port; but with regard to making a Treaty on the subject, it had always been his rule to follow the example of Maculla; he would do so in this instance, and therefore until he could ascertain the mind of the Nukeeb of that place he must decline to make any engagement with me.

I lost no time in proceeding to Maculla, where I was received by the Nukeeb Silah bin Mahomed with the usual courtesies and with a friendly cordiality which the tone of his correspondence with me during the last eight or nine years led me to expect. He entered frankly on the subject of my visit, discussed the effects of the proposed Treaty with intelligence, and having himself suggested a clause postponing the operation of the engagement for twelve months, in order that due notice may be given to all concerned, he concluded the Treaty which is herewith forwarded in original with an English translation.

Silah bin Mahomed expressed his wish that their Highnesses Seyed Thoweynee of Muscat, and his brother Seyed Majid of Zanzibar, should be informed of this engagement by Her Majesty's Government. I felt no difficulty in promising that this should be done, and I accordingly solicit Government to redeem my pledge.

Cheered by this success at Maculla, I returned to Shuhur, where, without any difficulty worth mentioning, I obtained the assent of the Nukeeb Ali Najee, who stipulated only for the same interval of time as had been agreed on with Silah bin Mahomed of Maculla. He intimated a desire also that Her Majesty's Government should communicate this Treaty to the Governments of Muscat and Zanzibar, and I engaged that his wish should be complied with. The original Treaty in Arabic, with an English translation, is herewith forwarded.

Thus these two noted independent slave-depôts are brought legally under the control of Her Majesty's Government, with whom it now rests to give effect to the compact made with each. At present we are without any means to that end. Slaves may be and are carried by thousands to the Turkish ports in the Red Sea and to the Persian Gulf, and we have not a single vessel available to interrupt the traffic. The scale on which that traffic is conducted is enormous. So long as I had two or three vessels of the Indian navy at my disposal I was able to give a very material check to the export from the Somali Coasts, and if I could not wholly prevent it I at least rendered it exceedingly hazardous, but the withdrawal of these vessels leaves the coasts absolutely clear of every obstruction, and as long impunity will assuredly beget confidence, it is to be feared that if vigorous measures be not adopted to enforce our Treaty obligations the traffic will revive and the Treaties might as well never have been made.

THE reason of writing this bond is, that influenced by motives of humanity, and by a desire to conform to the principles on which the great English Government is conducted, we lend a willing ear to the proposals of our sincere friend Brigadier William Marcus Coghlan, Governor of Aden, that we shall covenant with him to abolish and prohibit the export and import of slaves from or to any part of our territory to any other place in Africa or in Asia or elsewhere.

Therefore I, whose name and seal are set to this bond, do in the sight of God and of men solemnly proclaim my determination to prohibit the export or import of slaves by every means in my power. I will neither export nor import any myself, nor will I permit my subjects to do so, and any vessel belonging to my subjects found carrying slaves shall

Lieutenant-Colonel Playfair to Earl Russell.—(Received March 15, 1864.)

My Lord,

Zanzibar, November 16, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to forward, for your Lordship's information, extracts of my letter dated the 15th instant, to the Government of Bombay.

The passages omitted are merely descriptive or historical, and have no bearing whatever on the subject of the Slave Trade.

I have, &c.

(Signed)

R. L. PLAYFAIR.

Inclosure in No. 84.

Lieutenant-Colonel Playfair to the Chief Secretary to Government, Bombay.

(Extract.)

1. I HAVE the honour to report, for the information of his Excellency the Governor in Council, that, impressed with the importance of making myself well acquainted with the various countries around Zanzibar, especially those more or less connected with the Slave Trade, I left Zanzibar on my projected tour on the 8th of October.

2. I had intended proceeding at once to the south in the "Pleiad," but Commander Chapman, R.N., who purposed leaving the same day for Pemba, invited me to accompany him in Her Majesty's ship "Ariel." I gladly availed myself of his kindness, and sent the "Pleiad" to await my arrival at Ibo.

3. We anchored off Chak-chak, the principal port of Pemba, on the morning of the 9th, and left on Sunday the 11th. These two days were occupied by the ship's boats in searching the numerous creeks and harbours for slave-dhows, and by Captain Chapman and myself in visiting the main and adjacent islands.

4. Next to Zanzibar, Pemba is the most considerable islands in the dominions of His Highness Sayid Majid, and produces considerable quantities of rice, manioc, fruit, and vegetables. It is cut up in every direction by creeks, which are much frequented by country craft engaged in the Slave Trade, while, owing to the numerous reefs and shoals, and to the imperfect survey of the island, they are quite impracticable for vessels of war. No slaves were found on this occasion.

5. It is more unhealthy than Zanzibar, and the mortality from fever is so great that it is a question whether it could be kept under cultivation were the supply of slave labour cut off.

11. We arrived at Ibo, or Weebo (where I found the "Pleiad" awaiting me) on the morning of the 18th. This is one of a numerous group of islands to the south of Cape Delgado, and capital of the district of the same name. It contains nearly 3,000 natives, but very few Europeans. There are twelve Banian merchants and one Frenchman, representing the well-known firm of Regis Ainé, of Marseilles, a house once deeply engaged in "free engagé" trade.

12. The town is clean, and the houses, though poor, are neatly built and kept, but its aspect is most depressing. The Governor assured me that it had an important trade in ivory, copal, &c., but assuredly one could not divine this fact from the appearance of the town. There were very few dhows in the harbour, no signs of life or commercial activity in the streets. The European and half-caste population appeared to a man to be miserable fever-stricken wretches, and the only signs of work I observed were the processions of prisoners or refractory slaves engaged in carrying building material for the public works in course of erection.

14. From Ibo I proceeded to Mozambique, where I arrived on the morning of the 21st, and remained till the afternoon of the 26th. I met with a very hospitable reception from the Governor-General, Brigadier João Tavaréz de Almeida, who invited me to reside at the Palace, and from one of the principal merchants of the city, with whom I spent two days at his villa on the mainland at Cabaceira.

15. The city of Mozambique is situated on a sandy island, about a mile long and 300 paces broad. I was prepared by the Report of Captain Crawford, R.N., quoted in the last Blue Book on the Slave Trade, to find it "a heap of ruins," but I was agreeably surprised to find it clean and solidly built. The houses of the Europeans are large double-storied buildings, in excellent preservation, many of them superior to the best at Zanzibar; the public buildings are equally good, especially the Palace of the Governor-General, once the Jesuit College of San Paulo, which may fairly claim to possess a certain amount of magnificence.

39. The heavy duties and obstructive fiscal arrangements of the Portuguese have almost annihilated trade, and until very lately no traffic but that of ivory and slaves was deemed worthy of attention. Thanks to the energetic measures of the British Government and its cruisers, and, I firmly believe, to the uprightness and loyalty of the present Governor-General, Colonel João Tavaréz de Almeida, the Slave Trade has greatly decreased, though the desire to participate in its unholy gains remains unabated.

40. It is difficult, especially for a British official, to obtain correct information on this point, but it is commonly believed that two European vessels have succeeded in obtaining cargoes during the past twelve or fourteen months, while small numbers of slaves are constantly taken away by dhows, touching at unfrequented parts of the coast. One Spanish vessel, the "America," is now supposed to be watching for an opportunity to obtain a cargo. I left her at Zanzibar; she had previously remained some weeks at Mozambique, and she appears to be spending time, under the pretext of legitimate trade, till her consorts arrive. She was carefully searched by the Governor-General, but no conclusive proof of her character was obtained. I cannot refrain from recording that it was his Excellency who first communicated to our naval officers the fact of her presence on the coast, and his suspicions regarding her.

41. I do not entertain a doubt that his Excellency is sincere in his desire to prevent this execrable Traffic, but he meets with no support from his subordinates. In the last Blue Book, there is a correspondence on the subject, and in one of his despatches (pp 185, 186, 187) he indignantly denies that his subordinate officers are in any way concerned with it at the present day, whatever might have been the case formerly.

42. This despatch is dated 15th February, 1862, but in conversation with me, his Excellency frankly admitted that had his information been as correct then as it is now, he would have modified his language considerably.

43. The particular instance which has induced this change of opinion is as follows:—Major Carvalho, late Governor of Ibo, was an officer in whom he placed the utmost confidence; he was poor, but esteemed honourable, and he was on this account specially selected for the Government of Ibo.

44. Two months ago, on his death-bed, he called the Judge of Mozambique, and requested him to make his will; amongst other requests he made one that his effects should remain untouched for a period of two years. It was explained to him that this was impossible, and he died intestate. On an examination of his property one box was found to contain 20,000 dollars in gold, and a nominal list specifying the shares due to each of the public officers of Ibo on account of some particular slave-venture.

46. Slavery is sanctioned as a domestic institution, and I believe that with the single exception of the Governor-General, there is not a man in the province who has a free servant. As the law now stands, all slaves are to become free in 1878, but whether this will take effect without considerable exterior pressure is very doubtful.

47. My short residence at Mozambique does not enable me to speak authoritatively of the state of the domestic slaves. I was told that they are generally well treated; nevertheless I was forcibly struck with the difference between them and those at Zanzibar. The latter are the gayest and happiest class of the community, continually dancing and singing; for two days in the week they are allowed to work for themselves, and their manner is free and unconstrained. Here they never meet an European without making the deepest reverence; they address their masters with bated breath, and appear to stand in the greatest awe of them. It is true that a master may not, by law, beat his slave, but he may send him to the police to be beaten, or he may sentence him to imprisonment with hard labour in irons, on the public works, without cause shown before any legal tribunal.

49. I left Mozambique on the 26th October, and arrived at Mayotta on the morning of the 1st November.

56. The labourers on the sugar estates are principally negroes, who are imported from the adjacent islands and from Madagascar as “free engagés.” Whatever name may be given to the system by which these are procured, it is simply and undisguisedly a phase of the Slave Trade. Thus a planter desirous of obtaining a supply of labourers applies to the Commandant Supérieur, who appoints a delegate (invariably a private soldier of the garrison) to accompany him, say to Mohilla; there the necessary number of slaves are purchased from Arab dealers; they are then liberated and bound to serve their new masters for periods of not less than three and not more than five years. The average price paid for the slaves is 35 dollars, and by the time they are landed at Mayotta as “free engagés” they cost about 40 dollars per head. Their master is bound to pay them $1\frac{1}{2}$ dollars per mensem as wages, and to allow them a weekly ration of 12 lbs. of rice, with a small quantity of salt and butter.

57. These negroes are usually, if not always, brought by Arabs from the mainland of Africa to the various islands, whence they are shipped to Mayotta; they are then bonâ fide slaves, and it is certain that their purchase by the French, even though by this fact they become transmuted into “free engagés,” fosters and tends to perpetuate the Slave Trade. I do not propose any remedy for this, I merely state facts which no colonist at Mayotta will dispute.

58. I left Mayotta on the 3rd of November, and arrived at Pomoni in Johanna on the following morning; during the passage we met a boat at sea containing seven “free engagés,” who had fled from Mayotta in their master’s boat; they were in great distress, and it seemed doubtful whether they could reach their destination. They were received on board the “Pleiad,” and the boat was made over to Mr. Sunley, Her Majesty’s Consul at Johanna, to be returned to its owner.

59. These men called themselves slaves, and had evidently failed to appreciate their altered condition as “free engagés;” they said they preferred death to returning, and as they were found on the high seas I did not feel myself called on to restore them, even had I possessed the power to do so.

60. Colonel Pelly has left me little to say regarding this island, but I cannot refrain from adding my testimony to his regarding the marvellous results which the skill and energy of Mr. Sunley have produced, and the humanizing effects on the population which have followed.

61. He has already 300 acres of land planted with sugar cane, which produces upwards of 300 tons of sugar per annum.

62. Unfortunately he has been compelled to employ slave labour, but in so mitigated a form as to rob it of all its terrors. The importation of slaves into the island has long ceased; it received a temporary stimulus from the "engagé" system, but that was of short continuance. The institution of domestic slavery of course prevails, and the climate of the island, unlike that of Zanzibar, Mozambique, &c., is so congenial to the African constitution that the births pretty nearly equalize the deaths; thus the supply of slave-labour is perpetuated.

63. Mr. Sunley hires these domestic slaves from their owners, paying the latter 1½ dollars per mensem, and a further allowance of from half a dollar to two dollars, together with food and clothing, is made to the slaves themselves. Out of the 230 men in his employment, not more than 50 are free men.

64. Her Majesty's Government deemed it impossible that a British Consul could be permitted to employ slave-labour in any form, and Mr. Sunley was given to understand that he must employ free men only, or resign his Consulate. He had sunk all his capital in the enterprize in which he was engaged, and finding it impossible to continue it without the assistance of slave-labour, he has accepted the latter alternative.

65. The loss to him is insignificant; his remuneration as Consul is only 150*l.* per annum, while his sugar plantation yields ten times that amount, but the loss to the public service will be far more serious.

66. Mr. Sunley's long residence here, and his sterling qualities have given him an influence in the councils of the King and his Chiefs, such as few Consuls succeed in obtaining; this has always been used for good, and the result is that the island, once noted for disaffection to its ruler, and for the intestine feuds amongst its Chiefs, has enjoyed uninterrupted tranquillity.

68. On the 9th of November, in company with Mr. Sunley, I steamed round to Mootscunoodoo, the capital, to pay my respects to the King. I was much pleased with His Highness, who appears to be a young man of considerable intellect and a fair English scholar.

71. I left Johanna on the morning of the 10th instant, and returned to Zanzibar on the 14th instant.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 29th of December last, I transmit herewith, for your information and for communication to the Netherlands Government, copies of a further despatch and its inclosures from Mr. Skelton, Her Majesty's Judge in the British and Netherlands Mixed Commission Court at Sierra Leone,* reporting the condemnation of the Netherlands barque "Jane," on a charge of being equipped for the Slave Trade, and inclosing copies of the proceedings in the case of this vessel.

I also inclose a copy of a letter from Commander Douglas of Her Majesty's ship "Espoir,"† which has been communicated to me by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, reporting his reasons for detaining the "Jane," and containing information respecting two persons calling themselves passengers who were found on board this vessel.

LE Soussigné, Ministre des Affaires Etrangères, a eu l'honneur de recevoir les notes que Sir J. Milbanke, Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire de Sa Majesté Britannique, lui a adressées le 5 et 31 Janvier dernier, relative au navire "Jane," détenu et condamné pour avoir été engagé dans le Commerce d'Esclaves.

Le Gouvernement du Roi regrette qu'on ait abusé du pavillon Néerlandais pour se livrer à un Trafic également réprouvé par la morale que par les Conventions conclues à différentes époques entre les Pays-Bas et la Grande Bretagne; mais il se hâte d'ajouter qu'il favorisera autant que possible les recherches exactes et sévères auxquelles se livrera la justice. A cet effet les pièces de la procédure ont été déjà confiées aux mains du fonctionnaire compétent, avec ordre d'instituer des poursuites. Il est cependant probable que celle-ci n'aboutiront pas aussi longtemps que les prévenus ne seront pas retournés

Il résulte de ce qui précède, qu'il serait fort à désirer dans l'intérêt de la vindicte publique que le Gouvernement Britannique facilitât autant que possible le retour des dits individus, et voulût communiquer au Soussigné le projet qui pourrait surgir chez un ou plusieurs des prévenus de revenir dans les Pays-Bas.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 23rd of February last, inclosing a copy of a note addressed to you by the Netherlands Minister for Foreign Affairs, expressing a wish that steps might be taken by Her Majesty's Government to bring to justice the parties connected with the Netherlands barque "Jane," lately condemned by the Mixed Commission Court at Sierra Leone for being engaged in the Slave Trade, I transmit to you, for communication to the Netherlands Government, a copy of a despatch from Mr. Skelton, Her Majesty's Judge at that port,† inclosing the muster-roll of the "Jane," showing that only three of the crew besides the master were Dutch subjects; and further stating that the master of that vessel left Sierra Leone on the 19th of December last on board the British barque "Venus" for Antigua, and that no trace can be procured of the crew who are supposed to have shipped on board other vessels leaving Sierra Leone.

Mr. Ward to Earl Russell.—(Received November 30.)

My Lord,

The Hague, November 24, 1863.

WITH reference to your Lordship's despatch to Sir John Milbanke of the 29th December, 1862, instructing him to press the Netherlands Government to procure the punishment of the parties who may have been engaged in the slaving adventure of the Netherlands barque "Jane," I have now the honour to forward the copy of a note addressed by M. Van der Maesen de Sombreff to Sir John Milbanke on that subject.

His Excellency, after mentioning that a prosecution had been commenced against Captain Prince, the Commander of the "Jane," proceeds to state that the copies of the documents respecting the condemnation of the "Jane," were not considered sufficient by the Court at Curaçoa to procure the conviction of the accused; and accordingly requests that Her Majesty's Government will be pleased to order that the originals of the documents on which the Judgment of the Court of Sierra Leone was grounded, may be transmitted to him, together with a copy of the Judgment duly authenticated, for the purpose of furthering the ends of justice.

LE Soussigné, Ministre des Affaires Etrangères, a l'honneur de porter à la connaissance de Sir J. Milbanke la communication suivante, concernant l'affaire du navire la "Jane," qui a fait en dernier lieu le sujet des notes de M. l'Envoyé Britannique, du 28 Mai et 10 Juin derniers.

Le nommé B. A. Prince, capitaine de la "Jane," étant arrivé à Curaçao, le tribunal de cette île a d'après les ordres du Gouvernement du Roi, commencé des poursuites contre lui. Le dit tribunal regarde toutefois les copies de différentes pièces ayant rapport à la condamnation de la "Jane," que le Cabinet de la Haye lui a fait parvenir, comme insuffisantes pour la procédure criminelle en question, et se voit hors d'état de mener ces poursuites à bonne fin, à moins d'être mis en possession des pièces originales qui ont donné lieu à la confiscation du dit navire par la Cour de Justice Mixte de Sierra Leone.

Tout à cause de la gravité du méfait commis, que pour contribuer à prévenir qu'on n'abuse impunément du pavillon Néerlandais pour couvrir la Traite, le Gouvernement du Roi attacherait grand prix à voir les coupables subir la punition qu'ils méritent, et il est convaincu que le Gouvernement Britannique partage entièrement cette manière de voir.

Le Soussigné ose donc se flatter que le Cabinet de St. James voudra bien coopérer à l'atteinte du but désiré, en lui faisant parvenir en original, et légalisées par les autorités Britanniques compétentes, toutes les déclarations ayant servi à motiver l'Arrêt de la Cour de Justice de Sierra Leone, ainsi qu'un exemplaire authentique du dit Arrêt.

YOU will have learnt from the despatches from Mr. Hewett which have passed through your hands the decease of Mr. Edmund Gabriel, who, for a period of eighteen years, faithfully and ably performed the duties, first of British Arbitrator, and subsequently of British Commissioner in the British and Portuguese Mixed Commission Court at Loanda.

Mr. Hewett reports that, on the occasion of the interment of Mr. Gabriel, the Governor-General of Angola was represented by both his Aides-de-camp; and that, by his Excellency's orders, the honours due to the highest judicial authority were paid to Mr. Gabriel's remains. I have to desire that you will request the Portuguese Government to convey to the Governor-General and other authorities at Angola the acknowledgments of Her Majesty's Government for their attention and respect on this melancholy occasion.

I have at the same time to instruct you to acquaint the Portuguese Government that Mr. Watson Vredenburg, Her Majesty's Arbitrator in the Mixed Commission Court at Loanda, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Gabriel as Commissioner, and that he will leave England for his post by the packet appointed to take out the African mails of the 24th instant; and you will at the same time request that this appointment may be made known to the authorities at Angola.

I have to instruct you to communicate this information to the Portuguese Government, who will doubtless take steps to enforce the forfeiture of the bail bond which the owners of the "Mondego" must have given for the lawful employment of their vessel on her departure for the African coast. Inclosure 2 in No. 100.

The Governor-General of the Province of Angola to the Minister of Marine.

(Translation.)

(Extract.)

July 16, 1862.

I ACKNOWLEDGE the receipt of the copy of a note which your Excellency was pleased to forward to me, addressed to His Most Faithful Majesty's Government on the 24th of April last, by Her Britannic Majesty's Minister at the Court of Lisbon, inclosing copy of a despatch dated the 8th of January of this current year, addressed by Her Britannic Majesty's Commissioners in the Mixed Commission Court at Loanda to their own Government, respecting the transportation of negroes from this Colony to that of St. Thomas.

Your Excellency must already be in possession of the whole correspondence which has taken place between the General Government of Angola and the British functionaries; the subject is fully elucidated in this correspondence.

During the space of three months and six days alluded to in the note, there departed for St. Thomas 22 slaves, 78 libertos (freedmen), and 384 free Portuguese blacks, on board different vessels, as may be seen from the inclosed map, document No. 1, which has reference not to this period alone, but to the whole time which has elapsed since I took possession of the Government of this Province on the 7th of February, 1862, until the 2nd of this current month of July, the day of the departure of the steamer "D. Antonia," belonging to the Mercantile Union Company. The said map contains an account of the despatches, and lists which were forwarded to the Governor of the Province of St. Thomas, accompanying the individuals in question; as well as the answers of the said Governor, acknowledging the entry and appearance of the same individuals in their condition as slaves, free, and libertos (freedmen).

I send, together with the map, all the original documents which preceded the issuing of passports to those blacks who have proceeded on their voyage from this port of Loanda to St. Thomas during the period above-mentioned, with the exception of those having reference to three of them, which I forwarded to His Majesty's Government on the 5th of December last, in order that it might become acquainted with the mode of proceeding which has been followed.

No other blacks have left for St. Thomas beyond those referred to in the documents which I forward; and even all these did not proceed on their voyage, some of them having failed to do so after having taken their passports. From the said map and documents it may be clearly seen:—

1st. That no ship ever took more than 10 slaves, there being even a scrupulous care not to allow libertos (freedmen) to be shipped, they not being excluded by the Treaty of the 3rd of July, 1842, whatever might be their number.

2ndly. That I never allowed more than 10 to be shipped, either of the former or of the latter.

3rdly. That all the other passengers are free men, who cannot be registered either as slaves or as libertos (freedmen), their condition of free men being stated, whenever the passengers are blacks, in the passports which are personally delivered to each of them. There is no occasion to issue a deed of manumission, or any other document, unless it should be declared that this ought to be done with respect to all citizens who are blacks.

If any of the black passengers appertained to the class of slaves, they remain free by the fact of their quitting this port with a passport as free men, and for this purpose all the individuals in question were properly guaranteed by an adequate surety; the Police Department in this city having previously declared them free to proceed in their condition of free men, those who are so, or noted down in the same condition those who are not so, in order that they may never again be considered as slaves in the Portuguese dominions, should their departure take place. In this manner the condition of slaves would be quickly abolished, were all masters to allow their slaves to depart, which neither did nor will happen.

At St. Thomas there neither is, nor can there be, any registration in the book of slaves or in that of libertos (freedmen), and whenever any negro has asked for a passport there, it has been granted to him by the Governor of St. Thomas, for the same reasons and in the same manner as I grant for that province.

Her Britannic Majesty's Government cannot be ignorant of the scrupulous care taken by His Most Faithful Majesty's Government in the execution of the Treaty, nor ignore the zeal which animates it for the suppression of the Slave Trade; it must be aware that in the Portuguese dominions there exists by law a registration of slaves, which the Government has ordered to be organized of its own good pleasure; and it ought further to know that slavery is abolished in the Portuguese dominions, in virtue of the Decrees of the 14th of December, 1854, and of the 29th of April, 1858, from those dates forward; that no more slaves are registered, and that no free men can be carried from one province into another for the purpose of being registered as slaves, or even as libertos (freedmen), who are, however, nothing else but free men liable to serve in a certain manner for the space of ten years,—a service, however, which, if they wish, it is left to their choice to select to whom and in what manner they are to perform it, looking out for another master who will indemnify their former one for that part of their services which they were still bound to perform, and making an agreement with the latter with respect to the conditions of their future services.

Nature has adapted a race of men for these regions, and if they cannot be peopled by free negroes, when blacks alone can resist the climate and apply to labour, what can be done to people them and cultivate them, when they are in want of cultivators? Are they to be condemned to be perpetually abandoned?

In my despatch of the 5th of May last, I reported to your Excellency the mode of proceeding of the Commissioner Edmund Gabriel, who after the legality had been recognized with which the patacho (ship) "Liberdade," as well as all the passengers which she took to St. Thomas in the month of April last, had been dispatched, went to the house of the owner of the said vessel to threaten him that she would be visited and captured. The vessel (patacho) sailed, was visited, and from the despatch noted down in the map, under No. 425 of the 3rd of May last, your Excellency will see that she arrived at St. Thomas.

Now, however, there occurs another fact, upon which I shall abstain from passing any comment, and proceed to submit it to the consideration of His Majesty's Government.

At this Office of the General Government the following letter from the agent of the Mercantile Union Company was received:—

"General Agency of the Mercantile Union Company;

Agent's Office at Loanda, July 5, 1862.

"Most Illustrious Sir,

"I have the honour to inform you, in order that you may communicate the same to his Excellency the Governor-General, that, from Lisbon, the agent of the Mercantile Union Company announces to me, in a letter of the 30th of May of this year, that the Directors of the same Company had come to the decision which is laid down in the paragraphs which I beg leave to transcribe in this place:—

"As you will perceive, in virtue of the Vth Article of the Treaty of the 3rd of July,

1842, copy of which I send you, it is forbidden to carry slaves beyond the number which is stipulated in the same Article; but I know that there has been an abuse going on in our steamers in carrying negroes from Loanda to St. Thomas, so much so that the British Minister has given us notice that the steamers of the Company might be captured on this account. In consideration of these circumstances this Direction has decided that not more than 10 negroes shall be received on board our steamers when accompanying any family removing to another place, and 2 for each farmer going from one point of Africa to another. With these exceptions we have given orders to the Commanders not to receive any more negroes beyond those stipulated in the contract, and in the conditions laid down in the same; because you must very well see that the credit and prosperity of the Company ought not to be risked for so insignificant a freight, you rendering yourself responsible for any infraction of what has been decided upon.'

"Although the Treaty has never been violated, and there never have been such abuses as those on which account the British Minister at Lisbon gave notice to the Mercantile Union Company, with the threat that their ships might be captured, and although not even so many slaves have been carried as the Directors allow their captains to take on board the steamers, I have thought proper to communicate to you what has been above transcribed, in order that you may inform his Excellency the Governor-General of the same.

"FRANCISCO ANTONIO FLORES.

"To the Most Illustrious the Secretary-General to the Government of the Province of Angola."

In the despatch of the 8th of January above quoted, the British Commissioner alludes in terms of censure to the sale of negroes in Angola. Such a transaction is perfectly legal in the Portuguese dominions with respect to slaves who existed as such previous to the Decree of the 14th of December, 1854, as is also the case in conformity with the 4th Article of the said Decree with regard to the redemption of slaves imported overland into those dominions, they subsequently remaining in the condition of libertos (freedmen), under the safeguard of the Protecting Board, subject to ten years' service as a remuneration for the liberty which they have obtained. Any agreements that may take place with respect to the transmission of the services of the libertos (freedmen) are also equally legal.

Consequently neither Her Britannic Majesty's Government nor their Agents have any reason to be surprised at or censure the carrying on of these transactions made in conformity with the laws of the country, and without violating either the Treaty of the 3rd of July or the true principles of humanity and philanthropy, and all this is fully proved in the correspondence which has taken place between this General Government and the British Agents at Loanda.

These transactions are identical with those which, with slight difference of form, are carried on, as I am informed, with respect to the black labourers in the British Colonies, and even with respect to white men at different points of the globe, whenever they engage their services for a certain term under the mutual guarantee of the law.

It is not sufficient to state that frauds are committed, and that passports become mere pieces of paper, on the arrival of the steamers at St. Thomas, as may be read in the same despatch from the British Commissioner at Loanda; it is also necessary to prove that statement. If this were admitted, it would follow that no black citizen could be taken by sea from one point of the Portuguese dominions to another. This would indeed be the true state of slavery not for negroes alone but even for white men, and for the nation which possesses Colonies on the African Continent and Islands.

I cannot help clearing up a fact mentioned in the despatch from the British Commissioner Edmund Gabriel with respect to the compulsion used towards a negro, and one will be able to form an idea of the reliance which the information, unaccompanied by documents, which has been obtained upon the subject in question deserves.

During the whole period which has elapsed since the 7th of January, 1861, up to the date of this despatch, not a single negro has embarked for St. Thomas under compulsion. The negro Antonio Salvador, registered as a slave of Felix Correa da Silva at folio 146 of the Proper Book under the No. 5,392, obtained permission on the 18th of December, 1861, as is proved by the proper document, to proceed to St. Thomas, on board the steamer "Zaire," in the capacity of a free man, and his name was noted down as such at the police office for the same purpose on the 18th of October of the same year, under No. 624, as the aforesaid document shows. As this individual was a slave, and could not be reduced to the class of a free man without a violation of the right of property, a bond was drawn up at the General Office (document No. 2) by Ignacio Jozé de Moraes, jun., on the 18th of October, 1861, whereby the identity of the individual is guaranteed and bail given for his liberty, the surety engaging to indemnify the owner of the slave, who becomes free by the mere fact of departure, should any one appear in due terms claiming the indemnity; the said surety submitting, moreover, to any fine which may be imposed upon him.

I forward to your Excellency document No. 3, which is a copy of the registration respecting the negro Antonio Salvador; the remark of his having passed to a state of liberty is not put down under the head of remarks, because his departure for St. Thomas did not take place.

This negro preferred the state of slavery in the province of Angola to that of a free man at St. Thomas, under the same conditions in which a servant man is placed who is serving in a house having entered into a private agreement with his master. He ran away when he was going on board without any compulsion having been used. He did not even go on board or leave the port; and, consequently, the condition under which his liberty was given him was never realized. If the negro Salvador had gone away there would have been one free man more in the province of St. Thomas and a slave less in that of Angola.

For a negro to wound himself, or even to commit suicide, is a very common occurrence. On the 19th of this month a slave belonging to Dona Isabel Shap de Fabia, hanged himself without any reason, as he was very well treated by his mistress. It is not to be wondered at that a being in such a state of mind as the one to whom the British Commissioner alludes should be accompanied by police agents.

Had this negro, who was a slave in Angola, embarked for St. Thomas by order of the Government, in the condition of a free man, this would not be a violation of the Treaty of the 3rd of July. The Government might, if it thought proper, declare all slaves proceeding from Angola to St. Thomas to be free, indemnifying their masters, although, for all this, such a measure tending to the emancipation of negroes could not be put down as Slave Trade in disguise. If I am mistaken, the reason is, because the feeling of philanthropy and liberty in favour of the man of colour disappears in consequence of the fact that negroes go and apply themselves to the cultivation of the Province of St. Thomas.

In order further to enlighten your Excellency as to the mode of proceeding in Angola, I shall relate a fact which occurred with regard to the free negro Jozé Guese. This negro was ordered by the police to disembark on the 29th of January under No. 202, and he obtained a passport on the same date in order to proceed on his voyage to St. Thomas on board the steamer "D. Antonia," as it appears from the proper document. When he was already on board he reconsidered and came ashore, although he had made an agreement with Jozé de Jesus Rodrigues as to the conditions of his passage. On presenting himself to the Chief of the Police after a few days, he petitioned for leave to be given him to enlist into the Corps of Public Security, which was granted to him, and he is now serving in that corps under No. 117.

No concealment is made of any facts of this nature; everything respecting the slave Antonio Salvador, to whom the British Commissioner alludes, is stated in the Police Reports inserted in the official bulletins of this Province, Nos. 838 and 845. The name of Nazareth is given there to the negro slave, because he was thus known; and there is a mistake with respect to the name of the master, who is not Ruy Maltoso da Camara, as may be seen above.

ON the 18th day of the month of October, 1861, in this city of Loanda, and in the office of the General Government, there appeared Ignacio Jozé de Moraes, junior, and he declared to me that, in consequence of the orders of his Excellency the Governor-General, he guaranteed the identity and became surety for the freedom of the free negroes Manoel Francisco, Sarmento Jozé, Thereza Maria, Felicio Joaquim, Jozé Francisco, Sofia Antonia, João Francisco, Arthur Francisco, Francisco Manoel, Jorge Jozé, Miquelina Maria, Julio Antonio, Roza Jozephia, Antonio Salvador, who proceed on their voyage to St. Thomas in the steamer "Zaire," engaging to pay the value of the afore-said negroes, should any person claim any of them as slaves, or prove that they belong to him, besides subjecting himself to the fine which may be imposed upon him.

And in proof of his having made this declaration, and taken the said engagement upon himself, he signed it, together with myself.

No. 101.

Earl Russell to Sir A. Magenis.

Sir,

Foreign Office, June 26, 1863.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 25th ultimo I inclose, for your information, copies of a correspondence between the Portuguese Minister at this Court and myself respecting the proceedings of Commander Smith, of Her Majesty's ship "Torch," in boarding and bringing to anchor the Portuguese brigantine "Paquete de Mossamedes" in the harbour of Loanda in the month of December last.

I am, &c.

RUSSELL.

Inclosure 1 in No. 101.

Count Lavradio to Earl Russell.

(Translation.)

London, June 13, 1863

THE Undersigned, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of His Most Faithful Majesty, has received the most positive orders to make known, without the smallest delay, to his Excellency the Earl Russell, Her Britannic Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, the following statement of acts done in the harbour of Loanda by order of the Commander of the British man-of-war the "Torch."

On the 16th day of December of last year, the Portuguese patacho "Paquete de Mossamedes," having completed all the legal forms, sailed from the port of Loanda, and, according to the statement of the British war-ship "Torch," passed so near the British ship that the officer who was on board, appearing to apprehend a collision, weighed the anchor and made sail. It is, therefore, beyond all doubt that the "Torch" suffered no damage. But the Commander of the "Torch," F. H. Smith, arriving at this time on board his vessel, considered himself authorized to send three of his boats, commanded by his Lieutenant, with orders to board the Portuguese patacho, to oblige her to suspend her departure, and to visit her, an order which is proved to have been executed by the communication of the Commander of the "Torch" himself.

As soon as the Governor-General was informed of the outrage committed by the Commander of the "Torch," he addressed to him a solemn protest, to which that officer replied, as it appears from the accompanying copies, both of the protest of the Governor-General of Angola and of the reply of Commander Smith.

In view of the declaration of Commander Smith himself, there can be no doubt, as the Undersigned has already mentioned, upon the acts done by that Commander; as also there can be none that these acts constitute an offence to the Portuguese flag, and a violation of territory.

This being stated, the only thing remaining to the Undersigned is to examine, first, whether, in the outrage committed by F. H. Smith, the Commander of the "Torch," the existence of any extenuating circumstance can be admitted; secondly, whether the letter which that Commander addressed to the Governor-General of Angola can be considered as a sufficient reparation for the outrages mentioned.

The Undersigned, after a very serious examination of the facts, not only cannot admit any circumstance which could extenuate the conduct of the Commander of the "Torch," but, on the contrary, he finds in it very aggravating circumstances; among others, that the Commander formed his violent resolution when there could not remain any apprehension of danger for his ship, if, in fact, any had existed; and further, that he did not hasten to make some communication, either to the Governor-General of the Province or even to the harbour authorities. The outrage committed by the Commander of the "Torch" took place at 5.15 P.M. of the 16th day of December, and even on the following day, the 17th, he had made no communication to any authority, nor, perhaps, would he have ever made any, had it not been induced by the protest of the Honourable Governor-General of the Province.

Nor can the Undersigned consider the letter which Commander Smith addressed to the Governor-General of Angola as a sufficient reparation for his very improper proceeding. The Commander of the "Torch" alleges, in excusal of his acts, that he had no intention to insult the Portuguese flag; but it is not the province of the Undersigned to appreciate the intentions of Commander Smith, but his acts, done publicly, in the middle of the day, in the harbour of Loanda.

The Undersigned has therefore the honour to declare, in the name of the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty, to his Excellency Earl Russell, that in the acts done in the harbour of Loanda, on the 16th day of December last, by the Commander of the British man-of-war "Torch," he cannot admit the existence of any extenuating circumstance, nor can he consider the declaration of his intentions as a sufficient reparation of the acts done by him.

Having detailed and given his opinion of the facts above mentioned, the Undersigned abstains (in obedience to the instructions which he has received from his Government) from pointing out the satisfaction to which His Most Faithful Majesty's Government is entitled, as also the indemnification due to the owner of the patacho "Paquete de Mossamedes;" but, recognizing the justice which guides the deliberations of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, the Undersigned limits himself to claiming a reparation equal to what Her Britannic Majesty's Government would claim in the like circumstances from any other Power.

The Undersigned, &c.

(Signed)

LAVRADIO.

Inclosure 2 in No. 101.

The Governor-General of the Province of Angola to Commander Smith.

(Translation.)

Sir,

Palace of Government in Loanda, December 17, 1862.

I RECEIVED last night an official communication, stating that a great insult had been offered by Her Britannic Majesty's ship "Torch" under your command, which at 5.15 P.M. within the harbour of this city boarded with three boats the patacho "Paquete de Mossamedes" after she had set sail, having been cleared by all the competent authorities.

It is painful to me to imagine an outrage of such a nature, done by British forces against all the rights of the nation which is proud of being the ancient and faithful ally of England, and which has always acted towards her with the most rigorous good faith in the maintenance of Treaties, even though for this effect she may have been obliged to hazard her interest with the most powerful nations.

I am, therefore, in the necessity of protesting, as I do solemnly protest, against such an audacious affront to the Portuguese flag; and I expect that my Government will obtain from the uprightness and impartial justice of yours the due reparation, not only of the offence to the dignity and independence of the nation so outraged, but also in respect to the injury caused to commerce, in consequence of a ship being forcibly compelled to anchor, when she was engaged in the voyage for which she had been legally authorized.

God preserve, &c.

JOSE BAPTISTA D'ANDRADE.

Inclosure 3 in No. 101.

Commander Smith to the Governor-General of the Province of Angola.

Excellent Sir,

St. Paul de Loanda, December 17, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your Excellency's communication of this day's date, complaining of an insult which had been offered to the Portuguese flag in this port by the boats of Her Majesty's ship under my command, in having last evening boarded the Portuguese brigantine "Paquete de Mossamedes," and brought her to anchor.

In answer to the above, I beg to furnish your Excellency with the following explanation: Upon returning to the "Torch" last evening about 5.30 P.M., in company with Commander Beamish of Her Majesty's ship "Wrangler," and being about 500 yards from the "Torch," I observed the "Paquete de Mossamedes" steering (as it appeared to me) for the bows of the vessel under my command. Sail being quickly made on board the "Torch" and cable served out, prevented the collision which must otherwise inevitably have ensued.

Having by this time arrived on board the "Torch," and considering the circumstances of the case required explanation, I desired my Lieutenant to take the boats and bring the brigantine to an anchor, which was accordingly done. When I observed the vessel anchored, I at once recalled the boats, and to call attention to the signal, fired again; the Lieutenant immediately returned with the boats and men under his command. I may add that he was not on board the brigantine a quarter of an hour.

I cannot nor should I wish to attribute the conduct of the master of the "Paquete de Mossamedes" on this occasion to malice, and I have therefore but to suppose that it was owing to extreme incompetency or gross negligence.

By the above statement your Excellency will perceive that what was done on the occasion by me was really called for, and as the brigantine was leaving the port rapidly with a fair wind, it was inopinative, in order to obtain the explanation sought for, that she should be at once brought to, which I took upon myself to do, as there was no time to communicate with the authorities of the port.

By the early receipt of your Excellency's letter I have been anticipated in making the complaint which I intended doing in the course of this day.

I must express my extreme regret that your Excellency should suppose that an insult would at any time be offered to the Portuguese flag by a British officer, more particularly at the present time, when such friendly feeling towards our country was displayed on the recent melancholy occasion.

I beg to assure your Excellency in conclusion, that it has ever been and will continue to be my earnest wish to cultivate the amicable relations which have for so long a period existed between our respective countries.

I have, &c.

M. le Comte,

Foreign Office, June 23, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 13th instant, bringing to the notice of Her Majesty's Government the conduct of the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Torch," in boarding and bringing to an anchor the Portuguese patacho "Paquete de Mossamedes," in the harbour of Loanda, on the 16th of December last, and stating that you have been instructed to claim from Her Majesty's Government such reparation and indemnity as Her Majesty's Government would, in like circumstances, feel justified in demanding from any other Power.

I beg leave, in reply, to acquaint you that the circumstances which form the subject of your note were reported to Her Majesty's Government by the Acting British Vice-Consul at Loanda, in a despatch dated the 19th of January last, on the receipt of which I lost no time in instructing Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon to express in suitable terms to the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty the regret of Her Majesty's Government at Commander Smith's proceedings.

I inclose for your information a copy of the despatch which I addressed to Sir A. Magenis on the occasion in question.

I trust that the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty, when made acquainted with the instructions which I have sent to Sir A. Magenis, will accept the action taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter as a proof of their earnest wish to make such reparation as is due for the conduct of their officer in this affair.

It only remains for me to add that Her Majesty's Government will be happy to make to the master of the "Paquete de Mossamedes" any reasonable compensation for losses which he may have suffered by reason of the detention of his vessel.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Excellency that I have been instructed by Earl Russell, Her Britannic Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to convey to the Government of His Most Faithful Majesty the regrets of the Government of the Queen my Sovereign, at the conduct pursued by Commander Smith, of Her Majesty's ship "Torch," in sending the boats of the ship under his command to compel the Portuguese brigantine "Paquete de Mossamedes" to come to an anchor when that vessel was about to leave the harbour of Loanda, in the month of December last.

Earl Russell has been in communication with the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty upon this subject; and I have also been instructed by his Lordship to add, for your Excellency's information, that the Commander-in-chief of Her Majesty's Naval Forces on the African Station will be instructed to communicate to Commander Smith the disapproval by their Lordships of the course which he thought fit to adopt with regard to a Portuguese ship under the protection of the Portuguese flag, and which was most unjustifiable in the opinion of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

THE Governor-General of the Province of Mozambique was acquainted in due time with the contents of the despatch addressed to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, under date of the 31st December, 1860, by Commander Oldfield, on the station on the Eastern coast of Africa, which you communicated to my predecessor, and of your note dated the 14th January, 1862, both of them having reference to the Slave Trade operations carried on at different points of that coast, and in which the Portuguese authorities in the said province are charged with conniving at the aforesaid operations.

The Marine Department having received from the said Governor-General the despatches in which, in answer to the "Portarias" (Ministerial Orders) which had been sent to him, he refutes the charges in question, and makes several remarks on the subject, it is my duty to transmit to you an extract from those despatches, so as to enable you to make known to your Government how groundless the accusations are which have been brought forward against the Portuguese authorities above-mentioned.

(Extract.)

Mozambique, October 14, 1862.

I HAVE read Commander Oldfield's report with all the attention, and with the greatest equanimity, as much as the serious attack made against my reputation by a foreign officer would allow me, whom I have met more than once, and in whose opinion I thought I deserved to be held as a man of honour and probity, as a man might be supposed to be who has the honour of being worthy of his Sovereign's confidence, so as to entrust to him the government of one of his most important colonies; who occupies high rank in the noble profession of arms, which is a proof at least that he has rendered some services, and who acts with frankness, openness, and good faith, which the tranquillity of his conscience and the faithful fulfilment of his duty inspire him with; who always makes use of the open and sincere language of a soldier; who can never suppose that any individual, either a foreigner or a native, with whom he is upon good terms, should form a bad opinion of him without grounds. Very unfortunately for our credit, I know that the British functionaries complain, and sometimes with reason, of the proceedings of our authorities, who very often do not correspond to the confidence which His Majesty's Government places in them; but my own actions at the beginning of my government in this province, and the sincerity of my endeavours to put an end to and to prevent the Slave Trade, have been so sincere, and I have given such evident proofs of the same, that I could not for a moment think, not that it was not carried on, because unfortunately I know that not only it is carried on, but has been and will be carried on as long as it will afford such profits as speculators derive from this infamous trade, which any man of moderate instruction and acquainted with economical and political principles condemns as a most inhuman crime, but that I might be suspected of consenting to the same, in contravention of the wishes and orders of His Majesty, whom I flatter myself I serve with honour, zeal, and loyalty.

The accusations made by Captain Oldfield surprise me still more, inasmuch as that officer, when I went to Zanzibar, paid me very particular attention, inviting me to a special dinner on board his ship, a favour which he was not bound to do me even indirectly, inasmuch as he only chanced to be there on the occasion of my going, and was not upon any other terms with me beyond those of mere civility and consideration due to my position, and which did not oblige him to do so much. I shall now analyse Captain Oldfield's assertions, and I cannot help considering the statistics of the exportation of slaves from the coast as curious, these same being audaciously presented without proofs, or without any other reason to justify the same. He says that from Ibo between 2,000 and 3,000 slaves are exported, and from Quillimane 1,000 to 1,500 annually, under the protection of their Excellencies the Governors. It is, however, to be wondered at that this officer, knowing that such a number of slaves are exported from these two points, and having the faculty to cruise wherever and howsoever he may choose, and having a steam-ship under his command, as well as many other smaller vessels, is not able to capture the greater part, not only of the slaves which are exported annually, as he says, but also of the ships and dhows which carry the same. The faculty of cruising on this coast is carried to excess, not only by Captain Oldfield himself, but also by all the other cruisers, who, in violation of the Treaties, carry launches and boats, which are freely introduced into the canals amongst the islands of that district, of which I should not complain if the crews of those ships did not commit every kind of abuse against the inhabitants, stealing from them fowls, kids, and provisions, and being guilty of other violence, against which I have already written to the Admiral commanding the Cape Station, and of which I have apprised His Majesty's Government on different occasions. I am opposed to the trade; but for that very reason that I feel conscious of complying with my duty, and am not obliged to cast down my eyes before any one, either native or foreigner, it is that I complain and make representations without any consideration for anything. And my complaints are not grounded upon reports, which, if they may be true, may also be incorrect, like the one of which he made use in order to throw discredit upon an authority which can only be accused by means of reports; but I believe that reports, even in England, and even with respect to the odious Slave Trade, are not sufficient grounds for accusing anybody, and still less for condemning any one, even a Portuguese authority, whom Captain Oldfield does not seem to consider entitled to be held in good opinion.

The same Captain further says:—"The conduct of his Excellency the Governor of Ibo is so well known, and his Excellency the Governor of Mozambique shows himself so prejudiced in defending him from the charges which have been brought against him with respect to his bad conduct, that I cannot help believing the report to be true that the accounts from his Excellency the Governor of Mozambique are contradictory in themselves, that half, or the greater part, of the sums received by the Governor of Ibo from the agents of the Trade and from the captains are paid to his Excellency the Governor."

I do not know what feeling possesses me on reading these assertions. I become warm in defence of any subordinate of mine, when I think the charges brought against him slanderous, and I become excited, that is warm, as I always do, with respect to all things entrusted to my charge, care, and protection, because being a victim myself to similar accusations I cannot see with indifference the facility of bringing forward charges which affect the most sensitive part of an individual—his reputation and honesty—and as I consider myself responsible to His Majesty and to my country, and to my own conscience, for the honour and honesty of an officer whom I appointed as being worthy of my confidence to that post, I cannot hear with indifference, and still less coincide in the opinion that this officer should forfeit in my judgment the only condition which recommended him to my confidence—his honour and honesty, proved by many years of good and zealous services, in more humble capacities it is true, but which always, or almost always, are the only and the safest recommendation, inasmuch as the antecedents of an individual are the only means of judging of his future conduct, as I do not know of any other title for obtaining the proper confidence of the authorities. And I was not then aware that I should have to reply to gratuitous assertions, taking for my basis the expression of a noble feeling, the defence of a subordinate whom I consider innocent. But the reliance placed on reports attacking the honour of a functionary of high rank does not end here: "The sum of 9,000,000 reis (2,000*l.*) was given to the Governor of Ibo for his assistance and permission in purchasing a cargo of slaves, and it is said that 4,000,000 reis (888*l.*) were given to the Governor-General,"—an expression of which Captain Oldfield has the goodness to make use in my regard, based upon a mere "it is said."

I beg your Excellency to allow me, in spite of the length of this reply, to add a few further observations, not to enable the Government to refute Captain Oldfield's assertions, because for this end the reasons for confidence which, to my great honour, I find stated in the "Portaria" (Ministerial Order), to which I reply are quite sufficient—an honour which alone obliges me to extend this answer to so great a length, but only for the purpose of proving once more the injustice with which such accusations are made. And, incidentally, I will say that nothing could be easier than for Captain Oldfield, or for any other officer capturing a slaver, to make an inquiry into the facts of which he accuses the authorities, from the same; if they could succeed in making an inquiry, it might be known up to a certain point, which does not appear to me to be difficult, whether the authorities and their agents are always the receivers of the money, and who the former and the latter are; and although such evidence could not constitute a proof, it would justify certain hypotheses, which not possessing even such a basis, fall to the ground, when they are directed against individuals who can oppose a groundless suspicion by many years of good and honourable services to their country in different posts without ever soiling their hands by extortion or speculation.

I have already told your Excellency that the trade is carried on, and will be carried on for a long time on this coast, which cannot be prevented either by the superior authority, and very often not even by that of the districts in so vast a portion of the coast; where it cannot be prevented by numerous and active cruizers like the British with capital ships, and with officers and crews animated, not only with good and noble sentiments, because I do them the justice to consider as such those that move them to comply with their duty in repressing the trade, but urged on moreover by the profits which they may derive from the prizes. But if neither they nor their Government will admit—and they are right—that such officers should be charged with connivance or neglect of their duties when these vessels escape them, why should the British Government admit without criticism, and our own not energetically repel, all these frivolous charges of connivance which are brought forward against the Portuguese authorities?

The points occupied by troops (and not very good) from the south of Cape Delgado up to this Island of Mozambique, which includes three degrees of latitude, are the towns of Ibo and Cape Mira-membo in Pemba Bay. From Mozambique southwards to Quillimane, three degrees of latitude are included; the only point occupied by a regular garrison is Angoche, and this only about a year ago. From Inhamissingo, or Luabo, to Sofala, which includes two degrees, the only point occupied on the coast is the said fort of Sofala. From Sofala to Inhambane, which includes four degrees of coast, the points occupied are Chiloane and Bazaruto. And from Inhambane to Lorenzo Marques, which is two degrees distant, there is no intermediate point that is occupied. It is, therefore, almost impossible to prevent the entrance of dhows which take shelter and hide themselves in any point of the coast, which introduce themselves into the creeks, where they are concealed from the vigilant eye of the British cruizer, and stay there during the time necessary to obtain the number of negroes of which they are in need; when this comes to the knowledge of the authorities, the vessel has departed long ago with the number of slaves which it came to fetch. How are the Governors to be made responsible? The Chiefs and Chieftains, whose ideas agree with the speculators, neither denounce them nor capture them. When ships come into the ports, then it is clear proceedings are instituted; when this happens, then although there should be no proofs, because it is difficult to obtain them, in consequence of the particular disposition of our people, which is well known in this respect, where nobody wishes to be an accuser, and where all exempt themselves from giving evidence against criminals, whom very often they do not support, but still feel repugnance in general to injure them by means of their evidence. And in this case all suspected Governors have been dismissed by me.

On my part I think I have stated what appears to me to be sufficient for my defence. My zeal, the services which I have performed, and the sacrifices which I make for the good of His Majesty's service, and for it alone, may induce me to continue in my position which exposes me to affronts which I am only allowed to repel by words. Your Excellency is aware that a few months after my arrival in this Province, I requested His Majesty to appoint my successor, because I considered the task of governing this Province, as I still do now, far above my strength. If I still continue here, it is not by my own will.

With respect to the Governor of Ibo I have already replied in my despatch No. 24 of 1861, and as yet I do not possess any proofs which can make me change the good opinion which I entertain in his regard; and I do not think him capable of betraying the confidence which I have placed in him, and still continue to place, both as a soldier and as a private individual. At his own request, and not on account of accusations which I hold to be groundless, I relieved him, and ordered him to be replaced by Major Tito Augusto de Araujo Siccard, who was afterwards substituted, at his own repeated request, by Captain Antonio Jozé Rodrigues Pinho, who, after he had been there only four months, was substituted by the present Governor by His Majesty's appointment, who is still there, and wishes to be removed elsewhere.

In fine, I shall conclude by declaring to your Excellency that one of the reasons which has most forcibly obliged me to request His Majesty at different times to be pleased to appoint my successor, is that of seeing myself continually exposed to be the butt of unjust accusations, which are the more wounding and painful inasmuch as they are unmerited.

I shall again request His Majesty that, taking into consideration those slight services which through my zeal and goodwill I may have rendered in this difficult post to His Majesty and to my country, he would be pleased, as a special favour, to concede my dismissal, appointing my successor; because by my dismissal His Majesty will be better served in the Government of this province, and I shall then cease to be the victim of these and other accusations which embitter my position, which is already quite difficult and painful enough.

Inclosure 3 in No. 105.

The Governor-General of the Province of Mozambique to the Minister of Marine.

(Extract.)

Mozambique, November 8, 1862.

IN the "Portaria" (Ministerial Order) No. 23 of 1862, issued by the 2nd Direction, 2nd Section of your Department, His Majesty orders me to endeavour by all the means in my power to investigate the facts set forth in the note from Her Britannic Majesty's Minister at the Court of Lisbon, of which a copy was forwarded to me, with respect to several Slave Trade operations carried on in different parts of the Province of Mozambique with the connivance of the Portuguese authorities, and that in case the same should have taken place, and should the authorities of those localities have connived at such unlawful operations, I should proceed to adopt all those measures which I might think necessary in order to prevent their continuance, either dismissing the said authorities in case it should be proved that they were involved in such speculations, or suspending them from their functions if they have only become suspected; and His Majesty hopes that I shall use zeal and activity in carrying out this inquiry, the same august Sire considering as amongst my most important duties those endeavours which I may make for the most rigorous suppression of the Slave Trade, and for the purpose of removing, once for all, from my subordinate authorities the offensive suspicion of their connivance at such a Traffic.

It is with extreme regret that I see myself obliged to analyse these accusations in compliance with His Majesty's orders. The note dated the 14th of January of this year says that the information received from the British Consul at Zanzibar, and from the Admiral in command of Her Britannic Majesty's naval forces at the Cape station, confirm the Report of Her Majesty's Commissioner at the Cape, wherein that functionary alludes to the supposed connivance of the Portuguese authorities at the exportation of slaves from the Portuguese Possessions on the Eastern Coast of Africa; that the accounts received from the Eastern Coast of Africa during the past year all tend to show that the Slave Trade really continues to be carried on on a grand scale; that the principal trade of the Portuguese Possessions to the north of the 13th degree of south latitude is in slaves at the price of about 30 dollars (patacos) per head; that at Ibo, Cape Pangane, Matémo, Lambro, Quissanga, and Querimba, from 5,000 to 6,000 slaves were seen ready to be shipped.

I quote these first paragraphs of the note in order to reply to these charges immediately, reserving my reply to the others until afterwards, having to repeat what I have told your Excellency more than once, for the information of His Majesty's Government, and in answer to similar charges brought forward on other occasions.

The fault of these repetitions does not lie with me, but rather upon the charges themselves, which are continually reproduced under different forms without any great variation, because their origin is the same, that is, the fixed purpose of accusing the Portuguese authorities of connivance, without further inquiry, except—"it is said," "it appears," and other similar assertions, which there really is no other means of repelling in any other way except by denying the fact of a general connivance, without denying that of the shipping of slaves, because it is undoubtedly carried on, not only at those points, but also at all the others resorted to by "dhows," both on that part of the coast which belongs to us, as well as on the whole of the same to the north of Cape Delgado. It is impossible to prevent this contraband, because no ships, however numerous, could put a stop to it; and those points are neither occupied by troops nor have they got any Portuguese authorities, but rather native authorities who yield us obedience, but whom it is not possible to punish or dismiss, as this would be equivalent to declare war against the tribes or villages over which they preside, and by which they are chosen and elected. There is consequently no necessity for the connivance of the Portuguese authorities at the trade, who cannot prevent this contraband, in the same manner as they cannot prevent the one in goods, which is also carried on, and which is so prejudicial to the receipts of the Custom-houses of this Province.

If it be proved that there are no troops at these points because there is not a sufficient force for this purpose, if it be proved that there are no other authorities in the same except native ones, if it be proved that there is no means of guarding the coast and the innumerable ports, bays, rivers, and other places accessible for Arabian dhows which frequent them for the purpose of introducing goods into the wilds, in order to purchase slaves therewith—proved as it is by Dr. Livingstone's reports, and by the testimony of many Portuguese travellers, that the Arabs, the chief abettors of the purchase and of the stealing of slaves and of people in general, are to be found in the wilds near Tete, and even still further in the interior; it is proved that the trade can be carried on, and, I believe, it is carried on without the necessity of a connivance on the part of the Portuguese authorities, as is constantly stated in the reports which are communicated to us, unless they give the name of Portuguese to these native authorities who deal in negroes for their own profit, through their want of civilization, and even owing to religious ideas,—since they are all Mahomedans,—and the Koran, which is their civil and religious law, does not forbid them to possess slaves, or to trade in the same, and consequently they think that they do not commit a crime in evading the demands of a more advanced civilization, and other moral and social principles which they do not understand. The places Ibo, Cape Pangane, Matémo, Lambro (probably Lumbo) Quissanga, and Querimba, are parts of the district of Cape Delgado, situated on the Continent; Ibo, Matémo, and Querimba being the only three islands of the district which are inhabited, where I do not think that such Slave Trade operations are carried on,* because they all are very near the seat of the Government of the district, and at a distance from the place where slaves can be more easily collected without running any risk, which is on the Continent. It is asserted that in those places from about 5,000 to 6,000 slaves were seen ready to be shipped. I know not whether this is meant during a year; it is likely that it is so, as in one of the preceding paragraphs it is said "from the accounts received during the past year."

The exaggeration of these numbers immediately appears at first sight, inasmuch as if this were so, a great many dhows would be required to ship them; for, granting that each of them could take, on an average, 100 slaves, which is inadmissible, because, in general, they are vessels of small tonnage, and cannot carry such a large number of persons, and the water and provisions necessary for them, however small the quantity they might give them, and it is known that they usually take about 10, 20, or 30 slaves, even in that hypothesis no less than 80 or 100 dhows, or 10 or 12 large vessels carrying from 400 to 600 slaves would be required. This does not appear to be a serious assertion; the facility in receiving the information given by the Arabs, whose character is familiar to the whole world, is almost incredible.

Can the English really believe in the good faith of the Arabs? I think that they only believe in it when they incriminate the Portuguese; and let it be remarked that these informers receive a salary, and that it is chiefly their interest in keeping those who pay them under deception, since this is their means of living; making use also, as it appears, of the protection given them, for the purpose of doing under safeguard of the same what suits them best. But to return again to the assertion of the 5,000 or 6,000 slaves which were seen ready for shipment in the district of Cape Delgado, wherein, as I have already said, the places above-mentioned are situated. I know not how to make this information agree with that given under date of the 31st of December, 1860, by Captain Oldfield in his Report, of which a copy was sent to me with the "Portaria" (Ministerial Order) No. 79 of 1861, to which I reply in my despatch No. 226 of 1862, who asserts that from Ibo 2,000 to 3,000 slaves are exported annually. This officer asserts this positively, and I do not know which is the true number, when two authorities differ upon a subject which they must have studied. In my opinion, as I have already stated to your Excellency, there is a great, an enormous, exaggeration in each of these assertions, and the Portuguese Government has the right to doubt of their sincerity. On my part, I declare that, convinced as I am that slaves are exported from this coast, I do not believe in such numbers, although I regret it, and exceedingly too, and do not wish that even a single slave should quit the Portuguese coast. Truth forces me to declare that I know that they are exported very much against my wish, and in opposition to our well understood interest. I condemn the fact with all the strength of my conviction, but, in admitting the same, I cannot agree with the wide proportion in which it is represented, perhaps without the slightest (evil?) intention, and only based upon erroneous and exaggerated information, which there has been no wish to scrutinize with a judicious and prudent criticism, although an attack is made therein against the good name even of those who had heretofore been considered as honourable and honest, and of sentiments opposed to a trade which religion, policy, and right reason, and our own laws, justly condemn.

Is there indeed not a single honest man in this country? Even Major Siccard, who might be respected on account of the good opinion in which he seemed to be held by the English, has not escaped the stigma of being a slave-dealer whilst Governor of Ibo, whereas it was precisely on account of this good opinion that I selected him for that post, giving, in this manner, another guarantee of the earnest wish which I entertained that the aforesaid trade should not be carried on: but not even he, held in such good reputation, could escape the shame which without more ado is thrown upon every one, and at all times. His promotion, as they say, instead of confirming him in his good ideas, as it appears from the note, caused him to forget them, and made him prevaricate. His well-earned reputation, which had been so often and so repeatedly manifested, vanished, and he remained suspected and contaminated by the eternal "it is said," against which neither name, possession, position, antecedents, nor services, are of any avail, in order to protect a Portuguese authority.

Let me therefore be allowed to doubt the truth of these charges against this officer, of whom I still hold the same good opinion. He was replaced, at his own request, after he had been only a few months at the head of that Government. His successor, appointed on the 19th of June, 1861, was also there hardly four months, and the independence of character which he had acquired was such that, although he is married here, he joyfully accepted the appointment which I gave him of commander of the fortified place of Bazaruto, a real banishment. This Acting Governor was succeeded by the present one, Major Barros, who was appointed by His Majesty, and of whose character nothing unfavourable is known up to the moment I am writing. I do not therefore perceive the connivance which is denounced.

The note continues: "In the Settlement of Pemba Bay, formed by Captain Romero in 1858, the Commissioner at the Cape has received information that the only trade carried on there is exclusively that in slaves, who are kidnapped from the tribes in the neighbourhood and sent to Ibo in the droves employed in provisioning Pemba Bay."

In my despatch No. 41 of 1862, I gave an account of the unfortunate manner in which that Settlement at Pemba had come to an end in November 1861, and consequently your Excellency will perceive how groundless those accounts are. Since the extinction of the Colony, there has only been at Miranembo Point a detachment of about fifteen or twenty soldiers, commanded by an officer who is sent there from Ibo. During the harvest season, from March till June, several launches from Ibo go there for the purpose of buying provisions, and for this end a few traders settle there. The Chiefs of the Bay are, on the south the Mugato, and on the north Said Aly; the former lives in the interior and is poor and has no prestige, and the latter lives to the north of the Bay, and although he has received a subsidy from the Government, he has lived in continual disputes with the Government of Ibo, on which account his pay was ordered to be stopped, and he is not on good terms with the Portuguese authorities, without however being hostile. He is a Moor, an old slave-dealer, and does not go to Ibo, on account of the great number of debts which he has incurred there; two or three of his dhows have already been captured, the same having been found with slaves on board. This shows that the authorities have not been, and are not at present, guilty of connivance with him, and at the same time proves the exaggeration of the statement that the Slave Trade is the only one carried on there; because several dhows have been captured by the authorities, and the only vessel at the disposal of the Governor of the district is a launch armed with a pivot-gun, which is always stationed there in order to protect the detachment, to whom even provisions are sent from Ibo during the time when no trade is carried on in the Bay, which is the case during the greater part of the year.

In the Bulletin No. 13, 1862, your Excellency will see the traffic of that port, and also the number of launches which went there to fetch provisions, which they were in the habit of doing even before the establishment of the Colony there, which, as you are aware did not come to an end from the advantages which this trade, so profitable as it is, might have given it. Consequently there is also a manifest exaggeration in the information received by the Commissioner at the Cape, and which he forwarded. Accounts and news are not all true; and God forbid that they should be so, even when they are pleasing to our ideas and suit the dispositions of our mind. In order to prove that the Trade is very profitable to the authorities at Ibo, the note states, "the successive Governors acquire a competency so speedily in consequence of the bribes they receive, that an instance is quoted in which the Governor of Ibo paid a bribe of 500 cruzados (crowns) to an Arab of Zanzibar, to induce him to abstain from giving any information respecting the supercargoes who were then in the place."

I think that what is meant by this sum is that any one that can dispose of the same must be very rich. This instance, if it did take place, would only prove the stupidity of the Governor who had thus acted, because it amounts to nothing else to imagine that this payment could prevent the Arab of Zanzibar, and therefore a foreigner, from speaking out, or that he would allow himself to be bribed, and would remain faithful to the gift of 50,000 reis (11*l.*) which is the amount, or value of the 500 crowns above-mentioned. "Cruzado" (crown) is the name which is still given here and in the whole province at the present day to 100 reis (nearly 6*d.*) in good money, which had formerly the value of 400 reis of bad money, and it does not appear to me that a present of 50,000 reis can be a sign of great wealth. Admitting the case in question to be true, it is this part of the note which refers to facts, which, from what I have said, it is at least perfectly lawful to doubt, inasmuch as they are nothing else but vague words and assertions, which may be answered by denying them. The connivance with which the authorities are positively charged is the effect of the information given by the Arabs to those individuals who employ them as their Agents, grounding their opinion upon the exportation which is really carried on, but which can be, and I believe has been, carried on, at least of late years, without any connivance on the part of the Governors, because, as the said connivance is not indispensable, it is not to be presumed that individuals who set all laws, human and divine, at defiance, and incur innumerable dangers, in order to satisfy their immense ambition of gain, will go and share those gains uselessly and unnecessarily with persons who cannot prevent the trade, and with whose assistance they can very well dispense.

I still repeat once more that, from what I have above stated, I neither wish to deny, nor do I deny, that there has been, and that there may still be, connivance on the part of some authorities who may take part in the trade, but rather that the charges which are now brought forward do not prove that connivance, and are nothing else but assertions more or less vague, and not entitled to belief without further criterion or consideration. And this criterion and consideration are sufficient, according to my mode of thinking, to prove that it is not possible to admit the shameful charge of connivance at the Slave Trade against officers who have the right to be esteemed as men of honour, until it be proved that they are not so, because, as malevolent suspicions do not respect anybody, a Government which would blindly admit them as sufficient proofs against the honesty of their employés, would not find any one whom it might trust. This is inadmissible.

In compliance, however, with His Majesty's orders, my vigilance and attention on this subject will not abate, and I shall use all the means in my power in order that His Majesty's orders may be faithfully complied with, as I have done up to the present time, and shall continue to do whilst carrying on the difficult task of governing this province, as His Majesty does me the distinguished honour to believe. I see that the honour of His Majesty's Government is pledged to this, having made so many efforts and sacrifices to put an end to this iniquitous and barbarous trade. I see that the honour of the Portuguese authorities is pledged to the same; but, above all, I see the demands of civilization, the good name of the Portuguese nation, and the future prospects of this province.

I have had, until now, to make observations upon the facts to which your Excellency will attach the importance and value due to them; it is now my duty to proceed to the suppositions with which the note concludes, and if I was able to prove the injustice and exaggeration of the former, it will be much easier still to prove the utter absence of grounds for the latter. And I must declare that unfortunately they confirm my opinion that the only object in view is to accuse, without caring for anything else, inasmuch as the informers (I shall not call them accusers), not satisfied with exaggerating facts, have recourse to the vast field of conjecture, in order not to allow us to entertain the slightest doubt that the question is merely "to accuse."

"It is also supposed that the Slave Trade will be resumed on a grand scale at Quillimane, as a Portuguese resident there, called Da Cruz, when at Zanzibar, openly declared that he would soon make good the losses which he had suffered by the sale of 4,000 slaves he possessed at Quillimane."

I shall state what I know, and what are the facts of the case, and my account will destroy the not over flattering hypothesis in the note.

This Cruz is a certain Antonio Jozé da Cruz Coimbra, to whom the suspension of the exportation of colonists in 1856, long before my arrival in this province, occasioned some losses, which he said amounted to about the value of 1,000 and odd slaves, who were then called colonists, whose price and maintenance that suspension had caused him to lose. On this account a suit took place at the Island of Réunion for losses and damages, which was instituted by him against a French merchant whom I saw at Zanzibar when I went there in October of last year on His Majesty's service. The said Cruz having gone to the Mauritius and Réunion in 1860, returned in a French ship which he had freighted, which he afterwards sent to Calcutta, calling at Zanzibar on his own account (a brother of his proceeding in the ship, and died in that city shortly after his arrival); and he himself went in the month of September 1860 to Bombay, as may be seen from the inclosed note drawn up at the General Office. He returned from that city, calling at Zanzibar on the 4th of July, 1861, and proceeded to Quillimane on the 3rd of August. He returned to this city; and having embarked on board the Portuguese barque "Clementina," with a passport of the 15th of October, he quitted this port, bound to Lisbon, on the 2nd of November of the same year. He touched at Quillimane, Inhambane, and at Lorenzo Marques, where it appears that he arrived in March last; and having had some disagreements with the captain of the said barque, he landed, and proceeded on his journey overland to Port Natal, whence he wrote to Quillimane on the 6th of May, informing his father-in-law, Lieutenant-Colonel Custodio Jozé da Silva, that he was going to start by the first packet to England on his way to Lisbon, where I now suppose him to be. This took place in 1861 and 1862, as is shown by the inclosed note from this General Office. Consequently this supposition also falls to the ground completely, and proves that the apprehensions that the Slave Trade will be extensively resumed at Quillimane on account of the resident called Cruz are, luckily, wholly destitute of foundation.

I believe that I have fully proved the exaggeration of the accounts alluded to in Her Britannic Majesty's Minister's note of the 14th of January, and that the supposition that the Trade will be extensively resumed, according to the authors of those accounts, is groundless. This, however, which serves as a commentary upon the accounts referred to in the note, does in no way exempt me either from adopting all measures and precautions against the Trade, however inefficacious they may be, or of proceeding with all severity, in accordance with law, against all the authorities, and any other persons whatever, who may be suspected of being involved in the said Trade. Thus have I done and shall continue to do; and no considerations of any kind whatever, not even these offensive suspicions, will restrain me from complying with my duty to the best of my knowledge and ability, and from obeying His Majesty's orders on this point with all the zeal and diligence which my position, the honourable but difficult post in which I am placed, and the marks of distinction with which His Majesty, in his Royal munificence, has been pleased to honour me, demand.

Certificate of Passports.

(Translation.)

FRANCISCO DE SALLES MACHADO, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel in the Portuguese army, and Acting Secretary-General to the General Government of this province of Mozambique, &c. I certify that on examining the registers of passports and of the traffic of the ports of this city and of that of Quillimane, I find the following entries:—

On the 17th of January, 1860, a passport was issued to Fortunato Jozé da Cruz for Calcutta, to sail in the French barque "Angelina," which quitted this port on the 25th of the same month.

On the 21st of September, 1860, a passport was issued to Antonio Jozé da Cruz Coimbra for Bombay, calling at Goa. He departed in the Portuguese hiate (yacht) "Filippino," which left this port on the 27th of the same month.

On the 4th of July, 1861, there appeared in this general office Antonio Jozé da Cruz Coimbra, who arrived from Zanzibar in the American barque "Persia."

On the 3rd of August, 1861, a passport was issued to Antonio Jozé da Cruz Coimbra for Quillimane. He departed in the Portuguese hiate (yacht) "Aguia" on the 4th of the same month.

On the 26th of August, 1861, there appeared in this general office Antonio Jozé da Cruz Coimbra, who arrived from Quillimane in the yacht "Filippino."

On the 15th of October, 1861, a passport was issued to Antonio Jozé da Cruz Coimbra, who quitted this port on the 2nd of November in the barque "Clementina," and it appears from the port traffic of Quillimane that he left that port on the 18th of December of that same year.

And nothing else is to be found on this subject either in the passport registers or in those of the traffic of the ports; and in order to make this known I have ordered this certificate to be issued, which I sign.

Office of the General Government of the Province of Mozambique, November 8, 1862.

No. 106.

Sir A. Magenis to Earl Russell.—(Received July 5.)

(Extract.)

Lisbon, June 26, 1863

IN the sitting of the Cortes of the 19th instant the Duke de Loulé read to that Assembly the note copy of which is inclosed in my despatch of the 19th instant, which I had addressed to him on the 15th, expressing, in the name of Her Majesty's Government, their regret and their disapproval of the conduct of Commander Smith, of Her Majesty's ship "Torch," in stopping the Portuguese vessel "Paquete de Mossamedes," when about to leave the harbour of Loanda in the month of December 1862.

I inclose, for your Lordship's information, a short précis of the debate which followed, in which the Duke de Loulé was complimented by the leading members of the Opposition on the successful result of this negotiation, and in which full justice was rendered to Her Majesty's Government for the promptitude with which they had disapproved of Commander Smith's conduct; and, in the words of Senhor Carlos Bento, late Minister of Marine, showed "that the British Government is that of a nation sufficiently enlightened and sufficiently powerful to admit the justice of any reclamations that may be well grounded."

In alluding to what had taken place in the Chamber of Deputies on this subject to the Duke de Loulé when last I saw him on the 25th instant, his Excellency, who was very much pleased with what had occurred, told me that he had received a despatch from Count Lavradio, informing him that on the 13th instant he had addressed a note to your Lordship, complaining of Commander Smith's conduct; and he asked me if I recollected the date of your Lordship's despatch on which my note to him of the 15th was founded.

I answered that I would let him know when I returned home; but it was clear that if Count Lavradio had only addressed his note to your Lordship on the 13th instant, that your instructions to me could not have been the result of that note, as those instructions were not transmitted by telegraph.

I addressed a private letter to the Duke de Loulé yesterday, informing him that your Lordship's despatch was dated the 25th of May, and had reached me on the 13th instant by the Brazil steamer; and further, that the letter from the Admiralty to your Lordship's Department was of the 14th of May; and, consequently, it was clear that the expression of regret of Her Majesty's Government was entirely spontaneous.

I added, that as the reading of my note had produced so good an impression in the Chamber, I thought that impression would be increased if he stated that, by a comparison of dates, it was clear that the regret expressed by Her Majesty's Government was entirely spontaneous, and not the result of Count Lavradio's remonstrances.

Inclosure in No. 106.

Precis of the Report of the Speeches in the Chamber of Deputies in the Sitting of the 19th of June, 1863.

THE President of the Council of Ministers, Duke of Loulé, requested to be allowed to make a communication to the Chamber, which he believed would be agreeable to it. As the question of the insult offered to our flag at Loanda was treated here not long ago, he wished that the Chamber should become acquainted with the note which had been addressed on the subject to him by Her Britannic Majesty's Minister at this Court, dated the 15th instant. He read the aforesaid note, translated into Portuguese. (General applause.) He considered it a most complete satisfaction.

M. Carlos Bento da Silva (late Minister of Marine).—After the communication just made by the noble President of the Council, the Chamber can have no hesitation in causing it to be inserted in the records of the Chamber, "that it was perfectly satisfied with the same."

He added:—"In this we have received a practical proof that the British Government is that of a nation which is sufficiently enlightened and sufficiently powerful to admit the justice of any reclamations that may be well grounded." (Cheers.) He moved the insertion in the records of the Chamber of the declaration above alluded to.

M. José de Moraes seconded the motion, and asked the Government to have the note printed in the Official Gazette.

M. Martens Ferrão (Opposition member, and Minister of Justice in 1869), felt great pleasure in hearing the communication just made by the Duke of Loulé.

He said, this fact proved to his mind that nations should always endeavour to obtain satisfaction for insults offered to them, in a dignified manner, because by thus acting they will always obtain it from those nations which entertain a respect for justice and law.

He added, England has just given a proof of the prudent, judicious, and dignified manner with which she attends to all matters of importance, and of the impartiality with which she decides them. On the occasion in question it was certainly her duty not to forget, and she did not forget, the ancient relations of good and loyal friendship between herself and her most ancient and loyal ally. (Cheers.) A friendship which will not certainly be diminished, but will rather be drawn closer in consequence of the complete satisfaction given, which is as honourable for the nation which demanded it as for the one which offered the same.

"Mr. President, as the Government has communicated to the Chamber the note from the British Government, it has come under the dominion of the public, and it cannot therefore be inexpedient to have it printed in the 'Diario;' but the Government is the best judge on this point."

In cases of this nature he thought it was flattering to the national dignity that it should be generally known how two nations which respected each other had acted, inasmuch as such questions affect their dignity and honour.

He concluded by expressing his pleasure at the satisfactory manner in which reparation had been made to this country.

M. Quaresma moved that a vote of thanks should be offered to the Duke of Loulé for the able manner with which he had conducted these negotiations.

M. Sant' Anna e Vasconcellos seconded the motion. He concluded by saying that "we had obtained a favourable solution to a question of great importance for ourselves, who, although we are a small nation, know how to esteem our own dignity and honour."

M. Martens Ferrão declared that he certainly would not oppose the vote.

M. Mattos Correia moved that the Minister of Marine should be also included in the vote of thanks.

The two motions were unanimously approved, the Minister of Marine being included in the vote of thanks.

The President of the Council thanked the Chamber for the kindness shown to him; he did not know whether he deserved it, as he had merely done his duty; at all events, it would urge him to endeavour to serve his country well. He would have the said note printed in the Report of that day's sitting (which was done).

The Minister of Marine also returned thanks. He concluded by saying "that, as a member of the Cabinet, it had not been a subject of surprise to him that the powerful Government of Great Britain should have acknowledged our right in the document in question; in this it did no more than render due homage to the principles of justice which regulate the relations of ancient and mutual friendship between the two countries, and which ought to be the rule with respect to the relations between all civilized countries." He said, "It was therefore quite logical, and at the same time very satisfactory, to see an enlightened Government and a great people—great because it is patriotic, and great because it is free (cheers)—sanctioning by their conduct a rule of universal interest, which tends to the respect and independence of all, and tightening the bonds of mutual interest and friendship, which have for centuries united the two countries.

"In reference to questions of this kind, there are neither strong nor weak nations; but law, justice, and reason alone exist. In the present state of the world these alone constitute true greatness, strength, and power; such principles honouring both those who defend them and those who recognize them."

WITH reference to Mr. Herries' despatch of the 1st of September of last year, I transmit to you, for your information, copies of a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Commissioner at Loanda,* stating that the custom of allowing negroes to the number of ten to each vessel to be shipped from that port to St. Thomas under the name of libertos provided with passports is still continued, notwithstanding the assurance made by the Marquis de Loulé to Mr. Herries, that effectual measures had been taken to put a stop to this practice, and that any connivance at this traffic would no longer be permitted. I have to instruct you to take an opportunity of bringing this matter to the serious attention of the Portuguese Government, and you will request that steps may be taken to give effect to the assurances given by the Marquis de Loulé.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith to your Lordship copy of a note which I have, in obedience to the instructions contained in your Lordship's despatch of the 8th instant, addressed to the Duke de Loulé, complaining of the continuance of the practice of shipping negroes from Loanda to St. Thomas under the name of "libertos."

Inclosure 1 in No. 110.

Sir A. Magenis to the Duke of Loulé.

M. le Ministre,

Lisbon, October 16, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Excellency that I have received the instructions of my Government to call the serious attention of His Most Faithful Majesty's Government to the custom of allowing negroes to the number of ten to each vessel, to be shipped at Loanda under the name of "libertos," and provided with passports granted by the Provincial Government for the Island of St. Thomas, which, according to information received from Her Majesty's Commissioner at Loanda, still continues, notwithstanding the assurances given by your Excellency in the month of September of last year to Mr. Herries, at that time Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, that effectual measures had been taken to put a stop to the practice complained of, and that any connivance at the Slave Trade would no longer be permitted.

In the course of the correspondence which has lately taken place between Her Majesty's Commissioner and the Governor-General of Loanda upon this subject, his Excellency admits that, on taking charge of the Government of the province, the most serious attention to the terms of the Treaty of the 3rd July, 1842, concluded between Great Britain and Portugal for the suppression of the Slave Trade, and the exact fulfilment of the same, were particularly recommended to him; nor does Mr. Vredenburg, Her Majesty's Commissioner, in the least infer that his Excellency is actuated by any disinclination to carry out the instructions of his Government, entertaining on the contrary a conviction that he is acting in a spirit of good faith, although far from feeling satisfied that the precautions taken by him will attain the end he proposes. Mr. Vredenburg considered it his duty to call his Excellency's attention to the fact of the steamer "Donna Antonia" having left the port of Loanda of the 12th April last for St. Thomas with so-called "libertos" on board, and the steamer "Paquete de Mossamedes" having also left on the 13th of May with ten on board, at the same time informing his Excellency that the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Griffon" had upon visiting the schooner "Nini" found twelve so-called "libertos" on board of her, provided with passports from the Provincial Government.

* Class A, No. 74.

In reply to the representations of Her Majesty's Commissioner, his Excellency states that he has never granted passports for the Island of St. Thomas to more blacks in the condition of "libertos" than to the number permitted by the Treaty in respect to slaves, and under the circumstances specified in the Treaty, always declaring their condition as "libertos" in the passports, and addressing besides a despatch to the Governor of St. Thomas, calling his attention to their condition as free men.

With respect to the schooner "Nini" his Excellency informed Her Majesty's Commissioner that he granted passports by her for the Island of St. Thomas to a colonist who took ten "libertos" with him, and who had duly fulfilled the requisite legal formalities, and also to another European passenger, and that he was not aware of any other person being on board; but as twelve blacks were discovered, he imagined they could not be all provided with passports, admitting at the same time that on certain occasions twelve blacks had gone on board the same vessel to St. Thomas, ten in the condition of "libertos" accompanying some colonist, and two as free blacks provided with passports, which they had applied for under circumstances which did not admit of their being withheld, since, otherwise, many persons in the country would be prevented from leaving it merely on account of their colour.

In conclusion, I have been instructed by Her Majesty's Government to request your Excellency to have the goodness to cause steps to be taken to give effect to the assurances made by your Excellency to Mr. Herries, to which I have above referred, so that the practice complained of may no longer, under any pretence, be permitted.

WITH reference to the note which you were pleased to address to me under date of the 16th of October last, calling the attention of His Majesty's Government to the practice of allowing the shipment of free negroes (libertos) from Loanda to St. Thomas, with passports from the local authorities, it is my duty to forward to you the inclosed extract from a despatch which I have received from the Minister of Marine under date of the 10th instant.

From the contents of that despatch, and from a part of a former one, dated the 27th of June last, to which his Excellency alludes, copy of which is likewise inclosed, you will observe that in consequence of the rules laid down in the Decree, having the force of law, of the 14th of December, 1854, His Majesty's Government cannot hinder the shipment of free negroes (libertos) to that island, and that as the said blacks are provided with documents proving their condition as free or freed-men (libertos), they depart for their destination in due accordance with the law.

Therefore inasmuch as this shipment of free negroes or freed-men (libertos) is carried on in conformity with the laws of the country, and watched over by the competent authorities, His Majesty's Government trusts that Her Britannic Majesty's Government will not fail to acknowledge that the practice pursued at present does not in any way violate the Treaty of the 3rd of July, 1842, between Portugal and Great Britain, which has only reference to slaves properly so called, as the Minister of Marine remarks.

The Minister of Marine to the Duke of Loulé.

(Extract.)

November 10, 1863.

I HAVE just received your Excellency's despatch of the 24th of October, inclosing the translation of a note in which Her Britannic Majesty's Minister at this Court calls the attention of His Most Faithful Majesty's Government to the practice of allowing the shipment of negroes from Loanda to St. Thomas, under the title of freed-men (libertos), with passports from the local authorities; and your Excellency requests me to enable you to reply as soon as possible to that note, whilst you declare that you had already communicated to the same Minister my despatches of the 24th of February, 7th of March, and 28th of October, 1862.

I observe that the aforesaid Minister takes for his ground the assurances which your Excellency gave to Mr. Herries in the month of September of last year, that effective measures had been adopted to put an end to the practice which gave rise to this complaint, and that any further acts of connivance in the Slave Trade would no longer be allowed.

I am ignorant of what expressions your Excellency made use of to give the British Minister, Mr. Herries, those assurances, but an absolute prohibition could only apply to any act of connivance in the Slave Trade. But not even with respect to freed-men (libertos) could such an absolute prohibition be made, not only because they are not in the same category as slaves, to whom the Treaty of the 3rd of July, 1842, refers, but also because, inasmuch as they are not in the same category, neither can the Portuguese Government forbid their shipment when duly legalised, nor is it known upon what grounds the British Government demands that prohibition, depriving St. Thomas of free workmen, whom both the laws of the country and the Treaty above alluded to do not deprive it of.

The Governor of the province was enjoined to adopt the most rigorous measures and the necessary steps, in order that the negroes proceeding to St. Thomas should be provided with documents to prove their condition as free or freed-men (libertos), namely, with respect to the former, the deed of their manumission, and with respect to the latter, their passports and the proper passes with which documents they appear before the protecting Board of slaves and freed men (libertos) at St. Thomas, so as to enable the same to exercise its salutary vigilance in regard to them.

As is evident, the legal shipment of freed-men (libertos) is one thing, the shipment of slaves another. It is important not to confound the two.

Energetically repressed as the traffic has been, which the Government can prove by many facts, it draws a distinction where it ought to do so. Up to this the Government has been a faithful observer of the said Treaty.

As it appears even from the note of Her Britannic Majesty's Minister, the Governor-General of Angola has curtailed the issuing of passports for St. Thomas, granting them only to ten negroes to be shipped in each vessel, the number of these in the condition of freed-men (libertos) being equal to the number of those whom the Treaty allows to be shipped in the same manner, in the condition of slaves, without in any way destroying the right possessed by the Portuguese Government, of allowing the shipment, up to any number, of free negroes or freed-men (libertos) from Angola to St. Thomas, as I stated to your Excellency in my despatch of the 27th of June last ; an essential point, with respect to which I refer you altogether to the observations mentioned in that despatch.

I cannot therefore say anything more on this subject, except that it appears to me to be extremely expedient, before anything else, to ascertain upon what international rule is the objection to the shipment of any number of free negroes (libertos) from one Portuguese possession to another grounded ? Where, when, and in what manner was it settled, that not even that which the Treaty authorizes to be done with respect to negro slaves, cannot be allowed with respect to free negroes (libertos) ?

My opinion is that these preliminary considerations are essential, and that until they shall have been duly weighed, not a single step can be taken in this matter.

Inclosure 3 in No. 112.

The Minister of Marine to the Duke of Loulé.

(Extract.)

June 27, 1863.

AT present, as your Excellency is aware, the Decree, having the validity of law, of the 14th of December, 1854, is in full force, which Decree regulated the registration of slaves, and settled once for all the legal meaning of the word, and of the condition of freed-men (libertos).

That Decree contains amongst other rules, the following :—

All slaves existing in the Portuguese ultramarine dominions at the time of the publication of this Decree shall be registered within thirty days.

All those who may not have been presented and inscribed in the said register shall be held to be freed-men (libertos).

From the date of the publication of this Decree, all slaves belonging to the State are to remain free.

All slaves who may be imported overland into the said dominions after the publication of this Decree shall also be registered in a special book, and shall be considered to remain in the condition of freed men (libertos), but under the obligation of serving their masters for the space of ten years.

The sale of the services of these freed-men (libertos) is lawful with respect to the whole of the time during which they are bound to perform them, or during any part of that time.

The State is the patron and natural guardian of slaves, freed-men (libertos), and of their children.

The exercise of this guardianship is entrusted in each of the Ultramarine Provinces to a Board, called "The Protecting Board of Slaves and Freed-men" (libertos).

These contracts, having reference to their services, entered into with African Chiefs or individuals, are to be subject to the special control of the Protecting Boards, it being the duty of the other authorities also to watch that no abuse be made of those contracts in contravention of the laws which prohibit the Traffic in Slaves.

From these regulations it is evident that free negroes (libertos) who may have sold their services to individuals residing at St. Thomas, cannot be prevented from embarking for that island ; and that, as they are provided with documents proving their condition as free or freed-men (libertos), such as a deed of manumission, or a passport and, with respect to the latter, a safe-conduct to enable them to appear before the Protecting Board of Slaves and Freed-men (libertos) at St. Thomas, they depart for their destination in due accordance with the laws ; and that as they continue to be subject there to the control of the aforesaid Boards, whilst at the same time the other authorities are bound to watch that these transactions which are carried out in conformity to the laws of the country, do not violate those which prohibit the Traffic in Slaves, the Treaty of the 3rd of July, 1842, which only refers to slaves properly so called, neither can, nor ought to be, held to have been violated on this account.

Finally, these transactions are identical with those which, as I am informed, are carried on with a slight difference of form among the black labourers in the British Colonies, and even amongst the whites in different parts of the globe, when they engage their services for a certain term under the mutual guarantee of the law ; and as the Portuguese Government has never interfered in these transactions carried on in the British Colonies, it appears to me that there exists a right to hope that Her Britannic Majesty's Government will act in a similar manner when negroes, held to be Portuguese subjects, provided with official documents, and protected by the authorities, make use of the liberty which all other subjects possess, of changing their place of residence as it may suit their purpose.

No. 114.

Acting Consul Coaffee to Earl Russell.—(Received November 5.)(Extract.) St. Vincent, Cape de Verd Islands, September 30, 1863.

WITH reference to the reports that slave-vessels call at the Cape Verd Islands for supplies, and that a slave-vessel called the "Atlantic," with a cargo of slaves on board, had called off Porto Praya in the month of September 1862, and had been furnished with supplies from thence; also, that there is reason to believe that a person residing at Porto Praya was the owner of a schooner called the "Caledonia," which is stated to have been captured by one of Her Majesty's cruisers off the African Coast; I have the honour to report that when Mr. Henrique José d'Oliveira, the Consular Agent for Praya, was here awaiting the arrival of the "Parana," to embark for Lisbon, on a visit of several months, I addressed him a letter, calling attention to these matters, and I have the honour to transmit herewith a translation of his reply.

With reference to the "Atlantic" and "Caledonia," if I have any hesitation in supporting the statement made by Mr. H. J. Oliveira, that no vessels for many years past have called at the Cape de Verde Islands for refreshments, and continued their voyages for Traffic of Slaves, I have none whatever in declaring it impossible that the "Atlantic" could have called off Porto Praya, with a cargo of slaves on board, and obtained supplies there, without the fact coming to Mr. Consul Miller's knowledge, or to mine. I would beg to represent to your Lordship that the law and the regulations of the Customs at the Cape de Verdes require vessels calling for supplies (much or little) to first anchor in the port, so that the visit of health may be made, and communications with shore permitted or restricted. Regarding the "Caledonia," I am unable to gather any further information than that stated in Mr. H. J. Oliveira's letter.

As to whether there is any reason to believe that slaves are still in the habit of touching for supplies at the Cape de Verde Islands, I beg to state that nothing has transpired to warrant that belief; but that on the 5th June last Mr. Consul Miller received information that at the port of Tarrafal de Monte Trigo, in the Island of St. Antonio, there exists a deposit, consisting of 150 casks, with water and provisions, for the purpose of supplying vessels engaged in the Traffic of Slaves; which information he communicated to his Excellency the Governor-General of these Islands, so as to enable his Excellency to ascertain its truth, and to take measures accordingly; but his Excellency replied, under date of the 15th June last, "that for a long time no attempts have appeared in this province in respect of the wicked Traffic of Slaves, yet his Excellency assured Mr. Consul Miller that special instructions have been given to seriously examine into the matter, and in case of encountering signs indicative of that traffic, to legally prosecute all concerned in its extinction." Again, on the 19th September last, I addressed a letter to his Excellency, to the effect that recently a further importation of 150 water-casks had been made into this island; these were shipped at Lisbon on board the steamer "Donna Antonia," one of the line of steamers running between Lisbon and Loanda, and the casks are now in deposit in the Custom-house of this island. I may be permitted to add, for your Lordship's information, that a Portuguese schooner, fore and aft rigged, named "Dois Amigos," captain and owner H. A. de Brion, of about 100 tons burthen, is about to ply between Bissau and these islands, for the purpose of importing corn, &c., as no rains have fallen amongst any of them this season—thereby causing scarcity of food; the schooner belongs to the port of Lisbon. Finally, I have the honour to state that beyond the matter of the water-casks before-mentioned, I see no reason to believe that slavers are still in the habit of touching for supplies at the Cape de Verde Islands.

St. Vincent, September 22, 1863.

ANSWERING your official letter dated 21st September instant, in which you ask me for explanations upon the different questions respecting the steamer "Dart," Commander Richards, as also if in the port of Praya it is still customary for vessels to call for refreshments that are concerned in the Traffic of Slaves, I beg to say:

1. Upon slavery I will say positively that many years have passed since vessels have called at the Cape de Verde Islands for refreshments that pursued their voyage to that traffic; such assertion is false, and much more so all that is said in relation to schooner "Caledonia," a schooner that never existed amongst the Cape de Verde Islands. There sailed from Porto Praya for Bissau the schooner "Candinha," the property of Hannibal Jozé da Silva, with lawful merchandise, and as no notices had been heard of her she was considered to be lost, and the American Consul (friend of the owner of the schooner) asked the Commander of the "Dart" if by chance he knew anything of the said schooner. This perhaps gave cause to the Commander to suspect that she was engaged in Traffic (slave); but one month afterwards it was known that the "Candinha" had arrived at Goree for repairs, and that after repairing she came to Porto Praya. I ought to state that there has never been known nor heard suspicion that the house of Barboza and Sons, established in Bissau and the Island of Fogo, made traffic with slaves.

2. Finally, it is entirely thoughtless and short of common sense to believe that in Porto Praya, the residence of the Governor-General and the capital of the Archipelago of the Cape de Verds, it should be permitted that there should be equipped or provisioned slave-vessels, when, otherwise, it is well known that in that city there is every philanthropy in respect of slavery; and, besides, not four years ago I myself gave liberty to all the slaves I possessed, they being considered as men entirely and truly free.

I assure you that all I have said is pure truth, and that you may certify the Government of Her Britannic Majesty that for many years in the Cape de Verde Islands the contraband in slaves has been unknown.

Dr. Livingstone to Earl Russell.—(Received July 22, 1863.)

(Extract.)

River Zambesi, December 29, 1862.

BY information from various sources, which I have every reason to believe thoroughly reliable, I regret to find that slaving continues to go on briskly between the valley of the Shire and Tette, and that white men are employed to lead the black slave-hunters. A few Makololo left by us near the cataracts took it on themselves to disperse several slaving parties, but at last refrained on seeing two whites in a company, in order, they say, to avoid even by accident shedding white men's blood. A famine caused partly by a drought, but chiefly by the inroads of the slave-hunters, has added greatly to the evil; and the country below the cataracts will soon be as scarce of population as that near the Portuguese settlements. So many are taken down to Quillimane, that whereas during the continuance of the Bourbon emigration system, eight fathoms of calico were paid for each slave, they now fetch only a fathom a-piece. From Tette they are sent up the Zambesi to purchase ivory, and the Governor, who is the principal slave-merchant there, speaks of this as binding them apprentices for ten years according to law.

In connection with our attempts to put a stop to the above-mentioned Traffic, and to the much more extensive Slave Trade on Lake Nyassa, amounting, it is believed, to at least 20,000 annually, I beg to inform your Lordship that the case of six tradesmen has lately been brought to my notice by his Excellency the Governor of the Cape. By trade they are two carpenters, two masons, and one smith, and are Scotchmen. The leader is an Englishman. They worked at their trades in the Cape Colony, and their wages went to a common fund, with which two waggons were bought in order to proceed overland and join us. Their good conduct is testified to by the Magistrate of Aliwal North, who is said by the Colonial Secretary to be a man of sound judgment. I have approved of their being sent round by sea, and recommended them to aim as soon as possible at giving the people on the Lake an example of independent industry and Christian life. We may employ them for a short time in transport and in erecting a station above the cataracts and another on the Lake, but as soon as we can afford them protection by the steamer they must act as an independent body. They are probably hardy, frugal, and industrious, and seem just the men we need, brought to hand without our seeking.

In accordance with the attempt to supplant the Slave Trade by lawful commerce I purchased 230*l.* worth of calico, and have it now on board the "Pioneer." It is intended as an experiment, and, not to complicate the Government in trading, is from private resources. It would not have been mentioned at all at present, but for the proceedings of the Governor-General of Mozambique and the Governor of Quillimane, who affect alarm lest damage should be done to the commerce of the country by the quantities of luggage brought in through the Kongone mouth of the Zambesi "for the scientific and exploring expeditions under Dr. Livingstone and Bishop Mackenzie." He is well aware that our expedition received none of the luggage referred to, and that we have materially increased the lawful commerce by opening up districts into which no Portuguese durst previously enter, and that even his own brother is enriching himself by turning our discoveries to a purpose we never anticipated. A short explanation, however, of the distinction between the Government expedition and the mission of the Universities, avoiding any phrase provocative of discussion, which has a tendency here to glide into altercation, will probably calm his alarm for the present. But the question of free navigation of the Zambesi and Shire becomes increasingly urgent. No Portuguese ever uses the Zambesi as it flows into the sea below Mazaro, nor do they ever enter the Shire. And Mr. Sunley, Her Majesty's Consul at Johanna, and others, are desirous to establish centres of industry on Lake Nyassa, provided the ingress be made free. The offer of Mr. Sunley is of great value, for I can confidently affirm that had he given employment and wages on the same scale in Africa as he has done in the paltry Island of Johanna, he would have rooted out slavery over a very large district. The beneficial effects of his experiment have been marred by the very limited sphere to which it has been confined, and by his political relations with the head men of the island or slaveholders. He assured me that he would willingly hand over his present manufactory to a deputy in order to make a trial of free labour in Africa. And I believe, not for the sake of gain, but to leave his mark in good done in the world. Your Lordship will judge how valuable his experience would be in reducing to order the mass of population that crowds round an English establishment, when the missionaries, who are all intelligent men, were so bewildered with about 200 free people that no sanitary regulations were made, the station became a cesspool, and about fifty of the people perished. But no one in his senses would come under any sort of subjection to the officers of Portuguese convict settlements. And yet it seems essential to a practical change of the system that has allowed the region between Cape Delgado and Delagoa Bay to be virtually a private "slave preserve" that our countrymen should have free access. The way in which the passions of the natives are turned to account is quite beyond the control of the Government of Lisbon. The Ajawa, for instance, were furnished with arms and ammunition by means of Tette slaves, to be paid for in Manganja captives. The forays that followed drove the Manganja away from their well-cultivated fields; famine followed, and now the fugitives as well as the victors are almost compelled to sell their people to the Tette agents to keep themselves from starving. They are at present, and as we saw a year ago in coming down the Zambesi from the Makololo country, sent up this river beyond Tette, and each slave commands an elephant's tusk, value 10*l.* or 12*l.* This market is limited, for the demand is chiefly for wives; but the trade is quite ready to turn to the coast, as indeed it now is at Mhambane, whence we hear the boast that three slavers lately departed.

Taking it for granted that the Portuguese Government is really anxious to suppress the Slave Trade, they are only required to yield the joint use of forty miles of river, on one side of which there is only one Portuguese, and on the other they have to pay heavy annual tribute. This is the space between Mazaro and the mouth of the Shire. The Zambesi below that point and the Shire never are used by any Portuguese, nor have they ever been put to commercial uses other than occasional slaving. All commerce might be considered in bond till up the Shire, or the custom-house be placed at Senna; and as all the dues levied at Quillimane, amounting at least to only 600*l.* per annum are, derived from merchandise going and coming from Senna and Tette, the revenue would be increased by the stimulus which lawful traders would impart to the whole country.

In coming lately from Johanna our coals were expended before we could enter this river, and the wind being against us we had to sail away back to the Quillimane river to cut wood. We found a Portuguese barque named "Joven Carlotta" anchored at Quillimane village. She had been disabled in the Mozambique Channel nine months previously, and was leaking badly, but the Governor said she had loaded partially with rice, which at her alleged destination (Mozambique) would yield scarcely any profit. An officer from the "Pioneer" went aboard, ostensibly to make a trifling purchase, when a tarpaulin was thrown across the hatch and all work stopped till he left. Having some Zambesi natives serving in the "Pioneer," one of them familiar with Quillimane remarked in our hearing to his companions, "Senhor Pimento has the slaves for this barque in the village; it was he who sent for her." Pimento was the coadjutor of Senhor Cruz during all the sad slave emigration by the French. Her Majesty's ship "Rapid" happening to call, I accompanied the first lieutenant from the place where we were wooding up to the village, met the Governor on the jetty, and felt surprised that he should at once off-hand begin to explain that the barque was not going to Mozambique if the wind did not suit, but would start for Lisbon, "as it might not be safe to beat against the wind." On my remarking that a voyage round the Cape and storms seemed more dangerous than that of a few days to Mozambique, his Excellency tendered the explanation that the leak was in her stem, and in going to Lisbon she would have the wind all the way in her stern! Having communicated my [suspicions?] to the captain of the "Rapid" (Jago), with not much prospect that she will be caught, I expect soon to hear that she loaded with slaves at the Mokuse river, a little north, or at another a little south of the Quillimane. And this is the way it will go on, because they do not regard the traffic as immoral, and seem to ignore the dreadful amount of misery and woe to which it gives rise. We might leave all we have done in obtaining influence by this entrance to the independent tribes and begin at the bottom of the ladder in the Rovuma, but this would be only consenting to this region still being-held as the slave-preserve of the Portuguese.

Mr. Burnet to the Colonial Secretary, Cape Town.

Sir,

Civil Commissioner's Office, Aliwal North, September 8, 1862.

I HAVE the honour herewith to transmit, for the favourable consideration of his Excellency the Governor, a letter, to-day handed in to me, by John Jehan, an Englishman, who as the chosen head of a select party of Scotch emigrants, mechanics, arrived with them at Aliwal North about the month of January last, with the avowed intention of prosecuting their journey to the far interior, and there by their own exertions founding an independent Christian mission.

Mr. Jehan states that he was formerly connected with the London City Mission, and came out to South Africa purely for missionary purposes, where he has gradually, one by one, gathered the few young men he mentions round him.

I am bound in justice to say that their conduct has been most exemplary, and although their proposed expedition seems to partake of romance, they adhere to their resolution, and, one and all, at their trades respectively, are diligently working to complete what means are still wanting to enable them to carry out their object. They are one and all fine sober young men, and Mr. Jehan as their head seems to have a very extraordinary command over them. This has appeared more clearly from his having some time ago, summarily, and with the full consent of the others, expelled one of the party who had broken through the rules by which they had bound themselves to carry out the object in view.

I think such a party might form a valuable addition to the Zambesi mission; I can scarcely doubt their persevering in the course they propose to themselves. Mr. Jehan appears under a very unassuming modest exterior to be a man of great strength of mind and firmness of character. He has shown his love and aptitude for missionary work by visiting the sick and distressed in this neighbourhood since his arrival.

I will add nothing more at present; but should his Excellency see fit to take Mr. Jehan's proposal under consideration, any information will be at once afforded by him to enable his Excellency better to comprehend the fitness of him and his party for the work in view.

I have, &c.

Civil Commissioner of Aliwal North.

Inclosure 2 in No. 116.

Mr. Jehan to Mr. Burnet.

Sir,

Aliwal North, September 8, 1862.

THE deep interest which is taken in the efforts which Dr. Livingstone is now putting forth in the interior induces me to lay before you a few facts connected with a party of young men of whom I am the leader. After reading Livingstone's work on the interior, I was strongly impressed with the idea that if a few mechanics could be induced to enter into a journey of exploration it would prove successful. These views I communicated to five other young men of different trades, who at once saw the possibility of accomplishing such a journey. We formed ourselves into a company in July 1861, since which time we have worked together, each man depositing his earnings with the Treasurer, and receiving only clothes and food. We are now armed, have two waggons, and two spans of oxen, and means to buy such outfit as we need for our journey. We have determined to start from here in March next, cross the Kahatakari desert, and thence to the Zambesi.

But after consulting together, we have come to the conclusion, that if his Excellency the Governor will accept our services to aid Livingstone's efforts, we shall forego our inland journey, and proceed to the scene of the Doctor's labour. All we require is, that one of Her Majesty's ships would take us on board at any port, say East London, the nearest, and land us on the nearest shore to Livingstone, under whose instructions we shall place ourselves, and whose efforts we shall aid with all the ability at our disposal.

Supposing that this proposition be accepted, we shall be ready to start from here on the 1st day of January. We are by trade—two masons, two carpenters, and one blacksmith.

The writer has spent his time hitherto in missionary labours.

Our ages are between 25 and 32 years. We are inured to toil, in possession of sound health.

If the above facts approve themselves to your mind, you will confer a great favour upon us by placing them before the Governor.

I have, &c.

The Colonial Secretary, Cape Town, to Mr. Burnet.

Sir, Colonial Office, September 26, 1862.
IN answer to your letter of the 8th instant, inclosing a communication from Mr. Jehan, in which he requests on behalf of himself and his companions a passage in one of Her Majesty's ships to the mouth of the Zambesi, I am directed to inform you that his Excellency, after communicating with the Admiral, learns that it is not probable that he will be sending a ship up the coast in January, and the Governor thinks that it would be unadvisable for the party to proceed to join Dr. Livingstone without some previous communication.

A vessel is about to proceed up the coast in a few days, and his Excellency will send copies of your letter and its inclosure to Dr. Livingstone. The reply will be forwarded as soon as it is received.

Memorandum.

THE slave-hunting on the east or left bank of the Shire is referred to separately because it began seven years before the Tette people engaged in it from the opposite bank, and because its history shows how little is to be hoped for from the present system of government. A half-caste Portuguese called Marianno used a stockade at the mouth of the Shire as a convenient point from which to make forays up the river to supply his brother-in-law, M. Cruz, with slaves for export. In 1856 I found him living in open defiance of the Government, and he even proceeded so far as to attack Senna and kill Portuguese troops. He gradually became more and more bloodthirsty, till the murders he committed made him the terror of the country; yet, feeling sure that the wealth he had acquired would smooth everything before him, he voluntarily went to Quillimane and delivered himself up for trial. On condemnation for over forty murders, most of them in cool blood, to make an impression in the country, the sentence was only three years' imprisonment, and the amount of liberty he enjoyed during the punishment caused the general impression that his money had not been without effect on the authorities. He came back to Quillimane last year, and lived with the Governor until, as is said, "he ran away." The Governor made as if he would run after him, and when we came down the Shire a year ago he made very eager inquiries as to Marianno's whereabouts. Marianno, with about 1,000 arms in the hands of his slaves, has been ravaging all the country around Mount Clarendon, and inflicting all that misery south and east of the Shire cataracts which the Tette people are doing in the country farther north. The fugitives are crowded down to the Shire near the Rus, and here again famine will follow and cut off far more than are taken out of the country. It has not yet transpired where his captives are sent to, but he has no difficulty in procuring arms and ammunition from the traders of Quillimane and the Zambesi.

Nine hundred miles of the East Coast were acknowledged as nominally Portuguese on the express understanding that the Slave Trade should be put down. As already mentioned, it has been made a private slave-preserve instead. Between Sierra Leone and Loanda, on the West Coast, with only about double the number of miles, we have seven or eight English settlements from which potent moral influences are shed inland. In this 900 miles we have not one free avenue; and the system of warfare and alarm which any private Portuguese may with his slaves carry on is a terrible barrier to the efficiency of our cruisers. The wars, or rather forays, of private people, such as Marianno, Belchior, Sekwasha, and the Tette merchants, amass large numbers of slaves which, at the shortest notice, are sent down to the coast, while the state of alarm in which wide regions are thrown renders industrial pursuits impossible. If none but the lowest class of Portuguese were admitted into the West Coast, the vast benefits which the squadron has there conferred could never have been realized. And if your Lordship can prevail upon the Portuguese to grant the same privileges of free trade as the English settlements on the Gold Coast offer to all nations, an inestimable boon will be conferred on Eastern Africa.

It appears to me that the system revealed in this despatch has had the direct effect of nullifying the policy which Her Majesty's Government have laboured so long and so hard to uphold. The squadron was expected, by keeping the Slave Trade in check for a time, to allow Christianity and civilization to put forth their influence, and thus indirectly to eradicate the evil. In the West Coast a large amount of success has followed. Lawful commerce, which previously did not amount to 20,000*l.* annually, is now worth between 2,000,000*l.* and 3,000,000*l.*, and the tonnage employed in carrying it exceeds that of the Slave Trade in its palmiest days. It is yearly increasing in value, and will continue so to do. Stability has been given to various settlements on the coast. Missions have been protected and their efficiency promoted by the countenance and respect shown by the officers; the country dialects have been reduced, and the way paved to the interior by the blessings of peace to millions there, who, before the cruisers came, could only expect marauders from the coast. On this coast, however, the same repressive measures have not influenced in the least the paltry peddling in ivory and gold-dust, which constitute the trade on the Zambesi.

Government House of the District of Quillimane, Quillimane, December 15, 1862.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Excellency, for your information and for due effects, the inclosed copy of the note which was addressed to me on the 14th August last from the Secretariat of the General Government of this province, forwarded by the Military Section.

In fulfilment of the orders contained in the former part of the said note, I have the honour to inform your Excellency that the Government of His Majesty the King, in ordering that your Excellency in your quality of scientific explorer in Southern Africa, and the members of any other scientific explorations, should be assisted by the authorities of the province, did not and could not grant to you the privilege of exemption from payment of duties on merchandize which may be imported into our dominions, but wholly and solely on articles for your own use or that of the exploration which cannot be considered as objects of commerce.

With respect to what is determined in the second part of the said note, it is my duty to inform your Excellency that by an order (Portaria) of the Governor-General of the province, dated 13th August of the present year, No. 171, published in the official Bulletin of the General Government of this province, No. 33 of the 9th day of August, a Delegation of the custom-house of this town was erected at the bar of Inhamessengo,* and to make the same known to your Excellency, and that those objects alone can be exempted from payment of fiscal duties which are especially intended for the private use of the individuals composing scientific expeditions or explorations, but not those articles which, by the regulations in force in this province, are required to pay duties, such as cottons, arms, gunpowder, and other articles; and to prevent all doubt, your Excellency will have the goodness to transmit to me, in your official character of Her Britannic Majesty's Consul in Quillimane, a statement of the articles which are permitted to enter without paying duties, in order that I may transmit the same to the Secretariat of the General Government of the province, as I am ordered to do in the last part of the letter from the said Secretariat.

And as your Excellency is directly in communication with the learned explorers of the party of the late Bishop Mackenzie, and will be so with any others who may possibly come at a future time, I request that you will have the kindness, in your official character as Her Britannic Majesty's Consul in Quilimane, to inform all of them of this, and particularly to make known to them everything which I have the honour to communicate to your Excellency in this note.

The Secretary to the General Government of the Province of Mozambique to the Government Secretary of the District of Quillimane.

(Translation.)

Sir,

Mozambique, August 14, 1862.

HIS Excellency the Governor-General of this Province, having considered the several communications which you have made to him relative to the entry, through the Bar of Luabo, of various articles which, under the pretext of being intended for the scientific expedition of Drs. Livingstone and Mackenzie, should from their quantity and quality be considered as articles of commerce, and are liable to the customs duties, which are paid upon similar articles in all parts of the Province, for whatever they may be intended, I am directed by his Excellency to suggest to you to inform Dr. Livingstone or the members of any other scientific exploration that the Government of His Majesty the King, in ordering that these and similar scientific explorations should be aided by the authorities of the Province, did not and could not grant to them the privilege of exemption from paying duties on the merchandise which they might import into our dominions, but solely upon articles for their own private use, or that of the exploration, which cannot be considered as objects of trade; as otherwise there would exist a privilege injurious to the interests of the public treasury, and to all the foreign nations which are established in this Province. You will therefore, in compliance with the order (Portaria) which I have sent you under this date, forthwith inform Dr. Livingstone, or any other person, that a delegation of the Custom-house here is established at Inhamessengo,* in order that they may be aware that such articles only can be exempted from fiscal duties which are especially intended for the private use of the individuals composing the scientific explorations or expeditions; and not those articles which, according to the regulations in force in this Province, ought to pay duties, such as cotton, arms, gunpowder, and other articles. And, in order to obviate all doubt, you will require of the said Dr. Livingstone, in his official quality as British Consul, in Quillimane, declaration of the articles which are to enter the Luabo, in the former case of entering without payment of duty. And in order that the Government of His Majesty the King may be faithfully informed, you will transmit to this General Government copies of all the communications which you make in this matter.

God preserve, &c.

No. 117.

Dr. Livingstone to Earl Russell.—(Received July 22.)

My Lord,

River Shire, January 28, 1863.

IN coming up this river with the lake steamer in tow, we have met no obstruction till within forty miles of the cataracts, but we hope to overcome all difficulties within a few days.

In my despatch of the 29th of December last, I gave some information respecting the effects of the slave-hunting on this river—famine followed; we have witnessed its effects in the comparatively few villages to be seen on the banks of the river, in the emaciated forms of the poor wretches who try to save themselves by fishing, and in the numerous dead bodies that daily float down the stream—we counted nineteen in a week. As many as have had strength to go have fled to other districts, and here, where we could get any amount of provisions at the cheapest rate, cultivation is entirely abandoned, and nothing whatever can be purchased. The slave-dealers of Tette, taking advantage of this state of want, now bring food, and with it buy the starving and dispirited inhabitants. The difficulties of our undertaking will now be greatly increased by our being obliged to bring every morsel of provisions for ourselves and natives between 200 and 300 miles.

When we came into the Shire, a large canoe laden with gunpowder, arms, wines, &c. had been seized passing up to the slave-hunting rebel Marianno as mission property!

* Say Kongone.—D. L.

These supplies cannot be sent without the connivance of the Governor of Quillimane, and it is highly probable that he induced the Governor-General to believe that we were making use of the Kongone to introduce arms and ammunition in order to screen his own connivance.

With this Marianno slave-hunting east of the Shire, near Mount Clarendon; with two private Portuguese, Belshore and Mello, making forays at pleasure west of the said point; with several parties from Tette actually out in the country north of this; and several slaving parties from Senna in the country south of that village; and the fact that any one at will may, with a few armed slaves, make a foray in any direction, I see more plainly than ever that, without an alteration in the exclusive system of the Portuguese, the beneficial effects of Her Majesty's cruizers can never be realized here as they have been on the West Coast. The question assumes the greatest importance to me, inasmuch as, if they are to follow us into the Lake region, our labours will be in vain. The idea of this takes the pith out of one's heart; but we shall go on with our road-making.

Sir J. Crampton to Earl Russell.—(Received January 10.)

My Lord,

Madrid, January 6, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inclose the copy of a note which, on the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 31st ultimo, I lost no time in addressing the Spanish Minister for Foreign Affairs, apprizing his Excellency of the shipment, on the morning of the 20th October last, of a cargo of upwards of 1,000 slaves at Aghwey, destined, there can be no doubt, for the Cuban market.

Sir J. Crampton to Señor Collantes.

M. le Ministre,

Madrid, January 6, 1863.

A DESPATCH has been received by Her Majesty's Government from Mr. Freeman, the Governor of Lagos, informing them that a shipment of 1,007 slaves, on board a steamer under French colours, was effected at Aghwey at about 11 o'clock in the morning of the 20th of October last.

Although the cruisers were on the alert expecting this steamer, which was to have shipped the slaves at Whydah, the slave-dealers appear to have obtained such precise information of the movements of the vessels of war that they abandoned this plan, and the slaves were sent by lagoon to Aghwey to be embarked there.

Her Majesty's ship "Griffon" gave chase to a French steamer which was descried in the neighbourhood, but the suspected vessel turned out to be the French man-of-war the "Lamothe Piquet," Commander Lefevre. The "Griffon" having exhausted her fuel in the chase was obliged to proceed to Fernando Po to coal, when the expected slave steam-vessel ran in and succeeded in carrying off her cargo.

As there can be no question that these slaves are destined for the Cuban market, I am instructed by Her Majesty's Government to lose no time in apprising your Excellency of the facts above stated.

Sir,

Foreign Office, January 13, 1863.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 31st ultimo, instructing you to acquaint the Spanish Government of the shipment from the African coast, on the 20th of October last, of a cargo of upwards of 1,000 slaves destined for the Cuban market, I now transmit to you a copy of a despatch from Mr. Young, Her Majesty's Consul at Bilbao,* reporting that the Spanish steamer "Noc Daqui" landed 1,010 slaves in Cuba, on the 28th of November last.

There can be little doubt, therefore, that it was the "Noc Daqui" that succeeded in evading Her Majesty's cruisers on the African coast in October last, and subsequently landed her slaves in Cuba.

This is the third if not the fourth time that this vessel has been successfully engaged in introducing slaves into Cuba, and although these facts must be as notorious to the Spanish authorities as they are to the British Government, no steps would appear to have been taken to prevent the owners of the "Noc Daqui," who are Spanish subjects and well known, from continuing to employ their vessel in this nefarious Traffic.

I have to desire that you will communicate to the Spanish Government the information respecting this vessel which is contained in Mr. Young's despatch, and you will urge them to adopt measures for the arrest and punishment of the parties concerned in this affair.

Sir J. Crampton to Earl Russell.—(Received January 27.)

My Lord,

Madrid, January 3, 1863.

IN obedience to the instructions contained in your Lordship's despatch of the 13th ultimo, I have not failed to bring to the knowledge of Marshal O'Donnell the facts of the case reported to Her Majesty's Government by Mr. Acting Consul-General Crawford, of the landing in Cuba of 490 slaves with the connivance of the authorities of the district of Trinidad.

I stated that Her Majesty's Government felt pleasure in acknowledging the promptness with which the Captain-General of Cuba punished, as far as in him lay, the complicity of those authorities of whose guilt he felt persuaded, by summarily dismissing the Lieutenant-Governor of Trinidad and the Lieutenant of Police at Casilda; but I added that Her Majesty's Government could not but feel deep regret that the existing state of the internal laws and regulations in Cuba was such that, as is proved by this case, in spite of the energetic measures which the Spanish Government are adopting by sea, and in spite of the disposition evinced by the Captain-General to exert the powers vested in him to punish those concerned in this infamous Traffic, it is nevertheless carried on with an impunity which appears now solely to result from the impossibility of obtaining legal evidence of offences, the commission of which is nevertheless notorious to the highest official authority of the island.

It was obvious, I remarked, that such a state of things called for remedy; for it could not be supposed that any Government would embark in measures entailing trouble and expense, would authorise their highest officers to resort to acts of summary authority, and yet submit to have their endeavours defeated through the admitted defects of laws which it was in their own power to amend.

I availed myself of the information contained in Mr. Crawford's despatch to your Lordship of October 30th, to say that I was persuaded no one was more alive to those defects than Marshal Serrano himself; and I remarked that his Excellency in speaking to Her Majesty's Vice-Consul had frankly admitted the necessity of adopting the very measures of improvement which had been repeatedly recommended by Her Majesty's Government.

Marshal O'Donnell said to me, in reply, that he was acquainted with, and entirely approved of, the summary action of the Captain-General in the case to which I alluded. His Excellency added that I might safely assure Her Majesty's Government that the Spanish Government were sincerely desirous to bring the Cuban Slave Trade to an end, and were determined to use every means in their power to effect this object. His Excellency then repeated to me what I have already reported to your Lordship respecting the increase in number, and the improvement in the efficiency, of the Spanish naval force to be employed upon the coasts of Cuba; and upon my pressing him in regard to measures of internal police recommended by Marshal Serrano, his Excellency observed that that officer was now upon his way to Spain; that upon his arrival he, Marshal O'Donnell, would lose no time in consulting him upon this subject, and he could assure me that the measures Marshal Serrano might recommend would be taken into the serious consideration of the Spanish Government, with a view to the immediate adoption of such of them "as could properly be accepted" or found practicable by the Council of State.

Sir J. Crampton to the Duke de la Torre.

My Lord Duke,

Madrid, January 29, 1863.

WITH reference to the note which I addressed to Señor Calderon Collantes upon the subject of the slaver "Noc Daqui," dated the 11th of September last, I have now the honour to communicate to your Excellency the following additional information in regard to the proceedings of that vessel.

It has come to the knowledge of Her Majesty's Consul at Bilbao that news has reached that place of the arrival of the "Noc Daqui," Captain Arteli, at Havana, where she succeeded in landing 1,010 slaves.

From the date of the "Noc Daqui's" arrival at Havana, it would appear that her ostensible voyage from Bordeaux to Vera Cruz with stores for the French Government was a blind to cover her real intentions, as it seems almost impossible that she could have gone to that port, from thence to the African coast, and then to Havana, within the period between her leaving Bordeaux and arriving at her ultimate destination.

There can be little doubt, therefore, that it was the "Noc Daqui" that succeeded in evading Her Majesty's cruisers on the African coast in October last, and subsequently landed her slaves at Cuba.

It is thus evident that this is the third, if not the fourth time that this vessel has been successfully engaged in introducing slaves into Cuba; and although these facts must be as notorious to the Spanish authorities as to the British Government, it does not appear that any steps have been taken to prevent the owners of the "Noc Daqui," who are Spanish subjects and well known, from continuing to employ their vessel in this nefarious Traffic.

Her Majesty's Government have consequently instructed me to make known these facts to your Excellency, and to express their confident hope that measures will be taken for the arrest and punishment of the parties concerned in this affair.

I avail, &c.

Sir J. Crampton to Earl Russell.—(Received February 7.)

My Lord,

Madrid, January 28, 1863.

I TOOK the earliest opportunity of bringing the subject of the Cuban Slave Trade under the attention of the Duke de la Torre.

I remarked that Her Majesty's Government had learned, with satisfaction, by late reports from the Havana, that his Excellency, by certain acts of summary punishment of persons in authority who had betrayed their duty in this respect, had evinced, when Captain-General of Cuba, a sincere desire to put an end to the Slave Trade in that island; and had, moreover, in a conversation with Mr. Acting Consul-General Crawford, expressed opinions, in the soundness of which Her Majesty's Government concurred, as to the means by which only that cruel abuse could be finally extirpated.

I observed that I had lately conversed with Marshal O'Donnell upon this subject, who had promised that on his (the Duke de la Torre's) arrival in Spain, Her Catholic Majesty's Government would consult with him with a disposition to adopt any recommendation which he might make as to efficacious measures for extinguishing Slave Trade in Cuba.

I added that it was a matter of peculiar satisfaction to me to enter upon this subject with his Excellency now that he was in a position in which his views and recommendations in regard to this matter—always, no doubt, valuable in the counsels of Her Catholic Majesty's Government—would carry with them the greatest possible weight and authority.

The Duke de la Torre's reply to these observations was very satisfactory. His Excellency in no way receded from the opinions which he expressed to Mr. Crawford. He said that he had frequently recommended that the Slave Trade should be declared piracy; and that he still held that opinion. He acknowledged that considerable changes in the organization and practice of the Tribunals in Cuba were essential; and he added, with much frankness, the expression of his firm belief that, if proper measures were adopted, there would be little difficulty in putting a final stop to the Slave Trade in Cuba; admitting, in reference to a remark of mine to that effect, that the Brazilian Government had been perfectly successful in suppressing it under circumstances still more unfavourable.

I concluded our conversation by expressing my earnest hope that his Excellency's advice would be concurred in by his colleagues in the Cabinet, and by remarking that I knew of no question, the honourable close of which would tend more to smooth down on the part of the Government and people of Great Britain a certain asperity of feeling, which was kept alive by a constant recurrence to the well-grounded complaint that the solemn obligations of a Treaty with Spain were continually violated in the sole interest of a system which was now held in universal abhorrence by civilized nations.

Sir J. Crampton to Earl Russell.—(Received February 18.)

My Lord,

Madrid, February 14, 1863.

I HAD the honour in my despatch of the 4th instant to inclose the Report in Spanish of a debate in the Spanish Cortes on the subject of the Italian question, in the course of which Señor Valera made some observations regarding the Slave Trade, which were responded to by the Duke de la Torre.

I have now the honour to inclose a translation of those passages.

Your Lordship will perceive that, in answer to Señor Valera's complaint that the commerce of Spain in Africa suffered in consequence of the Treaty of 1834 with England, and to his remark that it could not be successfully prosecuted until this Treaty was abrogated, the Duke de la Torre observed that the true way in which any inconveniences which resulted from the Treaty in question could be practically obviated would be by the final extirpation of the Slave Trade; and his Excellency added that the Spanish Government had determined to put down this iniquity by the adoption of the most energetic measures.

I took an opportunity of expressing to the Duke de la Torre my gratification at this announcement, when his Excellency renewed to me in decided terms the expression of his opinion that this object could be effected by the measures which the Spanish Government had determined to adopt.

I have, &c.

Extract from the Speeches of Señor Valera and the Duke de la Torre, reported in the "Diario de las Sesiones de Cortes" of February 3, 1863.

(Translation.)

Señor Valera.—In regard to the question of the coasts of Africa, I am not surprised that Spanish vessels which have been seized do not go for redress to the Court of Havana or of Sierra Leone, because the shipowners and masters, seeing that if a vessel was seized, by the time the trial finished her hull was already rotten, her cargo damaged, and everything ruined, must have withdrawn from this Traffic; and I beg General Serrano to believe me, when I state that so long as the Treaty of 1834 upon the Slave Trade is not revised, it will be impossible for Spain to carry on any sort of trade with the African coasts.

The Minister of State (the Duke de la Torre).—I shall begin by stating, that in respect to the Treaty with England upon the Slave Trade, the present Government propose to annul it in the most efficacious manner, that is to say, by putting an end to this Traffic; for which purpose they intend to employ every means suggested by the wish to attain the object aimed at. The moment the Slave Trade ceases to exist the Treaty is brought to an end. It may continue to exist de jure, but de facto it will be annulled, because there will then be nothing to treat upon; and when the Government shall have entirely put an end to the Slave Trade, they will then negotiate with England that the Treaty may cease as unnecessary. If the impatient gentlemen of the Opposition have not understood this, they must learn that the Minister (who is addressing the House) meant and explained that when the Slave Trade comes to an end, they will then take steps to put an end to the Treaty, for England will not be able to reject this natural and legitimate claim of right on the part of Spain. To this end it is necessary that the Slave Trade should be brought to a termination; that we should all unite our efforts to get rid of this iniquity, which can no longer be tolerated; and that the dealers in slaves should convince themselves that it is necessary to entertain humane and patriotic sentiments rather than to make money. I think the Government are very explicit upon this subject.

WITH reference to Sir J. Señor Calderon Collantes, in his note to Sir J. Crampton of the 12th of July last, assumes that the only evidence that the "Buenaventura Cubano" was engaged in the Slave Trade is founded on the testimony of the Chief of one of the native tribes; but the Spanish Minister is mistaken on this point, as will be seen by the declaration, of which a copy accompanies the Admiralty letter, made on oath before the Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court at Sierra Leone by Lieutenant Martin, the officer belonging to Her Majesty's ship "Torch," who boarded the Spanish schooner.

That officer deposes that on boarding the "Buenaventura Cubano" he found on examination:—

1st. Seventeen large water-casks in her hold capable of containing 130 gallons each, being a larger quantity than was requisite for the crew of the vessel; a quantity of wooden spoons, such as are generally found in slave-vessels, and four large boilers capable of cooking for a great number of persons.

2ndly. A sufficient quantity of plank for laying a second or slave-deck, necessary tubs usually seen in slave-vessels, and a large quantity of firewood.

My Lord Marquis,

Madrid, May 2, 1863.

FROM information which has reached Her Britannic Majesty's Government from various sources, there can be little doubt that several vessels have, within the last few months, being fitted out at Cadiz for the Slave Trade, under circumstances which lead to the inference that the authorities of that port could not have been ignorant of the destination of those vessels, and I have accordingly been instructed by Earl Russell, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to call your Excellency's attention to the case which I am about to state of the "Island Queen" or "Josephine," and to request that inquiries may be instituted with the view to ascertain how it happened that this vessel was allowed to equip for the Slave Trade, and to leave Cadiz in the open manner in which she appears to have sailed from that port.

The above-mentioned vessel was captured on the 28th of December last by Her Majesty's ship "Wrangler," in latitude $14^{\circ} 37'$, longitude $9^{\circ} 19'$ east.

It has been represented to Her Majesty's Government that the "Island Queen" was fitted out in the United States or Havana in March 1862, with United States' colours and papers, and was commanded by R. Ducham, a noted slave captain. The vessel proceeded to Cardiff or Swansea, and there took in a cargo of coals for Cadiz. Arrived at that place she discharged all her coals except a few tons sufficient for another trip, and she remained at anchor in Cadiz Bay to fit for slaving.

Before fitting for the coast of Africa, she is said to have changed ownership, and to have taken out Spanish papers under the name of the "Josephine." Two brothers, said to be Portuguese, named Botelho, made no secret of being part-owners: one of them took a passage out in the slave-vessel, and the other in the Portuguese mail-steamer (said to be the "Estafania"), to St. Paul de Loanda, carrying out the purchase-money for the slaves.

A nephew of theirs (a Portuguese youth named Teixeira Souza) took a passage in the ship, being about to enter a merchant's house in Havana. Twenty thousand dollars were given to the American owners for the ship.

She received during her stay at Cadiz a new captain (a Portuguese named Luis Fonseca), and a Portuguese and Spanish crew.

The Spanish authorities appear to have put no difficulty in the way of her preparations for a slave voyage, and to have visited her after she had received all her slave equipments.

The shipping agent, who engaged the crew, did so undisguisedly for the Slave Trade; and the agreement was made that should the voyage be successful, each seaman should receive 400 dollars, but that if they should be captured they should receive nothing.

Rice, beans, fish, biscuit, slave medicines, wooden spoons, tin-dishes, &c., were received at Cadiz in sufficient quantity to last about 1,000 slaves from Africa to Cuba, and she actually got in 300 pipes of fresh water, plank for her slave-deck, very large quantities of fire-wood, and her slave-coppers for cooking. Before leaving she was supplied with four ensigns, Spanish, American, French, and Dutch.

On the 21st of September she left Cadiz, and without touching anywhere, arrived on the 26th November off Almeida Grande, near Esquimina Bay, where she landed her part-owner and supercargo, Botelho, and communicated with her consignee, from whom directions were received to cruize at sea until the 4th of January, and then to return to Almeida Grande, where she would receive directions about her slaves, which were to be ready by that date.

Her first mate was a Spaniard named Domingo Raceira. He had been in the Spanish Navy, and held a commission from the Queen of Spain as a "pilote."

No. 143.

Mr. Edwardes to Earl Russell.—(Received July 25.)

My Lord,

San Ildefonso, July 20, 1863.

IMMEDIATELY upon my arrival here I waited upon the Marquis of Miraflores, and alluded to the substance of your Lordship's despatch of the 9th instant.

His Excellency again repeated to me that so long as General Dulce remained in Cuba your Lordship might rest assured that everything would be done to put an end to the Slave Trade. I then expressed the hope that General Dulce would, in his laudable exertions, meet with every assistance at the hands of the home authorities, and the Marquis of Miraflores said that he most undoubtedly would, for they were determined to stop the nefarious Traffic.

In conformity with your Lordship's instructions I next urged his Excellency to consent to recommend to the Cortes a new law, declaring the Slave Trade piracy, and making the possession of newly imported negroes, or the retaining them in slavery, punishable with fine and imprisonment.

The Marquis of Miraflores said that he could not at that moment give me an official answer to so important a request; that it must be submitted to the Council of Ministers: but he told me he would take the subject into his consideration, adding that I might state to your Lordship that you may rely upon his doing all he possibly could to meet your wishes.

Before I left Madrid, and previously to the receipt of your Lordship's despatch above referred to, I had a conversation with a person in a high official position upon the Slave Trade, in the course of which I said I hoped that General Dulce would meet with every support from the Home Government, to which he replied, "He certainly will do so; he is doing much, but we mean to do more if possible: but we have great prejudices to combat on the part of the Cuban proprietors, and we cannot do it all at once. I myself do not agree with them that the Slave Trade is necessary to their existence. To do away with slavery in Cuba at the present moment is an impossibility; we might as well abandon the island; but there are now 60 negresses to every 100 negroes, and that ought to suffice to put an end to the trade."

With regard to two persons expelled from Cuba, it is most true that they have been for some time past in Madrid; they are very wealthy, and are making every endeavour to obtain permission to go back to Cuba; they are known to be two persons of very bad characters, and the gentleman to whom I have referred assured me they had been told that when General Dulce wished to have them in the island, they would be allowed to return, but not before.

I have heard the same in other quarters.

Sir,

Foreign Office, July 28, 1863.

I TRANSMIT herewith, for your information, copies of a correspondence which has passed between M. Comyn, the Spanish Minister at this Court, and myself, arising out of the proceedings of Commander Robeck, of Her Majesty's ship "Myrmidon," in the River Pongo in the year 1856, in destroying a factory and burning a schooner belonging to a Spanish subject named José Berriz.

Inclosure 1 in No. 144.

Señor Comyn to Earl Russell.

(Translation.)

My Lord,

Spanish Legation, London, June 22, 1863.

I HAVE to make known to your Excellency, by order of my Government, a circumstance which occurred some time ago, to which the Legation under my charge has not hitherto called your Excellency's attention, having waited for detailed and complete reports of all the incidents appertaining thereto; but which, nevertheless, is worthy of the serious consideration of Her Majesty's Government, and makes it its duty to demand, at all times, a due reparation from those who were the authors of it.

It appears, from the official as well as private documents received by my Government, that, on the 19th of May, 1856, Commander Robeck, of Her Britannic Majesty's steamer "Myrmidon," entered the Bay of Tintimar, and, without any previous dispute, explanation, pretext, or intimation whatever, gave orders to reduce to ashes the factory which a Spanish subject named Don José Berriz had established, by dint of troubles and labours, on the Rio Pongo,—gave everything that appertained to it to the natives of the country, and afterwards ordered them, with the help of the crew of the steamer "Myrmidon," to proceed to burn also the schooner "Julia," the property of the same Berriz; all which was strictly effected, not leaving to this unfortunate man any more property than the clothes he had on.

This act, which might well be ascribed to mental aberration, constitutes, as your Excellency will understand, an incomprehensible abuse of force, on the one hand, and a violation, on the other hand, of the Convention of 1835, which only authorizes the Commanders of war-ships to search, detain, and bring before the Mixed Tribunals the ships which may be occupied, or which are suspected of being occupied in the Slave Trade; but never, and under no point of view, to take the law into their own hands, nor to destroy houses ("fincas"), or dispose of property belonging to subjects of the other Power.

If the suspicions were certain, although the contrary is shown to be the case, that Don José Berriz was occupied in that hateful Traffic, it was the duty of the English Commander to take the ship before the Mixed Tribunal of Sierra Leone, and not to destroy her himself without bringing his case forward, and in opposition to the provisions of the Convention, thus annihilating the material proofs which might have been brought before the Court in contradiction to his assertion.

My Lord, I hope from your Excellency's justice that, on a full investigation of the facts, you will entirely disapprove the conduct of Commander Robeck as illegal and arbitrary, and that you will do what is expedient, as well for giving effect in this case to the provisions of Article IX of the Convention, as also for granting a just indemnification for the serious injuries which have been suffered.

Inclosure 2 in No. 144.

Earl Russell to Señor Comyn.

M. le Ministre,

Foreign Office, July 23, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that you have been instructed to bring to the notice of Her Majesty's Government a circumstance which occurred in the River Pongo in the year 1856, when Commander Robeck, of Her Majesty's ship "Myrmidon," is represented to have entered the Bay of Tintimar, and without any previous dispute, explanation, pretext, or intimation, to have given orders for the destruction of a factory belonging to a Spanish subject named José Berriz, and then to have proceeded, with the assistance of the natives, to burn the schooner "Julia," belonging to the said Berriz.

You also express the hope that on a full investigation of the facts of this case Her Majesty's Government will disapprove the conduct of Commander Robeck, and will grant an indemnity to Señor Berriz for the losses he has sustained.

I beg leave, in reply, to state that Her Majesty's Government would on this, as on all occasions, be most willing to make reparation for any wrongs which it might be proved that the subjects of Her Catholic Majesty had suffered at the hands of the Commanders of British cruisers employed in the suppression of the Slave Trade.

It appears, however, from a letter received in this Department in the month of June 1856, reporting Commander Robeck's proceedings in the River Pongo on the occasion referred to in your letter, that that officer on his arrival at the town of Tintimar, in May 1856, found there a schooner without colours, papers, or other proofs of nationality, and learnt on inquiry that she belonged to a person engaged in the Slave Trade named José Berriz, who was stated to be waiting for an opportunity to convey his slaves to Bissam, from whence they were to be shipped to Cuba. He thereupon caused the vessel to be destroyed.

Commander Robeck having been further informed that the said Berriz possessed a large barracoon capable of holding between 500 and 600 slaves, at a place well concealed about three miles inland, proceeded at the request of the Native Chiefs, and with their assistance, to destroy the barracoon in question.

Berriz having, however, received information of Commander Robeck's intended visit, removed his casks, cooking apparatus, &c., and sent his slaves up the country six days before the intended attack.

If Señor Berriz had been engaged in honest and legitimate trade, there could have been no reason why he should not have remained at Tintimar, and have claimed for his property the protection of the Spanish flag, which would most assuredly have been respected by the English Commander.

Instead of doing so, however, he abandoned his property, leaving no trace of the nationality of his vessel, and fled with his slaves into the bush; thus, by his conduct, confirming the information furnished to Commander Robeck as to the guilty nature of the transactions in which he was engaged.

Her Majesty's Government saw no reason at the time to disapprove the proceedings of the Commander of the "Myrmidon," who in acting as he did in this affair only gave effect to the stipulations of the Treaty existing between Her Majesty's Government and the Chiefs of the Pongas country for the suppression of the Slave Trade.

Seven years have elapsed since those proceedings occurred. During that period they have not in any way been called in question by the Spanish Government, and at this distance of time Her Majesty's Government would not feel themselves justified in opening a discussion upon a case which has so long been allowed to lie dormant, and which has reference to property unprovided at the time of its destruction with any proof of Spanish nationality.

If the Spanish Government will impress upon the subjects of Her Catholic Majesty the guilt of engaging in a Traffic prohibited by Treaties as well as by religious obligations and natural law, such complaints as the present will not arise.

Her Majesty's Government have to lament the continued violation of Treaty on the part of the subjects of Spain, as shown by the eagerness of planters in Cuba to purchase men of African origin, for the purpose of holding them in slavery. This crime ought to be punished by the Spanish laws.

Sir,

Foreign Office, July 31, 1863.

I TRANSMIT to you herewith a copy of a letter addressed to the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade by Walter Ridley, a coloured British subject, and a certificated mate on board a British ship engaged in the Cuban trade, praying for the protection of Her Majesty's Government against the operation of the Cuban laws. By these laws, as now enforced, the master of a British merchant-ship on board whose vessel there may be a coloured British seaman is compelled, on entering a Cuban port, to give bond for the sum of 1,000 dollars that such coloured seaman shall, during the stay of the vessel in port, have no communication with the shore, and failing to give this bond the seaman is put into prison until the departure of the vessel.

You will see that Ridley states that he himself, on his last voyage as an apprentice to St. Jago de Cuba, was put into prison for safe keeping.

The effect of this Law is virtually to shut out from the Cuban trade a large class of industrious British subjects who are peculiarly fitted for the manning of vessels engaged in the trade of that island; or if, as in the case of Ridley, an apprentice is compelled to go with his ship to a Cuban port, and the master, from whatever reason, does not enter into the required bond, the seaman is sent to prison, and is thus subjected to punishment without having been guilty of any offence.

I have to instruct you to take an opportunity of calling the attention of the Marquis de Miraflores to the hardship and injustice of the Cuban laws affecting British coloured subjects, and you will point out to his Excellency that it would be consistent with the liberal and enlightened principles professed by the Spanish Government if laws so much in opposition to them were repealed.

There may have been some excuse for the enactment of stringent Regulations against the appearance of free blacks in the ports of the Spanish possessions in the West Indies at the time when the emancipation of the negroes in the British possessions caused some excitement among the coloured population in those seas, but any uneasiness arising from this event must have long since passed away.

You will also remind the Spanish Minister that, in the eyes of the British Government, there is no distinction between the white and coloured subjects of Her Majesty, and that Her Majesty's Government are bound to see that the rights secured by Treaty to the one are enjoyed equally by the other.

Walter Ridley to the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade.

My Lords,

5, Fynone Street, Swansea, June 29, 1863.

I, WALTER BRANDON RIDLEY, born in the Island of Jamaica (Kingston), and having previously passed an ordinary examination at Bristol as only mate on the 16th day of December, 1862, which certificate is No. 27,258, and have made a voyage to the Island of Barbadoes as mate of the brig "Osborn and Elizabeth," of Faversham, from which vessel I was discharged with due testimonials for the purpose of resuming a berth in the copper-ore trade.

I now humbly request the aid of my Lords' influential powers in granting this your humble servant a protection against the uncalled-for law of the Island of Cuba, more especially in the port of St. Jago de Cuba, which port is entirely shut against me, although I had made five voyages thereto during my apprenticeship, and in the last I was actually cruelly put in prison as if I had committed any crime, whereas the result was, that I was put in for safe keeping, also that I may not ertice their slaves to run away.

Now, my Lords, see you into this state of unlawful punishment I, as a British subject, went through innocently during my apprenticeship in December 1860, and now that I have thus passed your examination as an officer in the merchant service, seeking a livelihood in your British merchantmen, that berths should be denied me in consequence of such abominable laws. I was denied a berth by Harrison, master of the barque "Cobrero," of London, on the St. Jago trade, he protesting of being answerable for the sum of 1,000 dollars as a bond for all coloured men when they go there.

My Lords, whenever I go there I never interest myself with the Spaniards nor their slaves ; I always look to my own duties and no other.

Now, my Lords, with a feeling of humanity for a servant in your service, whose petition is now sent in to ask for a protection, as a faithful British subject, that I may get a living in the Cuban trade when berths are filled up in any other.

I must state that I was taken from the British barque "Countess of Bective" in the time aforesaid (December 1860) before the sails were furled, and kept in prison at the disposal of Pedro Ferer Landa, of St. Jago de Cuba ; after addressing him two letters I was let out, and went on board my ship the best way I could.

In conclusion, my Lords will pardon my troubling them with directing the said protection, if my Lords will grant it, to the shipping master at Swansea, for which your humble servant will ever be in duty bound to acknowledge your Lordships' kindness.

Mr. Edwardes to Earl Russell.—(Received August 23.)

My Lord,

San Ildefonso, August 17, 1863.

IN conformity with the instructions contained in your Lordship's despatch of the 31st of July, I availed myself of an opportunity of calling the attention of the Marquis of Miraflores to the present state of the Cuban laws affecting British coloured seamen on board British merchant-ships entering a Cuban port ; and I pointed out to his Excellency that it would be consistent with the liberal and enlightened principles professed by the Spanish Government if laws so much in opposition to them were repealed.

After listening to me, his Excellency said that the case, as I had pointed it out, appeared to him to be a hard one ; but any decision upon it did not depend upon him alone, and he requested me to draw up a Memorandum upon the subject in order that he might forward it to the Minister of the Colonies with a strong recommendation that he would take it into his favourable consideration.

I acceded to the request of the Marquis of Miraflores by embodying your Lordship's despatch in a Memorandum, a copy of which I have the honour to inclose.

I HAVE been instructed to call the attention of the Marquis of Miraflores to the hardship and injustice of some of the Cuban laws as affecting British coloured subjects ; and at the same time to point out to his Excellency that it would be consistent with the liberal and enlightened principles professed by the Spanish Government if laws so much in opposition to them were repealed.

By these laws, as now enforced, the master of a British merchant-ship, on board of whose vessel there may be a coloured British seaman, is compelled, on entering a Cuban port, to give a bond for the sum of 1,000 dollars that such coloured seamen shall, during the stay of the vessel in port, have no communication with the shore, and, failing to give this bond, the seaman is put into prison until the departure of the vessel.

The effect of this law is virtually to shut out from the Cuban trade a large class of industrious British subjects who are peculiarly fitted for the manning of vessels engaged in the trade of that island ; or if an apprentice is compelled to go with his ship to a Cuban port, and the master, from whatever reason, does not enter into the required bond, the seaman is sent to prison, and is thus subjected to punishment without having been guilty of any offence.

There may have been some excuse for the enactment of stringent regulations against the appearance of free blacks in the ports of the Spanish possessions in the West Indies at the time when the emancipation of the negroes in the British possessions caused some excitement among the coloured population in those seas ; but any uneasiness arising from this event must have long since passed away.

I have been further instructed to remind the Marquis of Miraflores that, in the eyes of the British Government, there is no distinction between the white and coloured subjects of Her Majesty ; and that Her Majesty's Government are bound to see that the rights secured by Treaty to the one are enjoyed equally by the other.

My Lord,

San Ildefonso, August 27, 1863.

WITH reference to my despatch of April 8, 1863, I have the honour to transmit the translation of a note which I have received from the Marquis of Miraflores, regarding the case of the "Buenaventura Cubano," from which your Lordship will perceive that his Excellency states that after what was said by M. Calderon Collantes to Sir John Crampton in his note of the 12th of July last year, the Spanish Government does not see the necessity of discussing the matter with Her Britannic Majesty's Government.

Sir,

San Ildefonso, August 20, 1863.

I RECEIVED in due course the note which you were so good as to address to me on the 2nd of May last, inclosing the declaration made by the Lieutenant of the "Torch," who seized and burned the Spanish vessel "Buenaventura Cubano."

The Government of the Queen, as my predecessor Don Saturnino Calderon Collantes stated at length to Sir J. Crampton, under date of the 12th of July of last year, does not see the necessity of discussing this subject with the English Government.

You are aware that the circumstance to which Her Britannic Majesty's Government refers was subsequent to what took place with the Government of Monrovia, who, by capturing a Spanish vessel, which was performing her voyage with entire regularity, committed an act which they were in no manner bound to commit, inasmuch as there exists no Treaty authorizing the Republic of Liberia to exercise the right of visit in regard to Spanish vessels, even if suspicion should fall upon the latter of being employed in the Slave Trade.

This is all which it is in my power to state to you upon the subject, after what was observed to the Legation of which you are temporarily in charge, in the note which I have already mentioned.

No. 148.

Earl Russell to Mr. Edwardes.

(Extract.)

Foreign Office, September 1, 1863.

IN Mr. Acting Consul-General Crawford's despatch of the 6th of July, a copy of which was transmitted to you in my despatch of the 11th ultimo, mention is made of a slave-vessel having called off Camarioca, on the Cuban coast, and transferred her cargo of negroes to coasting craft, one of which landed 60 negroes at the mouth of the River Canimar, in the Bay of Matanzas.

According to the information received by Her Majesty's Government, this system of transferring slaves from the vessels on board which they arrive from Africa to small coasting vessels is very generally practised now on the Cuban coast.

Sometimes there is a preconcerted rendezvous appointed at one of the small uninhabited cays off Cuba; at other times the slaver runs in sufficiently near the coast to communicate by boat with the shore, when arrangements are made at sea for transferring the slaves to coasting craft, by which they are distributed at different small ports along the coast, open only to Spanish coasting vessels:

The recent complaints on the part of the Cuban authorities that British cruizers are in the habit of anchoring in Spanish waters, and of entering Cuban ports that are not open to foreign vessels, may probably, therefore, be traced to the fears of interested parties that if British cruizers are allowed to continue this practice they may materially interfere with the plans now adopted for landing slaves.

There is another motive, moreover, which doubtless has hitherto had considerable weight in influencing Cuban authorities to throw all the obstacles possible in the way of British cruisers making captures of slaves on the Cuban coast. It is this: when slaves are captured by British cruisers, the negroes are sent to Jamaica and manumitted, and their labour is of course lost to the Cuban planters; but if they are captured by Spanish authorities, the labour of the negroes is still retained in the Island, the only difference being that instead of the slaves remaining in the hands of the parties who planned the adventure, they are called emancipados, and are hired out by the Spanish authorities to favoured planters.

Her Majesty's Government trust, therefore, that the Spanish Government will allow British cruisers engaged in the suppression of the Slave Trade to anchor in Spanish waters off the Cuban coast.

Her Majesty's Government are the more inclined to hope that this permission will be granted, as the maintenance of an anti-Slave Trade policy by General Dulce is highly honourable to the character for good faith and honour of the Government of Her Catholic Majesty.

Earl Russell to Sir J. Crampton.

Sir,

Foreign Office, November 12, 1863.

I TRANSMIT herewith, for your information, copies of a despatch and its inclosures from the Acting British Commissary Judge at the Havana,* containing a Report upon the Cuban Slave Trade for the twelve months ending the 30th of September last.

This Report, Her Majesty's Government rejoice to find, shows that there has been a very considerable decrease in the number of slaves introduced into Cuba during the past year, and it is satisfactory to know that this is owing to the determination evinced by Captain-General Dulce to carry out the engagements of the Spanish Crown for the suppression of the Slave Trade.

Mr. Crawford reports, however, that so great are the temptations and inducements to introduce slaves into Cuba, that the Trade cannot be entirely suppressed unless very strong measures are sanctioned by the Government of Madrid, such as declaring the Slave Trade piracy, or by revoking the 9th Article of the Penal Law, which in its present state only acts as a protection to the slave-trader.

I have to instruct you to take an opportunity of making known to the Spanish Minister the tenour of Mr. Crawford's Report, and while expressing the gratification of Her Majesty's Government at the diminution of the Cuban Slave Traffic and the amelioration in the treatment of the slaves in that Island, you will at the same time urge the Government of Her Catholic Majesty to strengthen the hands of the present Captain-General, and thus to enable that officer, who does not lack the will, to put a stop at once and for ever to the importation of slaves into Cuba.

I HAVE the honour to inclose herewith the copy of a note which, in conformity with your Lordship's instructions contained in your despatch of the 27th of October, I addressed to the Marquis of Miraflores respecting the treatment to which negroes called "emancipados" are subjected in the Island of Cuba, as well as the translation of his Excellency's reply to that communication.

M. le Ministre,

Madrid, November 6, 1863.

IN connection with the subject of African Slave Trade which, in despite of the efforts of the Spanish Government to prevent it, is still carried on with deplorable success in the Island of Cuba, the attention of Her Majesty's Government has lately been called to the condition of those negroes called emancipados, or those who have been taken by the Spanish authorities from captured slave-vessels, or seized within the island, into which they have been illegally imported.

It would appear from the reports which have reached Her Majesty's Government that this unfortunate class of persons, although in the eye of the Spanish law they cannot be regarded otherwise than as free men, are, under the regulations now in force and in consequence of gross evasions of the law, subjected to a treatment which practically keeps them in a condition little differing from actual slavery, and the hardships of which in many instances are as great as, if not greater than, those which slaves are obliged to endure.

Her Majesty's Government, convinced that it could never enter into the designs of the Government of Her Catholic Majesty that this unfortunate class of persons who have been rescued by the Spanish authorities themselves from slavery should be allowed to revert to a position so nearly equivalent to it, have instructed me to bring this matter under your Excellency's serious consideration, and earnestly to recommend to Her Catholic Majesty's Government the adoption of measures calculated to remedy so great an abuse.

No. 154.

Sir J. Crampton to Earl Russell.—(Received December 22.)

My Lord,

Madrid, December 16, 1863.

IN conformity with the instructions contained in your Lordship's despatch of the 12th ultimo, I did not fail to express to the Marquis de Miraflores the gratification of Her Majesty's Government at the diminution of the Slave Trade and the amelioration in the treatment of slaves in Cuba, reported by Her Majesty's Acting Consul-General in his despatch to your Lordship of the 30th September.

I said that it was satisfactory to know that these improvements resulted from the determination of the present Captain-General; and on the Marquis de Miraflores replying that General Dulce, by the manner in which he had acted, had faithfully carried out the wishes of Her Catholic Majesty's Government, I observed that such being the case, I could feel no doubt that his Excellency would take into serious consideration two measures which it appeared to Her Majesty's Government, and indeed to all persons acquainted with the subject, were wanting to enable that officer, who does not lack the will, to put a stop at once to the importation of slaves into Cuba, and to realize a wish which his Excellency had so often concurred with me in expressing, that the serious and painful question which was continually recurring between the two Governments in regard to this matter should be for ever set at rest.

The two measures I alluded to were, I said:—

1st. An enactment declaring the Slave Trade to be piracy.

2nd. The modification of the Penal Code in force in Cuba, and particularly of the 9th and 13th Articles.

CLASS B.

. U

With respect to the first of these measures, I observed that its efficacy had been shown in the case of Brazil, and no reasonable objection had ever been alleged against it by the Spanish Government.

With respect the second, the 9th and 13th Articles of the Code acted as a protection to the slave-traders, and defeated the intention of the law and the well-intended efforts of the Spanish superior authorities. The Marquis of Miraflores promised that he would take these matters into his consideration, and assured me that goodwill on his part would not be found wanting to do all that was possible to put an end to the Slave Trade.

As I had referred to particular Articles of the Penal Code, he requested me to address him a note in which they should be particularized, in order that he might be able at once to direct his attention to the points to which Her Majesty's Government alluded.

I have consequently, in the note of which I have the honour to inclose a copy, pointed out to the Marquis de Miraflores the effect of the 9th and 13th Articles of the Code, which are clearly stated in Mr. Crawford's report of September 30, 1861, inclosed in your Lordship's despatch of November 12 of that year.

I have, &c.

(Signed) JOHN F. CRAMPTON.

Inclosure in No. 154.

Sir J. Crampton to the Marquis of Miraflores.

M. le Ministre,

Madrid, December 16, 1863.

IN conformity with the wish expressed by your Excellency in the conversation which I had the honour of holding with you on the 14th instant upon the subject of the Slave Trade in the Island of Cuba, I proceed to particularize in writing those measures to which I alluded as being, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, calculated to put a final stop to that deplorable Traffic; the adoption of which measures I am instructed to press upon Her Catholic Majesty's Government.

As I had the honour of stating to your Excellency, the Government of the Queen my Mistress have learned with extreme satisfaction, from the official Reports of Her Majesty's Consul at Havana, that a considerable diminution in the number of negroes illegally imported into Cuba within the year ended the 5th of last September has taken place as compared with former years, and also that a well-judged amelioration in the treatment of those legally held in slavery there has been encouraged by the authorities of Her Catholic Majesty; a measure, as Her Majesty's Consul remarks, which has happily combined a regard for humanity and a sensible increase in the productiveness of the plantations in which it has been adopted.

Her Majesty's Government have pleasure in recognizing the good will and activity displayed by the present Captain-General of Cuba, as well as the measure of his success in checking the Slave Trade. It appears, however, that such are the temptations to unprincipled individuals to introduce slaves into Cuba, and such the facilities still afforded to them by the defects in certain parts of the Spanish laws regarding the subject, that without some modifications in these, his well-meant efforts must continue to fall short of their intended object.

The measures to which Her Majesty's Government would call your Excellency's attention are—

1st. An enactment declaring Slave Trade to be piracy.

This is a measure which has been adopted by many nations, including those possessing large numbers of slaves. Its success has been signal in checking the Slave Trade in countries where it most prevailed. It has mainly contributed to free Brazil from the stigma attaching to this inhuman Traffic, and that without any injury to her productiveness or material prosperity. Her Majesty's Government are not aware of any sound argument which can be alleged against this measure.

2nd. A modification of the 9th and 13th Articles of the Spanish Penal Code in force in the Island of Cuba.

According to the former of these Articles the authorities cannot seize imported negroes when once they have been conveyed to a property or plantation, however notorious the fact of such violation of the law having been committed may be.

According to the latter, the legal punishment of slave-traders and their accomplices can only be inflicted in virtue of a sentence by the Royal Audiencia Pretorial. Now it is well known that the difficulty of producing evidence before this Court is so great that proof to convict those accused of such charges is seldom if ever obtained, however morally convinced the ruling authorities may be of their guilt. It is true that the Captain-General has power to remove officers of whose delinquency he feels certain, and it is true that the present Captain-General Dulce, his predecessor the Duke de la Torre, and others, have exercised this power in regard to certain flagrant cases. But how much more effective, as regards public opinion, how much more satisfactory to Her Catholic Majesty's Government would it be that such punishment and degradation should result from a legal conviction rather than from the exercise of discretionary power?

I believe that in stating that the experience of the Duke de la Torre, as well as that of General Dulce, have caused them to coincide in the opinion that the adoption of both the measures to which I have above adverted would be expedient and necessary for the final extirpation of the Slave Trade in Cuba, I am not overstepping the truth. In bringing, however, these measures under your Excellency's attention, I feel confident that they will be submitted to the enlightened examination due to the intrinsic merits of the great end they are meant to forward, and also with the most friendly disposition on your Excellency's part to set at rest for ever a serious and painful matter of discussion between the Governments of Great Britain and Spain.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 16th instant, I have the honour to inclose translation of a note which I have received from the Marquis de Miraflores, stating that my note on the subject of the Cuban Slave Trade had been sent to the Colonial Department.

My Lord,

Bilbao, January 5, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship that the Spanish steamer "Noc Daqui," Captain Arteti, arrived at Havana on the 28th of November last, where she landed 1,010 slaves.

The information, therefore, which I had the honour to convey to your Lordship in my despatches of September 12 and of October 9 last, respecting this vessel, proves to be correct.

From the date of the "Noc Daqui's" arrival at Havana, it would appear, as I suspected, that the ostensible voyage from Bordeaux to Vera Cruz, with stores for the French Government, was a blind to cover her real intentions, as it seems almost impossible that she could have gone to that port, from thence to the African coast, and then to Havana, within the period between her leaving Bordeaux and arriving at her ultimate destination.

I am also informed that two of Her Majesty's cruisers captured another Spanish slaver at the very time that the "Noc Daqui" was completing her nefarious transaction.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that the American brig "Souther," 197 tons, which arrived in this harbour on the 31st of December last with a cargo of staves from New Orleans, sailed the day before yesterday in ballast, nominally for St. Thomas, but in reality for the coast of Africa for slaves.

She is an old vessel, is painted black, and is commanded by H. Phinney.

The American brig "Huntress" is still in this bay.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Lordship that the Spanish ship "America," 602 tons, Manuel Bisquert, master, sailed from this port on the 24th instant, with a cargo of rice, nominally for Buenos Ayres, but in reality for the coast of Africa. She had on board boilers for a steam-mill which I understand is to be erected at Zanzibar for grinding rice.

The American brig "Huntress" is still in the harbour.

Foreign Office, March 26, 1863.

I AM directed by Earl Russell to transmit to you the accompanying copy of a letter from Commander Beamish,* of Her Majesty's ship "Wrangler," reporting the circumstances under which he captured a ship fully equipped for the Slave Trade off the African coast, on the 28th of December last.

This vessel was formerly the "Island Queen," of Washington, but you will see that she is stated to have changed ownership at Cadiz, where she was fully equipped for the Slave Trade, and furnished with Spanish papers under the name of the "Josephine." The crew are stated, moreover, to have been engaged undisguisedly for the Slave Trade, and the Spanish authorities appear to have visited this vessel after she had all her slave-equipments on board, and to have placed no difficulty in the way of her sailing, although there could have been little doubt as to the nature of the voyage in which she was about to be engaged.

I am further to call your attention to that part of Commander Beamish's letter, in which mention is made of five other vessels, one of them a steamer, having left Cadiz to be engaged in the Slave Trade; and I am to state that whether there is any foundation for this latter statement or not, sufficient information has reached Her Majesty's Government from other sources to prove that Cadiz has now become notoriously a port of equipment for the slave-traders.

As regards the "Island Queen" or "Josephine," I am to desire that you will forward to his Lordship, through Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, a full and particular report of all the circumstances connected with this vessel and the parties interested in her.

My Lord,

Cadiz, April 22, 1863.

IN acknowledging the receipt of Mr. Murray's despatch dated March 26, transmitting to me copy of a letter from Commander Beamish of Her Majesty's ship "Wrangler," I have the honour to acquaint your Lordship that the American ship "Island Queen" was built at Providence, in the State of Rhode Island, in the year 1854; was owned and commanded by James Botelho, and hailed from Washington, Delaware County.

She arrived at this port on the 22nd of February, 1861, with coals from Cardiff, and remained here till the 20th of May, when she sailed, without paying port charges, for the coast of Africa, to be employed in the Slave Trade, as reported in my despatch dated May 29, 1861. Mr. J. J. Tunstall was then United States' Consul at this port. The "Island Queen" returned to this harbour on the 4th of May, 1862, with a cargo of coals from Leith, having touched at Corunna on her passage, and was then commanded by R. C. Denham, who discharged the crew here, and he then embarked as first mate on board of the American barque "Garibaldi," bound to the United States.

The "Island Queen" was privately sold here to Don Antonio Augusto de Oliveira Botelho, a Portuguese, who fitted her out for the Slave Trade.

A crew consisting of Spaniards and Portuguese were shipped here, and she sailed without clearing at the Custom-house, and without any name or papers, on the 21st of September, for the coast of Africa. She was reported to your Lordship by Mr. White in his despatch dated August 22, 1862. She was not visited by any Spanish authorities previous to her sailing, nor are there, that I can ascertain, either a steamer or other vessels at this moment fitting out for the coast of Africa.

The statements made by the crew are not to be relied upon. They frequently invent very plausible stories to curry favour with the captor.

I TRANSMIT to you, for your information, a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Bilbao,* stating that he has received intelligence to the effect that the Spanish steamer "Noc Daqui" landed a cargo of upwards of 1,000 slaves in Cuba on the 28th of November last.

My Lord,

Havana, December 10, 1862.

A RUMOUR having reached me that the steamer "Noc Daqui" had returned from the coast of Africa, and had landed her cargo, consisting of 1,200 Lucumi negroes, at the estate Proyecto, district of Faquayabon, in the jurisdiction of San Juan de los Remedios, on the north side of Cuba, and also that another cargo of 650 negroes had been landed at the Isle of Pines, I mentioned the subject this morning to General Serrano on the occasion of taking leave, after his Excellency had delivered up the command to General Dulce.

General Serrano informed me that the rumour in both cases was unfortunately true, and that one of his last acts as Captain-General of this island had been to remove the Lieutenant-Governors of both the jurisdictions alluded to.

The "Noc Daqui" has made three successful trips to the coast of Africa within the last twelve months, and must have realized a very large fortune for her owners.

I have no doubt that she will continue to be employed in this detestable Traffic, as her reputed owners are incorrigible slave-traders.

General Serrano embarked for Spain by the steam-transport "San Quintin," and takes with him the good wishes of the inhabitants of this Island, with whom he was very popular, having proved himself by far the most liberal and most courteous Captain-General they have yet had.

Havana, January 14, 1863.

HAVING received information that a suspicious screw-steamer was fitting out for the Slave Trade at Isla Mugerres on the coast of Yucatan, and that two small sailing-vessels had been dispatched from this port, with a crew, fittings, and money for said steamer, I requested Commander Grant, of Her Majesty's ship "Steady," to proceed to that place on the 5th instant, to verify the truth of the said information.

Commander Grant returned this morning, having succeeded in intercepting one of the vessels, on board of which was a merchant of Havana, Mr. F. P. Drain, who had a considerable sum of money with him, and who stated that he was a citizen of the Confederate States, and that having purchased a steamer at Isla Mugerres, he was proceeding to that place for the purpose of completing her equipment, and of dispatching her for Mobile, as the Confederate steamer "Virginia."

Upon Commander Grant's arrival at Isla Mugerres, he found that the United States' Admiral Wilkes had taken possession of the steamer (together with the Spanish schooner which had conveyed her new crew, her provisions, and a small quantity of cargo, consisting of clothing and shoes, and a few articles suited for the Southern States) on the plea that she was a Confederate steamer engaged in running the blockade.

Commander Grant further ascertained that the steamer was no other than the famous slaver "Noc Daqui;" that she had cleared at Bordeaux with a cargo of wine for Vera Cruz, but instead of going there, she had shipped a large cargo of slaves at the coast of Africa, and that having landed them on the south side of Cuba, she was proceeding to Vera Cruz, when something went wrong with her machinery, and she was obliged to put into Isla Mugerres for repairs. This was fully corroborated by the slave-deck, which was still on board, and by a large quantity of wine, which was also found in the hold.

Under these circumstances, and there being nothing to criminate Mr. Drain, Commander Grant released him, and returned to this port.

The "Noc Daqui" was owned by D. Julian Zulueta, and other incorrigible slave-traders of this place and of Matanzas; and from all I have been able to gather respecting Mr. Drain's statement, I believe it to be true in the main, and I have been assured that the vessel was really bound for Mobile for the purpose of obtaining new papers there; but I cannot help thinking that Mr. Drain was only acting as agent for his intimate friend M. Zulueta throughout the whole of this strange transaction.

It is supposed that Admiral Wilkes will send the "Noc Daqui" to some port of the United States for adjudication.

My Lord,

Havana, January 23, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of acknowledging the receipt of Mr. Layard's despatch of the 31st ultimo, inclosing an extract of a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Lagos, reporting the shipment on the morning of the 20th of October last from Aghwey, of a cargo of upwards of 1,000 slaves on board of a steamer under French colours, and instructing me to use my best endeavours to ascertain the name of that vessel, and any other particulars which may throw light on this slave-trading transaction, and the parties engaged in it.

I beg leave to refer to my despatch of the 10th ultimo and the 14th instant, reporting the movements of the screw stramer "Noc Daqui," which landed a large cargo of slaves in this island early last month, and I think that there cannot be the slightest doubt that this was the vessel which shipped the negroes at Aghwey under cover of the French flag.

I have to correct the report contained in my despatch of the 10th ultimo, with reference to the "Noc Daqui" having landed her cargo at Remedios. That adventure was by a large sailing vessel, whereas the steamer's cargo was transferred to coasters on the south side of Cuba, and was landed at Mayabeque and at the Ensenada de los Cochinos, thus making two separate infractions of the Treaty, instead of one, as I had been led to suppose.

My Lord,

Havana, January 31, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of transmitting herewith to your Lordship an extract of a letter which I have this day received from Mr. Pedro Regil y Peon, Her Majesty's Vice-Consul at Merida, Yucatan, giving some further particulars relative to the seizure of the steamer "Noc Daqui" at Isla de Mugerres, by Admiral Wilkes of the United States' navy.

I have, &c.

(Signed) JOHN V. CRAWFORD.

Inclosure in No. 169.

Vice-Consul Regil y Peon to Acting Consul-General Crawford.

(Extract.)

Sisal, January 21, 1863.

THE Government of Yucatan having been apprised that there was a steamer at anchor at Isla Mugerres, suspected that she might be engaged in the Slave Trade, and gave orders to seize her, so as to inquire into the cause of her being there, which was very suspicious, as other illegal transactions of this nature had occurred at that place.

The steamer which carried the Spanish flag, and which was reported to be bound from Bordeaux to Vera Cruz, but had put in to repair her machinery, was accordingly taken possession of by Mexican soldiers. The Captain and his Engineer were sent to Merida, to the Admiralty Court there, and the crew remained under detention at Isla Mugerres.

In the meanwhile two Federal steamers, on board one of which was Admiral Wilkes, arrived at the island, at the same time that a Spanish schooner also made her appearance, bringing goods, and a fresh crew for the Spanish steamer, which was then to assume the Confederate flag; a Mr. Drain, a Southerner, having purchased her to run the blockade at Mobile.

Admiral Wilkes examined the steamer and the crew, and under pressure of his two steamers made an arrangement with the Mexican Commandant, by which he was to be allowed to take charge of the detained vessels, but holding them at all times subject to the action of the Mexican Courts.

The latter have claimed both the schooner and the steamer, for although it is doubtful that they were engaged in the Slave Trade, it is unquestionable that they were infringing the Revenue laws of the country, and were therefore subject to the competent tribunals.

Admiral Wilkes sent by letter to the United States' Consul, Captain Johnson's declaration stating the ship to be Confederate, together with other documents which appeared to prove it, and he gave the Judges the term of fifteen days to decide the question.

This pretension of dictating terms to the tribunals of an independent nation was repelled, and the Government insisted that the vessels should be brought to Sisal.

It was then that Admiral Wilkes sent the "Sonoma" to this port, with an officer who went on to Merida, with a communication to the Government in which he stated, "that he was convinced that the steamer under detention was Confederate, and that under no pretext whatsoever, nor under any circumstances, would he fail to capture and send her to the United States for trial."

The Government has protested against this breach of international law, and the violation of neutral waters and neutral territory; but the Americans have landed an armed force, and have seized the crew of the steamer which was under detention by the Mexican authorities, in spite of their protestations against such violence.

I have to remark that the steamer has a Spanish register, and that although she is said to have been sold, she had not been delivered up to her new owners, and therefore she preserves her Spanish nationality.

Remark.—Mr. Regil is wrong in the last sentence, for the "Noc Daqui" having been engaged in the Slave Trade cannot be entitled to Spanish protection.

No. 170.

Acting Consul-General Crawford to Earl Russell.—(Received March 31.)

My Lord,

Havana, February 24, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of acknowledging the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 13th ultimo, transmitting to me, for my information, a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Bilbao with reference to the landing of a cargo of upwards of 1,000 slaves in this island, on the 28th of November last, from the Spanish steamer "Noc Daqui," and desiring me to report to your Lordship whether this landing was known to the Spanish authorities, and, if so, what steps were taken by the new Captain-General in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's instructions I respectfully beg leave to refer to my despatches of the 14th and 23rd ultimo, in which the "Noc Daqui's" performances are fully reported.

The landing having taken place during Marshal Serrano's government, and having been very secretly managed, the authorities now in power had no jurisdiction or cognizance in the matter, and I have reason to believe that the late Captain-General did not know of the landing until some time after it was too late to prevent it or to capture the guilty parties, the negroes having been transferred from the "Noc Daqui" to small coasting-vessels, which took them to different places on the coast of this island; and your Lordship is aware that, once a slave is upon a plantation, he cannot be seized.

In a conversation which I had lately with General Dulce, the present Captain-General, he expressed his firm determination to put down the Slave Trade; and his recent act, in expelling from Cuba the notorious slave-traders Durañona and his partner Tuero, may be accepted as a strong proof that his Excellency is in earnest.

I would also remark, that since General Dulce's arrival I have not heard of any more infractions of the Treaty, nor of any further outfits for the Slave Trade; which goes to prove that either the slave-traders are observing greater secrecy in their operations, or that the well-known probity of the Captain-General, backed by the vigilance of the British and Spanish cruizers in these waters, is producing the desired effect of putting an end to the inhuman Traffic in African Slaves.

I have, &c.

(Signed) JOHN V. CRAWFORD.

Acting Consul-General Crawford to Earl Russell.—(Received April 28.)

My Lord,

Havana, March 30, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of transmitting to your Lordship a translation of a letter, dated the 27th instant, which I have received from Captain-General Dulce, acquainting me that the result of the steps taken to inquire into the facts of the landing of African slaves which took part in the early part of January 1862 near Trinidad de Cuba, as reported in my despatch dated the 20th of that month to your Lordship, is that no trace of any such landing has been discovered by any of the authorities, and that the Royal Audiencia has therefore ordered the further prosecution of the case to be suspended.

This result, my Lord, is not to be wondered at. That the negroes were landed, and that the resident authorities at Trinidad were bribed on the occasion, is notorious; but, as has so frequently been stated to Her Majesty's Government by the Consul-General, the archives of the Courts of this island do not show a single case of slave-trading in which legal proof has been elicited to criminate, far less to condemn, any one connected with it; and so the all-powerful influence of gold will continue to protect the slave-trader and his accomplices as long as that infamous Traffic lasts.

The same farce of a judicial investigation will be gone through on every occasion, and always with the same barren result.

I have, however, great confidence in the present Captain-General, and I expect that he will adopt very vigorous measures should any case of slave-trading come under his notice, and that he will act independently of the Royal Audiencia.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 171.

The Captain-General of Cuba to Acting Consul-General Crawford.

(Translation.)

Havana, March 27, 1863.

AS a definitive answer to the official letters addressed by your Consulate to my worthy predecessor on the 9th of January and 3rd of February last year, the former denouncing a landing of Bozal negroes in the jurisdiction of Trinidad in the beginning of that month, and the latter inquiring the result of the steps taken to discover the truth of that fact, so that your Honour might report it to your Government, I have to state to you that, however reliable the information which was received at the time with regard to the said landing may have appeared to your Honour and to this Government, all the verosimilitude of this information changed its character, even to the degree of appearing without foundation in an official point of view, because in all the steps which have been zealously and actively taken, both by the Government and judicial authorities, as well as by the Treasury and Marine Departments, in order to verify the said landing, nothing has been discovered to prove that it ever took place.

This negative result naturally led to another, which was, that the Royal Audiencia, in delivering its sentence upon the voluminous proceedings instituted in consequence of your Honour's denouncement, decreed to relinquish the case, and declared the costs official, since the Fiscal stated in his Report that there was no proof of the arrival of any slave-ship at the shores of Trinidad, and, as the same officer opined, the result of the investigations relative to the landing of Bozal negroes in that jurisdiction had proved entirely ineffectual.

This appears from a certificate which the Regente of the Royal Audiencia transmitted to me on the 10th instant, communicating to me the final sentence in the case referred to, and I have thought proper to place this in your knowledge, with all the rest which I have stated, thus fulfilling what my worthy predecessor promised your Honour in his letters of the 9th January and 5th February of last year, to inform you in due time of the result of the inquiries relative to the said landing, so that your Honour might have the information which you asked from this Government in your second official communication referred to.

God preserve, &c.

No. 172.

Acting Consul-General Crawford to Earl Russell.—(Received May 29.)

My Lord,

Havana, April 18, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of laying before your Lordship a copy of a letter, dated the 10th instant, which I had occasion to address the Captain-General relative to the landing of a cargo of about 380 slaves near Coloma, on the south side of this island, about a fortnight ago.

This cargo, according to what my informant states, consisted of at least 380 negroes of the Congo tribe, and was safely landed, on the 31st ultimo, near Coloma, from whence the slaves were taken to the sugar-estate "Guacamayas," belonging to very noted slave-traders of this place.

The brig which is supposed to have conveyed the adventure from Africa was either abandoned, and was driven by the current, or was run ashore at Punta Holandes, near Cape Antonio, where she was seen by Her Majesty's ship "Nile," and where Commander Graham, of Her Majesty's ship "Rosario," also reports having seen a wrecked vessel.

I have furnished the Captain-General with these particulars, as I understand that the local authorities at Pinar del Rio deny the said landing; but as the slaves were safely entered upon the Guacamayas estate they cannot be touched, nor is it at all likely that any proceedings instituted so long after the occurrence will lead to the detection or punishment of any of the delinquents.

IT is my unpleasant duty to inform your Excellency that I have received a report upon which I think I can rely, that a cargo of about 380 Bozal negroes of the Congo tribe was landed near Coloma or Punta de Cartas during the early part of last week.

I have no doubt that this infraction of the law has been already made known to your Excellency by the local authorities; and I trust that some, if not all, of the adventure has been captured, and the parties interested brought to justice.

 No. 173.
Acting Consul-General Crawford to Earl Russell.—(Received May 29.)

My Lord,

Havana, May 5, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of transmitting to your Lordship copies of two letters which I have addressed to the Captain-General, relative to the landing of about 600 slaves which took place on the 25th ultimo close to Trinidad, and I have very great pleasure in reporting to your Lordship, that owing entirely to the praiseworthy activity and honesty of Colonel Causillos, commanding the marine battalion at that place, and who was Acting Lieutenant-Governor during Brigadier Caraza's temporary absence, 530 of the slaves were captured and brought to Trinidad.

Mr. Vice-Consul Smith informed Brigadier Caraza on the 25th ultimo that he had reported to me the arrival of a slave-ship on that coast, and the day after it appears that the Brigadier and the Comandante de Marina sailed in a schooner in pursuit of the slaver, and they had not returned on the 30th, although it was rumoured at Trinidad that they had taken a lighter with some 47 sickly negroes, purposely left, it is said, at one of the neighbouring cays as a blind to enable the authorities to hush the matter up, and to serve as a cloak for the escape of the bulk of the adventure.

It appears that the negroes, after landing, were taken to the estate "Manaca Armenteros," belonging to a certain Don Antonio Font, and that they were actually in the purging house when an alarm was given that Colonel Causillos was on his way to search the estate. They were at once removed to a place called "Arroyo Manaca," where it was supposed that they would be safe ; but Colonel Causillos was too smart for them; and by his zeal and determination captured the entire lot of 530 slaves.

I am not aware whether any of the slave-traders have been arrested, but if the Captain-General acts up to his professions, I hope to see such an example made at Trinidad as will deter that slave-trading community from again engaging in that iniquitous Traffic, at least during the rule of General Dulce in Cuba.

Havana, April 29, 1863.

I HASTEN to acquaint your Excellency that information has just reached me that a cargo of Bozal negroes was landed a few days ago in the jurisdiction of Trinidad, the whole affair having been managed with much secrecy.

I understand that the negroes were put on shore at a place called "The Salinas;" and that the vessel which conveyed them from Africa was hovering off the coast in that vicinity for several days previous to the disembarkation.

The matter has been kept so quiet that I fear no judicial proofs will be obtained ; and that the search made by the Lieutenant-Governor and the Comandante de Marina will have led to no particular results.

I hope, however, that the very decided desire which your Excellency has expressed to put an end to this iniquitous Traffic may dictate measures which may lead to the detection and punishment of the parties who are implicated in this daring infraction of the law.

Havana, May 2, 1863.

I BEG leave to acquaint your Excellency that there can be no doubt whatever as to the landing of negroes referred to in my communication of the 29th ultimo, as I have learnt, with great satisfaction, that, owing entirely to the energetic and most praiseworthy measures taken by Don Tomas Causillos, Acting Lieutenant-Governor of Trinidad in the absence of Brigadier Caraza, 500 and odd Bozal negroes were seized at Arroyo Manaca, and were brought to Trinidad on the evening of the 27th ultimo.

I shall be much obliged if your Excellency will favour me, for the information of my Government, with any particulars which may have reached you relative to this capture, and I trust that the parties interested in the adventure have been also arrested and brought to justice.

My Lord,

Havana, May 30, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of transmitting to your Lordship copy of a letter which I addressed the Captain-General on the 21st instant, relative to the landing of a cargo of slaves which took place on the 16th near Canasí.

I have since ascertained that the vessel which brought this cargo was commanded by the famous Don Eugenio Viñas, and that the landing was effected at Boca de Rotilla, a place about thirty miles to the eastward of this port, and close to Canasí.

The adventure consisted of 583 negroes, and belonged to a certain Don Ygnacio Gonzalez, who is well known here in the annals of the Slave Trade.

The usual amount of bribery and rascality took place on this occasion, and the Captain-General has taken steps to sift the matter, and to punish the delinquents. A Commissioner has been sent to take depositions, but as it has been proved beyond contradiction that legal testimony cannot be elicited in slave-trading transactions in this island, I do not expect that his mission will lead to anything beyond a heavy expenditure of hush-money. The Captain-General is very much annoyed about this affair, and his Excellency has assured me that he will do everything consistent with law to discover the parties who are interested in it.

Most Excellent Sir,

Havana, May 21, 1863.

IT is again my unpleasant duty to state to your Excellency that a landing of bozal negroes took place near Canasí on the evening of the 16th instant, and as I am credibly informed that the Acting Governor of Matanzas and other authorities went out in pursuit of the adventure, I have no doubt that your Excellency is already in full possession of all the particulars.

I shall be glad therefore to learn that both the Bozals and the parties who are interested in the adventure have been captured, as it would be extremely gratifying to me to be able to report to Her Britannic Majesty's Government the efficacy of the measures adopted by your Excellency to put an end to the Slave Trade.

My Lord,

Havana, July 1, 1863.

WITH reference to the landing of slaves at Canasí, as reported in my despatch of 30th May last, I have the honour of transmitting to your Lordship a translation of a letter which I have received from the Captain-General on the subject, stating that steps have been taken to discover the parties who were engaged in that infraction of the Treaty for the suppression of the Slave Trade.

The Captain-General has removed the Lieutenant-Governor of Jaruco, in whose jurisdiction the landing was effected, but beyond this I fear that nothing will result from the investigation which is being carried on by the Royal Audiencia.

The Captain-General of Cuba to Acting Consul-General Crawford.

(Translation.)

Havana, June 30, 1863.

IN answer to your Honour's official communication of the 21st ultimo, denouncing a landing of Bozal negroes near Canasí, in the jurisdiction of Matanzas, I have to state to you that previously this Government had commenced an inquiry upon the subject, having been confidentially informed that there were signs of a cargo having been landed in the district of Tibacoa, adjoining that of Canasí, not belonging to the jurisdiction of Matanzas, but to that of Jaruco. Said inquiry is being carried out, with a view to discover the parties who have been guilty of such an infraction of the law and existing Treaties which prohibit the Slave Trade, it remaining for this Government to inform your Honour in due time of the definite result of these judicial proceedings.

No. 176.

Acting Consul-General Crawford to Earl Russell.—(Received July 29.)

My Lord,

Havana, July 6, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of transmitting to your Lordship copies of a correspondence which I have had with the Captain-General relative to a cargo of negroes reported to have been landed at Camarioca, in the jurisdiction of Matanzas, on the 9th ultimo.

I have found it extremely difficult to obtain the particulars of this affair; but as the Governor of Matanzas, in his report to the Captain-General, flatly denies that any negroes have been landed in that district, I requested the Vice-Consuls at Matanzas and Cardenas to renew their inquiries on the subject; and from their reports, which I am satisfied are quite correct, it appears that a square-rigged vessel called off Camarioca, and transferred her cargo of negroes to coasting craft, one of which landed 60 negroes at the mouth of the River Canimar in the very Bay of Matanzas.

It is stated that the officer in charge of the Morillo fort at this point received a bribe of 12,000 dollars as hush-money.

The adventure belonged to parties residing at Matanzas, with one of whom the Governor of that place is on intimate terms.

That arrangements had been made with the local authorities for the landing of this adventure is proved by the fact that the negroes landed at the Canimar were provided with passes, as if legally coming from another part of the island.

I have reason to believe that the greater portion of the Camarioca adventure was disembarked at Sagua la Chica, or some place to the eastward, but as the coasting schooners can go right up to the private wharves of the sugar estates, it is always extremely difficult to ascertain where negroes which are transferred at sea are landed.

I would not have answered the Captain-General's letter of the 16th June but for the remarks of the Governors of Matanzas and Cardenas, which I did not consider it proper to leave unnoticed, especially as the Captain-General asks for data, which it is clearly the duty of his own police to furnish. The occasion was also opportune to impress upon these officials that Her Majesty's officers are not to be considered as spies or public informers.

I have, &c.

Acting Consul-General Crawford to the Captain-General of Cuba.

Most Excellent Sir,

Havana, June 13, 1863.

I AM again compelled, in the execution of my duty, to state to your Excellency that another cargo of Bozal negroes was landed on the evening of the 9th instant in the jurisdiction of Matanzas.

It has been reported to me that the landing was safely effected at Camarioca, and that the adventure was a large one. I am not aware whether any of the negroes were captured, although I understand that both the authorities of Matanzas and Cardenas went out in pursuit of the adventure, and that Her Catholic Majesty's gun-boat "Neptuno" also started for that part of the coast.

I respectfully request the favour of your Excellency to acquaint me, for the information of my Government, what steps have been taken to punish the parties who are concerned in this breach of the law and of the Treaty for the suppression of the Slave Trade.

I have, &c.

 Inclosure 2 in No. 176.
The Captain-General of Cuba to Acting Consul-General Crawford.

(Translation.)

Havana, June 16, 1863.

PREVIOUS to the receipt of your Honour's official letter of the 13th instant, denouncing the landing of Bozals at Camarioca on the night of the 9th, this Government had already taken steps to prevent or to capture any landing, as information had been received that one would be attempted in the jurisdiction of Cardenas or Matanzas.

The authorities of these jurisdictions, and also those of Marine, who sent a cruizer to watch and run along the coast, assured me, nevertheless, that no such infraction of the law had taken place, and that even there were no suspicions of any such landing being intended.

On receipt of your Honour's denouncement I again addressed the said Governors for a report upon the subject, and yesterday they answered me as follows :—

That of Matanzas says :—

“Most Excellent Sir,

“Whoever has assured your Excellency that negroes have landed on the coast of this jurisdiction on the evening of the 9th has deceived you : just that night all the coast was well watched, and I have proof that neither before nor after has any landing taken place—I can affirm it.”

That of Cardenas says :—

“Most Excellent Sir,

“I take the liberty to observe to your Excellency that the answers which I have had the honour to give you respecting the landing of Bozals are not negative but affirmative, that none have been effected in any part of this jurisdiction.

“I beg your Excellency to direct that the persons who assure the contrary, and who appear to be so well informed of the fact, should transmit all the data they possess to this Court, which takes cognizance in the matter, or to the Judge whom your Excellency of the Royal Audiencia may please to commission.

“Thus only can be made patent to your Excellency the value and foundation of the reports which they give you, for my part I can only repeat what I have had the honour to acquaint you.”

All which I say and transmit to your Honour in answer to your communication referred to, hoping that if you possess more exact data or details of the said landing you will be pleased to remit them to me, so that I may adopt other measures in accordance therewith.

Inclosure 3 in No. 176.

Acting Consul-General Crawford to the Captain-General of Cuba.

Havana, July 4, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of stating to your Excellency, in answer to your communication of the 16th ultimo, that notwithstanding the assurance given by the Governor of Matanzas that nothing whatever occurred at Camarioca on the 9th ultimo, and that no Bozals have been landed in his jurisdiction either then or since, I regret that the information which I have received from reliable sources on the subject differs very widely from said Governor's report.

The Bozals may not have been landed precisely on the 9th, nor were they all disembarked at Camarioca ; but that a slave-vessel called off that place and transferred, if not all, at least a part of her cargo, I am informed was the case. If nothing whatever occurred, is it reasonable to suppose that the Governors of the two most important districts of the island would have hastened to the spot ? The cargo is reported to me to have consisted of over 500 negroes, and to have belonged to parties resident at Matanzas. A part of it was taken up the River Canimar.

I would very much regret that any one should attempt to practise deception upon your Excellency, as the Governor of Matanzas says must have been done on this occasion, by conveying false reports on so serious a subject.

With regard to the Lieutenant-Governor of Cardenas' remarks, I must clearly and distinctly state to your Excellency that in the performance of a very disagreeable duty, which is forced upon Her Majesty's officers by the continued disregard which is shown towards a solemn Treaty of nearly twenty-eight years' standing, they cannot be expected to supply the place of the police, nor are they called upon to act the part of spies or public informers. It is, therefore, only in cases which can be relied on that I address any official communication to your Excellency on the subject of Bozals. There are many and frequent reports which reach this Consulate relative to the landing of negroes from Africa ; but unless these reports are accompanied by reliable data they are never noticed to your Excellency, and I only mention this as a proof of the great caution and delicacy with which such matters are treated by me.

Havana, July 7, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of reporting to your Lordship that the Captain-General has just dismissed the Political Governor of Havana, Don Pedro Navascués, for alleged abetting of the Slave Trade by the sale of passes for negroes.

This very decided step on the part of General Dulce will create great excitement among the slave-trading fraternity both here and in Spain; and every possible means will doubtless be employed to obtain the removal of the present Captain-General of Cuba.

No. 178.

Mr. Layard to Acting Consul-General Crawford.

Sir,

Foreign Office, July 30, 1863.

IN your despatch of the 5th of May last you reported the seizure by the Spanish authorities of a cargo of 530 negroes who had been landed from a slave-vessel in the neighbourhood of Trinidad; and you anticipated, from the energy with which the Captain-General of Cuba had acted in this matter, that an example would be made of the persons engaged in this slave-trading transaction.

Lord Russell would be glad to know whether any steps have been or are likely to be taken for the punishment of the parties engaged in this affair.

I am also to desire that you will inform his Lordship of the fate of these particular negroes, and generally as to the condition and treatment of slaves captured by the Spanish authorities, either on board vessels previous to landing, or subsequently, when those slaves may have been seized on the estates of the planters.

Acting Consul-General Crawford to Earl Russell.—(Received August 28.)

My Lord,

Havana, July 16, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of laying before your Lordship translation of a letter which I have received from the Captain-General, acquainting me that the result of the inquiry made by the Royal Audiencia relative to the landing of slaves denounced as having been effected at Trinidad last October, is, that no such landing took place, and that there was no collusion on the part of the local authorities.

The details of that scandalous affair were reported to your Lordship in my despatch of the 30th of October, 1862; and so public and notorious was the fact of the landing of the negroes, and of the wholesale bribery which took place on that occasion, that General Serrano dismissed the Lieutenant-Governor of Trinidad and the Lieutenant of Police of Casilda, who were implicated in the transaction: but the finding of the Royal Audiencia is only in keeping with the result of all its investigations in matters affecting the Slave Trade, and it affords another proof of the impossibility of obtaining any legal evidence here for the conviction of parties who may be concerned in that abominable traffic.

Havana, July 14, 1863.

AS final answer to the official denouncement made by your Honour to my worthy predecessor in the month of October last year, relative to a landing of Bozal negroes in the jurisdiction of Trinidad, and the alleged bribery of the authorities in consenting to said landing, I have to state to you that I have received the final sentence of the First Hall of the Audiencia at this place, in the criminal cause which was instituted in order to investigate the facts denounced by your Honour; and that by said sentence it not only appears that the bribery referred to, but that the realization of the said landing, is inexact, as both matters turn out to be false in the proceedings and declarations of the judicial investigation to which I allude; and in conformity with this improbability was given the sentence the essence of which I have thought proper to acquaint you with for such purpose as you think proper, and that you may inform your Government of the result.

No. 180.

Acting Consul-General Crawford to Earl Russell.—(Received August 28.)

My Lord,

Havana, July 27, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of transmitting to your Lordship translation of a letter which I have received from the Captain-General, informing me that a cargo of 800 to 900 slaves, anonymously reported to the late Captain-General Serrano on the 12th of July, 1862, as being expected near Manzanillo, had not been landed, either then or since, on that coast.

This communication of the present Captain-General is the more remarkable as it is the first time that the Government of this island has ever volunteered any information on the subject of the Slave Trade, for no communication has ever been addressed by this Consulate to the Captain-General with reference to the expected landing at Manzanillo, no notice of it having reached this office.

I consider it a further proof of the sincerity of General Dulce in endeavouring to put an end to the Slave Trade; an object which he has assured me he is most desirous to attain.

UNDER date of the 12th July last year my predecessor received an anonymous letter stating that your Consulate was aware that a landing of 800 to 900 negroes was about to be effected at Manzanillo. In consequence thereof this Government took the necessary steps, giving the most stringent orders to the Governor of the Eastern Department, and to the Lieutenant-Governors of Porto Principe, Manzanillo, Bayamo, and Halguin, to prevent the said landing; and, whether the anonymous information relative to the intended disembarkation was false, or whether, in consequence of the great vigilance and the preventive measures which were adopted the slave-traders desisted from carrying out their intentions, it is certain that no such landing has taken place in any district in the Eastern Department, as no tidings thereof have reached this Government, although more than a year has transpired since the denouncement. All which I have thought proper to communicate to you for your information and consequent effects.

That the sentence of the Admiralty Court at that place has been appealed against, but, in the event of its being confirmed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, I shall, in obedience to your Lordship's instruction, conveyed in the despatch now before me, take the necessary steps for enforcing payment of the bond for 25,000 dollars; which I exacted previous to the "Laura's" departure from Havana, that she should not be employed in the Slave Trade.

My Lord,

WITH reference to my despatch of the 18th April last, reporting the landing of a cargo of slaves near Coloma, on the south-west coast of this island, I have the honour of transmitting to your Lordship a copy and translation of a letter which I have received from the Captain-General, denying that any such landing took place.

As the system of bringing over slaves in small lots from the Isle of Pines to the mainland of Cuba, can be, and is carried on very secretly, it may be possible that the landing alluded to may have escaped the vigilance of the late Lieutenant-Governor of Pinar del Rio, Colonel Mena, who is known to be a very honourable and upright officer; but as my information was derived from a party who saw the negroes on their way to the Guacamaya sugar plantation, I have every reason to believe that the statement I made to the Captain-General is correct.

IN view of your Honour's official communication of the 10th of April last, denouncing the landing of 380 Bozal negroes near Coloma or Punta de Cartas, in the jurisdiction of Pinar del Rio, information on the subject was asked from the Lieutenant-Governors of the Isle of Pines, Cienfuegos, and Sagua, and all have answered that no such infraction of the law has occurred within their jurisdictions, the executive and judicial proceedings which were instituted in that of Pinar del Rio also proving very circumstantially the same result.

My Lord,

Havana, August 20, 1863.

THE inclosed translation of a letter, dated the 17th instant, which I have received from Captain General Dulce will afford your Lordship another proof of the utter impossibility of obtaining evidence against the slave-traders in Cuba.

His Excellency, fulfilling the late Captain-General's promise to acquaint me with the result of the judicial proceedings relative to the slave-landing which took place at the Ensenada de Cochinos in the month of March 1862, informs me that the Royal Audiencia has not been able to procure legal evidence of any such landing, and has accordingly pronounced sentence, absolving all the parties under prosecution, cancelling the bail put in for them, restoring the property which was embargoed, and declaring the costs for account of the Crown.

It appears to me, that any comment upon this judicial farce is quite superfluous, especially when the fact of the landing was so notorious, and General Serrano was so thoroughly satisfied on the subject that he dismissed several of the local authorities without waiting for further proofs.

I have, &c.

Inclosure in No. 184.

The Captain-General of Cuba to Acting Consul-General Crawford.

(Translation.)

Havana, August 17, 1863.

NOTWITHSTANDING what my worthy predecessor stated to your Honour on the 8th April last year, upon the probability of a landing of negroes having taken place on the Ensenada de Cochinos, in the jurisdiction of Cienfuegos, in answer to your Honour's denouncement of the 3rd of that month and year, I have to inform you that the third Hall of Justice of the Royal Audiencia at this place has pronounced sentence on the judicial proceedings instituted in that matter; and in said sentence the proceedings have been stayed with the usual reserve, placing at liberty the parties who were arrested, ordering the bail to be cancelled, the property embargoed to be returned, and declaring the costs official.

As your Honour will infer from the tenor of this Decree, the Court has not been able to prove in a legal and evident form that the said landing took place, and for this reason it has delivered its final sentence in the terms referred to.

I have also to state to your Honour that this Government has not been able to discover more positive data in confirmation of the fact since my worthy predecessor addressed you on the subject as referred to at the beginning of this despatch, although the most active steps have been taken by several of the Executive authorities, in order to find out the truth respecting the introduction of the Bozals.

All which I state to your Honour as definite answer to your letter of the 2nd April of last year, and fulfilling the promise of my worthy predecessor to acquaint you with the result of any subsequent inquiries on the subject.

No. 185.

Acting Consul-General Crawford to Earl Russell.—(Received September 29.)

My Lord,

Havana, August 21, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of transmitting herewith to your Lordship a translation of a letter dated the 17th instant which I have received from Captain-General Dulce, stating that the Lieutenant-Governors of Remedios and Puerto Principe had reported that the landing which I denounced as having been effected at Cayo Coco in the month of July last year had not taken place, their report being borne out by the result of the judicial investigation which was ordered to be made at the time.

The information which I had the honour of communicating to your Lordship in my despatch of August 4, 1862, is so very circumstantial and so trustworthy that there can be no doubt on the subject, and it is quite painful to see that there is no improvement in the moral condition of either the authorities or the people of this island.

The slave-trader can effect anything by the means of gold, and it is quite hopeless to expect any beneficial result from judicial investigations emanating from the Royal Audiencia, or that the truth regarding the importation of African slaves will ever be elicited from the needy officials of this island.

No. 186.

Acting Consul-General Crawford to Earl Russell.—(Received September 29.)

(Extract.)

Havana, August 28, 1863.

I HAVE the honour of acknowledging Mr. Layard's despatch of the 30th ultimo, inquiring whether any steps have been or are likely to be taken for the punishment of the parties engaged in the landing of slaves which took place at Trinidad on the 25th April last, as reported in my despatch of 5th May, and instructing me to inform your Lordship of the fate of these particular negroes, and generally as to the treatment of the slaves captured by the Spanish authorities either on board vessels previous to landing, or subsequently, when those slaves may have been seized on the estates of the planters.

From a conversation which I have had with the Captain-General on the subject, I regret to report to your Lordship that beyond the removal of the Lieutenant-Governor of Trinidad, none of the other parties who are suspected to have been implicated in the slave landing of April last at that place have been punished, as unfortunately no legal proofs could be obtained in the matter. The owner of the estate Manaca Armenteros, who claims the negroes on the strength of the stipulations of the 9th Article of the Penal Law, has been subjected to the payment of large bribes and legal costs,—a means which the Captain-General considers very efficacious in deterring the planters from purchasing newly-landed negroes, and of thereby checking the Slave Trade.

The Royal Audiencia has declared part of these negroes "emancipados," but I understand that a portion of those who are alleged to have been seized on the estate Manaca, are still subject to the decision of that Court.

The administration of justice in Cuba is at a very low ebb. The most corrupt practices are tolerated to a degree which baffles all comprehension, and what is yet more extraordinary is, that the public look upon these malpractices as the natural and legitimate emoluments of office.

Where testimony can be obtained or suppressed at the will of the highest bidder, it is not surprising that all evidence affecting slave-trading transactions is hushed up.

Nor does this iniquitous system stop with the Judiciary.

Until the Penal Law is altered, and as long as the Royal Audiencia is to take cognizance of cases of slave-trading, so long will the Cuban slave-trader carry on his shameful traffic unpunished.

As to the treatment of the slaves captured by the Spanish authorities, your Lordship must be aware that they are submitted in the first place to the jurisdiction of the Royal Audiencia, which declares them "emancipados" if the capture is considered legal.

They are then distributed as apprentices, by order of the Captain-General, among his protégés, or amongst the numerous applicants for them, or they are employed in the public works.

The term of assignment is for five years, during which the master pays the Government at the rate of 72 dollars per annum for men, 48 dollars for women, 60 dollars for boys, and 36 dollars for girls, in addition to a bonus of 25 dollars, which is intended to defray the bounty and expenses of capture.

After the first five years the Government receives 32 dollars per annum for men or boys, and 24 dollars for women or girls, every "emancipado" being entitled to the sum of $4\frac{1}{4}$ dollars per month, which is to be paid him by his employer.

Your Lordship will observe, by the inclosed translation of the conditions of assignment, that the master is to instruct the "emancipado" in the Roman Catholic faith, that he is to give him a sufficiency of wholesome food, and furnish him with medical assistance and with two suits of clothes yearly.

In this, as in all other respects, the "emancipado" is to be treated very much like a slave.

It follows, therefore, that the "emancipado" is the most wretched of human beings, for he is neither more nor less than a Government slave, and he is condemned to drag out a life of hopeless misery, being constantly re-assigned from one master to another at the caprice of the authorities, and being subjected to all the hardest labour and discipline of the slave without any adequate remuneration, and without even the privilege which is accorded to the slave of purchasing his own freedom.

The treatment which these poor creatures receive at the hands of their masters is, generally speaking, of the very worst kind. They are cheated out of their wages, and are subjected to every species of punishment. They are sold, or rather they are transferred from one master to another for a consideration generally amounting to from 170 dollars to 204 dollars, and terrible abuses are committed with the friendless "emancipado," such as reporting him dead, whereas he has been made to fill the place of a defunct slave. The Government regulations, which are framed with a view to prevent such imposture, are not complied with, a douceur to the neighbouring police-officer being all that is required to cancel the requirements of the law!

The money which is exacted by the Government from the masters or holders of "emancipados" is intended to form a fund to be called the "Fondo de Emancipados," for the purpose of providing for aged and infirm negroes belonging to that class; but like all monetary deposits of the kind which are in the hands of the Government, it is very much to be feared that this fund is applied to very different purposes from what it was originally intended.

I have recommended this most unfortunate class of the coloured population to the Captain-General's earnest consideration, and his Excellency has assured me that he will do everything in his power to put an end to the abuses which are perpetrated with regard to them, and that he will grant free papers to all those emancipados who may apply for their liberty after serving their apprenticeship.

Inclosure in No. 186.

Obligations of the Masters of Emancipados.

(Translation.)

1. THE master shall take care to have the emancipado instructed in the tenets of our holy religion, so that, if he has not already done so, he may receive the sacrament of baptism, remembering to give him the same name under which he was assigned, and to enter in the parish register his number and where he came from; presenting a copy of the entry to the Bureau of Emancipados in the Government Secretary's office.

In case of the serious illness of the emancipado, the master will take care to administer to him, at least, the water of succour.

2. The master must lodge and maintain the emancipado with sufficient and wholesome food, giving him two complete suits of clothes every year.

3. In case of an emancipada giving birth to a child, the master will transmit to the Government Secretary's office a copy of the baptismal entry, in which the name, number, and precedence of the mother must be expressed. Should the child die previous to baptism, the water of succour shall be administered to it, the death to be reported to Government; and if the death occurs after baptism, it must be reported to the District Captain of Police, so that he may make the necessary inquiry on the subject.

When the master takes out the protection paper of the mother, he must report at the office where it is granted whether the emancipada has had any child during the six months, so that it may be included; and if she has any child which has attained or is about to attain the age of eight years, he must take out a separate cedula, and must apply to the Government for the assignment of said child, even although the mother's assignment may not have elapsed.

4. If any emancipado, assigned in this manner, is missing from his domicile without permission, written notice thereof must be given to the police of the district, so that the flight being cleared up he may be sought for and captured.

If the emancipado is paid for, the master must state whether he is willing to continue his payments to Government so as to retain his right to the negro after he is caught, and should he not wish to do so, he must return the documents of assignment and the cedula.

Should the runaway emancipado be an apprentice, he shall be sent, after he is caught, to work for a month on the public works, at the place of his domicile. Upon every repetition of this offence he shall be punished in the same manner for two months.

The same punishment, besides the loss of his wages during all the period of his flight and punishment, shall be applied to the journeyman negro who runs away.

A certificate of the time during which a runaway negro has been under punishment shall be furnished the master, so that a proportionate sum may be deducted from his payment to Government.

If the emancipado gives himself up spontaneously to his master after his flight, and his master has not already given him up, his master must forthwith take him back; but if otherwise, then he must be delivered up to the Government.

5. The master must report to the district police officer the illness of any emancipado, and in case of death he must immediately report it to that officer, so that the body may be identified and a proper inquiry made into the circumstances.

The master must pay the expenses of illness and of burial, and the doctor's certificate as well as the burial certificate must be attached to the proceedings.

6. The master who retains an emancipado in his possession over the time of assignment will incur for this fact alone a penalty of from 100 to 500 dollars, without prejudice to further punishment which the law may inflict in cases of forcible detention of their persons.

7. The disciplinary jurisdiction which the masters may exercise upon the emancipados permits them to inflict, when necessary, the following penalties:—

(1.) Stocks; irons or arrest from one to ten days.

(2.) Loss of wages during the same period. The first may be imposed without the second, but the second never without the first.

Shall be punished:

(1.) Act of insubordination to the masters or heads of the establishments, or to any delegate of the master.

(2.) Refusal to work, or want of punctuality in working out their tasks.

(3.) Insults not amounting to bodily injury.

(4.) Running away.

(5.) Drunkenness.

(6.) Infringement of the master's rules of discipline.

(7.) Any offence against good breeding amounting to a crime.

(8.) Any other deed done with malice.

Any other offences which the emancipados commit, and which, without being crimes, the master does not consider sufficiently punished with the appliance of his attributions, must be notified to the Government for its decision.

The payment of the sums due to the Government for each emancipado must be half-yearly, in advance.

If the first week of each six months passes over without payment being made the party shall be notified, and if he does not pay up during the following week he will incur a fine equal to the sum due in the fortnight which has elapsed.

If he allows a month to pass without payment he shall be made to pay the salary of the emancipado for the said month, besides a fine of as much more, and the emancipado shall be taken away from him.

WITH reference to your despatch of the 31st of October last, inclosing a copy of a letter which you addressed to the senior officer of Her Majesty's naval forces at Port Royal reporting the suspicions which you entertained with respect to the proceedings of the barque "Jane," I am directed by Earl Russell to acquaint you that this vessel has since been captured under Netherlands colours off the Congo River by Her Majesty's ship "Espoir," and was condemned on the 10th ultimo in the British and Netherlands Mixed Commission Court at Sierra Leone, on a charge of being equipped for the Slave Trade.

Acting Consul Beattie to Earl Russell.—(Received April 28.)

My Lord,

St. Jago de Cuba, March 31, 1863.

I HAVE had the satisfaction to receive Mr. Under-Secretary Layard's despatch of 16th January last, acquainting me, by direction of your Lordship with the capture of the barque "Jane," under Netherlands colours, off the Congo River by Her Majesty's ship "Espoir," and her subsequent condemnation at Sierra Leone on a charge of being equipped for the Slave Trade.

In connection with this subject, I have the honour to inform your Lordship that his Excellency Mariscal de Campo, Don José de la Gándara, appointed Governor and Commander-in-chief of this city and province by the Madrid Government, and lately arrived here (after taking orders from his Excellency Captain-General Dulce in Havana), has, on entering on his command, expressed his determination to second the energetic efforts of that officer to put an end to the African Slave Trade.

Mr. Erskine to Earl Russell.—(Received December 19.)

My Lord,

Constantinople, December 5, 1863.

I HAVE communicated to Aali Pasha a French translation of Mr. Consul-General Herman's despatch to Sir Henry Bulwer of the 12th ultimo, relative to the forcible shipment of a number of negroes on board the Turkish frigate "Taïff" at Tripoli.

The explanation given of this occurrence by his Highness is, that the Capitan Pasha directed the Governor-General of Tripoli to procure some black recruits for the corps of Marines; that Mahmoud Pasha accordingly collected all the unemployed negroes he could lay his hands on, and sent them up here in the "Taïff" as instructed; but his Highness denies that they are slaves, or that they will be compelled to serve after the usual term. He, moreover, declares most positively that not a single woman was taken on board.

I do not perceive that the above statement differs very materially, except as to the women, from that of Colonel Herman; but it may be a question in a country where slavery is still tolerated whether these negroes will not be benefited, rather than the reverse, by their incorporation into the army.

No. 190.

Mr. Colquhoun to Earl Russell.—(Received July 16.)

My Lord,

Alexandria, July 1, 1863.

HAVING received information on which I could rely that a large caravan of merchants was likely to enter Egypt from the Wadai, and that this expedition had, besides its proper and legitimate traffic of ivory, gum, &c., a considerable number of slaves, I, on the 22nd May, informed the Egyptian Government of its approach, requiring it to take the proper steps for setting at liberty the said slaves, and acting up to the orders of the Porte on the subject. I have a reply from the Secretary of State, promising that measures shall be taken, and I know that orders were sent to the police to be on the alert.

I received, a few days ago, a despatch from Major Herman, dated Tripoli, 19th June (copy annexed), perhaps alluding to the very same expedition.

I accordingly asked the Viceroy, yesterday, if he had any intelligence of the fact. He replied he had, and that he had seized 120 slaves; that the adult males had been drafted with their own consent into the Nubian regiments; the lads were to be taught music for the military bands; the young women were taken as house servants on wages, in such houses as wished for them; and the young girls were sent to receive some education in the Government schools at Cairo.

His Highness told me he was resolved to check the Traffic as far as was in his power. I told him that, fully aware of his sentiments, I was about to submit to him a few remarks on what was passing above Khartoum, of which I had received details that made humanity shudder. His Highness said my representations should meet with every attention, and he would feel obliged by my bringing the subject before him.

On this subject I shall further communicate to your Lordship, but I am waiting, before doing so or taking the promised steps with the Government, the arrival here of a Dr. Murie, who is now on his way from Khartoum, having left Mr. Petherick up at Gondokoro the end of March last.

J'AI l'honneur de porter à la connaissance de votre Excellence, pour être communiqué à Son Altesse le Viceroy, que, par une dépêche que je viens de recevoir du Consulat de Sa Majesté à Bengazi, je suis informé qu'une caravane partie de Wadai venait vers la fin Avril passé, de toucher le territoire Egyptien à Sewah. La dite caravane est composée de marchands d'esclaves ayant un nombre considérable de nègres destinés à être vendus en Egypte.

Cette caravane doit arriver incessamment au Caire ou à Alexandrie.

Le Gouvernement de Son Altesse, connaissant les dispositions de celui de la Sublime Porte et de ceux des Puissances Européennes à l'égard de la Traite des Hommes, ne manquera pas, je suis persuadé, de prendre les mesures les plus promptes et les plus efficaces pour empêcher un Trafic flétri par l'humanité.

Consul-General Herman to Mr. Colquhoun.

Sir,

Tripoli, June 19, 1863.

IT has been reported to me by the ex-Agent of the Sultan of Waday at Bengazi that a caravan from Waday had reached Cairo.

It was accompanied by ten persons of rank, and was composed of 150 camel-loads of ivory and 150 negro slaves, the latter of whom were to be sold at Cairo and the proceeds remitted to Mecca.

Should the last part of the report prove correct, it will be a most glaring infraction of the Imperial Firman prohibiting the importation and sale of slaves in the Ottoman dominions.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 1st instant, together with its inclosures, and I have to acquaint you that I approve the communication addressed by you to the Egyptian Government on learning that a caravan with a number of slaves was about to enter Egypt from the Wadai.

I have at the same time to desire that you will omit no opportunity of pressing the Egyptian Government to take effective measures for putting a stop to the slave-hunts on the Upper Nile, which, if the accounts received by Her Majesty's Government are to be believed, are planned and carried out by Europeans, whose proceedings render them a disgrace to humanity.

(Signed) RUSSELL.

Mr. Colquhoun to Earl Russell.—(Received August 28.)

(Extract.)

Alexandria, August 17, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of July 31, approving of what I had done respecting a caravan with a number of slaves recently arrived at Cairo.

The reports I heard from Captains Speke and Grant of the extent to which the Slave Trade was followed on the White Nile was enough to determine me to bring the matter before the Viceroy. These reports were confirmed and strengthened by my letters from Mr. S. W. Baker, now exploring the Sobat River; but as Mr. Baker wrote me that a Dr. Murie, who had been engaged by Mr. Petherick to accompany him, had left that gentleman at Gondokoro, and might shortly be expected here on his way home, I thought it best to defer taking any steps till I should have seen and closely questioned Dr. Murie, who arrived here some days ago.

The information I have culled from the above intelligent person, proves, indeed, how utterly lost to all sense of humanity every individual connected with trade (even though that trade may on its face wear an appearance of legitimacy), becomes, from contact with the debased class of persons calling themselves merchants in those parts.

It is unfortunately the case that the Egyptian Government, while professing openly to discourage the Slave Trade, has nevertheless at certain places large barracoons or depôts, where the poor natives of the interior are collected for Government purposes; the males for filling the gaps in the Nubian regiments, the women and children for the purpose of being brought down as house servants in the harems; these are, by Government authorities, smuggled down the river, and smuggled into Cairo. The state of the wretched creatures in these barracoons is fearful. If the disease (the small-pox) which is so prevalent there gets into them, the creatures die like flies, and Dr. Murie has seen their bodies brought down by tens and cast into the river; but sad as this picture is, it is bright compared to what they undergo before coming into the Government possession.

The Arabs and negroes in the countries bordering the Bahr-el-Gazal, Shillooks, &c., are engaged by Europeans, who conduct in person the expeditions, in making razzias on the neighbouring tribes; the men on these expeditions are all armed with fire-arms, the tribes having no defence but spears and clubs. The plunder sought consists of ivory tusks, cattle, and the vanquished individuals of the tribe; such of them as have escaped the murderous night onslaught are bound together by cords and marched off to the depôts, either of Government or of individuals.

The natives have of late learnt that the copper ornaments and glass beads, hitherto so prized, are of no value whatever; and the trader,—European or other,—requiring their services as boatmen, porters, &c., can now no longer satisfy them by the worthless stores they had brought from Europe: now the natives require payment in cattle, or kind, and the European, pressed by necessity, and to enable him to carry out his trade, consents to sanction,—often to lead,—the razzias for the purpose of procuring cattle, now almost the sole circulating medium. From the cattle-stealer to the slave-dealer the step is but a short one; and hence the infamous character all Europeans up there bear.

Mr. Baker engaged, under contract and firman, a certain number of hands at Khartoum, forty-five in number; from one cause or another the greater number of these mutinied,—some because he would on no account tolerate razzias, some because he proposed to join his party to that of Mr. Petherick, in the view of approaching nearer to the Lake Nzigé, which he was so desirous of exploring; he then found himself with fourteen hands only, and has been compelled to abandon his project and proceed eastward to the Sobat till after the rainy season.

I learn, on inquiry, that Moossa Pasha, the Governor-General of the Soudan, is considered as a very active and efficient Governor, free from the Egyptian taint of corruption; and his Wakeel, who, during his frequent absences from Khartoum, represents him, was particularly brought to my notice by Captain Speke, as having rendered him good service.

It is very difficult to say what course should be pursued. If the Egyptian Government really and sincerely intended to suppress the Trade, it might be effected in a great degree by an efficient river police: but their Nubian regiments must be furnished by some means; and no pay would induce a Nubian to enlist. The sole female servants of, not only Arab and Turkish, but most European houses, are the negro women from Nubia; in the latter they receive good wages, and are faithful and attached. Not one of these would voluntarily have quitted her country, but they adapt themselves to their really bettered circumstances, and are cheerful, and apparently contented. The Viceroy argued that their condition, and that of the males also, is largely ameliorated; but, for ten who reach Cairo, fifty have, perhaps, miserably perished in the transit, which has been described to me as worse than the middle passage in the Cuban slavers. It is a difficult question to deal with. I shall urge on the Viceroy the establishment along the river, at various stations, beginning at Gondokoro, of an officer with soldiers; but I fear that the Arab race advancing south, the Negro will have to fly, for we see most clearly the two races are hostile to each other.

A very serious question I feel compelled to submit to your Lordship, and which requires an immediate solution. Should not the British Consul in the Soudan be most strictly prohibited from trading? A Consul we require; and if the trade opens up, he will be of great use, both in watching that trade, when, untrammelled by any connection with the wretches who now abound in the upper parts of the country, he will be able to make his voice heard in favour of humanity, and will serve, if not as a positive and complete check on the Government, to mitigate the horrors of the Traffic, and pave the way to its entire abolition.

Alexandria, September 2, 1863.

A REPORT reached me a few days ago that the native population on the White Nile above Khartoum had risen on the Europeans trading there, and massacred every one they could lay hold of. I find it has originated with a Frenchman, who, as the Prince Halim's Agent, has been frequently sent up to those countries to look after the Prince's interests. This person relates that on coming down the river he was overtaken by a messenger sent from Khartoum with the intelligence of the rising of the black population. I receive this and communicate it under reserve, for I think Mr. Petherick would not have failed to have informed me of the facts. It appears the native population are driven to despair by the abominable acts of violence committed on them by the traders, and have in sheer despair risen. Mr. Petherick is in all probability safe, but I am very uneasy as to the fate of that intrepid traveller Mr. White Baker, who, by his last letters, having failed in collecting men enough to penetrate to the Lake Tzigé, had gone away eastward, and was exploring the Sobat district. Mr. Baker is as popular and beloved among the various tribes as every other European, without exception, is feared and hated, so I trust he and his little band of fourteen are safe.

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship that a few weeks ago an unfortunate female slave, far advanced in pregnancy, came to this Consulate to demand redress from the cruelty of her master and his brother. It appeared that the latter was the father of the child yet unborn, in consequence of which the former was much annoyed and wished to oblige him to purchase her, and both had inflicted tortures on the unfortunate negress with a view to produce a premature birth.

I had a personal interview with Rushdi Pasha, and, at his Excellency's suggestion, caused a petition to be written in the name of the applicant, which I sent to the Serai, where, after several interviews, it was decided that the negress could not be sold, and must be set free. The necessary document was eventually obtained, and the poor woman is now staying in my house until she be strong enough to undertake service.

No. 198.

Acting Consul Calvert to Earl Russell.—(Received January 17, 1863.)

My Lord,

Monastir, December 20, 1862.

I HAVE the honour to report the following circumstances connected with the manumission of a slave through the instrumentality of this Consulate:—

On the 15th of March last, a negress named Gulfidan, aged 34 years, and owned by Suleiman Bey of Perlepé, ran away from her master and took refuge in the British Consulate. The more immediate cause of her flight was ill usage on the part of Suleiman Bey's wife, but she claimed her freedom as due by the Mahommedan law, which prescribes the liberation of every slave upon the completion of seven years' bondage under any one person, or the death of the proprietor. Although this poor woman had been in Suleiman Bey's service five years only, the first of these conditions had been fulfilled, in her case, twice, and the second three times, under previous masters.

Mr. Consul Charles Calvert having communicated on her behalf, officiously, with the then Governor of this province, Abdul Kerim Pasha, his Excellency promised to effect her manumission. Before this promise was carried out, however, the Pasha's sudden departure for Montenegro, in the month of June, temporarily suspended further action in the matter. Gulfidan meanwhile remained at the Consulate, and, being willing and industrious, I assigned her for her voluntary services wages at the rate usually given here to female servants, in addition to the clothes, &c., with which she had been provided by Mr. C. Calvert previously to his departure.

Upon Abdul Kerim Pasha's return to Monastir, two months ago, I addressed myself to Hadji Ali Pasha, the present Civil Governor, referring him to his military colleague on the subject. After some negotiations, his Excellency engaged that Gulfidan should be manumitted upon her being made over to the family of his Kiahia for two or three days. I at once acceded to this arrangement, and have the satisfaction to state that this poor creature has to-day received her certificate of freedom.

The wife of Abdi Pasha of Scutari, a benevolent lady resident here, who has interested herself in this case, has offered to take Gulfidan into her service on advantageous terms, which she will probably be induced to accept.

Inclosure in No. 200.

Acting Consul Calvert to Sir H. Bulwer.

Sir,

Monastir, February 6, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to report to your Excellency the following two cases which have again occurred here of runaway slaves placing themselves under the protection of foreigners.

The first is that of a negro, named Ali, twenty-five years of age, who took refuge at the Russian Consulate some weeks since. He was bought, seven years ago, by a certain Mustapha Bey, of this place, who died the year before last. Although the poor man thus possessed a clear title to his liberty, according to the provisions of the Mahometan law, he was, on the death of his master, transferred to the possession of Hakki Bey, the son of Mustapha Bey. The local authorities have, nevertheless, used every effort to obtain from the Russian Consul his restitution. Overtures to this effect were made, at first, in an unofficial form; but M. Hitroff having declined to give up the man until receiving instructions from his Legation, the parties interested finally had recourse to the stereotyped pretext of a charge of theft, which was conveyed in an official note from Hadji Ali Pasha to the Russian Consul.

Your Excellency will perhaps remember a similar pretext in the question of the two negresses claimed by Ahmed Pasha, and which was described by Mr. Consul Longworth in his despatch from Monastir of the 25th January, 1859, as already "a stale practice" in such cases.

The Pasha's note contained a demand for the delivery of the alleged thief to the local authorities, "together with the stolen property." M. Hitroff again declined to act in the matter pending the receipt of instructions. He further took umbrage at the Pasha's demand for the restitution by him, the Consul, of (alleged) stolen property. Although sufficient time had elapsed for the receipt of the expected instructions from Constantinople before M. Hitroff's departure hence, the question does not appear to have been yet settled between the Russian Legation and the Porte. The man Ali, meanwhile, remains at the Russian Consulate.

The second case I have to report is that of a negress named Khadidjé, aged twenty-four years, and owned by one Mahmoud Bey, of Monastir. The master having for some reason decided on parting with his slave, sent Khadidjé to the public vendor ("tellâl"). After remaining with this man's family for three weeks, in default of a purchaser, she took to flight on the 25th January. She made her way in the first place to the British Consulate. I happened to be away at the time, and the fugitive addressed herself to Gulfidan,* the manumitted slave whose case was reported in my last despatch. By her advice the poor woman went over to the Russian Consulate. M. Hitroff, being already embarrassed with the case above related, did not encourage her application; and it seems she was advised by some person at the Russian Consulate to apply to the Austrian Vice-Consul. She found her way, by mistake, to the house of M. Enz, a Swiss merchant under the protection of the French Vice-Consulate, who willingly gave her shelter, and with whom she has since remained. The case thus falls within my competency as Acting Vice-Consul for France.

Mahmoud Bey's endeavours for the recovery of his fugitive property were in the first instance limited to direct personal communication with M. Enz, with whom he has had several friendly interviews on the subject. As M. Enz, however, did not consider himself at liberty to comply with the Bey's request, an official application has been addressed to me through Hadji Ali Pasha. I have begged his Excellency to allow the matter to remain over pending a reference of it to Constantinople.

I therefore now have the honour to solicit your Excellency's instructions with regard thereto, leaving it to your Excellency to communicate with the French Ambassador on the subject, should you judge that course proper.

It is necessary to state to your Excellency that the requirements of the Mussulman law with respect to manumission do not seem to have been fulfilled in the case of the woman Khadidjé. She has changed hands twice by regular purchase since she was first bought by a certain Abdullah Pasha at Constantinople twelve years ago; and her longest term of service under any one master has not exceeded five years. She had served Mahmoud Bey three years.

In none of these cases of runaway slaves which I have lately had occasion to report, does the ill-usage on the part of the owners appear to have been of a very aggravated nature. The leniency, generally speaking, of domestic slavery in Turkey is proved by the fact that these cases, occurring as they do from time to time, are by no means so numerous on the whole as might be expected. Still, however, there are exceptions to this leniency; and instances of illegal retention in slavery, such as those of Gulfidan and Ali, appear to be of not unfrequent occurrence. Under any circumstances, the occasional repetition of fugitive cases, such as those now reported, is a contingency to be looked for.

Hadji Ali Pasha took occasion to observe to me, in reference to the present instances, how desirable it was, in his opinion, that some fixed rule of action should be adopted with regard to these embarrassing questions; and the force of the remark is felt no less by the Consular Body here than by the local authorities.

REFERRING to Mr. Acting Consul E. Calvert's despatch dated the 6th February last, on the two cases of fugitive slaves who have taken refuge with foreigners, I have the honour to inform your Lordship that M. Enz, the Swiss merchant, has voluntarily surrendered to Hadji Ali Pasha the negress Khadidjé who had fled to his house. M. Enz's motive for so acting proceeded, he tells me, from a desire to avoid causing embarrassment between the local Turkish authorities and myself immediately upon my return to my post. Whilst the quarrelsome disposition of this negress was a source of trouble to his household, M. Enz became convinced, moreover, on making inquiry, that her claim to manumission could not justly have been sustained.

Nothing new has transpired with regard to the case of the negro Ali, who still remains at the Russian Consulate.

I may add whilst on this subject that the negress Gulfidan, who was manumitted through the instrumentality of Mr. Acting Consul E. Calvert in December last, has engaged herself as a hired servant in my household.

TRIPOLI.

No. 203.

*Consul-General Herman to Earl Russell.—(Received May 16.)*My Lord, Tripoli, April 30, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to report to your Lordship that on the night of the 23rd instant some 15 slaves were clandestinely embarked within a mile of the town gates.

On bringing this circumstance to the notice of the Governor-General, he assured me that on the return of the xebeek, which belongs to this place, he will make an example of the captain and crew, but that with the owner, a Jew under the protection of France, he can do nothing. His Excellency at the same time lamented his inability, from the great extent of the seaboard of this Regency, to effectually put down the contraband Trade in Slaves, and with the inadequate means at his disposition it must be admitted that the observation is well founded. But means might certainly be found for effecting the object within sight of the town gates.

The Imperial Decree of 1856 abolishing the exportation of negroes from this province has rather diverted into new channels, than extinguished, the trade of the interior. The caravans which formerly, from the basins of the Lake Tchad and the Niger, used to find markets for their merchandize at Tripoli and Bengazi, now proceed to Algeria and Egypt; the last is the main stream which skirting the southern boundary of this province strikes the Egyptian frontier at a point between the latitudes of Siwas and Cairo. Such of the slaves as are not absorbed by the demand of the Egyptian market are dispatched in small parties across the Red Sea into Arabia, from whence they are distributed throughout the Levant.

So essential and time-honoured an element is negro slavery in the domestic organization of the Turks, and such the extent and unguarded condition of the Egyptian frontier, that were the vigilance of the Government authorities as active as it is supine, it is to be feared that to effectually arrest the Traffic will be an operation of immense difficulty.

The only effectual remedy for the evil would be the abolition, as at Tunis, of slavery as an institution.

I HAVE the honour to report that having been informed that a native had brought 7 female slaves to Tunis for the purpose of traffic, I brought the circumstance to the knowledge of the Bey, who immediately ordered their manumission.

His Highness declared that he would not allow slavery in his dominions, and as an earnest of his intention he caused the slaves to be brought to the palace, where, after delivering to each of them a certificate of emancipation, he directed the Chief of the negro population to take care of them until such time as they could find employment.

My informant was a Mahomedan of very great respectability, who, up to this time, was unknown to me, but he stated that he acted from conscientious motives; and as the affair has likewise created some sensation amongst Mussulmans, it is natural to deduce from these two facts that the public feeling has undergone a change, and that the Mussulmans in this country are at present generally adverse to slavery.

No. 210.

Earl Russell to Lord Lyons.

My Lord, Foreign Office, January 24, 1863.

I HAVE received your Lordship's despatch of the 12th ultimo, reporting that Mr. Seward has officially informed you that the President of the United States consents to extend to the coasts of the Island of Madagascar the reciprocal right of visit and detention established by Article I of the Treaty of the 7th of April last, between Her Majesty and the United States of America, for the suppression of the African Slave Trade.

In the opinion of Her Majesty's Government the most convenient form of carrying out the understanding come to by the two Governments on this matter, would be by annexing an Additional Article to the Treaty of the 7th of April last, and I accordingly inclose the draft of an Article to be submitted for the approval of the United States' Government.

I have further to state to your Lordship that, in consequence of what passed between your Lordship and Mr. Seward on the subject of the extension of the right of visit and detention to the coasts of the Island of Puerto Rico, I have had the Article framed to include that island; and also, in conformity with your Lordship's suggestion, the Island of San Domingo.

If the United States' Government should not consent to extend the provisions of the proposed Additional Article to the Islands of Puerto Rico and San Domingo, or should consent to those provisions being extended to only one or the other Island, your Lordship will make the necessary omission in the Draft Article, so that it may apply to Madagascar only or to Madagascar and either Puerto Rico or San Domingo, as the case may be, and you may then sign it in virtue of the full powers with which you are already invested.

I trust, however, that as the proposed extension of the reciprocal right of search and detention to those two Islands will more effectually carry out the objects which the two Governments had in view in concluding the Treaty of the 7th of April last, the Cabinet of Washington will concur with Her Majesty's Government in thinking it desirable that the Article should be signed as it now stands.

I am, &c.
(Signed) RUSSELL.

Inclosure in No. 210.

Draft of Additional Article to the Treaty between Her Britannic Majesty and the United States of America for the Suppression of the African Slave Trade, signed at Washington, April 7, 1862.

WHEREAS by the First Article of the Treaty between Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the United States of America, for the suppression of the African Slave Trade, signed at Washington on the 7th of April, 1862, it was stipulated and agreed that those ships of the respective navies of the two High Contracting Parties which shall be provided with special instructions for that purpose, as hereinafter mentioned, may visit such merchant-vessels of the two nations as may, upon reasonable grounds, be suspected of being engaged in the African Slave Trade, or of having been fitted out for that purpose, or of having, during the voyage on which they are met by the said cruisers, been engaged in the African Slave Trade contrary to the provisions of the said Treaty; and that such cruisers may detain and send or carry away such vessels in order that they may be brought to trial in the manner hereinafter agreed upon: And whereas it was by the said Article further stipulated and agreed, that the reciprocal right of search and detention should be exercised only within the distance of 200 miles from the coast of Africa, and to the southward of the thirty-second parallel of north latitude, and within thirty leagues from the coast of the Island of Cuba: And whereas the two High Contracting Parties are desirous of rendering the said Treaty still more efficacious for its purpose; the Plenipotentiaries who signed the said Treaty have, in virtue of their full powers, agreed that the reciprocal right of visit and detention, as defined in the Article aforesaid, may be exercised also within thirty leagues of the Island of Madagascar, within thirty leagues of the Island of Puerto Rico, and within thirty leagues of the Island of San Domingo.

The present Additional Article shall have the same force and validity as if it had been inserted word for word in the Treaty concluded between the two High Contracting Parties on the 7th of April, 1862, and shall have the same duration as that Treaty. It shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at London in six months from this date, or sooner if possible.

I TRANSMIT to your Lordship herewith copies of Reports as marked in the margin,* from Commanders of Her Majesty's cruisers employed in the suppression of the Slave Trade on the West Coast of Africa, reporting the boarding, for the purpose of ascertaining their nationality, of the under-mentioned vessels, flying American colours, viz.:—Barques "Ocilla," "Swallow," "Ann and Mary," and "Nye;" and brig "Leonidas."

As, at the time of the boarding of these vessels, Her Majesty's cruisers were not furnished with the instructions required by Treaty in order to enable them to detain a United States' ship, the "Ocilla," which it was notoriously known at the time was intended to be employed in the Slave Trade, was not further molested, and she escaped shortly afterwards from the Congo River with a cargo of upwards of 1,400 slaves,

I also inclose a copy of a Report from the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Wrangler,"† giving an account of the capture of a vessel without papers or colours, fully equipped for the Slave Trade. The master of the captured ship gave the name of his vessel as the "Josephine," but your Lordship will perceive that she was subsequently ascertained to be the "Island Queen," of Washington.

I have to instruct your Lordship to communicate the substance of these Reports to the United States' Government.

My Lord,

Washington, April 21, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a copy of a note in which, in obedience to the instruction contained in your Lordship's despatch of the 26th ultimo, I have communicated to the United States' Government the substance of despatches from Commanders of Her Majesty's cruizers reporting the boarding of the under-mentioned vessels flying American colours, viz., the barques "Ocilla," "Anne and Mary," and "Nye," and brig "Leonidas."

I have also the honour to inclose a copy of an answer which Mr. Seward has made to my note.

Inclosure 1 in No. 219.

Lord Lyons to Mr. Seward.

Sir,

Washington, April 15, 1863.

I HAVE received instructions from Her Majesty's Government to acquaint you that reports have been received from the Commanders of Her Majesty's cruizers employed in the suppression of the Slave Trade on the West Coast of Africa of the following instances in which they have boarded vessels flying American colours for the purpose of ascertaining their nationality.

Commander Douglas, of Her Majesty's ship "Espoir," reports that on the 31st of October last he caused to be boarded the barque "Ann and Mary," belonging to the United States, and that her papers being found to be correct, and no complaint being made, she was allowed to proceed on her voyage.

The same officer reports that on the 25th of October last he caused to be boarded the barque "Swallow," belonging to the United States; that her papers being found to be correct, and no complaint being made, she was allowed to proceed on her voyage.

Commander Hoskins, of Her Majesty's ship "Zebra," reports that on the 24th of September last he caused to be boarded the American barque "Nye," of New Bedford, that her register appeared to be correct, and that her master did not wish any notation to be made in the log, nor did he make any complaint.

The same officer reports having caused to be boarded the American brig "Leonidas," of West Port, on the 25th of October last, with the same result as in the preceding case. The master is stated to have made no complaint.

A brig of the same name, and probably the same vessel, is stated to have been boarded on the 5th of October, at the wish of her master, by a boat from Her Majesty's ship "Torch."

The barque "Ocilla" is reported to have been twice boarded, first by Her Majesty's ship "Espoir" on the 10th, and afterwards by Her Majesty's ship "Zebra" on the 28th September last. Circumstances are stated to have given rise to suspicions on both occasions, but she could not be detained, as her papers were to all appearance correct, and the cruizers were not at that time furnished with the instructions required by Treaty in order to enable them to detain a United States' vessel.

She is reported to have subsequently escaped from the Congo River on the night of the 16th of October, with a cargo of 1,400 slaves, and to having been ineffectually chased by Her Majesty's ship "Zebra."

I am also instructed to inform you of the circumstances of the capture by Commander Beamish, of Her Majesty's ship "Wrangler," on the 28th of December last, in latitude 14° 37' south, longitude 90° 19' east, Little Fish Bay east $\frac{3}{4}$ north about 172 miles, of a full-rigged ship, perfectly equipped for the Slave Trade, and ready to receive from 1,000 to 1,300 slaves.

This vessel is reported to have been captured after a four hours' chase, to have shown no colours, and to have had no papers. The captain is stated to have called her the "Josephine," but the name of "Island Queen, Washington, D.C.," is said to have been made out without much difficulty on her stern, though means had been taken to erase it.

The Commander of the "Wrangler" states that he had reason to believe, from information he had obtained, that the vessel in question was fitted out at Havana in March 1862 with United States' colours and papers, and that she was commanded by a Captain Denham, said to be a noted slave-captain, by whom she was taken to Cadiz, where she changed ownership, took out Spanish papers under the name of "Josephine," received a new captain, a Portuguese, with a Spanish and Portuguese crew, and was fitted out for the Slave Trade.

I TAKE great pleasure in acknowledging the receipt of your note of yesterday, in which, under the instructions of your Government, you inform me that reports have been received from the Commanders of Her Majesty's cruisers employed in the suppression of the Slave Trade on the West Coast of Africa of several stated instances in which they have boarded vessels flying American colours for the purpose of ascertaining their nationality. As it regards the cases of the "Ocilla" and the "Josephine," the information will be used to ferret out and bring to punishment any Americans who may be found to have been concerned in the violation of the laws in connection with those vessels.

MR. SEWARD informed me yesterday that Benjamin Pringle, Esq., had been appointed Judge, on the part of the United States, in the Mixed Commission Court established under the Slave Trade Treaty at the Cape of Good Hope, and was about to proceed to his post.

Mr. Seward asked me to give Mr. Pringle letters of introduction to the authorities at the Cape. I told Mr. Seward that I was not acquainted with any of those authorities, but that I would give Mr. Pringle a letter to the Duke of Newcastle, a few lines from whom to the Governor would be far more efficacious than anything I could write.

I have accordingly sent Mr. Seward a letter for the Duke to be given to Mr. Pringle.

I TRANSMIT to your Lordship herewith copies of the Regulations which I have had drawn up for the guidance, in the technical part of their duties, of the Judges and Arbitrators appointed on the part of Her Majesty for carrying into effect the provisions of the Treaty between Her Majesty and the United States of America for the suppression of the African Slave Trade.

I have to instruct your Lordship to communicate copies of these Regulations to the United States' Government for their approval.

You will state that they have been framed mainly in accordance with the course observed in the High Court of Admiralty in this country, adapting and limiting the proceedings to the objects prescribed by the Treaty under which the Commission is framed.

Her Majesty's Government would, of course, take into consideration any amendments or alterations which the United States' Government, after due deliberation, might see fit to suggest; but as these Regulations have been already maturely considered, Her Majesty's Government trust that they will be found to accord with the views of the United States' Government, and that the United States' officers in the several Mixed Commission Courts at New York, the Cape of Good Hope, and Sierra Leone will be directed to guide their proceedings in conformity therewith.

Additional Article to the Treaty between the United States of America and Her Britannic Majesty for the Suppression of the African Slave Trade, signed at Washington, April 7, 1862.

Whereas, by the 1st Article of the Treaty between the United States of America and Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the Suppression of the African Slave Trade, signed at Washington on the 7th of April, 1862, it was stipulated and agreed that those ships of the respective navies of the two High Contracting Parties which shall be provided with special instructions for that purpose as hereinafter mentioned, may visit such merchant-vessels of the two nations as may, upon reasonable grounds, be suspected of being engaged in the African Slave Trade, or of having been fitted out for that purpose, or of having, during the voyage on which they are met by the said cruisers, been engaged in the African Slave Trade contrary to the provisions of the said Treaty; and that such cruisers may detain and send or carry away such vessels in order that they may be brought to trial in the manner hereinafter agreed upon; and whereas it was by the said Article further stipulated and agreed that the reciprocal right of search and detention should be exercised only within the distance of 200 miles from the coast of Africa, and to the southward of the thirty-second parallel of north latitude, and within thirty leagues from the coast of the Island of Cuba; and whereas the two High Contracting Parties are desirous of rendering the said Treaty still more efficacious for its purpose, the Plenipotentiaries who signed the said Treaty have, in virtue of their full powers, agreed that the reciprocal right of visit and detention, as defined in the Article aforesaid, may be exercised also within thirty leagues of the Island of Madagascar, within thirty leagues of the Island of Puerto Rico, and within thirty leagues of the Island of San Domingo.

The present Additional Article shall have the same force and validity as if it had been inserted word for word in the Treaty concluded between the two High Contracting Parties on the 7th of April, 1862, and shall have the same duration as that Treaty. It shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at London in six months from this date, or sooner if possible.

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States of America, have caused the said Additional Article to be made public, to the end that the same, and every clause and part thereof, may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

Sir,

Washington, June 20, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to submit, for the approval of the President of the United States, copies of Regulations which Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs has had drawn up for the guidance, in the technical part of their duties, of the Judges and Arbitrators appointed, on the part of Her Majesty, for carrying into effect the provisions of the Treaty between Her Majesty and the United States of America for the suppression of the African Slave Trade.

The Regulations have been framed mainly in accordance with the course observed in the High Court of Admiralty in England, adapting and limiting the proceedings to the objects prescribed by the Treaty under which the Commission is framed.

Her Majesty's Government would, of course, attentively consider any amendments or alterations which the Government of the United States might, after due deliberation, think it advisable to propose; but as the Regulations have been drawn up with great care, Her Majesty's Government trust that they will be found to accord with the views of the United States' Government, and that the United States' officers in the several Mixed Commission Courts at New York, the Cape of Good Hope, and Sierra Leone, will be directed to guide their proceedings in conformity therewith.

My Lord, Washington, July 3, 1863.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 22nd ultimo, I have the honour to inclose herewith to your Lordship a copy of a note which I have received from Mr. Seward, stating that the United States' Government has no objection to offer to the Regulations prepared by Her Majesty's Government for the guidance, in the technical part of their duties, of the Judges and Arbitrators appointed for carrying into effect the provisions of the Treaty between Her Majesty and the United States for the suppression of the Slave Trade, and that those Regulations are accordingly approved.

My Lord, Department of State, Washington, July 1, 1863.

THE Attorney-General, to whom was referred a copy of your note of the 20th ultimo, with one of the accompanying copies of the Regulations for the guidance of the Judges and Arbitrators appointed on the part of Her Majesty for carrying into effect the provisions of the Treaty between the United States and Great Britain for the suppression of the African Slave Trade, of the 7th of April, 1862, states, in reply, that those Regulations, which he has examined with some care, have been prepared after the forms and methods of proceeding in Courts of Admiralty, and with strict regard to the practice suitable to the Mixed Courts established under the Treaty; that they provide fully and minutely for all the stages of judicial proceeding in the investigation and disposal of captured prizes; that he does not perceive that, in this respect, they can be improved; and that they are also framed, as far he can see, with strict regard to the rights and obligations of both parties to the Treaty. Under these circumstances, this Government has no objections to offer against the Regulations in question, and they are accordingly approved.

Earl Russell to Lord Lyons.

My Lord, Foreign Office, August 1, 1863.

I TRANSMIT to your Lordship herewith copies of a despatch from Her Majesty's Commissioner at Loanda, and of a letter from Commodore Wilmot,* the officer in command of Her Majesty's naval forces on the West Coast of Africa, reporting the capture of a schooner called the "Mariquita," by Her Majesty's ship "Zebra," off the Congo River, with 471 slaves on board.

Your Lordship will see that Commodore Wilmot reports that a rumour had reached him that the owners of the "Mariquita" entered into heavy bonds at New York for the legal employment of this vessel, and if this is the case it will be right that the United States' Government should be informed of the circumstances under which this vessel has been captured, and I have accordingly to instruct your Lordship to communicate copies of the inclosed papers to the United States' Government for such steps as they may think proper to take in the matter.

* Class A, Nos. 69 and 117.

I have not yet received any report from St. Helena of the condemnation of the "Mariquita," nor of the manner in which the master and crew were disposed of; but I have taken the necessary steps for procuring information on these points, and I will not fail to communicate to your Lordship the result of my inquiries in this matter.

I annex also a copy of a letter from Her Majesty's Commissioners of Customs, reporting the result of inquiries instituted by them with regard to the clearance of the "Mariquita" from the port of London.

Inclosure in No. 225.

The Commissioners of Customs to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury.

Custom-House, July 25, 1863,

YOUR Lordships having referred to us the annexed letter from Mr. Layard, stating, by desire of Earl Russell, that by a despatch received from Her Majesty's Commissioner at Loanda, it appears that on the 17th of March last Her Majesty's ship "Zebra" captured a fore-and-aft schooner called the "Mariquita," off Point Padrone, on the West Coast of Africa, with 471 slaves on board, and with clearances from the port of London; and requesting that inquiries may be made with the view of ascertaining, if possible, who were the parties connected with this vessel, and any other information which may tend to throw light on this slave-trading transaction, we report—

That the "Mariquita" arrived at this port in October last, with a cargo of flour, from New York, and cleared outwards on the 11th of December following for Kinsembo, in Africa, with the following goods shipped as merchandise:—10 crates of common earthenware, 65 packages of staves, 20 bundles of iron-hooping, 1 cask of iron rivets, 4 cases of cutlery, 3 cases of white flint-glass, 3 cases of cutlery, 50 tons of coals, 8 half-barrels of herrings, 10 boxes of cod-fish.

The goods were consigned, by a person named Lima Vianni or Viana, to order. This person, we are informed, was sole owner of the ship, and after she had sailed proceeded to Havana. He is of Spanish or Portuguese birth, but is a naturalized citizen of the United States of America, and resides in New York. Our officers were also informed that he was in London about six weeks since, and it is not improbable he may be still in this country, but we have been unable to ascertain his address, or any further particulars concerning him.

Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons.

My dear Lord Lyons,

Department of State, Washington, August 11, 1863.

IN a despatch of the 25th ultimo, the Consul of the United States at Trinidad de Cuba refers to a previous despatch of his in which he advised this Department that there had been landed near that city a cargo of kidnapped Africans, but that by a kind of providential interference they had been captured by the Spanish authorities, after having reached a sugar estate in the interior, and had been sent to Havana to be disposed of by the Captain-General, in conformity to the subsisting Treaties of the civilized nations of the earth on that subject. In the despatch now before me, however, the Consul says that information has lately reached him to the effect that the Courts or Judicial Tribunals of Havana have decided that, as the negroes were landed, and upon an estate, the proprietor thereof was, to all intents and purposes, their legal owner, and that no law or authority existed to question his right, or inquire how or by what means he became possessed of said slaves; and that by virtue of said decision those unfortunate beings would be returned to slavery. The Consul has been so much shocked by this anomalous decision, which he thinks must strike every one as intended to evade the efforts of civilized nations to suppress this nefarious Traffic in human flesh, that he has felt it to be his duty to submit the facts to me for my consideration, and for any future orders that I may be inclined to give him on the subject. I shall therefore be pleased to confer with your Lordship in regard to the matter

Earl Russell to Lord Lyons.

(Extract.)

Foreign Office, September 24, 1863.

I HAVE received your Lordship's despatch of the 14th ultimo, inclosing a copy of a note addressed to you by Mr. Seward, upon the subject of the present state of the Spanish Law with reference to the introduction of slaves into Cuba, which provides that slaves once landed in Cuba who have become the property of any individual possessing an estate in that island are held to be the lawful property of such owner, the law having no power to rescue them nor to punish their proprietors.

Mr. Seward has requested you to call the attention of Her Majesty's Government to this subject; and to beg that they will cause inquiry to be made into the matter.

I have to instruct you to state to Mr. Seward, that Her Majesty's Consul at the Havana has frequently reported upon this subject, and Her Majesty's Government, as well as successive Governors of Cuba, have repeatedly pointed out to the Spanish Government the necessity that exists for a revision of this obnoxious law, which offers every facility for the importation of slaves into Cuba, and which, if suffered to exist, must necessarily weaken the efforts of Great Britain and the United States for the suppression of the Slave Trade.

Her Majesty's Government, however, regret that every remonstrance which they have hitherto made to the Spanish Government upon this subject has proved unsuccessful.

Inclosure 3 in No. 232.

Mr. Smith to Mr. Bates.Office of the District Attorney of the United States for the Southern District of New York, New York,September 1, 1863.

Sir,

I HAVE already acknowledged the receipt of your letter of the 18th ultimo, with the accompanying documents, relating to the schooner "Mariquita."

It appears from the record in my office that a libel of information was filed, and suit in rem commenced against this vessel, her tackle and lading, in June 1860, upon the ground that her owners had fitted her out with intent to engage her in the African Slave Trade. A claim was filed, and a defence and denial were interposed.

In accordance with the practice in Admiralty, the claimants were allowed, on the 10th of July, 1860, to take the vessel upon filing in Court a bond conditioned, not that she should not engage in the Slave Trade, but that the appraised value of the ship and lading should be paid in the event of a decree of guilt; in other words, the bond secured the payment of the amount of such appraisal in case the Court should adjudge that she was fitted out with an illegal intent as was charged.

The prosecution appears to have been instituted upon information sent to the Law Officers in letters from the police, and from anonymous sources. It was said that the outfit was suited to a slave voyage, that handcuffs were put on board, and that other circumstances of suspicion existed. Among the sureties on the bond were men of high repute, and at the same time persons supposed to have been engaged in this nefarious traffic. One of the last mentioned I have myself prosecuted.

On the other hand, depositions of an exculpatory character were taken de bene esse at the instance of the counsel for the claimants, and with the Consent of the District Attorney. As further evidence of the alleged innocence of intent with which she was fitted out, it appears that having been released upon the bond already described, she sailed from this port, and returned in January 1861; that upon her arrival here she was laden with palm oil and other proper articles, thus, as her claimants alleged, verifying their assertions as to the integrity of the voyage, which had been projected at the time of her seizure.

In the same month (January 1861) the then District Attorney wrote to the then Solicitor of the Treasury requesting authority to discontinue the suit, and to cancel the stipulations of the bond. The authority was given, and an order of discontinuance and cancellation was entered. Thus the case never went to trial or judgment.

These proceedings were all closed some two or three months before my term of office commenced.

At my request, the Collector of the Customs at this port has searched his records for evidence of the taking of any bond by his predecessors from those interested in this vessel, conditioned that she should not engage in the Slave Trade. As you know, such bonds are sometimes required by the officers of the revenue, and are provided for by law. He certifies that no record of such a requirement can be found.

It would therefore appear, from an examination made by me of all the records and proceedings taken in New York in relation to the schooner "Mariquita," that there is no course left to me but to return the documents with the statement above made.

I am, &c.

Consul Lousada to Earl Russell.—(Received June 26.)

My Lord,

Boston, June 10, 1863.

I HAVE the honour to report that the case of the United States against John C. Cork came up for trial in the United States' Circuit Court before Judge Clifford, on the 5th instant. This case has been before the Courts several times in proceedings against the various parties engaged.

The circumstances of the case, assought to be established by the Government in other trials, are that in 1860, Zeno Kelly of New Bedford, bought the "Tahmaroo" and fitted her out ostensibly for a whaling voyage, but really for the Slave Trade. She sailed under command of Captain Hathaway, having on board Captain Cork, who was to act as "slaver captain" in bringing off a cargo of slaves to be sold in Cuba. For divers reasons the object of the voyage was not accomplished; Kelly was arrested, and while his trial was pending about a year ago, Whittemore, the mate of the "Tahmaroo" and the principal witness against Kelly, absconded, and has not since been heard from. The case was continued from term to term until this spring, when Kelly was convicted in one count, but a motion for a new trial is now pending. Captain Cork was a witness at Kelly's first trial, but was defaulted on his recognizance to appear at the last trial. An indictment was found against him for being concerned in fitting out the vessel for the Slave Trade, and he was arrested in New York a few weeks ago and brought to this city for trial.

The Government having consented to enter a nolle prosequi on the first five counts in the indictment, Cork pleaded guilty to the sixth, charging that he voluntarily served on board the "Tahmaroo" knowing that the vessel had been fitted out for the Slave Trade. Sentence was postponed at the request of his Counsel.*

* Subsequently two years' imprisonment in Bedford jail.—F. L.

It will thus appear that the United States' Government is vigorously carrying out the crusade against those concerned in the Slave Trade.

Condemnation of a Slaver on Appeal.

THE UNITED STATES VERSUS THE BARQUE "AUGUSTA," ET AL.—NELSON, C. J.—This was a libel of information against vessel and cargo on charge of having been fitted out and equipped at Greenport, Long Island, in June 1861, for a voyage to the coast of Africa, with the intent to enter into the Slave Trade, in violation of the Acts of Congress particularly referred to in the libel.

Jacob A. Appley appeared as owner of the vessel and cargo, and put in his answer, denying the several allegations in the information. The proofs in the case are voluminous, and full on both sides. The Court below decreed condemnation of vessel and cargo, from which decree an appeal was taken to this Court. Pending the proceedings below, the claimant applied to this Court for a discharge of vessel and cargo, on entering into the usual stipulations with sureties, which application was granted, and the vessel discharged on the 28th October, 1861. She was again seized, on a charge of the same offence, while lying off Montauk Point, about the middle of November following, by the public authorities, and brought to Greenport, where she was the second time libelled for the offence.

The appeal still pending in first cause in this Court, the District Attorney has very properly produced new proofs, which consist of the facts and circumstances upon which the vessel was the second time seized, and they are full to clear up any doubts that might have existed on the proofs at the hearing of the Court below.

The vessel was originally purchased by the claimant Appley, through the agency of Appleton Oaksmith, who was his partner in a mercantile firm at Greenport. Oaksmith had the superintendence and control of the fitting out of the vessel the first time, ostensibly for the purpose of a whaling voyage. This was in May and June 1861. The vessel was seized the 23rd of that month, as we have already stated, and was discharged on stipulation from the seizure of the 28th of October following, and delivered up to Appley, the claimant, and again seized the middle of November. The facts and circumstances upon which this second seizure was made show that Appleton Oaksmith again had the superintendence and control of the vessel, and the fitting out and equipment of her, as in the first instance, and with the privity and concurrence of Appley, the owner, and at the time his partner in business. The new proofs before me show, beyond all controversy, that the second equipment of the vessel, ostensibly for a whaling voyage, was in reality with the purpose and intent to engage in the Slave Trade on the coast of Africa, and from the intimate connection between the two transactions, namely, the fitting out of the vessel in June and again in October, under the management of the same parties, the second cannot but reflect light on the first, and remove every doubt that might be raised on account of the character of the proofs being less clear and decisive in form. It is quite apparent upon these proofs, that although Appley may have been the legal owner of the vessel, even if he did not participate in the illegal fitting out and equipment, and did not expect to participate in the profits of the adventure, he held the title for the benefit of Oaksmith, and permitted him to assume the entire charge and control, as much so as if he had been owner. These proofs leave no doubt in my mind of the correctness of the decree below, and hence it should be affirmed.

CONVENTION
THE GOVERNMENTS OF
G R E A T B R I T A I N
AND OF T U N I S,
RELATIVE TO THE
HOLDING OF REAL PROPERTY BY BRITISH SUBJECTS IN TUNIS.

Signed, in the English and Arabic Languages, at Tunis, October 10, 1863.

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty.
1864.

CONVENTION between the Governments of Great Britain and of Tunis, relative to the holding of Real Property by British Subjects in Tunis.

Signed, in the English and Arabic Languages, at Tunis, October 10, 1863.

In the Name of God All-Powerful.

CONVENTION concluded between the Government of Her Majesty, the descendant of glorious Sovereigns, the Crown of the illustrious great, who holds at her command the sword and the pen, the great and august Princess, the fame of whose virtues are spread over the universe, our friend the Lady Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, and the Government of His Most Serene Highness Mohamed Essadok Bey, Lord of the Regency of Tunis, relative to the permission granted to British subjects to hold real property in the Regency of Tunis.

Whereas, by Article XI of the Organic Laws of the Regency of Tunis, foreigners have acquired the right to possess immoveable property so soon as their respective Governments shall enter into an arrangement with the Government of Tunis, establishing the conditions which shall entitle them to exercise the right conceded to them; and whereas it is expedient to prevent in future the abuses, contentions, and confusion that have arisen in consequence of the means to which foreigners have had recourse, in order to evade the regulations and customs which prohibited them from holding immoveable property in their own names, the following stipulations have been entered into and concluded between His Most Serene Highness Mohamed Essadok Bey, Lord of the Regency of Tunis, and Richard Wood, Esq., Her Britannic Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Tunis, duly authorized to that effect:—

ARTICLE I.

It being henceforward lawful for British subjects to purchase and possess immoveable property of every description in the Regency of Tunis, the Ecclesiastical and other legal Courts and authorities shall be empowered, upon the application of the purchaser, to proceed to the verification of the title-deeds, and to transfer the same in his name, according to the usages of the country, in order to give them the validity required by law.

ARTICLE II.

British subjects possessing immoveable property shall pay the same municipal and fiscal taxes which are paid by natives, and shall discharge in general the obligations which are by law attached to, and are discharged by, the like property held by natives.

ARTICLE III.

Every proprietor of houses, magazines, or other tenements, shall conform to the municipal regulations now existing, or which shall hereafter exist.

ARTICLE IV.

All cases of litigation respecting immoveable property, and relating to the ownership or occupation of houses or lands, between a British and a Tunisian subject, shall be referred for adjudication to the competent legal tribunals, whose summons for the appearance of the British subject shall be transmitted through the British Consul-General, or, in his absence, through his deputy, in order that he or his deputy may be present at the trial. And the condemned party shall have the right to appeal to the Courts constituted for that purpose, until the appeal shall have reached the Meglis Elakbar (Legislative Assembly); and whatever decision might be given by the last tribunal, the authority of the condemned party shall carry it out. But in cases where the dispute is between British subjects, it shall be optional for them, or either of them, to have their difference heard and determined by their Consul-General, or his deputy, whose decision, however, shall be governed by the laws and usages of the country, so far as they can be ascertained, and so far as the conditions expressed in the contract will permit.

ARTICLE V.

British subjects holding immoveable property shall be free to sell, dispose of, and convey their property to natives; but they shall not sell, transfer, or convey their property to foreigners, except to subjects of such friendly Governments as have, by Convention or other agreement with His Highness the Bey, acquired for their subjects the right to purchase and hold immoveable property in the Regency of Tunis; and, in order to guard against any infraction of the present Article, as well as to avoid any dispute or litigation that may arise therefrom, it is agreed that in all cases of a sale or conveyance of immoveable property from a British to a foreign subject, the instrument of transfer shall have affixed to it the seals of the Ecclesiastical Court, or those of the competent native authorities, to render the sale valid and lawful.

ARTICLE VI.

If a British proprietor die, either wholly intestate or intestate as to his immoveable property, the succession to his immoveable property shall be governed by the same law as the succession, ab intestato, to his moveable property, without any let or hindrance on the part of the Tunisian authorities.

ARTICLE VII.

It being established at all times that the Consul-General, or, in his absence, his deputy, do administer the estate of a British subject dying intestate in the Regency of Tunis, it is further established and agreed that the same right of administration shall extend to the lands, houses, and tenements of a British subject so dying. And it is moreover established, that upon the written declaration of Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General, or, in his absence, of his deputy, given under the seal of his office, that he has sold, disposed of, or conveyed the immoveable property belonging to the deceased, the courts and legal authorities shall recognize such sale; and shall, upon the testimony of two notaries that the sale was made in due and legal form, furnish the purchaser, being a native or a foreigner coming within the provision of Article V of the present Convention, with such legal instruments or deeds as will enable the said purchaser, in case of contention, sale, conveyance, or mortgage, to prove his right over the said property.

ARTICLE VIII.

The stipulations of the foregoing Article, and the rights therein reserved, shall also apply to, and shall be exercised by, the Consul-General, or his deputy in his absence, with regard to the immoveable property of a British subject who has become involved in pecuniary difficulties, or who has declared himself insolvent in order to the payment of his debts and liabilities.

ARTICLE IX.

The written declaration of Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General, or, in his absence, of his deputy, that he has disposed of the immoveable property of a British subject, for the reasons and for the purposes specified in Articles VII and VIII, shall be held to free from responsibility the legal authorities and Courts recognizing and confirming the transfer of such property; and for the satisfaction of the Courts that the transaction has been made in due form, it shall be optional for them to depute their own Notaries to assist at such sales and conveyances.

ARTICLE X.

In all transactions relating to immoveable property, British subjects shall pay the notarial and other fees which are fixed by law and are paid by natives.

ARTICLE XI.

No British subject shall be forced to dispose of his immoveable property, except for objects of public utility. But in all cases of expropriation, Articles XI and XII of the Municipal Law of Tunis shall be the rule for effecting the compulsory expropriation for any public purpose in a lawful manner, and for fixing the amount of the indemnity to be paid; and such indemnity shall be paid in full, and to the satisfaction of the proprietor, before the act of expropriation can be carried out.

ARTICLE XII.

As a further protection, however, to proprietors, the Decree declaring the public object for which the expropriation has been rendered necessary shall emanate from His Highness the Bey. The Consul-General, or, in his absence, his Deputy, shall have due information thereof, so that he may have it in his power to watch over the execution of the provisions of Article XI of the Municipal Law heretofore established and agreed upon with reference to the mode of ascertaining and fixing the amount of the indemnity.

ARTICLE XIII.

With a view to prevent complaints, abuses, or a misconstruction being put upon an act of expropriation, it is agreed that, should the Bey's Decree, specifying the object of public utility for which the expropriation has been made, be not executed at the expiration of one year after its date, the owner of the immoveable property shall have the right to recover the same by reimbursing in full the amount of the indemnity.

ARTICLE XIV.

Whenever a British subject shall desire to introduce machinery, or establish a manufactory in the Regency of Tunis, he shall be bound to apply for and obtain the permission of the Bey for that purpose, and His Highness, in according such permission, shall specify in the body of the Decree or Concession the conditions upon which it has been granted, in order that the Decree shall serve, in case of litigation or of an infraction of any of the conditions, as a rule and a guidance for the equitable adjustment of the points or points at issue.

ARTICLE XV.

The building and appurtenances of manufactories being immoveable property, are subject to the conditions and stipulations relating to such property in general. But as a further security to the local Government and to the public revenue, it is moreover established and agreed that, upon the written requisition of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, or of the President of the Municipal Council, to the Consul-General, or, in his absence, to his deputy, the fiscal officers shall have the right to ascertain, by personal inspection, that the manufactory has not been diverted from the purpose for which permission was given, and that the internal taxes and imposts levied upon raw materials, either previously to or after their being manufactured, are duly paid.

ARTICLE XVI.

British subjects holding, or hereafter becoming possessed of, property called anzal (leasehold), shall continue to enjoy the conditions which constitute and are attached to that description of property, and which conditions are hereby established and confirmed.

ARTICLE XVII.

British subjects holding immoveable property in the Regency of Tunis shall, in conforming to the local laws and regulations, exercise and enjoy the same immunities, privileges, and rights that are accorded to Tunisian proprietors; and for that purpose the right of British subjects to hold immoveable property being derived from the enactments founded upon the organic laws (Aad-el-Aman) the said enactments are hereby confirmed; and their observance being considered necessary for the more efficient protection of the immoveable property held as aforesaid, it has been further agreed that they shall be maintained, as a greater security for the due performance of the conditions of the present Convention. And they shall be furthermore entitled to all the immunities, privileges, and exemptions accorded, or to be hereafter accorded, to the subjects or citizens of the most favoured nation.

This Convention has been written in triplicate, consisting in seventeen Articles, besides the introduction, and contained in the preceding nineteen pages, to be signed by both parties, and to be executed in the manner explained and clearly set forth in its several provisions, having for object the duration, confirmation, and maintenance of amity between them.

Dated on Saturday, the twenty-sixth day of Rabi-el-Thany, one thousand two hundred and eighty of the Hedjira, corresponding to the tenth of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, at the Palace of the Goletta.
